but he that escheweth out, fall to be the first that besiegeth you, he shall live.—Jeremiah, xxi. 9.

Fall under. Be subordinate to in the way of classification; be subject to.
We know the effects of heat will be such as will serve fall under the concept of man, if the force of it be altogether kept in. —Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
These things which are wholly in the choice of another, fall under our observation.—Jeremy Taylor, Rules and Exercises of Holy Living.

The idea of the painter and the sculptor is undoubtedly that perfect and excellent example of the ideal, by imitation of which imagined form all things are represented, which fall under human sight.
Dryden, Translation of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting.
No rules that relate to pastoral can affect the Georgicks, which fall under that class of poetry which consists in giving plain instructions to the reader.—Adison, Essay on the Georgicks.

Fall upon. Attack.
Ania fall upon these valleys, and with them a cold and deadly light.—Kaibler, History of the Torks.
An infection in a town first falls upon children, weak constitutions, or those that are subject to other diseases; but, spreading further, seizes upon the most healthy.—Sir W. Temple.
Man falls upon every thing that comes in his way; not a ferry or a northman can escape him.—
Adison, Spectator.

At the same time that the storm bears upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another.
—Ibid.
To get rid of fools and scoundrels was one part of my design in falling upon these authors.—Pope, To Swift.

Fall c. a. Cause to fall; fell.
1. Drop: (this being the common term).
To-morrow in the battle thou art, me,
And fall thy edgeless sword, despair and die.
Shakespeare, Richard III. v. 3.

If that the earth could team with woman's tears,
Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile.
Id., Othello, iv. 1.
Draw together;
And when I rear my hand, do you the like,
To fall it on Gonzalo. —Id., Tempest, ii. 1.

I am willing to fall this argument: 'tis free for every man to write or not to write in verse, as he thinks it is or is not his talent, or as he imagines the audience will receive it.—Dryden.

2. Sink; let sink; lower; depress; diminish: (opposed to raise).
If a man would endeavour to raise or fall his voice still by half notes, like the stops of a lute, or by whole notes alone without half, as far as an eight, he will not be able to frame his voice into it.
—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
Upon lessening interest to four per cent, you fall the price of your native commodities, or lessen your trade, or else prevent not the high ones.—Locke.

3. Bring forth.
They, then conceiving, did in gentian tinct
Fall partly-colour'd limes, and those were Jacob's.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 3.

Fall s.
1. Act of dropping from on high; descent.
Which ever their noble ck is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast.
Dryden, Virgil's Eclog.
Upon a great fall of rain the current carried away
a huge heap of apples. —Sir R. Hoare.

2. Act of tumbling from an erect posture.
I saw him run after a child, butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it ran it again; or whether his fall caught him, or how it was, he did so with his teeth, and did tear it.—
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 3.
My son coming into his marriage-chamber, happened to have a fall, and died.—2 K. Henry, x. 48.
A fever or fall may take away my reason.—Locke.
Some were hurt by the falls they met by leaping upon the ground. —Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

3. Death; overthrow; destruction; downfall.
Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a space, and led a great fall before our enemies.—
Judith, viii.
Prings thou talk'st of me, and dost enquire
Of my restraint, why here I live alone;
And piteest this miserable fall.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, i. 1.

Till the empire came to be settled in Charles the Great, the fall of the Romans huge dominion con-curring with other universal evils, caused these times to be days of such affliction and trouble throughout the world.—Homer, Ecclesiastical Poetry.
Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose flight
Has bravely reach'd, and soar'd above thy height;
Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time, or
Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire.
Sir J. Ingham.

4. Sinking; lowering.
That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest both had upon houses in London.—Sir J. Child.

5. Calucene.
That strain again; it hath a dying fall;
O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet South
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Striding and giving odours.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, i. 1.
How sweetly did they float upon the wings
Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night,
At every fall smoothing the raven down
Of darkness till it smelt! —Milton, Comus, 2 w.

6. Declivity; slope.
Waters when beat upon the shore, or straitened, as the falls of larches, or dashed against themselves by the force of a roaring noise.—Bacon, Natural Experimental History.

7. Waterfall.
There we will sit upon the rocks
And see the shepherd feed his flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious larks sing matrigals. —Marlowe.

8. Outfall.
Before the fall of the Po into the gulph, it receives into its channel considerable rivers.—Adison, Travels in Italy.

9. Felling of trees, or trees felled, as 'a fall of timber.'

10. Autumn.
What crowds of patients the town-doctor kills,
Or how last fall he rais'd the weekly bills.
Dryden, Juvenal's Satires.

Fall s. [Fr. fallir.] Part of the female dress, in former times; according to Cot-grave, kind of veil worn by nuns and widows of the better sort; at present applied by females to the short veil worn over the bonnet.

Which gown, what fall, what tire! —B. Jonson, Alchemist.
There is such a deal of pining these ruffs, when the fine clean fall is worth all.—Marston, Malcontent.

Fallacious. s. Deception. Rare.
He said the fallacious was very pretty and notable.
—Achan, p. 41. (Ord MS.)

Fallacious. adj. [Lat. fallax; Fr. fallacieux.]
1. Producing mistake; sophistical.
The Jews believed and assented to things neither evident nor certain, nor yet so much as probable, but actually false and fallacious; such as the absurd doctrines and stories of their rabbies.—South, Sermons.

2. Deceitful; mocking expectation.
The force of that fallacious fruit,
Tint with exhilarating vapour, about
About their spirits and play'd, and inward pow'rs
Made err, was now explain'd.
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 1040.

Fallaciously. adv. In a fallacious manner;
sophistically; with purpose to deceive;
with unsound reasoning.
We shall so far encourage contravention, as to promise not to suppose any man that shall fallaciously refute us. —Sir T. Browne.
We have seen how fallaciously the author has stated the cause, by supposing that nothing but unlimited mercy, or unlimited punishment, are the methods that can be made use of.—Adison.

Fallaciousness. s. Attribute suggested by Fallacious: (fallacy often, improperly, used in its stead).

The fallaciousness of this is evident.—Mil, System of Logic, b. iv. ch. i. v.

Fallacy. s. [Lat. fallacia.] Delusory or sophistical mode of reasoning; conclusion resulting therefrom (as when we say that a certain belief is a mere fallacy).

Most printers make themselves another thing from the people by a fallacy of argument, thinking themselves most kings when the subject is most basely suspected. —Sir P. Sidney.
Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the other's fallacy.
Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, ii. 2.

It were a mere fallacy and mistake, to ascribe that to the force of imagination upon another body, which is but the force of imagination upon the proper body.—Bacon.
The things which, not being evidence, are susceptible of being mistaken for it, are capable of a distinction having reference to the positive property which they possess, of appearing to be evidence. We may arrange them, at our choice, on either of two principles; according to the cause which makes them appear evidence, and being so;
or according to the particular kind of evidence which they simulate. The classification of fallacies which will be attempted in the ensuing chapter, is founded on these considerations jointly.
... To begin, then; the supposed connexion, or resemblance, between the two facts, may either be a conclusion from evidence (that is, from some other proposition or propositions) or may be admitted without any such ground; admitted, as the plurality is, on its own evidence; evidenced, as self-evident, as an axiomatic truth. This gives rise to the first great distinction, that between fallacies of inference and fallacies of simple inspection. ...
This gives existence to a class of fallacies which may be justly termed fallacies of confusion; comprehending, among others, all those which have their source in language, whether arising from the vagueness or ambiguity of our terms, or from casual associations with them. When the fallacy is not one of confusion, that is, when the proposition believed, and the evidence on which it is believed, are steadily apprehended and unambiguously expressed, there remain to be made two cross divisions, giving rise to four classes. The apparent evidence may be either particular facts, or foregoing generalizations; thus, the process may simulate either simple induction, or deduction; and again, the evidence, whether consisting of facts, or of general propositions, may be false in itself, or being true, may fail to bear out the conclusion attempted to be founded on it. This gives us, first, fallacies of induction and fallacies of deduction, and then a subdivision of each of these, according as the supposed evidence is false, or true but inconclusive. ... And in the absence of any comprehensive term to denote the ascertaining, by whichever means, of the facts on which an induction is grounded, I will venture to retain for this class of fallacies, under the explanation already given, the five fallacies of observation. The other class of inductive fallacies, in which the facts are correct, but the conclusion not warranted by them, are properly denominated fallacies of generalization; and these, again, fall into various subordinate classes, or natural groups, some of which will be enumerated in their proper place. . . There remain, therefore, as the only class of fallacies having properly their seat in deduction, those in which the premises of the ratiocination do not bear out its conclusion; the various cases, in short, of vicious argumentation, provided against by the rules of the syllogism. We shall call these, fallacies of ratiocination. We have thus five distinguishable classes of fallacy, which may be expressed in the following synoptic table:—

of Simple Inference	from evidence distinctly conceived	Inductive Fallacies	Deductive Fallacies	of Infer-ence	from evidence indistinctly conceived	Fallacies of Generalization	Fallacies of Particularization	Fallacies of Conclusion

We must not, however, expect to find that men's actual errors always, or even commonly, fall so unmistakably under some one of these classes, as to be incapable of being referred to any other. — Mill, System of Logic, l. iv. ch. l. ii.

Fallacy. s. [Lat. fallacia.] Fallacy: (technical term in Logic). Obsolete.

To utter the matter plainly without fallacy or cavillation. — Archbishop Cranmer, To Bishop Gardiner, p. 240.

This appearance, though it seem of strength rather logical than rhetorical, yet is very often a fallacy. — Bacon.

Fallacy. s. Fallacy. Rare.
Alexander and Felinus do assign five fallacies unto these rules. — Mr. J. Hayward, Answer to the Libel, etc. iv.

Scipio sets down eight hundred and two fallacies, (that's the word of the law) concerning the constitution of cities and nations at law. — Jeremy Taylor, Discourse of Indulgences, pref. p. ix.

Fallibility. s. Liability to be deceived; uncertainty; possibility of error.

There is a great deal of fallibility in the testimony of men; yet some things we may be almost as certain of as that the sun shines, or that five twelves make an hundred. — Watts.

Fallible. adj. [Lat. fallio = deceive.] Liable to error; capable of being deceived.

Do not falsify your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must die. — Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iii. 1.

He that creates to himself thousands of little hopes, uncertain in the promise, fallible in the event, and depending upon a thousand circumstances, often falsifies his expectations. — Jeremy Taylor.

Falling. verbal abs. That, or act of that, which falls.

'Tis the heaven's rain
To glean the fallings of the laden wain.
— Dryden, Hind and Panther.

Falling away. Defection; apostasy.

That day shall not come, except there come a falling away first. — 2 Thessalonians, ii. 3.

Falling in. Indenting: (opposed to prominence).

It shows the nose and eyebrows, with the several prominences and fallings in of the features, much more distinctly than any other kind of feature. — Johnson, Dictionary on the Euphuism of ancient Metals.

Falling off. Declension from virtue to vice.
O, Hamlet, what a falling-off was there!
— Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 5.

Falling-sickness. s. [two words rather than a compound.] Epilepsy.

Did Caesar swoon? — He fell down in the marketplace, and fainted at mouth, and was speechless. — He hath the falling-sickness. — Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, i. 2.

Fallow. adj. [A.S. fallow.]

1. Pale brown, with a yellow or red tinge.

How does your fallow cry-hound, sir?
I heard my, he was out-run at Coln-ale.
— Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, i. 1.

The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, had a great desire to make a great park for red as well as fallow deer between Richmond and Hampton Court. — Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

2. In Husbandry. Applied to fields, showing the colour of the soil when turned up by the plough, and not covered by crumpling, the colour being generally brown, or brownish; ploughed, or otherwise tilled, but, instead of being sown, left to improve, a crop being either wholly or partially missed; hence, left in a state of rest, either for good, to gain strength, or for bad, to run wild; neglected.

The daniel, hemlock, and ruck fannery.
Both root upon. — Shakespeare, Henry V. v. 2.
Her predecessors, in their course of government, did but sometimes cast up the ground; and so leaving it fallow, it became quickly overgrown with weeds. — Howell, Twelfth Forest.
Small mounds in civil bloodshed wallow
Of saints, and let the cause lie fallow!
— Butler, Hudibras.

Fallow. s. Fallow ground.

When we laid our tillage and compost and seed, who would not look for a crop? But if the uncultivated fallow yield more, how justly is that manure-garden ground were to a curse? — Bishop Hall, Good Cautious. (Ord MS.)

The plowing of fallows is a benefit to land. — Mortimer, Husbandry.

Fallow. v. a. Work into the condition of a fallow; lay down in fallow.

Fields thus overworked regain a portion of their fertility by being fallowed. — London, Encyclopedia of Agriculture.

Fallowing. verbal abs. Process by which land is made fallow.

Fallowing is the principal operation, by which exhausted lands are restored to fertility. — Kirwan, Manures, p. 22.

Fallowness. s. Attribute suggested by Fallow: (in the extract in its sense of lying uncropped). Rare.

Like one who, in her third widowhood, doth profess
Herself a nun, ty'd to retirement,
So affects my muse now a chaste fallowness.
— Donne, Poems, p. 150.

Falsary. s. [N.Fr. falsaire; Lat. falsarius; from falsus = false.] Falsifier. Rare.

Alike you calumniate, when you make Mr. Mason a falsary, as though he had cited some mendacious records. — Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 133; ibid.

False. adj. [Lat. falsus; fallo = deceive.]

1. Untrue; deceptive; deceitful.

Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of every sin
That has a name. — Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 3.
A man to whom he had committed the trust of his fortune, in making him his confidant, a man, no ways discreet, no ways discontent, no ways just in fear, turns false unto him. — Locke, History of the Reason of Man, vii.
For how can that be false, which every tongue
Of every mortal man affirms for true?
Which truth hath in all ages been so strong,
As loadstone like, all hearts it ever drew.
— Mr. J. Taylor, Incompleteness of the Soul.

Men are swimmers, which, to pour out, receive;
Who know false play, rather than loss, deceive.
— Donne.

So hadst thou cheated Theseus with a wife,
Against the law, returning to Lucilla
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false that art to him whose thou free. — Dryden.

2. Not agreeable to rule or propriety; inaccurate.

Now, by upon my false French; by mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate. — Shakespeare, Henry V. v. 2.

3. Suppositions.

Take a vessel, and make a false bottom of coarse canvas: fill it with earth above the canvas. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

4. Counterfeit: (as opposed to real; as, 'a false diamond').

False tears true pity moves; the king cannot
To lose his letters. — Dryden, Virgil's Æneid.
When the hip-joint has been dislocated, and long delay has made it impossible to restore the parts to their proper places, the head of the thigh bone, imbedded in its position by adhesions of fibrous tissue, which almost support enough to permit a halting walk. But the most remarkable modification of the order occurs in ununited fractures. False joints are often formed — joints which rarely simulate the hinge structure or the ball-and-socket structure, according as the muscles tend to produce a motion of flexion and extension or a motion of rotation. — Herbert Spencer, Inductions of Biology.

Used adverbially.

What then wouldst highly,
That thou wouldst holily; wouldst not play false,
And yet wouldst wrongly win.
— Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 5.

False. v. a. Obsolete.

1. Violate by failure of veracity.
It's not enough that to this holy mild,
Thou falsest hast thy faith with perjury?
— Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Which lays admittance; off it doth: yea, and makes Diana's rangers false themselves.
— Shakespeare, Cymbeline, ii. 3.

2. Feign: (as in apparently aiming at one part when another is meant to be struck).

But Cayon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wise, and closely did await Advantage, whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes aloof, sometimes he struck him Straight.
And false of all his blows, I thide him with such hurt.
— Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Falsed. part. adj. Deceived; falsified.

Fair seemed pleasant enough to other makes,
With worldly purposes there as the yield;
And in his falsest fancy he her takes
To be the fairest sight that he had yield.
— Spenser, Faerie Queen.

With a falsed sorry jest. — Wilmot, Sonnets, 52.

Falseness. s.

1. Want of truth; want of veracity; want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.

Artificer of fraud: he was the first
That practis'd falshood under saintly show.
— Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 121.

All deception in the course of life is, indeed, something else but a he reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things. — South, Sermons.

2. Lie; false assertion.

In your answers there remains falseness. — Job, xxi. 31.

For no falseness can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but it turns
Of force to its own likeness.
— Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 811.

Falsely. adv. In a false manner; untruly; deceitfully; fallaciously.

Simon and Levi smke not only falsely but insidiously, may hypocritically, abusing piety and religion. — Dr. H. More, Discourse of the Tongue.
Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;
Falsely; for had he truly lov'd, at least,
He would have given me one day to my request.
— Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Falseness. s. Attribute suggested by False.

Falseness cannot come from thee, for thou hast
Most just a justice. — Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, i. 1.
King Richard might create a perfect mouse,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater false mouse.
— Id., Henry IV. Part II, iii. 1.

Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? — Archbishop Tillotson.

Falsity is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falseness or dishonesty of intentions, or to personated devotion. — Hammond, On Frequentation.

The prince is in a danger of being betrayed by falseness, or related by the variety of such a servant. — Dryden.

Falsier. s. False person; falsifier. Rare.

Such end had the kid: for he would warne be
Of craft, coloured with simplicity;
And such end, perle, does all them remain,
That of such falseness friendship been vain.
— Spenser, Shepherds' Calendar, May.

Falsétto. s. [Italian.] In Music. That part of the voice which lies above its natural compass, and is produced by diminishing the aperture of the throat.

The mock heroic falsétto of stupid tragedy. — Burke, Thoughts on a Rapid Pace.

Falsification. s. Act of altering anything so as to make it appear what it is not.

To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeiteth living honour. — Bacon.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, willingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify the word of God, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Falsification. s. Falsifier.
He discovereth a nation that to have made me a falsification like himself. — Bishop Short, Discourse of the Implications from the British Party, p. 175.

Falsifier. s. One who falsifies.

a. By debasing coin.

That punishment which is appointed for the forgers and falsifiers of the king's coin.—Archam, Toxicophilus, l. i.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will render none one proof, other another, but none of them all proofs.—Boyle.

b. By lying, or misrepresentation.

Dealers are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others, that put their claims the worst together.—Sir B. L'Estrange.

Falsify. v. a.

1. Counterfeit; forge; produce something for that which in reality it is not.

The Irish hardly use to force and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man.—Spencer, View of the State of Ireland.

Falsifying the balances by deceit.—Amos, viii. 5.

It may be doubted whether any dispute has produced strange perversions of history. The whole past was falsified for the sake of the present. All the great events of three centuries long appeared to us distorted and discoloured by a mist sprung from our own theories and our own passions.—Manning, History of England, ch. xviii.

2. Confute; prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple and the dissolution of the Jewish economy, when Jews and Romans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to belie and falsify the prediction.—Johnson.

3. Violate; break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and hissed derided.—See P. Sidney.

He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously slew Kelynes the king as he was leading himself, substituting nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate.—Kendall, History of the Turks.

This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trusts.—Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Piety.

4. See extracts.

His crest is smelt away, his ample shield is falsified, and round with ivy his shield.

Depcha, Virgil's Eclog.

My friends quarrelled at the word, subtle, I used innovation in our language. The fact is confessed for I remember not to have read it in any but a foreign, though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there; why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for pointing words; si Graeco fonte cadunt, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense.

I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, make to my meaning plain:

Ma si l'usciera d'anti era perfetta,
Che mai poter falsar in nessun modo.

Falsate round and otherwise be turned than by falsified, for his shield was falsified, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins.—Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to understand the new signification, which I have never seen equaled, even at once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.—Johnson.

The word certainly deserves not to be received in this sense; but it appears to have been a phrase of the fencing-school for thrust, from a passage in Beaumont and Fletcher, which Dryden probably had once noticed, (for he had the highest opinion of the language of these dramatists) but had forgotten. Dr. Johnson says, that he had once seen the word equaled; but he was not aware that Dryden himself was a forger.—Tait.

Falsify. s. In Fencing. See preceding extracts.

How can he stand

Upon his guard who hath ledgers in his hand,

To which his feet must ever be a dancing?

Beside, a falsify may spoil his crime,

Or making of a fox, in which consists

Much of his court-perfection.

—Beaumont and Fletcher, Coronation.

Falsify. v. n. Tell lies; violate truth. Rare.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify.—South, Sermons.

Falsity. s.

1. Falsehood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they say unto falsity the whole sum of wisdom.

ever love is owing unto God's truth.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Can you on him such falsities intrude? And as a mortal the Most Wise delude? G. Sandys.

Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding.—South, Sermons.

2. Lie; error; false assertion or position.

By falsities men live the greatest part Of mankind they corrupted.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 357.

That Dauidine arises from the Persian hills, that the earth is higher towards the north, are dubious truly charged on Aristotle by the redresser of Phidias, and all easily confutable falsities.—Glaucille, Nova Scientifica.

Truth, again, is often used in the sense of reality. People speak of the truth or falsity of facts; properly speaking, they are either real or fictitious: it is the statement that is 'true' or 'false.' The 'true' cause of any thing, is a common expression; meaning 'that which may with truth be assigned as the cause.' The senses of falsehood correspond.—Whately, Logic, appendix.

Falter. v. n. [?] Hesitate as one who reels or trips from feebleness.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king Shall falter under foul rebellious arms.

Shakespeare, Richard II. iii. 2.

Falter. v. a. [?] Sift; cleanse.

Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, seeds and chaff.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Faltering. part. adj. Hesitating.

With faltering tongue, and trembling every vein, Tell on, much she. Spenser, Elvira's Quest.

Faltering. verbal abs. Feebleness; delicacy.

The deliquium and faltering of our spirits, the violence and torment of bodily pains.—Killingbeck, Sermons, p. 23.

Famble. v. a. [Swedish, famn = embrace, hand.] See extract. Rare, or colloquial.

Deceayer; to famble, to mangle in the mouth as a child that but begins to speak. Cotgrave.

Fame. s. [Lat. fama.]

1. Celebrity; renown.

The house to be inhabited for the Lord must be exceeding magnificent, of fame and of glory throughout all countries.—1 Chronicles, xiii. 5.

2. Report; rumour.

We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt. Joshua, ix. 5.

Fame. v. a. Rare.

1. Make famous.

Your second birth Will fame old Lethe's flood.

H. Johnson, Manque of Christmen.

Pythia who stirs thee? Testament and Fletcher, King and no King.

2. Report.

That Richard... should fame King Edward the fourth a bastard.—Sir G. Black, History of King Richard III. p. 52.

Famed. part. adj. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.

He purposes to seek the Charian god, Avoiding Delphos, his more famed abode, Since Phlegian robbers made unsafe the road.

Dryden.

Fameless. adj. Having no fame; without renown.

May he die fameless and forgot!—Beaumont and Fletcher, Husbandry.

Familiar. adj. [Lat. familiaris.]

1. Domestic; relating to a family.

They range familiar to the dome. Pope.

2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar. Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 3.

Be not too familiar with Pains; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears that art to marry his sister Nell.—Id., Henry IV. Part II. ii. 2, letter.

3. Unceremonious; free (as among persons long acquainted).

Kalandar straight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and homely manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken.—Sir P. Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.

I see not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.

The senses at first let in particular ideas, and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them.—Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I could entertain such inhuman bliss, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear woeily unmoved at all the scenes of blood and dissolution.—Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

6. Common; frequent.

To a wrong hypothesis may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood; there is nothing more familiar than this.—Locke.

7. Easy; unconstrained.

He inquires His mews, and sports in loose familiar straits. Adrian.

8. Too nearly acquainted.

A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spoke it abroad and would not prove it, the priest sent him for defamation.—Comden.

9. Often applied, in the Bible, to spirits: (supposed by some to allude to those who imposed on mankind by pretending to have a spirit or demon speaking from within their bodies).

Thy voice shall be as of one that hath a familiar spirit.—Isaiah, xxii. 4.

Familiar. s.

1. Intimate; one long acquainted.

The king is a noble gentleman and my familiar.—Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, v. 1.

2. Demon supposed to attend at call.

Love is a familiar; love is a devil: there is no evil angel but love.—Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, i. 2.

3. Of the Inquisition. See Inquisition.

Familiarity. s.

1. Easiness of conversation; omission of ceremony; affability; easy intercourse.

They say any mortal may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle spirits.—Pope.

2. Acquaintance; habitude.

We contract at last such an intimacy and familiarity with them, as makes it difficult and irksome for us to call off our minds.—Bishop Atterbury.

Familiarization. s. Act or process of making familiar; result of such.

There can be no question that a constant familiarization with such scenes admits the feelings, if it does not burden the heart. The butcher's wife, who bristles her baby to take physic by promising, if it were a good child, that it should stick a hand the next morning saw no more revolting in the idea of killing than by the death of which she lived.—Theodore Hook, God's Pasture, vol. ii. ch. 1.

Familiarize. v. a.

1. Make familiar; make easy by habit; make common.

Being familiarized to it, men are not shocked at it. Bishop Butler, Analogy of Religion, natural and revealed, to the Constitution and Course of Nature.

Wethamstede, the learned and liberal abbot of St. Alban's, being desirous of familiarizing the history of his patron saint to the monks of his convent.—T. Warton, History of English Poetry, ii.

By the intelligible preaching of this wonderful art, King Bogoris hoped to familiarize men's minds with the tenets of the Gospel. But he knew his people, images of terror alone would furnish their savage hearts. By his advice, Methodius painted the Last Judgement; he represented the punishment of the damned with all the horrors his imagination could suggest, or his pencil execute.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, b. v. ch. viii.

Dr. Bail had to employ a world of argument and illustration to familiarize people with the truth, that the sensations or impressions on our minds need not necessarily be equidistant, or bear any resemblance to the causes which produce them; in opposition to the natural prejudice which led people to assimilate the action of bodies upon our senses, and through them upon our minds, to the transfer of a given form from one object to another by actual moulding.—Mil, System of Logic, v. 3, § 8.

2. Bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions.—Johnson, Spectator.

Familiarizing, verbal abs. Rendering or making familiar; familiarization.

It has nothing in common with the black horrors, sung by Ford and Maudslayi. The familiarizing of it in tale and fable may be for that reason incidentally more contagious.—Lamb, Letter to Southey.

Familiarly, adv. In a familiar manner.

The governor came to us, and after salutations, said familiarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and sat him down.—Davon, New Atlantis.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon.—Nir IV. Rulph, History of the World.
Horrors still charms with graceful negligence, And without method talks us into sense; Will, like a friend, familiarly convey The truest notions in the easiest way. Pope.

Familiarness, s. Attribute suggested by familiar: (Familiarity communis).

They that hear these things are much taken with them, and readily give assent to them, and presently infer their credibility from the obviousness and familiarness of the matter.—Translation of Philarch's Murals, iv. 125. (Ord MS.)

Familiar, s. System of tenets, doctrine, discipline, or economy of the Familists.

We see one tainted with popery . . . and her with familiar;—and all these run a madding after their own fancies.—Bishop Hall, Reformation, p. 5.

Familist, s.

1. One of a sect called the Family of Love.

Though the familists, libertines, and analapists, stand in opposition to jupists; yet the great Fowler of winks catcheth them all with the same full bird-line of impure lusts.—Pagitt, Heterography, p. 285.

2. Master of a family; family man. Rare.

If you will needs be a familist, and marry, muster not the want of issue among your greatest afflictions.—Osborn, Advice to a Son, p. 70: 1658.

Family, s.

1. Members of the same household.

The night made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat.—Swift.

2. Body of descendants from one common progenitor; race; tribe; generation.

Of German was the family of the Libinites.—Numbors, ii. 21.

3. Course of descent; genealogy.

If thy ancient but leprous blood Has crept through seconds ever since the flood, Go and complain the family is stonied, Nor own thy fathers have been fools so long. Pope.

4. Class; tribe; species.

There be two great families of things, mildureous and merciful, inflammable and not inflammable, nature and crinde, oily and watery.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

It remains to consider how the internal distribution of the series may most properly take place: in what manner it should be divided into members, families, and genera.—Mill, System of Logic, iv. 8, § 4.

Often used adjectively; as, 'family prayers, dinners, quaffs, nun.'

Famine, s. [Fr. famine; Lat. fames.]

Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our castle's strength Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie, Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 3.

Famines have been of late observed to be rare, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea, but principally by the goodness of God.—Sir M. Hale.

Famish, v. a. Kill with hunger; starve.

What, did he marry me to famish me? Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iv. 3.

With of.

Thin air Above the clouds will pine his cut nails gross, And famish him of breath, if not of food. Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 76.

Famish, v. a. Die of hunger; suffer extreme hunger.

You are all resolved rather to die than to famish.—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 1.

Famished, part. adj. Afflicted with extreme hunger.

The pains of famished Tantalus he'll feel, And Polyphus that labours up the hill The rolling rock in vain; and erst Ixion's wheel. Drayton.

Famishment, s. Pain of hunger; want of food. Rare.

VOL. I.

So sore was the famishment in the land.—Genesis, xlvii. 13. (Matthew's Translation.)
Lamb and be fat, with all you touch is gold, Though that feed your souls' famishment affords. Sir J. Davies, Wits's Beguiling, sign. V. 2. b.
Apirius, that didst on thy gut bestow Full ninety millions, yet when this was spent, Ten millions still remained to thee; which thou, Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment, In poison'd potion drunk'st. Halswell, Apology.

Famous, adj. [Fr. fameux; Lat. famulus.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown.—Numbers, xvi. 2.
Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bullioign, turned into English by Fairfax.—Hogden.

2. Notorious; enjoying fame, whether good or ill: (in the latter case like the Latin famulus, which has the sense of infamous).
Menecrates and Menas, famous pirates, Make the sea serve them. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, i. 4.

The death of slaves and famous men, fathers.—Archbishop Tillotson, Sermon on 1 John, iv. 9.

Famously, adv. Renowned; much talked of; famous. Rare.

The painful warrior famished for fight.

The wine is indeed the most generous crumpe of Persia, and famished all over the Orient.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 153.

Famously, adv. In a famous manner.

1. With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched With politic grave rumour; then the king Had virtuous uncles to protect his crone. Shakespeare, Richard III. ii. 3.

2. Notoriously.

He had never been praised by Gabriel Harvey for his labour, if therein he had not been so famously absurd. Nash, Apology of Phoebe Penitence, 1588.

Famousness, s. Attribute suggested by famous; celebrity; great fame.

Famousness, unattended with endearing causes, is a quality so undesirable, that even infancy and folly can confer it. Boyle, Considerations on the Style of the Holy Scriptures, p. 156.

Famulus, s. [Lat. servant.] Familiar spirit of a magician: (figuratively) any drudge, doer of hard or dirty work under a superior: (deris. in such phrases as printer's devil, the Solicitor-General's devil, illustrates the same association of ideas).

The great gulf of Tiquet, and tenth of August, opened itself at the magic of your eloquent voice; and to show, it will not close at your voice! It is a dangerous thing such magic. The magician's famulus not hold of the forbidden book, and summoned a demon: 'Pish-ill! What is your will?' said the addin. 'The famulus, somewhat struck, bled him fetch water: the swift goblin fetched it, pail in each hand; but he would not cease fetching it! Desperate, the famulus shrieks at him, snatches at him, cuts him in two; lo, two goblin water-carriers ply; and the house will be swum away in delugation deluges.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. iii. b. iii. ch. iii.

Fan, s. [A.S. fann; Lat. fanus.]

1. Instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scents, and fans, and double chance of leavens, With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery. Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, v. 3.
'Tis a sweet walk; and if the wind be stirring, Seves like a fan to cool. Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of Malta.

2. Anything spread out like a woman's fan in a triangular form with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and chid the crane the other to show him such a fan of feathers.—Sir R. L. Exchange.

3. Instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed.

Flail, strawfork, and rake, with a fan that is strong. Traver, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Asses shall cut clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan. Isaiah, xxx. 24.

4. Instrument (generally) by which the air is moved.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own comforts; the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
The prisoner, with a spring, from prison broke; And stretch'd his father's fans with all his might, And to the neighbouring maple wind'd his flight. Dryden.

Fan, v. a.

1. Cool with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves.—Spectator.

2. Ventilate; affect by air put in motion.

The Norwegian banners float the sky, And fan our people cold. Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 2.
And now his shorter breath, with sultry air, Faints on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. Separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, and smiting new.—Bacon, Utopia, p. 10.
Not so the wicked; but as chaff, which, fanned, The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand In judgement. Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 11.

Fanatic, adj. [Lat. famulus.] Enthusiastic; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

Chris, Isis, Oris, and their train, With moans from slumbers and sorceries abused Fanatic Egypt, and her priests, to seek Their wand'ring gods disguised in brutish forms. Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 428.

Fanatic, s. Enthusiast; man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double renature of St. Peter is a more descriptive emblem than the huminary compass marked by a fanatic.—Dr. H. More, Discourse of Christiana Polity.

There is a new word coined, within few months, [for May, 1660], called fanatic, which, by the obsequious thereof, seemeth well cut out and proportioned to signify what is meant thereby, even the sectaries of our age. Some times formerly I will have it Hebrew, derived from the word tsen or face, one, tsen tsen, importing such whose piety consisteth chiefly in visage, looks, and outward shows: others will have it Greek, from fanaticus, to show and appear; their intense piety consisting only in short blazing, the government of their extinction. But most certainly the word is Latin, from fama, a rumour, and fanaticus were such who, living in or attending thereabouts, were fringed with tsen, or apparitions, which they either saw or fancied themselves to have seen. These people, in their fits and wild raptures, pretended to strange predictions: 'ut famulens cetera Perseus, Bellona, tu divinat; Et iureus Omnia habes, inquit, magis clarique triumphat.' (Juv. Sat. iv.) 'Ut nulla quon scabies, ut morbus rebus ura.' (Hor. in Pect.) Fuller, Mist Conceptions on these Times.

Fanatical, adj. Fanatic.

I cannot but earnestly desire, and pray for, an effectual reformation of manners and propagation of the Gospel by all sober and christian methods; but may venture to foretel, without pretending to the spirit of prophesying, that this great work will never be accomplished by an enthusiastick and fanatical zeal.—Bishop Lancelotti, Ethnologia of M. Pontius and P. de la composita, pref.

Fanatically, adv. In a fanatical manner; in a wild enthusiastick way.

The liberty they pursued was a liberty from order, from virtue, from morals, and from religion; and was neither hypocritically nor fanatically followed. Buch.

Fanaticism, s. Attribute suggested by fanatical; religious frenzy.

That temper of profuseness, whereby a man is disposed to condemn and despise all religion, how slightly soever men may think of it, is much worse than infidelity, than fanaticism, than idolatry; and of the two 'tis much more eligible for a man to be an honest heathen and a devout idolater, than a profane Christian.—Bishop Wilkins, Principia and Index of Natural Religion, ii. 1.

Fanaticism, s. Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the Scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most unperplexed models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies.—Bayly.

Western Christianity was still necessary. Its first effort was to reclaim Britain, which had been almost entirely lost to pagan barbarism. . . . Showy indeed, but constantly in advance, after the request of the Saracenic invasion by Charles Martel, Christianity remained, if not unimpeded, yet the actual superior of all Europe, with the exception of the Moslem-Spanish kingdom and some of the Mediterranean islands. . . . Many centuries later, a new Asiatic race, the Seljukian Turks, a new outburst, as it were, with much of the original religious fanaticism, precipitated itself upon Europe, and added the narrow fanaticism of the Greek empire to Islamism and Asiatic influence. — Milman, History of Latin Christianity, li. iv. ch. iii.

In the plural. Instance or particular form of fanaticism.

This battle of Mountain and Gloude, and what follows, is the battle of fanaticism and miracles; unsuitable for comic and effect. — Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. iii. li. iii. ch. i.

Fanciful, adj. Imaginative, rather guided by imagination than reason (of persons); dictated by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images (of things).

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings, and how foolish and fanciful were they! — Sir J. Heyrauld.

Fancifully, adv. In a fanciful manner.

What conceited old man is this, said he, that talks thus fancifully! — Dr. H. More, Address against Idolatry, preface.

Fancifulness, s. Attribute suggested by Fanciful; addition to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fanaticism as to the influence of the heavenly motions and astral influences. — Sir M. Hale, Originations of Manhood.

Doctrines stand to principles, if it may be said without fanaticism, as the principle of friendship to generation, though this analogy must not be strained. Doctrines are developed by the operation of principles, and develop differently according to those principles. Thus a belief in the transmutability of worldly goods leads the Epicurean to enjoyment, and the ascetic to mortification; and, from their common doctrine of the sinfulness of matter, the Alexandrian mystics became sensualists, and the Syrian ascetics. The same philosophical elements, covered into a certain sensuality or insensuality to sin and its consequences, leads one mind to the Church of Rome; another to what, for want of a better word, may be called Germanism. — Newman, Essay on the Development of Christian Doctrine.

Fancy, s. [contracted from phantasy; Lat. phantasia; Gr. phantasia.]

1. Imagination; power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

In the soul
Are many lesser faculties, that serve Reason as chief; among these Fancy next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, airy shapes,
Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we see, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge or opinion. — Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 100.

2. Opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Men's private fancies must give place to the higher judgement of that church which is in authority over them. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. — Lord Clarendon.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. — Locke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. — Addison, Travels in Italy.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of sorrow fancies your companions making,
Using these thoughts which should indeed have died
With them they think on? — Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 2.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness; preference; (sometimes used adjectivally in a complimentary giving a slang expression, as in 'fancy man').

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. — Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 2, song.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

A resemblance of humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection. — Collier.

6. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall pain me, that I may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman feel. — Dryden, Indian Emperor.

The sultan of Egypt took a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. — Arbuthnot.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

7. False notion.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or putting into the bark or rind of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatic, or medicinal substance, are but fancies; the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

8. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value; (often used adjectivally, as in 'a fancy fair').

Louisa-pride is a pretty fancy for libelers. — Mortimer.

Fancy, v. n. Imagine; believe without being able to prove.

The heart fancies as a woman's heart in travail. — Reverendine, xxiv. 3.

Fancy, v. a.

1. Portray in the mind; image to oneself; imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pictures sees above the crowd;
Who weighs the thought can change with manly dress,
He whom I fancy, but can not express. — Dryden, Juvenal's Satire.

2. Like; be pleased with.

Nous both admiring her judgement and valour,
Together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all private respects, he took her from her husband. — Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleases to fancy. — Swift.

Fancyfree, adj. [two words rather than a compound.] Free from the power of love.

The imperial virgin passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancyfree. — Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, ii. 2.

Fancymonger, s. One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quality of love upon him. — Shakespeare, As you like it, iii. 2.

Fancysick, adj. One whose imagination is unsound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

All fancysick she is, and pale of cheer. — Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, iii. 2.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come to be fancysick, there's no cure. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

Fandango, s. [Spanish.] Spanish dance so called.

Our evening cubel with a ball, where we had for the first time the pleasure of seeing the fandangos danced. It is odd and entertaining enough, when they execute with precision and agility all the various fixings, whirlings of the arms, and crankings of the flangers; but it exceeds in wantonness all the dances I ever beheld. — Swinburne, Travels through Spain, letter ii.

Fandango, ball, or rout,
Blush, when I tell you how a tidel
A parson with a friend preferred,
To liberty without. — Carper.

Not low-lorn Quixote, when his Sancho thought
The knight's fandango friskier than it ought;
Not soft Herodias, when, with winking trend,
Her nimble feet danced off another's head;
Not Cleopatra on her galleys deck,
Disgraced so much of leg, or more of neck,
Than thou, ambrosial Waltz, when first the moon
Beheld thee twirling to a Saxon tune! — Byron, The Waltz.

Fane, s. [Fr. fine; Lat. fanum.] Temple; place consecrated to religion. Rhetorical.

Nor fane, nor capital,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Enrichments all of fury shall lift up
Their rotten privilege. — Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 10.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now she wend'd. — Dryden, Virgil's Aeneid.

Fanfare, s. [Fr., scarcely naturalized.] Sounding of trumpets, or coming into the lists with sound of trumpets; hence also any public bravado or flourish, any loud-reounding brag or ostentation.

Fanfare is a sort of military air or flourish, commonly short and lively, which is performed by trumpets, and imitated by other instruments. — Appian to Masini Dictionary, p. 20: 1761.

Fanfaron, s. [Fr., scarcely naturalized.] Bully; hector; blusterer; bluster.

Virgil makes Fanfaron a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or hector. — Dryden, Essay on Dramatick Poetry.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in trials of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

Fanfaronade, s. [Fr. fanfaronnade.] Bluster; bragging; ostentatious display.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of Monsieur Baillet. — Swift.

Fang, v. a. [see Fetch.] Seize; gripe; clutch.

Destruction fang mankind!
— Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iv. 3.

Fang, s.

1. Tusk of a bear or other animal by which the prey is seized and held; anything like a tusk.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the key fang
And clursh chiding of the winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery. — Shakespeare, As you like it, ii. 1.
Some creatures have overlong or outworn teeth,
Which we call fangs or tusks; as bears, pikes, salmons, and does, though less. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Prepared to fly,
The fatal fang deep drove within his thigh,
And cut the artery: the waters no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain. — Dryden, Translation from Ovid.

Then charge, provide the lion to the ridge
Of fangs and claws. — Addison, Cato.

2. Any shoot or other thing by which hurt is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the gura are to be treated like the tubercles. — Evelyn, Calculations hortens.

Fanged, part. adj. Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two school-fellows,
Whom I will trust as I will address fang'd,
They bear the mandate. — Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 1.

Fangle, s. [?] Fangle; gawdaw.

There was no feather, no fangle, nor jewel, . . . left behind. — R. Greene, Hamlet's, 1583.

A hatred to fangles and the French foderies of his time. — A. Wood, Athens Demoniack, li. ed. 354.

Fangled, adj. Gaudy; ridiculously showy; vainly decorated.

A back'd oh, rare one!
Be not, as in this fangled world, a moment
Nodder than it covers. — Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 4.

Generally the second element in a compound; (especially preceded by un-).

Quick wits be in desire un-fangled, and in purpose unconstant. — Ascham.

Fangless, adj. Wanting fangs; toothless; without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his power's like to a fangless lion,
May utter, but not bide. — Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, iv. 1.

Fanner, s. One who uses a fan.

I will send unto Babylon fanners that shall fan her. — Jeremiah, li. 2.

Fanning, part. adj. Acting as a fan.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;
To meet the fanning wind the bowen row:
The fanning wind and purring stream continue her repose. — Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia.

Fanning, verbal abs. Ventilation.

He will be often very agreeably entertained with grateful sounds in the natural music of birds, the fannings of woods, the purring of streams, or the falls of water. — Cventry, Philemon, conv. 2.

Fanon. s. [Fr. fanon; L. Lat. fanio.] Scarf worn on the left arm of a Roman Catholic priest officiating at the mass. Rare.

Tunics, stoles, fanons, and mitres.—Bale, Discourse on the Revelations, pt. II. sign. k. v. 4. Spelt with L.

Item, a suite of vestmentes of blown velvet, or fringed with needle work, with albes, stoles, and fanons necessary to the same.—Will of Sir T. Pope, Life, p. 338.

Fantail. s. Tail of a bird capable of being spread out like a fan; particular kind of pigeon so called: (often used adjectively, as, 'a fantail pigeon').

(For example see Feather (peacock's).)

Fantastic. adj.

1. Fanciful; imaginary.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastic ideas of a busy imagination. Dr. H. More, Discourse of Christian Philosophy.

An aerial fantastick body.—South, Sermon, vii. 16.

2. Uncertain; unsteady; irregular; whimsical.

I'll knit it up in silken strines,
With twenty odd concealed true love knots.
To be fantastick may become a youth
Of greater time than I.

Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, ii. 7.
Humour is provided with an imperious, expensive, and fantastick address; to whom he retires from the consideration of a discreet and affectionate wife.
Tilley.

A happiness can I nor misery feel,
From any turn of her fantastick wheel. Prior.

Fantastic. s. Fantastic, conceived, or whimsical person.

A vain fantastick, that takes proud clothes to be part of himself. Dr. Johnson, Works, iii. 62.
New-fangled toys and trifling shield,
Which take our late fantasticks with delight.

Milton, Paradise Regain'd, ii. 39.

Fantastical. adj.

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.

The defect that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preternatural complacency arising from that which he really has no fortune in.—South.

2. Subsisting only in the fancy; imaginary.

Present fancies
Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,
But what is not. Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 3.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms, which only assume visible forms occasionally.

Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye show? Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 3.

Many of the lying wonders shall be fantastical, deceiving the eye like the tricks of jugglers. Such were the rods and serpents of Pharaoh's enchanters, which were devoured of Aaron's rod; because they were but shadows, and his substance.—Shelford, Learned Discourses, p. 307.

4. Whimsical; fanciful; capricious; humorous; indulgent of one's own imagination.

They put such words in the mouth of one of these fantastical mind-infected people, that children and musicians call lovers.—Sir P. Sidney.

We are apt to think your medalists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon their coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed.—Aschmole.

Fantastically. adv. In a fantastic manner.

England is so idly kind'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. ii. 4.

One cannot so much as fantastically choose, even or odd, he thinks not why.—Gosse, Cosmology Sacra.

Fantasticness. s. Attribute suggested by Fantastic.

I dare not to assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticness of it.—Archbishop Tillotson, preface.

Fantastically. adv. In a fantastic manner; irrationally; whimsically.

He is neither too fantastically melancholy, or too really choleric.—B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Fantasticness. s. Same as Fantasticness.

1. Humorousness; mere compliance with fancy.

Vain Delight, thou foster of my follies
With light fantasticness, be thou in favour!
Ben Jonson and Fletcher, Four Plays in One.

2. Whimsicalness; unreasonable; caprice; unsteadiness.

Nor is this corruption happened to the Greek language, as it useth to happen to others, either by the law of the conqueror, or imitation of strangers; but it is inordinably erred in by their own singular negligence and fantastickness.—Boydell, Familiar Letters, ii. 87.

Fantasy. s. Fantasticness. Rare.

It was of great use that he should live in so mean and solitary a condition, to confront the pride, and vanity, and fantasy of the world. Archbishop Tillotson, vii. 124. (Oud MS.)

Fantasy. s. [Fr. fantasie; Lat. phantasia; Gr. phantasia.]

1. Fancy; imagination; power of imagining.

I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of idle brain,
Heard of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which was this substance as the air,
And more ineffectual than the wind.

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, i. 4.

These spirits of sense, in fantasy a high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell.

Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.

2. Idea; image of the mind.

And with the sug'ry sweet thereof allure
Chaste ladies' ears to fantasy injure.
Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

3. Humour; inclination.

I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasy and affections.—Archbishop Whitgift.

Fantasy. r. a.

1. Fanciful.

Endorsing, or having a mind to a thing. Hubert.
The king, during his favour, fantasy so much his daughter, that almost all things began to grow out of frame.—Gaillard, Left of Walsley.

2. In Music.

Music and painting . . . were more to his [Hubert's] taste: in a short time he could fantasy to admiration on the lute-harp.—Geoffrey, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, vol. i. appendix. Hoffman.

Fap. adj. [?] Fuddled; drunk. Obsolete;

? originally colloquial or slang.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses; and being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashiered.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, i. 1.

Far. s. Farrow. Rare.

Sows, ready to farrow at this time of the year,
Are for to be made of and counted full dear;
For now is the loss of the far of the sow
More great than the loss of two calves of the cow.

Tasso, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Far. adv. [A.S. for.]

1. To great extent.

He factions for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, i. 3.

2. Remotely; at a great distance.

In a kingdom richly ordered, after a law is promulgated, it presently takes effect far and wide; all states framing themselves thereunto. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

And after that long strayed here and there,
Through every field and forest far and near.
Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

3. To a distance.

As far as the East is from the West, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him.—Psalms, ciii. 12.

Neither did those that were sent, and travelled far off, undertake so difficult enterprises without a conductor.—Sir W. Raleigh.

4. In a great part.

When they were by Jebus the day was far spent.
—Judges, xii. 31.

5. In a great proportion; by many degrees: (commonly used with some word noting the comparative).

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.—Proverbs, xxxi. 10.

6. To a great height; magnificently.

I do not think
So far an outward, and such staid within,
Endows a man but him.—You speak him far.—
I do extend him, sir, within himself.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, i. 1.

7. To a certain point; to a certain degree.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Answer them

How far forth you do like the articles.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 2.

As the first element in a combination.

Pay sacred reverence to Apollo's song,
Lest wrathful the far-shooting end emit
His fatal arrows. Prior.

With costly rates Rome stain'd her frugal board;
Then with ill-gotten odd she bought a lord:
Corruption, discord, luxury cou'd not,
Down sink the far-land mistress of mankind.

Arbuthnot.

From the same lineage stem'd Elate name,
The far-famed brother of the enchantress dame.

Pope.

Far. off. At, or to, a great distance.

For though I had him angry, yet recall'd
To life profound, and proud of race, I now
Gladly beheld, though but his nearest skirts
Of glory, and far off his story.

Alfred, Paradise Lost, xi. 330.

Cherubick watch, and of a sweet the flame
Wide-waive, all approach far off to fetch,
And guard all passage to the tree of life.

Id., xi. 124.

Off is joined with far, when far, noting distance, is not followed by a preposition: (as, 'I set the boat far off.'—I set the boat far from me).

Far out (as in a guess). Wide of the truth.

Far. adj.

1. Distant; remote.

He meant to travel into far countries, until his friend's affection either counsel or prevailed.—Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia.

A man taking a far journey.—Mark, xiii. 34.
But we must be our bread in climes unknown,
Beneath the sunny-tine or the freezing zone;
And come to far Oaxes shall be sold,
To try the Lydian heat or Syrian cold.

Deffen, Virgil's Iliad.

Preceded by from. In this sense it is used elliptically for a far or remote place.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth. 1 Chronicles, xxi. 44.

2. Remoter of the two; (in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns from him when he mounts).

No true Egyptian ever knew in horses
The far side from the near. Deffen, Chaucer.

3. It is often not easy to distinguish whether it be adjective or adverb; as,

The nations far and near contend in choice.

Deffen.

Far-about. s. Going out of the way; departure from the subject.

What need these *far-about*s? They go the shortest cut, who ever hit the point, a temporal power over all the kingdoms of the world.—Feller, History of the Holy War, p. 284.

Far-fet. adj. Far-fetched. Obsolete.

1. Brought from places remote.

Your far-fet visions please not.
Ben Jonson and Fletcher, Honest Man's Fortune.
The far-fet spout.

Milton, Paradise Regain'd, ii. 401.

2. Studiously sought; elaborately strained.

Metaphors, far-fet, hinder to be understood.

B. Jonson, Discourses.

Far-feteh. s. Deep stratagem.

But Jesuits have deeper reaches,
In all their politic *far-feteh*s;
And from their Gynick priest, Kircherus,
Found out this mystick way to jure us.

Bulwer, Hudibras.

Far-fetched. adj.

1. Brought from places remote.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the far-feteh'd gold into the mine,
And that which hir'd our fathers made our prize.

Deffen.

2. Studiously sought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.

For far-feteh'd rhymes make puzzled ears strain,
And in low prose dull Lucifer complain.

Smith.

Under this head we may rank those words, which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-feteh'd analogy, or distant resemblance, that far-feteh'd introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the mist is green when it is half roasted.—Watts, Logic.

Farrery. s. See extract.

Farrery (is) the practice of trimming the feet and curing the diseases of horses. The farrers of modern days have discovered this partnership, applying farriery merely to shoeing horses, and the more stately term of 'veterinary art,' to physicking or healing the sick animal.—Fish.

Farrow. s. [A.S. farh.] Litter of pigs.

Pour in now's blood that hath eaten
Her nine farrow.—Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1.

Farrow. v. a. Bring forth pigs.

Beats ready to farrow this time of the year.
Tasso, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Part. s. [A.S.] Wind from behind.

There is the part
Of every heart;
It pins a man when 'tis kept close;
And others doth offend when 'tis let loose.

—See J. Suckling.

Part. v. n. [Gr. πρὸς] Break wind behind.

As when we can discharge,
Although the bow be never so large,
Before the flame from muzzle burst,
Just at the breech it flashes first;
So from my lord his passion broke,
He parted first, and then he spoke.

—Swift.

Farther. adv. [see Further.] At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely; beyond; moreover.

They contented themselves with the opinions, fashions and things of their country, without looking any farther.—Locke.

Farther. adj. More remote; additional.

Let me add a farther truth, that without ties of gratitude, I have a particular inclination to honour you.—Dryden.

Farther. v. n. Promote; facilitate; advance.

He had farthered or hindered the taking of the town.—Dryden.

Fartherance. s. Encouragement; promotion.

That was the foundation of the breeding I have, and of all the fartherance that I have obtained.—Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Farthermore. adv. Besides; over and above; likewise.

Farthermore the braves, ladies and boughs of this tree, by so much exceed all other plants, as the greatest men of power and worldly ability surpass the meanest.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

Farthest. adj. Most distant; remotest.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection.—Hobbes.

Farthing. s. [A.S. feorthing.]

1. Fourth of a penny; smallest English coin.

How all these things we tell so hard in,
Would not avail one single farthing.—Prior.
You are not addicted to take money out of gold or silver; not the halfpence or farthings of England.—Swift.

2. Copper money.

The parish find 'tis true; but our churchwardens feed on the silver, and give us the farthings.—Gay.

3. Used sometimes in a proverbial or hyperbolic sense: (as, 'it is not worth a farthing').

His son built on, and never is content,
Till the last farthing is in stricture spent.
—Dryden, Servant's Satires.

4. Kind of division of land. Obsolete.

Thirty acres make a farthing land; nine farthings a Cornish acre; and four Cornish acres a knight's fee.—Goreau, Survey of Cornwall.

Farthingale. s. [see Ferdigew.] Hoop; circles of whalebone used to spread the petticoat to a wide circumference.

With silken coats, and rags, and golden rings,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales.
—Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iv. 3.

She seems a mivvly of all wicks,
With a huge farthingale to swell her rustian stuff,
A new commode, a topknot, and a ruff. —Swift.

Fascia. s. [Lat. = band, swathing.]

1. In Architecture. Band.

The architrave consists of three fascia or bands; thus called by Vitruvius as resembling swaths.—Rees, Cyclopaedia, in voce.

2. In Anatomy. Covering of a muscle, or muscle, of the character of a bandage.

Fascia are connected, on their internal surface, generally by means of loose cellular texture, to the muscles.—Rees, Cyclopaedia, in voce.

Fasciate. v. a. [Lat. fascis = bandage; swaddling cloth.] Bind together. Rare.

To this class may be referred what is affirmed concerning the fatal prediction of oaks bearing strange leaves, which may be employed; and of accidents fasciating the boughs and branches of trees, Dr. Plot takes notice of in willows and other soft woods.—Bechyn, Sylva, p. 207. (Orel MS.)

Fasciation. s. Bandage; act or manner of binding disengaged parts.

Three especial sorts of fasciation, or roasting, have the worthies of our profession commended to posterity.—Wierman, Surgery.

Fascicle. s. [Lat. fasciculus.] Small bundle; collection.

In the next fascicle you say, that I maintain some things, &c.—Dr. Mayne, Sermon at Oxford, p. 19: 1617.

Fascinate. v. a. [Lat. fascinatus; pass. part. of fascio; fascinatio, -onis.] Bewitch; enchant; influence in some wicked and secret manner.

There be none of the affections which have been used to fascinate or bewitch, but love and envy.
—Bacon.

James, while his fate was under discussion, remained at Whitehall, fascinated, as it seemed, by the greatness and nearness of the danger, and unequal to the exertion of either struggling or flying.—Marsden, History of England, ch. x.

Fascinating. part. adj. Charming; enchanting; bewitching.

Such a fascinating sin this is, as allows men no liberty of consideration.—Dr. H. More, Discy of Christiana Pledge.

Fascination. s. Power or act of bewitching; enchantment; unseen inexplicable influence.

He had such a crafty and bewitching fashion, both to move pity and to induce belief, as was like a kind of fascination or enchantment to those that saw him or heard him.—Bacon.

The Turks have old races, or such like ugly things, upon their furred horses, and other goodly creatures, to secure them against fascination.—Waller.

There is a certain bewitchery or fascination in words which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of.—South.

Fascine. s. [French.] Faggot; (as used for military purposes).

The black prince passed many a river without the help of pontons, and filled a ditch with faggots as successfully as the engineers of our times do with fascines.—Addison, Spectator.

Fascious. adj. Caused or acting by witchcraft or enchantment. Obsolete.

I shall not discuss the possibility of fascious diseases, farther than refer to experiment. Havers, Discourse of Consumption.

Fashion. s. [Fr. façon.]

1. Form; make; state of anything with regard to its outward appearance.

The fashion of his countenance was altered.—Luke, ix. 29.

They pretend themselves grieved at our solemnities in cretine churches, at their form and fashion, at the statelyness of them and costliness, and at the opinion which we have of them.—Hobbes, Ecclesiastical Polity.

2. Manner; sort; way.

The commissioners either pulled down or defaced all images in churches; and that in such unseasonable and unseasoned fashion, as if it had been done in hostility against them. —Sir J. Hayward.

3. Custom; general practice; mode.

Zeluzne again, with great admiration, began to speak of him; asking whether it were the fashion or no, in Arcadia, that shepherds should perform such valorous enterprises? —Sir P. Sidney.

A young gentleman acquaints himself to the innocent diversion in fashion.—Locke.

4. Make according to the custom of the time, more especially in matters of dress and equipage.

I'll be at charges for a looking-glass, And entertain a score or two of taylor To study fashions to adorn my body.

—Shakespeare, Richard III. i. 2.

When he is at the best, the fashion exceeds the worth of his wealth. —Sir T. Overbury, Characteristica, The Amurist.

5. Rank; condition above the vulgar.

It is strange that men of fashion and gentlemen should so grossly belie their own knowledge.—Sir W. Raleigh.

Fashion. s. Catchrestie for Farey.

His horse is poorest with the planders, infected with the fashions, and full of windgalls.—Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iii. 2.

Fashion. v. a.

1. Form; mould; figure; make according to the rule prescribed by custom.

Did not he that made me in the womb, make him? And did not one fashion us in the womb? —Job, xxxi. 15.

The value of the labour employed about one parcel of silver, more than another, makes a difference in their prices; and thus fashioned plate sells for more than its weight. —Locke.

2. Fit; adapt; accommodate.

Laws ought to be fashioned into the manners and conditions of the people to whom they are meant, and not to be imposed upon them according to the simple rule of right. —Spencer.

3. Counterfeit. Obsolete.

It better fits my label to be dislained of all, than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any.—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, i. 3.

Fashionable. adj.

1. Approved by custom; established by custom; modish.

The emptiness of your condition will invite gentlemen to the study of nature, and make philosophy fashionable.—Gloucester.

2. Made according to the mode.

Rich, fashionable robes her person deck;
Pendants for ears, and pearls adorn her neck.
—Deighton, Translations from Ovid.

3. Observant of the mode; (sometimes used substantively, especially in plural, as 'an assemblage of fashionables').

Time is like a fashionable host.
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand;
But with his arms outstretched he would fly.
Grasps in the corner; welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing.

—Shakespeare, Twelfth and Cressida, iii. 3.

Fashionableness. s. Attribute suggested by Fashionable.

Outward fashionableness comes into no account with God; that is only done which the soul doth.—Bishop Hall, Contemplations, l. iv.

Fashionably. adv. In a fashionable manner.

He must at length die dully of old age at home, when he no more so fashionably and gently have been shuffled or flung into another world.—South, Sermons, ii. 215.

Fashional. adj. Agreeing with the fashion.

I touch you a letter in verse before by my own promise, and now that you think you have indeed in that debt by a greater, by your letter in prose, I think it most meet seasonable and fashional for me to break.—Boone, Letters, (Orel MS.)

Fashioner. s. One who fashions; maker of anything.

The maker of his work (in the margin, fashioner of his fashion, trusteth therein. —Holbekkuk, i. 18.

Save what the master fashioner calls his.
—R. Jonson, Manages.

Where is my fashioner? my feather-man?
My liner, performer, barber? —Id., State of Nere.

Fashionist. s. One who follows, or affects, the newest fashion.

We may conceive many of these ornaments were only temporary, as used by the fashionists of that day. —Feller, A Pious Sight of Palestine, pt. i. l. ciii. ch. v. (Tronck.)

Fashionmonger. s. One who studies fashions.

This fashionmonger, each morn' 'fore he rise, Contemplates snail-shapes.
—Morden, Scourge of Villany, iii. 11.

The curiosity of modern fashionmongers.—Feller, Holy State, p. 200.

Fashionmongering. adj. Behaving like a fashionmonger.

Scambling, not fashionmongering boys.
—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, v. 1.

Fast. v. n [A.S. featan.]

1. Abstain from food.

We have some meats, and breads, and drinks, which taken by men enable them to fast long after.—Bacon, New Atlantis.

2. Mortify the body by religious abstinence.

When thou fastest, smite thy breast and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast.—Matt., vi. 17.

Fast. v. a. Keep as a fast.

(For example see Fast day.)

Fast. s.

1. Abstinence from food.

A thousand men have broke their fasts to-day.
That we'll shall dine, unless thou yield the crown.
—Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. i. 2.

Where will this end? Four times ten days I've pass'd, Wand'ring this woody maze, and human food 917

Not tasted, nor had appetite; that fast
To virtue I made me, or could part
Of what I suffer here.

Milton, Paradise Regained, ii. 245.
She's gone unkindly, and refused to cast
One glance to feed me for so long a fast.

Depledge, Tyronnick Lore.

2. Religious mortification by abstinence; religious humiliation.

We humble ourselves before God this day, and merely by the outward solemnities of a fast, but by afflicting our souls as well as bodies for our sins. —
Bishop Atterbury.

Not prayers nor fasts its stubborn pulse restrain;
Nor tears, for aye taught to flow in vain. — Pope.

Fast, adj.

1. Firm; immovable; strong.

He by his strength setteth fast mountains.

Psalms, lxxv. 6.

Be sure to find,
What I foretold thee, many a hard assay
Of dangers and adversities, and pains,
Ere thou of Israel's sceptre get fast hold.

Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 477.

2. Deep; sound.

I have seen her rise from her bed, take paper, fold it, seal it, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep. — Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 1.

3. Firm in adherence.

Quick wits be in desire new-fangled; in purpose, most constant; light to promise anything, ready to forget everything, both benefit and injury; and they neither fast to friend, nor bound to foe. — Anthon, Schoolmaster.

4. Gay. Colloquial, or slang. (This use of the word is modern. Rapin, however, the name of one of the characters in the "Road to Ruin," suggests the same association of ideas.)

"The memory of Catullus," said Propertius, taking the notion up in his turn; "he was the most brilliant fast man of antiquity, and can be compared to nothing but Apollonius on the loose." — Hanway, Straggling Rambler, h. i. ch. iv.

Fast and loose (generally with play). (For the nature of the game or trick, see Girdle, prick.) In a tricky manner; trickiness.

A game of fair play, which now having now hidden by the fair, did, as it were, play of fast and loose, along with other, giving and receiving, witness. — Sir P. Sidney.

If she perceived by his outward cheer,
That any would his love by talk betray,
Sometimes she heard him, sometimes stood her ear,
And played fast and loose the living day.

Virgilio.
The folly and wickedness of men, that took to play fast and loose with God Almighty! — *Sir R.
L. Estlin.*

If they colored, yet by the next conflict with obstinacy they might be separated again; and so on, as an eternal vicissitude of fast and loose, without ever converging into the huge condense bodies of planets. — Balcan.

Used adverbially.

a. Firmly; immovably.

Bind the boy, which you shall find with me,
Fast to the chair. — Shakespeare, King John, iv. 1.

b. Closely; nearly; (with by).

Barley-corn left fourteen valleys in the lake; but the heathens, sails, oars, and ordinance he had had in the castle fast by. — Kauffman, History of the Turks.

Shew's brook that flow'd
Fast by the cradle of God.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 11.

With beside.

Here's the martyr-king the marble weeps,
And fast beside him more fast Edward sleeps.

Pope.

c. Swiftly; nimbly.

I would give a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou canst. — Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part I, ii. 4.

There streams a spring of blood so fast,
From those deep wounds, as all colour'd the face.

Shakespeare.
The best of mine the swiftest course has gone,
As clocks run fast when most lead is on. — Pope.

You are to look upon me as one going fast out of the world. — Swift, Letter to Pope.

This work goeth fast on, and prospereth. — *Ezekiel,
v. 8.*

Still comes on slow, and life so fast doth fly,
We learn so little, and forget so much.

Sir J. Davies.
The prince groweth up fast to be a man, and is of a sweet and excellent disposition; it would be a stain upon you if you should mislead, or suffer him to be misled. — Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

d. Frequently.

Being tried only with a promise, he gave full evidence to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered. — Han-mond, Practical Catechism.

Fast-day, s. Day for fasting.

The fast-days are appointed by S. & Edward VI., which enacts that every even or day next before any of the aforesaid days of the feasts of the nativity of our Lord, &c., other than St. John the Evangelist, and Philip and James, shall be fasted and commanded to be kept and observed. — *Pinnock, Letters and Causes of the Church and the Clergy, vol. vi.
p. 114.*

Fastness, v. a. Make fast; make firm; fix immovably; hold together; ally.

Moses reared up the tabernacle, and fastened his sockets. — Exodus, xl. 18.

She had all mankind fasted alone.
To draw and fast a hundred parts in one. — Donne.

The words White and Tery have been joined to the service of many successions of parties, with very different ideas, fast and to them. — Sir R. Estlin.

Could he fast a hour, or make a thrust, when not suffered to approach? — Depledge, Translation of Virgil, dedication.

Fasten, v. n. Fix itself.

He fasten'd on my neck; and belov'd out,
As he'd burst from my neck; — Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.

The wrong judgment that misleads us, and makes the will often fast on the worse side, lies in misrepresenting upon comparisons. — Locke.

Fastener, s. One who, or that which, fastens; one who fixes himself on anything.

His dinner is his other work, for he swears at it as at his labour; he is a terrible fastener on a piece of beef, and you may hope to save the world off sooner. — Bishop Butler, Country Editor, (Oud MS.)

Fastening, verbal abs. That which fastens.

The term 'in the margin, piece or fastening' out of the timber shall answer it. — Habakkuk, ii. 11.

A mouth coming under her right arm, and covering most of that side, had no fastening on the left side. — Sir P. Sidney.

Fasthanded, adj. Avaricious; closehanded; closefisted; covetous.

The king being fasthanded, and both to part with a second dowry, provided with the prince to be contracted with the Princess Catharine. — Beaumont, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

Fastidiousness, s. Disdainfulness; contemptuousness. Rare.

His epideictic diseases being fastidiousness, un-necessity, and ostentation. — Sir J. Estlin, Table of a Tab, § 5.

Fastidious, adj. [Lat. fastidiosus, from fastidium disgust.] Disdainful; squeamish;
delicate to a vice; insolently nice.

Reasons plainly delivered, and always offer one manner, especially with the most fastidious minds, either but heavily and dully. — Rowe, Colours of Good and Evil.

A squeamish fastidiousness, in meats and drinks, must be cured by starving. — Sir R. Estlin.

All hopes, raised upon the promises or supposed kindnesses of the fastidious and fallacious great ones of the world, shall fail. — South, Sermons.

Haldy and Harriet had long been on terms of friendship. No two men, indeed, could resemble each other less. Harriet was utterly destitute of delicacy and tact. Haldy's taste was fastidious, and his sense of the ludicrous morbidly quick.

Harriet viewed every act and every character through a medium distorted and coloured by party spirit.

Macaulay, History of England, ch. ix.

Fastidiously, adv. In a fastidious manner; disdainfully; contemptuously; squeam-ishly.

Their sole talent is pride and scorn: they look fastidiously, and speak disdainfully, contemning, if a man shall fall short of their creature at their knees and elbows, he is much inferior to them in the furniture of his head. — Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.

Fastidiousness, s. Attribute suggested by Fastidious; squeamishness.

Less licentious and more discerning times (which may be, perhaps, appearance) will require the onerous and fastidiousness of the present, by an entire gratitude to the names of those that have laboured to transmit to others, in the humblest dress they could give them, the truths themselves most sacred. — Depledge, Considerations on the Style of the Holy Scriptures, p. 202.

Fastigate, adj. [Lat. fastigium.] Roofed;
narrowed up to the top.

That noted hill, the top whereof is fastigate, like a sugar-loaf. — Ray, Excursion, p. 170.

Fastig, verbal abs. Religious mortification.

Anna... served God with fastings and prayers night and day. — Luke, ii. 37.

Fastigday, s. Day of mortification by religious abstinence: (Fast-day commoner).

Do not call it a fastigday, unless also it be a day of extraordinary devotion and of alms. — Jeremy Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

Fastly, adv. In a fast manner. Rare.

1. Firmly.

For he hath fastly founded it,
Above the seas to stand.

Old Version of the Psalms, Ps. xxiv.

2. Quickly.

She could putte forth such alterations, when absence was lacking, as left no doubt upon whose daughter she was, I said this was plain on the Lord Deputy's coming home, when I did come into her presence: she smiled much, walked fastly to and fro, looked with discomposure in her visage; and, I remember, she entreated my girl, when I showed to her, and swore by God's Son I was married; that man (Essex) is above me! Who gave him command to come here? — Sir J. Harrington, Account of Elizabeth, (Oud MS.)

Fastness, s. Attribute suggested by Fast.

1. Firmness.

The proper tone of all the parts of the body, the fastness and fulness of the flesh. — Smith, Portrait of Old Age, p. 117.

2. Strong place; place not easily forced.

Not far off should be Rodrigo's quarter;
For in this fastness, if I do not cozen'd,
He and his entowls live.

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Pilgrim.

3. Closeness; consciousness; not diffuseness.

Bring his stile from all loose grossness to such firm fastness in Latin, as in Demosthenes. — Achan, Schoolmaster.

Fastness, s. Haughtiness. Rare.

That new mode of ethics, which hath been obtained upon the world with so much fastness, and is indeed nothing but the old Democritean doctrine revived, is no ethics at all, but a mere cheat.
— Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism.

Fastuous, adj. [Lat. fastuosus; from fastus pride.] Proud; haughty.

The higher ranks will become fastuous, supercilious, and domineering. — Barrow, On the Pope's Supremacy.

Fastuousness, s. Attribute suggested by Fastuous. Rare.

When Origen complained of the fastuousness and vanity of some ecclesiastics in his time, they were led enough, but did not come to a province of ruining our times upon the stock of spiritual predilection.
— *Shirley Taylor, Doctor Dunscombe, ii. 188.
(Oud MS.)*

Fat, adj. [from A.S. fet.]

1. Full-fed; plump; fleshy: (opposed to lean).

When eels have had backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor eel, and the fisher, I think, the forest. — Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 5.

2. Coarse; gross.

We're hurry'd down
This lubric and adult'rate age;
Nay, added fat palpitations of our own,
To increase the steaming oildness of the stage.

Depledge.

3. Dull.

O souls! in whom no heavenly fire is found,
Fat minds, and ever-growing on the ground.

Depledge, Perseus Solvers.
There is little or no sense in the fat parts of any creature: hence the ancients said of any dull fellow, that he had a fat wit. — *Johnson, Holy David chard,
civ. p. 257; 1700.*

4. Wealthy; rich.

Some are allured to law, not on the contemplation of equity, but on the promising and pleasing thoughts of litigious terms, fat contentions, and flowing fees.
— Milton.

These were terrible alarms to persons grown fat and wealthy by a long and successful imposture. —
South, Sermons.

A fat benefice is that which no abounds with an estate and revenues, that a man may expend a great deal in delicacies of eating and drinking. — Aylmer, Paragon Juris Canonici.

Fat, s.

1. Oleaginous constituent of animal bodies, lard, suet, tallow, marrow, &c., being varieties of it.

In this oilment the strongest and hardest ingredients to come by, are the most upon the skull of a dead man unborn, and the fats of a liver and a heart killed in the act of generation. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Best or richest part of anything: (as in fat of the land).

Fat, v. a. Make fat; fatten; make plump and fleshy with abundant food.

Free this I should have fatted all the region kites With this slave's offal. Shakespeare, Hamlet, ii. 2.
The Caribbees are wont to gild their children, on purpose to fat and cut them. — Locke.
Cattle fatted by good pasture, after violent malice, sometimes die suddenly. — Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Fat. v. n. Grow fat; grow full fleshed.

Clarance, he is well repaid: He is frank'd up to fattening for his pains. Shakespeare, Richard III. i. 3.

The one labours in his duty with a good science; the other, like a beast, but fattening up for the slaughter. — Sir R. L. Estlin.

An old ox fats as well, and is as good as a young one. — Mortimer.

Fat. s. [from A.S. fet.] Vessel.

The fats shall overflow with wine and oil. — Joel, ii. 24.

A white stone used for flagging floors, for cisterns and tanners' dale. — Woodward, On Peasants.

Fatal. adj. [Lat. fatalis; Fr. fatal.]

1. Appointed by destiny; inevitable.

It was fatal to the king to fight for his money; and though he avoided to fight with enemies abroad, yet he was still enticed to fight for it with rebels at home. — Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

It was Still fatal to stout Hudibras, In all his feats of arms, when least He dreamt of it to prosper best. — Burton, Hudibras.

2. Deadly; mortal; destructive; causing destruction.

A palsy in the brain is most dangerous; when it seizes the heart or organs of breathing, fatal. — Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Fatalism. s. Doctrine of those who maintain that all things happen by necessity.

Have not fatalism and Mohammedanism gained ground during the general mission for the corruption and mechanical philosophy, which hath prevailed for about a century? — Bishop Berkeley, Sermon, § 331.

Our poet, it must be confessed, left no room for fatalism as expressed, as to be favourable to fatalism and necessity. — P. Walton, Essay on the Writings

Numerous similar instances might be found of fallacies thus veiled by indistinctness of language, in most of the treatises extant on 'fatalism,' 'freewill,' and other kindred matters; in which the words 'may,' 'can,' 'possible,' &c., are understood partly in reference to power, partly, to probability. — Whately, Elements of Rhetoric, pt. iii. ch. i. § 4.
He taught a religious fatalism, and the doctrine of election, that nobody could believe in Christianity unless he had been elected to salvation, and that the elect could not fall by sin. — Sharpe, History of Egypt, ch. xlii.

The Normans were the instruments in God's hands for the punishment of the sins of the people; it was vain to resist the wrath of God; and so a wretched fatalism bore down to a more entire prostration the coward and spiritless race. — Milman, History of Latin Christianity, l. v. ch. ix.

Fatalist. s. One who maintains that all things happen by inevitable necessity.

Will the obstinate fatalist find sufficient apology? — Watts.

That whatever happens, could not have happened otherwise unless something had taken place which was capable of preventing it, no one surely needs hesitate to admit. But to call this by the name of fatalism is to use the term in a sense so different from its primitive and familiar meaning, from that which it bears in the common occasions of life, as to amount almost to a play upon words. The associations derived from the ordinary sense of the term will adhere to it in spite of all we can do; and thence the doctrine of necessity, as stated by most who hold it, is very remote from fatalism. It is probable that most necessarians are fatalists, more or less, in their feelings. A fatalist believes, or half believes (for nobody is a consistent fatalist) not only that whatever is about to happen, will be the inevitable result of the causes which produce it, (which is the true necessarian doctrine,) but moreover that there is no use in struggling against it; that it will happen however we may strive to prevent it. Now, a necessarian, believing that our actions follow from our characters, and that our characters follow from our organization, our education, and our circumstances, is apt to be, with more or less of consciousness in his part, a fatalist as to his own actions, and to believe that his nature is such, or that his education and circumstances have so moulded his character, that nothing can now prevent him from feeling and acting in a particular way, or at least that no effort of his own can hinder it. . . . A person who does not wish to alter his character, cannot be the person who is supposed to feel discouraged or paralyzed by thinking himself unable to do it. The depressing effect of the fatalist doctrine can only be felt where there is a wish to do what that doctrine represents as impossible. — J. S. Mill, System of Logic, vi. li. § 2.

Fatalistic. adj. Implying fatalism.

Talk to me of your pretended crisis! Stuff! A vigorous government would in one month change all the data for your reasoning. Would you have me believe that the events of this world are hastened to a revolving cycle with God at one end and the Devil at the other, and that the Devil is now uppermost? Are you a Christian, and talk about a crisis in that fatalistic sense? — Coleridge, Table Talk.

Fatality. s.

1. Predetermination; predetermined order or series of things and events; preordination of inevitable causes acting invincibly in perpetual succession.

The stoicks held a fatality and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity inherent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter. — South, Sermons.

All the father's preparation could not secure the son from the fatality of dying by a lion. — Sir R. L. Estlin.

2. Tendency to danger; tendency to some great or hazardous event.

Seven times seven, or forty-nine, nine times nine, or eighty-one, and seven times nine, or the years sixty-three, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Fatally. adv. In a fatal manner; mortally; destructively; even to death.

The stream is so transparent, pure and clear, That had the self-consum'd youth gaz'd here, No fatally deceiv'd he had not been seen. While he the bottom, and his face had seen. — Sir J. Denham.

Fatrain'd. adj. Having a dull apprehension.

What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, in comparison with his fatrain'd followers, so far out of his knowledge! — Shakespeare, Henry V. iii. 7.

Fate. s. [Lat. fatum.]

1. Destiny; eternal series of successive

Approach not me, and what I will is fate. — Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 172.

2. Event predetermined.

Tell me what fates await the duke of Suffolk? — By water shall he die and take his end.

3. Death; destruction.

Change uncertain dangers may state: But who can bear the approach of certain fate? — Depledge.

4. Cause of death.

The whizzing arrow sings, And bears thy fate, Antinous, on its wings. — Pope.

With full force his deadly bow he bent, And feather'd fates among the males and smelters sent. — Dryden.

Fated. adj.

1. Deceiv'd by fate.

She had her father's name, and with a train Driven by the southern blast was fated here to reign. — Dryden.

2. Determined in any manner by fate.

Her awkward love indeed was oddly fated; She and her Polly were too near related. — Prior.

3. Endued with any quality by fate.

Bright Vulcanian arms, Fated from force of steel by Stygian charms, Suspended aloft on high. — Dryden, Virgil's Æneid.

4. Invested with the power of fatal determination.

The fated sky Gives us free scope. — Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, l. 1.

Fathomed. part. pr. Stupid.

Causes of subtlety ought not to be committed to gross and fathomed judges; and Jason says that this is a just cause of suspicion. — Ayliffe, Parergon Juris Canonici, 483. (Ord. M.S.)

Father. s. [A.S. feader.]

1. One by whom the son or daughter is begotten.

Son of Beniamin, thy father saith it; the man by whom thou hast breath and life speaketh the word. — Bacon.

2. First ancestor.

Abraham is the father of us all. — Romans, iv. 16.

3. Appellation of an old man.

A poor illud man was accounted cunning in prognosticating weather: Epson, a lawyer, said in scorn, Tell me, father, when doth the sun change?

The old man answered, when such a wicked lawyer as you doth to heaven. — Caudey.

4. Title of any man revered for age, learning, and piety.

You shall find one well accompanied With reverend fathers and well learned bishops. — Shakespeare, Richard III. iii. 2.

Your majesty is the father of your subjects. 'Tis a good many of them, I believe. — The Merry Wives of Windsor.

5. One who has given original to anything good or bad.

Jehiel was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ. — Isaiah, iv. 21.

6. Ecclesiastical writer of the first centuries.

Men may talk of the fathers, and magnify the father, and seem to make the authority of the father, a next to infallible; and yet expose them to contempt. — Bishop Stillingfleet.

7. One who acts with paternal care and tenderness.

He hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house. — Genesis, xlv. 8.

I was a father to the poor. — Job, xxix. 16.

8. Title of a Romish confessor, particularly of a Jesuit.

Forced in regard, In pain and countenance surely like a father. — Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iv. 2.

There was a father of a convent, very much renowned for his piety and exemplary life; and as persons under any great affliction applied themselves to the most eminent confessors, our beautiful society took the opportunity of confessing herself to this celebrated father. — Abbess.

9. Title of a senator of ancient Rome.

From hence the race of Alfred fathers came, And the long glories of majestic Rome. — Dryden, Virgil's Æneid.

10. Appellation of the First Person of the Trinity.

The eternal Son of God bestowed it his meat and drink to do the will of his Father; and for his obedience alone obtained the greatest glory. — Jeremy Taylor, Rule of Holy Living.

11. Compellation of God as Creator.

We have one Father, even God. — John, viii. 41.

Almighty and most merciful Father. — Book of Common Prayer.

Father. v. n.

1. Take; adopt as a son or daughter.

And rather father thee than master thee. — Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 2.

2. Supply with a father of certain qualities.

Think you I am no stronger than my sex, Being so father'd and so husbanded? — Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, ii. 1.

How light and portable my pain seems now, When that which makes me bend makes the King bow! — Id., King Lear, iii. 6.

3. Adopt a composition.

Men of wit, Often father'd what he writ. — Swift.

By these two distinguished men Paterson's scheme was father'd. Montague undertook to manage the House of Commons, Godfrey to manage the City. — Macaulay, History of England, ch. xx.

4. Ascribe to anyone as his offspring or production: (with on).

And lest we seem to father anything upon them more than is their own, let them read. — Hawker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

My name was made use of by several persons, one of which was pleased to father on me a new set of productions. — Swift.

Father-in-law. s. Father of one's husband or wife.

I must make my father-in-law a visit with a great train and equipage. — Addison, Spectator.

Fatherhood. s. Character of a father; authority of a father.

Who can abide, that against their own doctors, both of the middle and latest age, six whole books should by their fatherhood of Trent be under pain of a curse, imperiously intruded upon God and his church? — Bishop Hall.

We might have had an entire nation of these, fatherhood, or fatherly authority. — Locke.

Fatherlash. s. (Two words rather than a compound.) [?] Fish so called, Cottus bubalis. In Scotland, Lucky prouch.

The father-lasher is immediately recognised by its well-armed head and long spines, but a dozen measures more than from six to ten inches in length on our shores. The general appearance of this fish is forbidden; yet in Greenland, besides attaining a much larger size, it is in such great request, that Pallas tells us it forms the principal food of the natives, and the soup made of it is said to be agreeable as well as wholesome. During the greater part of the year it is to be found on our coast from Cornwall to the Orkneys, and is frequently left by the receding tide in small pools among rocks. When touched, it defends its gill-covers, and sets out its numerous spines, assuming a most threatening appearance.—Yarrell, British Fishes.

Fatherless. adj. Wanting a father; destitute of a father.

You shall not afflict any widow, or fatherless child.—Eccles. xii.

Our fatherless distress was left ununsaid;

Your widow dolours likewise be unsaid.

Shakespeare, Richard III. ii. 2.

The fatherless hath no friend. G. Scudg.

He caught his death the last county sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow woman and her fatherless children.—Addison, Spectator.

With father in the sense of originator or authority.

There's already a thousand fatherless takes amongst us.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Phileas, r.

Fatherly. adj. Paternal; like a father;

tender; protecting; careful.

Let me but move one question to your daughter,

And, by that fatherly and kindly power

That you have in her, bid her answer truly.

Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, iv. 1.

The part which describes the fire, I owe to the piety and fatherly affection of our monarch to his suffering subjects.—Dryden.

Fatherly. adv. In the manner of a father.

There's each our good shepherd from us, that so faithfully hath taught us, so fatherly hath cared for us.—Pur, Book of Martyrs, Dr. R. Taylor.

Thus Adam, fatherly disposed:

O excellent son! so to inspire

Above his brethren, Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 63.

Fathom. s. [A.S. firum.]

1. Measure of length containing six feet, or two yards; length from the tip of the longest finger of one hand to the tip of the longest finger of the other, when the arms are extended laterally in a straight line;

space to which a man can extend both arms.

The extent of this fathom, or distance between the extremity of the fingers of either hand upon expansion, is equal unto the space between the side of the foot and the crown.—Sir T. Brown.

The arms spread cross in a straight line, and measured from the end of the long finger on one hand, to that of the other, a measure equal to the stature, is named a fathom.—Hobbes.

In the measurement of linear space, there is no natural standard which offers itself. Most of the common measures appear to be taken from some part of the human body; as a foot, a cubit, a fathom, and such measures cannot possess any precision, and are altered by convention; thus there were in ancient times many kinds of cubits; and in modern Europe, there are great numbers of different standards of the foot, as the Rhemish foot, the Paris foot, the English foot.—Wharton.

2. Chiefly used by mariners for expressing the depth of the sea, the line for sounding being called the fathometre.

Dive into the bottom of the deep,

Where fathom-line could never touch the ground.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 3.

No time was to be lost; the ships had driven into shoal water, having had fourteen fathoms.—Southey, Life of Nelson.

3. Reach; penetration; depth of contrivance; compass of thought.

Another of his fathoms they have none

To lead their business. Shakespeare, Othello, i. 1.

You have blown a hissing pipe to that vastness,

As he believes the earth is in his fathom.

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Prothelaus.

Fathom. v. n.

1. Reach; master.

Leave, leave to fathom such high points as these;

Nor be ambitious, ere the time, to please.

Dryden, Translation of Persius.

2. Sound; try with respect to the depth.

'Tis too strong for weak heads to try the heights and fathom the depths of his thoughts.—Edwards, Description of the Chesapeake.

Our depths who fathoms. Pope.

3. Penetrate into; find the bottom or utmost extent: (as, 'I cannot fathom his design').

But juster fates denied; nor would

Another hand that genius hold,

As could beyond all wonder hold, fathom the intellectual world.

J. Hall, Poems, p. 41: 1694.

Fathomless. adj.

1. That which cannot be fathomed.

God, in the fathomless profound,

Hath all his chosen commanders drawn'd.

G. Sandys, Paraphrase of Psalms, vv. 1019.

You will be swallow'd up, horse and man, into a fathomless lake of ill-merited mire.—Dr. H. More,

A dialogue against idolatry, preface.

2. That of which the circumference cannot be embraced.

Will you with counters sum

The past-proportion of his infinite;

And buckle in a waist most fathomless,

With spans and inches so diminutive

As fears and reasons? Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2.

Fatidical. adj. [Lat. fatidicus; fatum = fate, and root of in-dic-a = indicate.] Prophetic;

having the power to foretell future events.

The oak, of all other trees only fatidical, told them what a fearful unfortunate business this would prove. Howell, Forest Forest.

If it be true, what the ancients write of some trees, that they are fatidical, these come to foretell, at leastwise to wish you, as the season invites me, a good new-year. Id., Familiar Letters, iv. 37.

Fatidical voices, delivered by none knows whom, apparitions of ghosts, omens by words.—J. Spenser, Discourse concerning Prodiges, p. 102.

Fatigate. v. n. [Lat. fatigatus, pass. part. of fatigo; fatigatio, -onis.] Weary; fatigue;

tire; exhaust with labour; oppress with lassitude. Obsolete.

Fatigue at the last did so fatigate him and his host that thereby in conclusion his power diminished.—

Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, ed. 167. b.

Fatigate. adj. Wearied; worn out. Obso- solete.

Readers, fatigato with long precepts, desire variety of matter.—Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, fol. 122.

By and by the din of war 'gan pierce

His ready sense; then straight his doubled spirit

Resquick'n'd what in flesh was fatigato,

And to the battle came he. Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 2.

Fatigation. s. Weariness.

The earth allow'd him nothing, but at the price of his sweat and fatigation.—W. Montague, Ixion's

Woe, pt. I. p. 377: 1618.

Fatigue. s. [Fr.]

1. Weariness; lassitude.

All day the recent eye without fatigue

Strays o'er the heavy'n and earth. Armstrong.

2. Cause of weariness; labour; toil.

The great Scipio sought honours in his youth, and endured the fatigues with which he purchased them.

—Dryden.

Fatigue. v. n. Tire; weary; harass with toil; exhaust with labour.

The man who struggles in the fight,

Fatigues left arm as well as right. Prior.

Fatling. s. Young animal fed fat for the slaughter.

The calf and the young lion, and the fatling shall lie down together, and a little child shall lead them.

—Isaiah, xi. 6.

Fatness. s. Attribute suggested by Fat.

1. Quality of being fat, plump, or full fed.

But the objective said unto them, Should I leave my fatness, wherewith by me they honour God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees?—

Judges, ix. 6.

And by his side rode lathsome gluttony;

Deformed creature, on a filthy wit:

His belly was upbown with luxury,

And eke with fatness swollen were his eyes.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Earth and water, mingled by the help of the sun, gather a nitrous fatness.—Bacon, Natural and Ex- perimental History.

By reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce metals, wood, pitch, and some fruits.—Arbuthnot.

2. Fertility; fruitfulness.

God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fat- ness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine.—

Genesis, xxvii. 28.

When around

The clouds drop fatness, in the middle sky

The dew suspended staid, and left unmist

The everable globe. Philips.

Vapours and clouds feed the plants of the earth with the balm of dews and the fatness of showers.—

Beattie.

Fatten. v. a.

1. Make fat.

Frequent blood-letting, in small quantities, often increaseth the force of the organs of digestion, and fatness and increaseth the distemper.—Arbuthnot,

On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

2. Make fruitful.

Town of stuff to fatten land. Liber Londinensis.

Born not, on thy life,

Touch ought of mine;

This fleethen else; not hitherto withstood,

These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood.

Dryden.

3. Feed grossly; increase.

Oliverio Orates

Conveys his wealth to Tyler's luxury shores,

And fatens Italy with foreign whorers.

Dryden, Juvenal's Satires.

Fatten. v. n. Become fat; be pumpered;

grow fleshy.

All agree to spoil the publick good,

And villainous fatness with the brave man's labour.

Uttam.

Yet then this little spot of earth well till'd,

A numerous family with plenty fill'd,

The good old man and thrifty housewife spent

Their days in peace, and fatness with content;

Enjoy'd the drops of life, and liv'd to see

A long-descending healthful progeny.

Dryden, Juvenal's Satires.

Tygers and wolves shall in the ocean breed,

The whale and dolphin fatness on the mead,

And every element exchange its kind,

When thriving honesty in courts we find.

Granville.

Fattener. s. That which fattens: (in the following extract, spelt as a dissyllable).

The wind was west on which the philosopher beshow'd the emblem of fattener of the earth.—Ar-

Arbuthnot.

Fattening. part. adj. Growing or becoming fat; causing fat: (as, 'a fattening diet,'

'a fattening kind of food').

Apollon cluck'd my pride, and had me feed

My fattening flocks, nor there beyond the reed.

Dryden.

Fatty. adj. Unctuous; oleaginous; greasy;

partaking of the nature of fat.

The like cloud, if oily or fatty, will not discharge;

not because it sliveth faster, but because we pay eth upon water, and flame and fire upon oil.

—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The ground

And thirsty cucumber, when they perceive

The approaching olive, with resentment fly

Her fatty fibres, and with brutish creep

Diverse, detesting contact. Philips.

The common symptoms of the morbid soury are, a saline taste in the spittle, and a flaxial urine, sometimes with a fatty substance like a thin skin upon it.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Fatulous. adj. Afflicted with fatuity; fatutions.

She was defenceless—she was an orphan, and far worse than an orphan—a poor, fatulous father was linked to her fate.—Emilia Wingham, ch. xvii.

Fatuity. s. Foolishness; weakness of mind;

morbid feebleness of intellect.

It had almost a very short sight of things, and extreme fatuity of mind in me, to bind my own hands at their request.—Edmund Burke.

These symptoms were so high in some as to produce a sort of fatuity or unreason.—Arbuthnot, On the Effects of Air on human Bodies.

Fatuous. adj. [Lat. fatuus.]

1. Stupid; foolish; feeble of mind.

In the same instant that I feel the first attempt of the disease, I feel the victory; in the twinkling of an eye I can scarce see; instantly the taste is insipid and fatuous. Boone, Deeds, p. 25: 1827.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants, while yet ourselves have a considerable dose of what makes them so.—Glauville.

2. Impotent; without force; illusory: (alluding to an ignis fatuus).

And when that flame-floods confoundible earth,

Their fatuous fires and meteors take their birth.

If you are sent down to draw drink, and find it will not run, blow strongly into the faucet, and it will immediately pour into your mouth.—Swift, Advice to Servants, Directions to the Butler.

Fault. s. [N.Fr. faute; Modern Fr. faute.]

1. Offence; slight crime; something liable to censure or objection.

The prophet denudeth rather to charge them with the fault of making a law unto themselves, than the crime of transgressing a law which God had made.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
His finds no fault with their opinion about the true God, but only that it was not clear and distinct enough.—Bishop Hillingford.

2. Defect; want; absence.

I could tell to thee, as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend, I could be sad, and mid indeed too.—Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. li. 2.

3. Misfortune. Obsolete.

You are lit into my hands, where you are like to live.—The more my fault, To scape his hands, where I was like to die. Shakespeare, Pericles, iv. 3.

4. In Geology. Interruption of the continuity of a stratum, either by sinking on one side, or an upheaval on the other, subsequent to deposition.

Mineral veins are subject to derangements in their course, which are called shifts or faults. Thus when a transverse vein throws out, or intercepts, a longitudinal one, we must commonly look for the rejected vein on the side of the oblique, and which the direction of the latter makes, with that of the former; when a bed of ore is denuded by a fault, we must observe whether the slip of the strata be upwards or downwards; for in either circumstance, it is only by pursuing the direction of the fault that we can recover the ore, in the former case by mounting, in the latter by descending beyond the dislocation.—Croft, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

At fault, or At a fault. Puzzled; in a difficulty; (as, 'The inquirer is at a fault').

We are not only at a fault, in the hunter's term; but at a rest, as if we were playing at tennis.—Sir H. Wotton, Reliquie Wottonianæ, p. 560.

Fault. v. n. Fall short; fail; err. Rare.

Which moved him rather in eloquence than otherwise to write, minding to furnish our tongue in this kind wherein it faulteth.—E. K., On Spenser's Shepherds' Calendar.

If a man would not keep a mean, it were better to fault in prescribing less than he should drinke, than to fault in giving him more than he ought.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity. (Ord. MS.)

Fault. v. a. Charge with a fault; accuse. Rare.

For that I will not fault thee, But for humbleness exalt thee, Old Song.
Whom should I fault? Bishop Hall, Satires, l. 2.
For which only [bodily uncleanliness] had they dimmed their wings, our Saviour had neither faulted their glow nor their practice.—Id., Cases of Conscience, iv. 2.

That which is to be faulted in this particular is, when the grief is humdrum and unreasonable.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercise of Holy Dying, v. 2.

God's house is abused by them which bring hither hawks and dogs, which is faulted in our church-homily.—Shelford, Learned Discourses, p. 54: 1635.

Faulter. s. Offender; one who commits a fault. Rare.

Then she, Behold the faultier here in sight; This hand committed that supposed offence. Mairfax.

With my sweet words I could the king persuade And make him pause, and take therein a breath, Till I, with suit, the faultier's peace had made. Mirror for Magistrates, p. 400.

Faultfinder. s. Censurer; objector.

Other pleasant faultfinders, who will correct the verb before they understand the noun.—Sir P. Sidney, Defence of Poem.

Be thou no sharp faultfinder, but an admonisher without upbraiding.—Translation of Bullinger's Sermons, p. 241.

Faultful. adj. Full of crime.

So fares it with this faultful lord of Rome. Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

Faultily. adv. In a faulty manner; improperly; defectively; erroneously.

The former impression was exhausted, and very faultily printed.—Archbishop Cranmer, Preface to the Bible.

Faultiness. s. Attribute suggested by Faulty.

Vol. I.

1. Badness; viciousness; evil disposition.

When her judgement was to be practised in knowing faultiness by his first tokens, she was like a young fawn, who coming in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or no to be catched.—Sir P. Sidney.

2. Delinquency; actual offences.

The inhabitants will not take it in evil part, that the faultiness of their people heretofore is laid open.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Imperfection; defect: unfitness for use.

If these objections are just, what have I done but discovered the faultiness of a commodity, which Mr. Warburton had put off upon them, and they were, though innocently, putting off upon the publick for good ware?—Edwards, Canons of Criticism, pref.

Faultless. adj. Exempt from fault; perfect; completely excellent.

Where for our sins he faultless suffered pain, There where he died, and where he liv'd again. Keats.

Who durst thy faultless fence thus defend? Drayton, Virgil's Æneid.

Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see, Thinks what never was, nor is, nor ever shall be. Pope.

Faulty. adj.

1. Guilty of a fault; blamable; criminal; not innocent.

The king doth speak as one which is faulty.—2 Samuel, xiv. 13.

2. Wrong; erroneous; deficient.

The form of poetry by them set down for perpetuity, is three ways faulty; faulty in omitting some things which in Scripture are of that nature, as, namely, the difference that ought to be of pastors, when they grow to any great multitude; faulty in requiring doctors, deacons, and widows, as things of perpetual necessity by the law of God, which in truth are nothing less; faulty also in urging some things by Scripture unadvised, as their lay elders.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Defective; bad in any respect; not fit for the use intended.

By accident of a faulty helmet that Parker had on, he was stricken into the mouth at the first course, so that he died presently.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

Faun. s. [Lat. Faunus.] Inferior heathen deity, supposed to inhabit the woods.

Faunus, or Sylvanus, he of poets feigned to be gods of the wood.—E. K., On Spenser's Shepherds' Calendar.

Rough Satyr's dance'd, and Fauns with cloven heel

From the glad sound would not be absent long. Milton, Lycidas, 34.

Fauna. s. A word (see Flora, with which it is a coordinate term) used in Natural History to denote the animal as opposed to the vegetable occupants of a region, district, or locality.

Ireland, . . . in spite of the unworkiness of the straits which separate it from our own country, and of its independent commerce with all parts of the civilised world, has an insect fauna extremely limited. . . . There can be no question that, from more frequent communication with England, its entomological fauna has of late years been considerably increased; and it is equally easy to detect, through an examination of its less inhabited provinces, that at a period geologically recent its insect population must have been singularly scanty. I know of few regions (not even excepting the uplands of Madeira) which are more deficient in insect life than the mountains of Kerry.—Wollaston, Variation of Species, ch. iii.

Faunist. s. One who attends to rural disquisitions; naturalist.

Some future faunist, a man of fortune, will, I hope, extend his visits to Ireland; a new thrill to the naturalist.—White, Natural History of Selbourne, p. 107.

Fauns. s. [?] Large kind of reel.

Entrails, about which fauns and other fish Did shole. Chapman, Translation of Homer's Iliad.

In the following extract it is used adjectively (the exact meaning being uncertain).

? Grassy; oily; fat.

All of which were founsen sluts like Bartholomew-fair pie-killers.—Gayton, Festinus Notes on Don Quixote, p. 87. (Nares by H. and W.)

Fauster. s. [Lat. Favours.] Favourer; one who countenances or supports anything.

I am neither author or fauster of any sect; I will have no man addit himself to me; but, if I have anything right, defend it as truth's, not mine.—E. Jonson.

The new mountain in the Lucrine lake, which is alleged by the faustors of this opinion, as an instance in behalf of it, was not raised thus.—Woodward.

Faustress. s. Female fautor. Rare.

It made him pray, and prove Minerva's aid his faustress still. Chapman, Translation of Homer's Iliad.

He comes from banishment to the faustress of liberty, from the barbarous to the politic.—Garth, Dedication to Translations from Ovid.

Favel. s. [N.Fr. Deceit.] Obsolete.

There was favelish, first, and jallity, Yea, thievery, and thence. Dyce-Scorner.

Favilous. adj. [Lat. favilla = ashes.] Consisting of ashes. Rare.

As to forestalling of strangers from the fungous particles about the wicks of the candle, it only smothereth a moist air about them, hindering the avulsion of light and the favilous particles.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Favour. v. n.

1. Support; regard with kindness; be propitious to; countenance.

Of all the race of silver-winged flies, Which do possess the empire of the air, Was none more favourable, nor more fair, Whilst I have seen his felicities, Than Charon, the eldest son and heir Of Minerva. Spenser, Mutability.

Men favour wonders.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Fortune so favoured him, that the town at his first coming surrendered unto him. Knutson, History of the Turks.

2. Assist with advantages or conveniences.

No one place about it is weaker than another, to favour an enemy in his approaches.—Addison, Whig Examiner.

3. Resemble in feature.

The porter owned that the gentleman favoured his master.—Spectator.

4. Resemble in any respect.

The complexion of the elephant Is favour'd like the work we have in hand, Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, l. 3.

Favour. v. n. [? v. a., with the noun understood.] Be favourable.

The good Æneas am I called; a name, While fortune favours'd, not unknown to fame. Depden, Virgil's Æneid.

Favour. s. [Lat. favor; Fr. fauteur.]

1. Countenance; kindness; kind regard; propitious aspect.

The child Samuel was in favour, both with the Lord and also with men.—1 Samuel, ii. 26.

2. Support; defence; vindication; inclination to favour: (with of before the thing favoured).

The pleasures which these Scriptures ascribe to religion, are of a kind very different from those in favour of which they are here alleged. Rogers.

At play, among strangers, we are apt to find our hopes and wishes crossed on a sudden in favour of one side more than another. Swift.

They were invited from all parts for the use of kings, princes, and ministers. And, in short, the favour of learning was the humour and mode of the age. Sir W. Temple.

3. Kindness granted; benevolence shown.

All favours and punishments passed by him, all offices and places of importance were distributed to his favourites. Sir P. Sidney.

4. Mildness; mitigation of punishment.

I could not discover the knuity and favour of this sentence; but conceived it rather to be rigorous than gentle.—Swift.

5. Leave; good will; pardon: (with with).

Yet ere we enter into open act, With favour, I were no less if might be inquired What the condition of these arms would be. R. Jonson.

6. Object of favour; person or thing favoured.

All these his wondrous works, but chiefly man, His chief delight and favour; him, for whom All these his works so wondrous run he ordain'd. Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 603.

7. Something given by a lady to be worn.

And every one his love suit will advance Unto his several mistress, which they'll know By favours several which they did bestow. Shakespeare, Lord's Labour's lost, v. 2.

It is received that it helpeth to continue love, if one wear the hair of the party beloved; and perhaps a glove, or other like favours, may as well do it.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

A blue ribband tied round the sword-arm, I conceive to be the remains of that custom of wearing a mistress's favour on such occasions of old.—Speculator.

8. Anything worn as a token.

Here, Flucien, wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap.—Shakespeare, Henry V. iv. 7.

9. Feature; countenance. Obsolete.

Oh, sweet Leander, thy large worth I hide
In a short grave! Ill-favoured storms must chide Thy sacred favour.

Martinez and Chapman, Hero and Leander.
That is only suitable in laying a foul complexion upon a filthy favour, setting forth both in sluttishness.—Sir P. Sidney.

Young though thou art, thine eyes
Hath staid upon some favour that it loves.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 4.
Defeat thy favour with an usurped board.—Id., Othello, i. 3.

There's no goodness in thy face: if Antony
Be free and beautiful, why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings?

Id., Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 3.
Yet well I remember
The favours of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, all hail to me?

Id., Richard II. iv. 1.
A youth of fine favour and shape.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favour, and by the piety of their souls, make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies.—Rap.

Favourable. adj.

1. Kind; propitious; affectionate.

Pamphus Plantagenet! most gracious prince,
Lend favourable ear to our requests.

Shakespeare, Richard III. iii. 7.
None can have the favourable thought,
That to obey a tyrant's will they fought.

Dryden, Juvenal's Satires.
3. Conducive; contributing; propitious; convenient: (with to or for).

People are multiplied in a country by the temper of the climate, favourable to generation, health, and long life.—Sir W. Temple.

Many good officers were willing to stay there, as a place very favourable for the making of men.—Lord Clarendon.

4. Beautiful; well-favoured; well-featured. Obsolete.

Of all the race of silver-winged fies
Which do possess the empire of the air,
Was none more favourable, nor more fair,
Whilst heaven did favour his solicits.

Than Charion, the eldest son and heir
Of Muscarol.—Spenser, Muirpotmos.

Favourableness. s. Attribute suggested by Favour; kindness; benignity.

To the favourableness of your ladyship's censure
... be pleased to add the favour of your pardon.—Jeremy Taylor, Artificial Happiness, ii. 108.

Favourably. ado. In a favourable manner;

kindly; with favour; with tenderness;
with kind regard.

Touching notions of common life, there is not any defence more favourably heard than theirs who allow sincerely for themselves, that they did as necessity constrained them.—Hobbes.

She goeth about seeking such as are worthy of her, and sheweth herself favourably unto them in the ways.—Wisdome, vi. 16.

The violent will condemn the character of Achalon, as either too favourably or too hardly drawn.—Dryden.

We are naturally inclined to think favourably of those we love.—Eggers.

Favoured. part. adj.

1. Regarded with kindness.

Of with some favour'd traveller they stray,
And shine before him all the desert way.

Pope, Homer's Odyssey.
2. Having certain features: (generally preceded by an adverb).

Of her there bred
A thousand young ones which she daily fed;
Suckling upon her poisonous dugs, each one
Of sundry shape, yet all ill-favoured.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
The ill-favoured and lean-fished kind did eat up the seven well-favoured and fat kind.—Genesis, xli. 4.

Bridget Howard, late servant to the lady Fardingale, a short, thick, lively, hard-favoured wench.—Tutler, no 245.

Favouredness. s. (usually preceded by well or ill.) Attribute suggested by Favoured; appearance.

Nature itself taught men to joyne always wellfavouredness with probableness.—Ascham, 157.
(Id..)

Thou shalt not sacrifice unto the Lord thy God any bullock or sheep, wherein is blemish or an evil-favouredness.—Deuteronomy, xvii. 1.

Favourer. s. One who favours; one who regards with kindness or tenderness; well-wisher; friend.

If we should upbraid them with irreligious, as they do us with superstitious favourers, the answer which herein they would make us, let them apply unto themselves.—Hobbes, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Conjure their friends they had, labour for more,
Solicit all reputed favourers.

Daniel, Civil Wars of York and Lancaster.
All the favourers of unick were the most profest and bitter enemies to the Christian religion.—Addison.

Favourress. s. Female who favours, supports, or regards with kindness. Rare.

The lady Margaret Alington, a principal favourress of the protestant religion.—Stakewell, Answer to Dr. Carrier, p. 181: 1011.

Favourite. s. [Fr. favori; Italian favorito.] 1. Person or thing beloved; one regarded with favour; anything in which pleasure is taken; that which is regarded with particular approbation or affection.

A favourite has no friend. Gray.

2. One chosen as a companion by a superior; mean wretch whose whole business is by any means to please.

All favours and punishments passed by him, all offices and places of importance were distributed to his favourites.—Sir P. Sidney.

I was a Thesalian gentleman, who, by mischance, having killed a favourite of the prince of that country, was pursued so cruelly, that in no place but by favour or corruption they would obtain my destruction. Id.

The great man down, you mark, his fav'rite flies;
The poor advance'd, make friends of enemies.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 2.
Did her steel into the plumed bowers,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbidden the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against that power that bred it.

Id., Much Ado about Nothing, iii. 1.
Nothing is more violent, nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the waiting time, and suspect of satiety. Sir H. Wotton.

This man was very capable of being a great favorite to a great king. Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Favourite. adj. Beloved; regarded with favour.

Every particular master in criticism has his favorite passages in an author.—Addison, Spectator.

Favouritism. s. Exercise of power in favor of favourites.

A plan of favouritism for our executive government is essentially at variance with the plan of our legislature.—Burke, Thoughts on the Present Dis-contents.

Even Lyons had become, through the Pope's ill-timed favouritism, hardly a safe refuge. He had endeavoured to force some of his Italian followers into the Chapter of Lyons; the Canons swore in the face of the Pope that if they appeared, neither the Archbishop nor the Canons themselves could prevent their being cast into the Rhone.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, b. 2. ch. v.

Favourless. adj. Destitute of favour.

Of that goddess I have sought the sight,
Yet no where can her find; such hapless
Heaven doth me envy, and fortune favourless.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
3. Fawn. s. [N.Fr. faun—young of an animal.] Young deer; buck or doe of the first year.

Looking my love, I go from place to place,
Like a young fawn that late hath lost the hind;
And seek each where, where last I saw her face,
Whose image yet I carry fresh in mind.

Spenser, Sunnyside.
The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Who for thy table feeds the wanton fawn,
For him as kindly spreads the flow'ry lawn. Pope.

Used adjectively.

A small pattern ... was composed of a stripe of blue, alternating with three lines of fawn colour.—
Thompson, in Sir J. G. Wilkinson, Manners and Customs of the ancient Egyptians, ch. vii.

Fawn. v. n. Bring forth a fawn.

The does then do fawn.—Bullock, in v. Fawmouth.

Fawn. v. n.

1. Court either by playfulness or endearing manners like a suckling animal.

The dog straight fawned upon his master for old knowledge.—Sir P. Sidney.

Is it not strange that a rational man should worship an ox? that he should fawn upon his dog? bow himself before a cat? and adore looks and garlick?—South, Sermons.

2. Court servilely.

My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns;
What danger or what sorrow can befall thee,
So long as Edward is thy constant friend?

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. iv. 1.
And thou, sly hypocrite, who now would'st be Patron of liberty, who more than thou
Once fawn'd, and cring'd, and servilely ador'd
Heav'n's awful monarch?

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 937.

Fawn. s. Servile cringe; low flattery.

You will rather show one gentle lowly
How you can fawn, than spend a fawn upon them.
For the inheritance of their loves.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iii. 2.
Thanks, Horace, for thy free and wholesome sharpness,
Which pleaseth Caesar more than servile fawns.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

Fawner. s. One who fawns; one who pays servile courtship.

Our talking is trustless, our cares do abound;
Our fawners dream'd faithful, and friendship a foe.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 85.
By softness of behaviour we have arrived at the appellation of fawners.—Speculator.

Fawning. part. adj. Having the character of one who fawns.

Instead thereof he kiss'd her weary foot,
And lick'd her lily hands with fawning tongue,
As he her wronged innocence did weat.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
Holding Coriol in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning cry-bald.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 6.
Whom Aeneas follows with a fawning air;
But vain within, and proudly popular.

Dryden, Virgil's Aeneid.
Dext'rous the craving fawning crowd to quit,
And pleas'd to scape from flattery to wit.

Pope.
A wise prince might draw from it two lessons of equal utility to himself. On one side he might learn to dread the unadvised resentment of a generous people, who dare openly assert their rights, and who, in just cause, are ready to meet their sovereign in the field. On the other side, he would be taught to apprehend something far more formidable; a fawning treachery, against which no prudence can guard, no courage can defend. The insidious smile upon the cheek would warn him of the canker in the heart.—Junius, let. 11.

Fawning. verbal abs. Gross or low flattery;

act of servilely cringing.

Low-crook'd curt'wies, and base spaniel fawning.
Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, iii. 1.
Clown's fawnings are a horse's salutations.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

Fawningly. ado. In a cringing servile way.

He that so fawningly enticed the soul to sin, will now as bitterly upbraid it for having sinned.—
South, Sermons, ix. 23.

Fawning. adj. [F lat. fautus, pass. part. of faveo = favour.] Flattering; seeking favour. Rare.

And turn away their friendly fawning eye,
And others each as fixed eyes dwell.

Mirror for Magistrates. (Narr. by H. and W.)

Faxed. adj. [A.S. feaze = hair, mane.]

Hairy. Rare.

They could call a comet a faxed star, which is all one with stella crinita, or cometa.—Camden, Remarks.

Fay. s. [from Fr. fee = fairy.] Fairy; elf.

And the yellow-skirted fayes
Fly after the night-steeds,
Leaving their moon-lov'd mass.

Milton, On the Morning of Christ's Nativity, 235.
Ye nympes and sylphs, to your chief give ear;
Fayes, fairies, genii, elves, and demons, hear!

Pope.

Fay. s. [from Fr. foi.] Faith. Obsolete.

Their ill 'haviour garres men mimic,
Both of their doctrine and their fay.

Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

Fayles. s. [?] Old game so called.

He's no precisian; that I'm certain of Nor rigid Roman Orthodox. He'll play
At fayles and tick-tack: I have heard him swear.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, iii. 3.

The tick-tack of the preceding extract is simply, as stated by Gifford in his note on the passage, tric-trac, the French for backgammon. Of fygles Mr. Douce has given the following explanation. It was 'played with three dice; and the usual number of men or pieces' [as in backgammon]. 'The peculiarity of the game consisted in the mode of first placing the men on the points. If one of the players threw some particular throw on the dice, he was disabled from bearing off any of his men, and therefore fygled in winning the game; and hence the appellation of it.' (Nares by H. and W.) The evidence of the suggested connexion with fall wants improving. Word for word, fygles may be the same as fynde, one of the meanings of which, though comparatively a rare one, is aspect, the connexion being with fyndes. Hence it is applied to east and west, as divisions in geography. But slightly removed from this is the notion of region, tubular compartment, table; so that a game at fygles is a game at tables, the latter term being both well known and common.

Fygge. v. n. [probably connected with fyge (q.v.), especially the forms fyg and fyke] and the slang term fyke (ury); the exact details of the connexion being uncertain.] Work away perseveringly at anything.

When a knotty point comes, I lay my head close to it, with a snuff-box in my hand; and then I fyge it away with faith. — Duke of Buckingham, Rehearsal.

Fyke. s. [?] Word of uncertain meaning. In Nares (H. & W.) the two following examples are given; in the first of which the word is suggested to mean a lovelock, or some pendent part of the dress; in the second the meaning is left wholly uncertain.

Can set his face, and with his eye can speak,
Can dally with his mistress' dancing fykes,
And wish that he were it, to kiss her eye,
And stare about her bewitching deity.

Marton, Satires, i. (Nares by H. & W.)
Three female idle fykes who looked for pig's head.
Bald, Poems, p. 134: 1661. (Nares by H. & W.)

Fyke. v. a. [probably a variety of hele: a word, however, which itself wants explanation. It is known to the editor only as it occurs in a fragmentary formula of an oath or declaration, 'You shall hele, and conceal, and never shall reveal,' &c. See Hele.] Hide. Obsolete, or provincial. He that fykes can shut. — troas.

Fyke. adj. [N.Fr. fiel, fiel; from Lat. fidelis.] Faithful. Obsolete.

The tenants by knights' service used to swear to their lords to be fyel and leal, i.e. faithful and loyal. — Chambers.

Fyulty. s. [N.Fr. feaulté. — see extracts.] Duty due to a superior lord; fidelity to a master; loyalty.

Let my sovereign
Command my eldest son, may all my sons,
As pledges of my fyulty and love.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. v. 1.
Man abolishing,
Dialogal, breaks his fyulty, and sins
Against the high supremacy of Heaven.

Milton, Paradise Lost, III. 203.
Under the feudal system every owner of lands held them in subjection to some superior lord, from whom or whose ancestors, the tenant or vassal had received them; and there was a mutual trust or confidence subsisting between the lord and vassal, that the lord should protect the vassal in the enjoyment of the territory he had granted to him, and on the other hand that the vassal should be faithful to the lord, and defend him against all his enemies. This obligation on the part of the vassal was called his fidelity or fyulty; and an oath of fyulty was required by the feudal law to be taken by all the tenants to their landlord, which is couched in almost the same terms as our ancient oath of allegiance, except that in the usual oath of fyulty there, was frequently a saving or exception of the faith due to a superior lord by name, under whom the vassal himself was only a tenant or vassal. — Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, b. I. ch. 2.

Fyulty [is] the oath taken at the admittance of every tenant to be true to the lord of whom he holds the land; and he that holds land by the oath of fyulty has it in the fullest manner; because all persons that have free hold per seidem of feoffment, that is by fyulty at least. And fyulty is incident to all manner of tenures except frank-almoigne and tenancy at will. . . . It is usually mentioned with homage, but differs from it, being an obligation permanent which binds for ever; and these differ in the manner of the solemnity for the oath of homage is taken by the tenant kneeling; but that of fyulty is taken standing. — Toulmin, Law Dictionary, (Gauger.)

Fear. s. [A.S. fier.]

1. Dread; terror; painful apprehension of danger.

For fear is nothing else but a betraying of the succours which reason offereth. — Book of Wisdom, xvii. 12.

Fear is an readiness of the mind, upon the thought of future evil likely to befall us. — Locke.
Fear, in general, is that passion of our nature whereby we are excited to provide for our security upon the approach of evil. — Rogers.

2. Awe; dejection of mind at the presence of any person or thing; terror impressed: (with of).

And the fear of you, and the dread of you shall be upon every beast. — Genesis, ix. 2.
What then remains? Are we depriv'd of will?
Must we not wish, for fear of wishing ill?

Deplon, Jucenal's Satires.

Personified.

Trembling Fear still to and fro did fly,
And found no place where else she shroud him might. — Spenser, Faerie Queen.

3. Anxiety; solicitude.

The principal fear was for the holy temple. — 2 Maccabees, xv. 18.

4. That which represents fear.

Autony, stay and by his side:
Thy demon, that's the spirit that keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Caesar's is not; but near him, thy angel
Becomes a Fear, as being overpower'd.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, II. 3.

5. Object of fear.

Except the God of Abraham and the fear of Isaac had been with me. — Genesis, xxii. 42.

6. Something hung up to scare deer by its colour or noise.

He who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit, and he that crouch up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare. — Isaiah, xxiv. 18.

Fear. v. a.

1. Dread; consider with apprehensions of terror; be afraid of.

Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.
Then never trust me if I be afraid.
You are very sensible, yet you miss my sense;
I mean Hortensio is afraid of you.

Shakespeare, Titus of the Shrove, v. 2.
There shall rise up a kingdom, and it shall be feared above all the kingdoms before it. — 2 Esdras, xii. 13.

When I view the beauties of thy face,
I fear not death, nor dangers, nor disgrace. — Dryden.

2. Fright; terrify; make afraid.

Let not worldly shame fear us to weep for our sins. — Bishop Fisher, Commentary on the seven Penitential Psalms, psalm 32.
The inhabitants, being fear'd with the Standards hanging and burning, fled from their dwellings. — Greco.

We must not make a scarecrow of the law,
Setting it up to fear the birds of prey.
Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, II. 1.

Some, sitting on the hatches, would seem there,
With hideous gazing, to fear away fear. — Dante.

3. Revere.

There is forgiveness with thee, that Thou mayest be fear'd. — Psalm, cxxx. 4.

Fear. v. n.

1. Live in terror; be afraid.

Well, you may fear too far. — Safer than trust too far.
Let me still take away the harms I fear,
Not fear still to be taken. — Shakespeare, King Lear, I. 4.

2. Be anxious.

See, plous king, with different strife,
Thy struggling Albion's bosom torn:
So much she fears for William's life,
That Mary's fate she dare not mourn. — Prior.

Fearbabe. s. Bugbear, such as frightens children. Rare.

As for their shewes and wordes they are but foare-babes, not worthy once to move a worthy man's conceit. — Pembridge, Arcades, p. 232. (Nares by H. & W.)

Fearful. adj.

1. Timorous; timid; easily made afraid.

Them that are of a fearful heart. — Isaiah, xxxv. 4.

2. Afraid.

The Irish are more fearful to offend the law than the English. — Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

With of.

I have made my heroine fearful of death, which neither Cassandra nor Cleopatra would have been. — Deplon.

3. Awful; to be reverence'd.

Who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praise? — Ecclesiastes, xv. 11.

4. Terrible; dreadful; frightful; impressing fear.

Neither fast to friend, nor fearful to foe. — Aeschylus, Schoenastus.

He's gentle and not fearful. — Shakespeare, Troilus, I. 2.

Against such monsters God maintained his own by fearful execution of extraordinary judgment upon them. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

What God did command touching Canaan, concerneth not us any otherwise than only as a fearful pattern of his just displeasure. — Id.

It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. — Hebrews, x. 31.

Lay down by those pleasures the fearful and dangerous thunders and lightnings, the horrible and frequent earthquakes, and then there will be found no comparison. — Sir W. Raleigh.

This is the natural fruit of sin, and the present revenge which it takes upon sinners, besides that fearful punishment which shall be inflicted on them in another life. — Archbishop Tillotson.

Fearfully. adv. In a fearful manner.

1. Timorously; in fear.

In such a night
Did Thibbe fearfully o'ertrip the dew,
And saw the lion's shadow. — Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

2. Terribly; dreadfully.

There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully in the confined deep. — Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 1.

3. In a manner to be reverence'd.

I will praise Thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made. — Psalm, cxxxix. 14.

Fearfulness. s.

1. Timorousness; habitual timidity.

O Embred, the fruit of fearfulness.
Of risk thou the right reward dost reap;
But if thou wilt avoid this wretchedness,
Be wise, and look ahead before you leap.

Mignot for Magistrate, p. 240.
The Jews themselves thought nothing ill to be a murderer of this kind but a devil, and a she-oo too; that the fearfulness of the sea might dispose to more unruly and more barbarous resolutions of inhumanity. — Gregory, Penthema, p. 97.

2. State of being afraid; awe; dread.

Is it credible that the acknowledgment of our own unworthiness, our professed fearfulness to ask anything, otherwise than only for his sake to whom God can deny nothing, that this should be noted for a pious earnest? — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
A third thing that makes a government justly despised, is fearfulness of and men compliances with bold popular offenders. — South, Sermons.

Fearless. adj. Free from fear; intrepid; courageous; bold: (with of before the thing feared).

From the ground she fearless doth arise,
And walketh forth without suspect of crime. — Spenser, Faerie Queen.

A nation, whose distinguishing character it is to be more fearless of death and danger than any other. — Sir W. Temple.

Fearlessly. adv. In a fearless manner; without terror; intrepidly.

'Tis matter of the greatest astonishment to observe the stupid yet common boldness of men, who so fearlessly expose themselves to this most formidable of perils. — Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Piety.

Fearlessness. s. Attribute suggested by Fearless; exemption from fear; intrepidity; courage; boldness.

He gave instances of an invincible courage, and fearlessness in danger. — Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

The Egyptians, we see, had not lost their courage, and when the occasion called them out they showed a fearelessness not unworthy of their Theban forefathers; on seeing a dead cat in the streets they rose against the king's orders and the power of Rome; had they thought their own freedom or their country's greatness as much worth fighting for, they could perhaps have gained these.—Shakespeare, History of Egypt, ch. ix.

Feasibility. s. Practicability; thing practicable.

Men often swallow fables for truths, dubieties for certainties, possibilities for feasibilities, and things impossible for possibilities themselves.—Nir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Feasible. adj. [Fr. feasible.] Practicable; such as may be effected; such as may be done.

Things are feasible in themselves; else the eternal wisdom of God would never have advised, and much less have commanded them.—South, Sermons. It is evident that the suicidal career of what was then styled the Liberal party had been occasioned and stimulated by its immaterial excess of strength. The apoplectic plethora of 1831 was not less fatal than the paralytic leucemia of 1841. It was not feasible to gratify an empty ambition, or to satisfy so many expectations. Every man had his double: the hero of every placeman were dogged by friendly rivals ready to trip them up.—Diarrhi the younger, Coningsby, b. ii. ch. i.

Leas is essentially impossible to be represented on a stage. But how many dramatic personages are there in Shakespeare, which through more tractable and feasible (if I may so speak) than Leas, yet from some circumstance, some adjunct to their character, are inappropriate to be shown to our bodily eye! Others for instance.—Laub, On the Tragedies of Shakespeare.

Feasible. s. That which is practicable.

We conclude many things impossibilities, which yet are easy feasibles.—Glaucille, Six mois de l'Asie.

Feasibleness. s. Attribute suggested by Feasible; practicability.

Let us inquire into the feasibleness of this great improvement of our holy and Christian diligence.—Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 271.

They have not yet convinced the world of the feasibleness and truth of their propositions, by any significant transcriptions of them upon their lives.—South, Sermons, vii. 115.

You have overheard me of the feasibleness, as well as the excellency, of that kind of conversation.—Gouldman, Winter Evening's Conference, p. 1.

Feast. s. See Festival.

1. Entertainment at table; sumptuous treat of great numbers.

On Pharaoh's birthday he made a feast unto all his servants.—Genesis, xl. 20.

2. Anniversary day of rejoicing either on a civil or religious occasion; festival: (opposed to a fast).

This day is call'd the feast of Crispian.—Shakespeare, Henry V. iv. 3.

3. Treat; dainty.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the griping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others.—Locke.

Feast. v. n. Eat sumptuously; eat together on a day of joy.

Richard and Northumberland, great friends, Did feast together.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iii. 1.

Feast. v. a.

1. Entertain sumptuously; entertain magnificently.

He was entertained and feasted by the king with great show of favour.—Nir J. Haywood.

The two knights of the shire were escorted with great pomp to their choir by the magistracy of the city, heard the dean preach a sermon, probably on the duty of passive obedience, and were afterwards feasted by the mayor.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. iv.

2. Delight; pamper; gratify luxuriously.

All these are ours, all nature's excellence, Whose taste or smell can lessen the feasted sense.—Dryden.

Feastday. s. See Feast, s. 2.

The prodigious increase of feast-days in the Christian church commenced towards the close of the fourth century.—Rees, Cyclopaedia, Feast.

Not so commonly used as an equivalent to Feast, as Fastday is used for Fast.

Feaster. s. One who feasts; (in the extra-t) fares as at a feast.

Those feasters could speak of great and many excellencies in manna.—Jeremy Taylor, Worthing Communion.

Feastful. adj.

1. Festive; joyful.

They constitute also a feastful date to the honour and worship thereof.—Dale, Discourses on the Revelations, sign. 11; 1330.

Our solemn feastful day.—A Archbishop Parker, Translation of the Psalms, p. 254.

The virgin also shall on feastful days Visit his tomb with flowers, only bewailing His lot unfortunate in nuptial choice, From whence captivity and loss of eyes.

Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1741.

Therefore be sure

Thou, when the bridegroom with his feastful friends Presses to taste at the mid hour of night,

Must gain'd thy entrance, virgin wise and pure.

Id., Sonnets, ix.

2. Luxurious; riotous.

The mitter train Who crowd his palace, and with lawless pow'r His herds and flocks in feastful rites devour.

Pope, Homer's Odyssey.

Feasting. verbal abs. Entertainment; treat.

But these very grievously afflicted them, when they had received with feasting.—Wisdome, xix. 16.

When the glutton Apollonius had spent a vast revenue in his profligate feasting, he killed himself for fear of starving; but if Caesar had promised to give him all Sicily, or the revenues of Egypt, the beast would have lived and eaten.—Jeremy Taylor, Worthing Communion, 130. (Ord MS.)

Feestrite. s. Custom observed in entertainments.

His hospitable gate, Unmurd' to all, invites a numerous train Of daily guests; whose board with plenty crown'd, Revives the feestrite old.

Philips.

Feat. s. [N. Fr. fait; Modern Fr. fait; Lat. factum—thing done.]

1. Act; deed; action; exploit.

Perceles is his name, renowned far For his bold feats and hardy confidence, Full oft approved in many a cruel war.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Our soldiers are men of strong limbs for action, and perform such feats as they are not able to express.—Adrian, Spectator.

2. Trick; artful, festive, or ludicrous performance.

The joints are more supple to all feats of activity and motion in youth than afterwards.—Bacon, Essays.

Feat. adj.

1. Ready; skilful; ingenious.

A page so kind, so dexterous, diligent; So tender over his occasions, true, So feat, so nurse-like.—Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 5.

Now only used in irony and contempt.

That feat man at controversy.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

2. Nice; neat.

Look how well my garments sit upon me, Much feater than before.—Shakespeare, Troilus, ii. 1.

She speaks feat English.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Little Thief.

Feat. v. a. Form; fashion; set an example to. Rare.

[He] liv'd in court, (Which more it is to do) most grain'd, most lov'd; A spouse to the youngest; to the more mature, A glass that feated them; and to the graver, A child that guided dotards.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, i. 1.

Feastously. adv. Nently; dexterously. Obsolete.

And with five fingers crop't full feastously. The tender stalks on high.—Spenser, Prothalamion.

Feather. s. [A.S. feader, feayr, feayr.]

Part of the external covering of a bird, the analogue of hair in quadrupeds; common in the plural as a collective term for the plumage in general; figuratively (from the proverbial expression, birds of a feather) kind; nature; class.

I am not of that feather to shirk off My friend, when he must needs me.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, i. 1.

Five feathers make the birds.—Proverb.

A feather in one's cap. Claim for honour; trophy.

The part, however, that he took in the rescue was a feather in his cap which was not so easily dropped.—Murray, Spectator.

Be in full feather. Make a show.

Be in high feather. Be elated.

Now that September has come, and all our parliamentary duties are over, perhaps no class of men is in such high feather as the continental snobs.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xxi.

Daw (juy) in peacock's feathers. Person, from the fable so called, affecting by means of an unsubstantial external display the character of one wealthier or more important than himself.

The poor silly jays who trail a peacock's feather behind them, and think to simulate the gorgeous bird whose nature it is to strut on palace-terraces, and to flaunt his magnificent fanfall in the sunshine; the jays with peacock's feathers are the snobs of this world; and never since the days of Aesch were they more numerous in any land than they are at present in this free country.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xz.

Show the white feather. Show signs of cowardice or had breed, a white feather in a game cock's tail being considered a sign of either bad blood or degeneracy.

This was where the little fellow had shown the white feather only a few days before.—Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney.

Feather, v. a.

1. Dress in, or fit with, feathers; give wings to; render light as a feather.

The Polonian story perhaps may feather some tedious hours.—Larvaly, Letters, p. 204; 1002.

An eagle had the ill hap to be struck with an arrow, feather'd from her own wing.—Sir E. L'Estrange.

Nonsense, feathered with soft and delicate phrases, and pointed with pathetic accents.—Dr. Scott, Works, ii. 124; 1718.

Enrich; adorn; exult.

They stuck not to say, that the king cared not to plume his nobility and people, to feather himself.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

3. Trend as a cock.

Dame Partlet was the sovereign of his heart; Ardent in love, outrageous in his play, He feather'd her a hundred times a day.—Dryden, Fables.

Tar and feather. Smear with tar and cover with feathers, as a punishment.

The Savoy was another piece of the same kind. . . . An unfortunate tailor who ventured to go thither for the purpose of demanding payment of a debt, was set upon by the whole mob of cheats, ruffians and courtesans. . . . He was knocked down, stripped, tarred, and feather'd. A rope was tied round his waist. He was dragged naked up and down the streets amidst yells of 'A ballist! A ballist!' Finally he was compelled to kneel down and to curse his father and mother. Having performed this ceremony he was permitted, and the persecution was blunted by many of the Savoyards, to limp home without a rag upon him.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xxi.

Feather an oar, in rowing. Turn the blade of the oar, when out of the water, between one stroke and another, upwards, a neat manoeuvre.

And have you not heard of a jolly young waterman, From Blackfriars bridge who was used for to ply? He feather'd his oars with such skill and dexterity, Winning each heart and delighting each eye.—U. Hildis, The Watermen.

Feather one's nest. Get riches together; make a snug, warm, comfortable home.

But the days of the genus Jawwater Sharp were over in this borough as well as in many others. He had contrived in his lustre of agitation to feather his nest pretty successfully; by which he had lost public confidence and gained his private end. Three hungry Jawwater Sharps, his hopeful sons, had all become commissioners of one thing or another; temporary appointments with interminable duties; a low-church son-in-law found himself comfortably seated in a chancellor's living; and several cousins and nephews were busy in the exchequer.—Diarrhi the younger, Coningsby, b. iv. ch. v.

Feather. v. n. Take the character of anything feathered; slope as a Feather-edge.

A noble wood crowns the top, and feathers down to the bottom of a large swelling hill.—Wateley, Observations on Modern Gardening, 306. (Ord MS.)

Feathered. part. uij.

1. Clothed or fitted with feathers.

I saw young Harry with his banner on, His crimson on his thighs, gallantly arm'd, Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. iv. 1.

So when the new-born phoenix first is seen, Her feather'd subjects all adore their queen.—Dryden.

Dark'ning the sky, they hover o'er and abroad The wanton mallards with a feather'd cloud. Prior. Vultures, harpies, ravens, cormorants, and among many other feathered creatures, several little winged boys perch upon the middle arches.—Addison, Spectator.

2. Swift; winged like an arrow.

Like shuttles through the loom, so swiftly glide
My feather'd hours.

G. Sandys, Paraphrase of the Book of Job, p. 12.
Nor think this while our feather'd minutes may Fall under measure; Time itself can stay.

Cleveland, Poems, &c., p. 43.

3. Smoothed like down or feathers.

As if it were a sign of godliness, and a mark of God's favourites, to be affected with nonsense, feathered with soft and delicate phrases, and pointed with pathetic accents.—South, Works, ii. 124.

Feathercock. s. Vainglorious person. Obsolete.

I both know and well discern your humour and gonium; that wouldst make me one of Diveses or Antiphonal scholars, in imitating of those Glos-somedes, finisall, spruce-ones, muskats, syrenists, feathercocks, vainglorious, a cage for crickets.—
Passenger of Newcastle: 1612. (Nares by H. & W.)

Featheredge. s. See extract.

Bear's or plank's that have one edge thinner than another, are called featheredge stuff.—Mozon, Mechanical Exercises.

Featheredged. adj. Having, constructed with, a feather edge.

The cover must be made of featheredged boards,
in the nature of several doors with hinges fixed thereon.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Feathergrass. s. See Featherstop.

Feathering. verbal abs. In Architecture.
See extract, also Foliation.

Feathering, or foliation, [is] an arrangement of small arcs or folds, separated by projecting points or cusps, used as ornaments on the mouldings... in Gothic architecture... Feathering was first introduced towards the close of the early English style, and continued universally prevalent until the revival of... classic architecture. Glossary of Architecture, in voce.

Featherless. adj. Having few or no feathers.

This so high grown ivy was like that featherless bird which went about to beg plumes of other birds to cover his nakedness.—Howell, Facell Porrait.

Featherly. adj. Resembling feathers. Rare.

The secretion or pluvous aggregation of hail about the mother and fundamental atoms thereof, seems to be some featherly particle of snow, although snow itself be hexangular. — Sir T. Browne.

Featherstop. s. Popular name of certain grasses with a soft wavy panicle, probably for the most part, of the genera Agrostis
and Arundo: (not common in the later writers, and of doubtful authority as a vernacular or provincial term. In Gerard it is given in the synonymy, but not in the text. Feather-top-grass is also given.
Out of this has probably risen, since Ger-ard's time, the term feathergrass, as applied to a very doubtful native, the Stipa pinnata, from the length and feathery character of its awns).

Feathery. adj.

1. Clothed with feathers.

Or whistle from the lodge, or village-cock
Count the night-watches to his feathery clamour.
Milton, Comus, 316.

2. Light as a feather.

Transitory migrations seem light and feathery.
Donne, Letter to Sir H. G. Parns, p. 287.
Feathery and light still, that hath no good substance in it.—Whately, Redemption of Time, p. 25:
1634.

3. Dealing with, employed in, feathers.

Fine and feathery artizan;
Heart of plumists, if you can
With your art so far presume,
Make for me a prince's plume;
Feathers soft, and feathers rare,
Such as suits a prince to wear.
Moore, Twopenny Post-bag.

Feetly. adv. In a feat manner; neatly;
nimble; dexterously.

Foot it featly here and there,
And sweet sprites the burthen bear.
Shakespeare, Tempest, l. 2.
The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That feately footing seem'd to skim the ground.
Dryden.

Feetously. adv. Neatly. Rare.

The morrice ring, while hobby horse doth foot it feetously.—Benjamin and Fletcher, Knight of the Burning Peale.

Feeture. s. [N Fr. feiture; Lat. factura making.]

1. Cast or make of the face.

Report the feature of Octavia, her years.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ll. 5.

2. Lincement or single part of the face.

Though you be the fairest of God's creatures,
Yet think that death shall spoil your goodly features.
Spenser.

We may compare the face of a great man with the character, and try if we can find out in his looks and features, the haughty cruel, or unmerciful temper that discovers itself in the history.—Addison, Dialogue on Medals.

Though various features did the sisters grace,
A sister's likeness was in every face.
Adrian, Translation from Ovid.

3. Whole turn of the body; fashion; make.

She also duff'd her heavy lumber-jewels
Which the fair feature of her limbs did hide.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.

4. Characteristic.

Here they [the witches] speak as if they were creating some new feature, which the devil persuades them to be able to do often, by the pronouncing of words, and pouring out of liquors on the earth.—
H. Johnson, His own Notes on his Masques.

Featured. adj.

1. Having (handsome) features.

Rich thou art, featured thou art, feared thou art.
—B. Greene, Forcwell to Folly: 1617.

2. Having, endowed with, features. (generally).

Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featur'd like him, like him with friends possess'd.
Shakespeare, Sonnet xix.

What are the noblest ornaments, but deaths
Turn'd flatterers of life in paint, or warble,
The well-stain'd canvas, or the feather'd statue?
Young, Night Thoughts, ix.

Febrile. adj. Tending to produce fever.

The febrile humour fell into my legs. — Lord Chesleyfield.

Febrifuge. s. [Lat. febris, and fugo put to flight.] Medicine serviceable in a fever.

Bitters, like elder, are the best sanaguillars, and also the best febrifuges. — Sir J. Floyer, Preternatural State of the animal Humours.

Febrifuge. adj. Having the power to cure fevers.

Febrifuge draughts had a most surprising good effect. — Arbuthnot.

Febrile. adj. [Lat. febrilis.] Constituting fever; proceeding from fever.

The spirits, embroiled with the malignity in the blood, and torpid and tumid by the febrile fermentation, or by phlogistony relieved. — Harey, Dissertation of Consumption.

February. s. Name of the second month in the year: (used adjetivally).

You have such a February face
So full of frost, of storm, and chauldness!
Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, v. 4.

Februation. s. [Lat. februatio, -onis = purification; februo = purify; whence the name of the month from the ceremony of purification or lustration therein practised by the Romans.] Rite of purifying. Rare.

Some fantastic rites and februations to chase away worms and spectres. — J. Spencer, Discourse concerning Prodiges, 27.

Superstition... expressed in an infinity of februations and empty forms. — Ibid, p. 52.

Fécal. adj. Having the character, or consisting, of feces or excrement.

But this is not all — there occur also at Lym-Beck, and in other fine localities, peculiar fossils called Coprolites, which on careful examination and comparison with similar masses found actually within the body of the Ichthyosaur, are known to be the fecal remains of animals of that genus. — Anted, Geology, Introductory, Descriptive, and Practical,
pt. ii. ch. xxiii.

Féces. s. [Lat. feces, plural of fec.]

1. Drege; lees; sediment; subsidence.

Hence the surface of the ground with mud
And slime besmear'd, the feces of the flood,
Receiv'd the rays of heav'n; and smelking in
The seeds of heat, new creatures did begin.
Dryden.

2. Excrement.

The symptoms of such a constitution are a sour smell in their feces. — Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Fécula. s. See extract.

The word fécula, again, originally meant to imply any substance which was derived by spontaneous subsidence from a liquid (from fec, the grounds or settlement of any liquor): afterwards it was applied to starch, which is deposited in this manner by agitating the flour of wheat in water; and lastly, it has been applied to a peculiar vegetable principle, which,

like starch, is insoluble in cold, but completely solubi-le in boiling water, with which it forms a gelatinous solution. This indefinite meaning of the word fécula has created numerous mistakes in pharmaceu-tastic chemistry; elatium, for instance, is said to be fécula, and, in the original sense of the word, it is properly so called, inasmuch as it is procured from a vegetable juice by spontaneous subsidence, but in the limited and modern acceptation of the term, it conveys an erroneous idea; for instead of the active principle of the juice residing in fécula, it is a peculiar proximate principle, sui generis, to which I have ventured to bestow the name of elatin.
— Dr. Parry, Pharmacologia, Historical Introduction,
vol. i. p. 46, 66 &.

Féculence. s. Laves; feces; sediment; drege.

Whether the wildine's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist
Its féculence, which in more porous stocks
Of cyder plants thus passes free. — Philips.

Féculency. s. Same as Féculence.

Pour upon it some very strong ley, to facilitate the separation of its féculence. — Boyle.

Féculent. adj. Foul; dreggy; excrementi-tious.

But both his hands, most filthy féculent,
Above the water were on high extant,
And fécul'd to wash themselves incessantly,
Yet nothing cleaner were for such intent.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.

They are to the body as the light of a candle to the gross and féculent snuff, which as it is not pent up in it, so neither doth it partake of its impurity.
— Glauville, Apology for Philosophy.

Fécul. adj. Fruitful; prolific. Rare.

The more sickly the years are, the less fécul or fruitful of children also they be. — Grand, Observations on the Bills of Mortality.

Fécundate. v. a. Fertilize; impregnate.
See also Fertilization.

Eckstrom first published a clear account, in 1831, of the singular marvellous economy of the ipse-fishes. In the Syngnathus genus the sexes come together in the month of April, and the ova pass from the female and are transferred into the sub-caudal pouch of the male, being féculated in transition, and the valves of the pouch immediately close over them. In the month of July the young are hatched and quit the pouch, but they follow their father, and return for shelter into their nursery when danger threatens. — West, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, lxx. xlii.

Fécundation. s. [Lat. fecundatio, -onis; fecundus = prolific, fruitful; fecunditas, -alis.]

1. Act of making fruitful or prolific.

She requested these plants as a medicine of fe-cundation, or to make her fruitful. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

2. In Physiology. See extract under Extri-cation.

Fécundity. s. Fruitfulness; power of producing or bringing forth.

I appeal to the animal and vegetable productions of the earth, the vast numbers whereof notoriously testify the extreme luxuriance and fécondity of it.
— Houttuyn.

Some of the ancients mention some seeds that retain their fécondity forty years, and I have found that melon seeds, after thirty years, are best for raising of melons. — Ray.

God could never create so ample a world, but he could have made a bigger; the fécondity of his creative power never growing barren nor being exhausted. — Hentley.

Fédary. s. [Lat. fedus, -eris = league.]
Confederate. Rare.

This is the spelling in Dyce's edition, the commoner reading being féduary. In the previous editions the derivation is either fedus or féduum; an entry which indicates a doubt either as to its import or its form on the part of Johnson. In respect to the former, Hammer seems to be the only commentator who both takes the form in o, and gives it its primary meaning; writing 'a féduary is one who holds his estate under the tenure of suit and service to a superior lord.' How a letter could be a feudal vassal he does not explain; neither does any subsequent commentator. On the contrary, most of them repudiate the explanation, so that confé-derate or accomplice is the ordinary rendering. This is got at by two ways.

(1) Malone, remarking that the feudal vassal is not called a feodary, but a feodary or feodatory, considers the feodary of the text to mean, in the first instance, a special officer appointed by the Court of Wards, by virtue of the statute 32 Henry VIII. ch. 46, to be present with and assistant to the escheators in every county at finding of offices, and to give evidence for the king (the Latin term being Escheatori adjunctus). 'He was, therefore, the escheator's associate; and hence Shakspeare, with his usual licence, uses the word for a confederate or associate in general.' Here the derivation is from feudum, and the meaning equivalent to that of a word from feudus; the identity of import being obtained indirectly.

(2) With feodary as the reading, the connection with feudus, the basis of such secondary forms as confederate, is direct; and the only philological question is whether it is a word formed on a wholly wrong principle (as feodary, in such a sense, would be from feudus), or the word feodary, in a trisyllabic form; in dealing with which either the author or the printer has made the same mistake that is often made now-a-days with the same somewhat unmanageable combination of two r's in words like registrum. This last is the editor's view.

See Feodary and Feodary.

Black as the ink that's on thee, senseless bauble!
Art thou a feodary for this act, and look at
No virgin-like without?

Shakspeare, Cymbeline, iii. 2.

Federal. adj. Relating to, consisting in, or constituting, a league or contract, especially relating to a federation of states.

It is a federal rite between God and us, as caline and drinkive, both among Jews and lunthens, was wont to be.—Hammond.

The Romans compelled them, contrary to all federal right and justice, both to part with Sardinia, their lawful territory, and also to pay them for the future a double tribute. —Grege.

The same was also the case with the league of twenty-three cities in Lycia, the largest of which had three votes; those of middle size, two; and the others, one: the contributions to the common federal treasury being in the same proportions. —Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, vii. vii.

Often used substantially for Federalist, as 'he was a staunch Federal.'

Federalism. s. System of federal principles.

We see every man that the Jacobins choose to apprehend taken up in his village, or in his house, and conveyed to the prison without the least shadow of resistance; and this indifferently whether he be suspected of royalism or federalism, moderation, democracy royal, or any other of the names of the faction which they start by the hour.—Burke, Remarks on the Policy of the Allies. (Rich.)

Federalist. s. Supporter of Federalism.

Will you, O Girondins, parcel us into separate Republics, then; like the Swiss, like your Americans; so that there be no metropolis or indivisible French nation any more? Your departmental guard seemed to point that way! Federal Republic? Federalist? Men and knitting-women repeat Federalism, with or without much dictionary-meaning; but go on repeating it, as is usual in such cases, till the meaning of it becomes almost magical, fit to designate all mystery of inquiry; and Federalism has grown a word of exorcism and apotropaic.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. ii. b. iii. ch. ii.

Feodary. s. Confederates; accomplices.

He's a traitor, and Camillo is
A feodary with her.

Shakspeare, Winter's Tale, ii. 1.

Federative. adj. Having power to make a league or contract.

[They] suggest to them leaguers of perpetual amity, at the very time when the power, to which our constitution has exclusively delegated the federative capacity of this kingdom, may find it expedient to make war upon them.—Burke, Reflections on the French Revolution.

Federation. s. League (Confederation; commoner).

Is he obliged to keep any terms with these clubs and federations, who hold out to us as a pattern for imitation, the proceedings in France?—Harker.

Sir William Temple, in his interesting work on the Batavian federation, had told his countrymen that, when he was ambassador at the Hague, the single province of Holland, then ruled by the frugal and prudent De Witt, owed about five millions sterling, for which interest at four per cent was always ready to the day.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xix.

Used adjectively.

Precisely after one year and three days, our sublime federation field is wetted, in this manner, with French blood.—Carlyle, French Revolution, pt. ii. b. iv. ch. ix.

Feduity. s. [Lat. fidelus, fidelus = foul.] Fidelity; particular instance of such. Rare.

A second [impediment] may be the fidelity and unimpairedness of the match, when the parties incestuously marry.—Bishop Hall, Cases of Conscience, iv. 10.

Some fidelities common amongst the Gnosticks, not fit to be named.—Bishop Leighton, Moralia compendiosa, dv. p. 68.

Fee. s. See also Feud and Fief.

1. In Law. See extracts.

All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgment of any service, or payment of any rent to any lord. Feudum, or fee, is that which he holds by the benefit of another, and in name whereof he owes services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum; for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the licence that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has direct dominion, that is, the very property or ownership in any land, but the prince in right of his crown; for though he that has fee has his perpetual use of the land, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts: fee absolute, otherwise called fee simple; and fee conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail; fee simple is that whereof we are seized in those several words, To us and our heirs forever. Fee-tail is that whereof we are seized to us and our heirs with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body; fee-tail special is that where a man and his wife are seized of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. —Covent.

The constitution of feuds had its original from the military policy of the northern or Celtic nations, the Goths, the Huns, the Franks, the Vandals, and the Lombards. . . . It was brought by them from their own countries, and continued in their respective colonies as the most likely means to secure their new acquisitions, and to that end large districts or parcels of land were allotted by the conquering general to the superior officers of the army, and by them dealt out again in smaller parcels or allotments to the inferior officers and most deserving soldiers. These allotments were called feuda, feuda, feud, or feud, which last appellation in the northern languages signifies a conditional stipend or reward. Rewards or stipends they evidently were, and the condition annexed to them was that the possessor should do service faithfully, both at home and in the war, to him by whom they were given; for which purpose he took the oath 'juramentum fidelitatis,' or oath of fidelity; and in case of the breach of this condition and oath, by not performing the stipulated service, or by deserting the lord in battle, the lands were again to revert to him who granted them.—Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, b. ii. ch. iv.

[Fee, fief, feud.]—The importance of cattle in a simple state of society early caused an intimate connection between the notion of cattle and of money or wealth. Thus we have Latin pecunia, cattle; pecunia, money; and Gothic faihu, possessions, is identical with Old High German fah, money, German fisch, cattle, Old Norse fe, cattle, money, Anglo-Saxon feah, cattle, riches, money, price, reward. Adapted into the Romance tongues the word became Italian fe, Provençal fe, French fee. When it received a Latin dress the introduction of a d, as in many other cases, to avoid the hiatus, produced the Middle Latin feudum, signifying the property in land distributed by the conqueror to his companions in arms, as a reward for their past services, and pledge for their rendering the like for the future. Hence the term fee, in English law, for the entire estate in land, passment, from French seigneur, to convey the fee, or fee, to a new owner. Fee has also been appropriated by custom to certain money-payments.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

2. Private property: (as the first element in a compound).

What concern they?

The general cause; or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast?

Shakspeare, Macbeth, iv. 2.

3. Reward; gratification; recompense.
These be the ways by which, without reward,
Livings in courts be gotten, though full hard;
For nothing there is done without a fee.

Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Not helping, death's my fee;
But if I help, what do you promise me?
Shakspeare, All's well that ends well, ii. 1.

4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.

Now that God and friends
Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?

Shakspeare, Henry VI. Part III., iv. 2.

5. Honorarium paid to physicians or lawyers.
He does not refuse doing a good office for a man,
because he cannot pay the fee of it.—Addison, Spectator.

6. ? Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.

In praising and trimming all manner of trees,
Reserve to each cattle their property fees.

Tasso, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Fee. v. a.

1. Reward; pay.

No man fees the sun, no man purchases the light,
nor erra if he walks by it.—South, Sermons.
Watch the disease in time; for when within
The dropsy rages and extends the skin,
In vain for hellebore the patient craves,
And fees the doctor; but too late is wise.

Dryden, Persius's Satires.

2. Bribe; hire; purchase; keep in hire.

I have long loved her, and improved opportunities to meet her; fee'd every night occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her.—Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.

There's not a thane of them but in his house
I have a servant fee'd. —Id., Macbeth, iii. 4.
She hath an usher, and a waiting gentlewoman,
A page, a coachman; these are fee'd and fee'd,
And yet for all that will be prating.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Noble Gentleman.

Fee-farm. s. Particular tenure by which lands are held from a superior lord. Used adjectively in extract from Blackstone.

John surrendered his kingdom to the Pope, and took them back again to hold in fee-farm; which brought him into such hatred, as all his lifetime after he was possessed with fear.—Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

There are at common law three manner of rents, rent-service, rent-charge, and rent-work. . . . There are also other species of rents which are reducible to these three. . . . A fee-farm rent is rent-charge issuing out of an estate in fee; or of at least one fourth of the value of the lands at the time of its reservation; for a grant of lands reserving so considerable a rent is only letting lands to farm in fee simple, instead of the usual methods for life or years.—Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, b. ii. ch. iii.

Feeble. adj. [Fr. foible.] Weak; delilitated; sickly; infirm; without strength of body or mind.

The men carried all the feeble upon asses to Jericho.—2 Chronicles, xxviii. 15.

Feeble. v. a. Enfeeble. Rare.

Or as a castle reared high and round,
By subtle engines and malicious slight
Is undermined from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forc'd and feeble'd quite.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Shall that victorious hand be feeble'd here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement?

Shakspeare, King John, v. 2.

A life feeble'd with natural infirmities.—Walsley, Life of Christ, sign. A. 5, b. 161a.

Many a burning sun
Has scard'd my body and boll'd up my blood, feeble'd my knees, and stamp'd a mangle
Upon my figure.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Island Princess.

Feeble-minded. adj. Weak of mind; defective in resolution and constancy.

Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men.—1 Thessalonians, v. 14.

Feebleness. s. Attributes suggested by Feeble; weakness; imbecility; infirmity; want of strength.

A better head Rome's glorious body fits,
Than his that shakes for age and feebleness.
Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus, l. 2.
Some in their latter years, through the feebleness of their limbs, have been forced to study upon their knees.—South, Sermons.

Feebly, adv. In a feeble manner; weakly;
without strength.

Like mine thy gentle numbers feebly creep,
Thy tragick muse gives smiles, thy comick sleep.
Dryden, MacFlecknoe.

Feed, v. a. [A.S. fedan.]

1. Supply with food.
Her heart and bowels through her back he drew,
And fed the wounds that help'd him to pursue.
Dryden.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it set more than its own weight.—Abathnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

2. Supply; furnish.

A constant smoke rises from the warm springs that feed the many baths with which this island is stocked.—Addison.
The breadth of the bottom of the hopper must be half the length of a barleycorn, and near as long as the rollers, that it may not feed them too fast.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. Graze; consume by cattle.

Once in three years feed your mowing lands, if you cannot get manure constantly to keep them in heart.—Mortimer, Husbandry.
The frost will spoil the grass; for which reason take care to feed it close before winter.—Ibid.

4. Nourish.

How oft from pomp and state did I remove,
To feed despair, and cherish hopeless love.
Prior.

5. With hope (i.e. with hope alone), as opposed to reality or fulfilment.

Barbarossa learned the strength of the emperor, craftily feeding him with the hope of liberty.—
Kneller, History of the Turks.

6. Entertain; keep from satiety.

The alteration of scenes, so it be without noise, feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object.—Bacon.

Feed, v. n.

1. Take food; prey; live by eating.
To feed were best at home;
From thence, the sauce to meat is ceremony;
Feeding were bare without it.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, III. 4.

The first, in the morning, I went out into the island with my gun, to see for some food, and discover the country; when I killed a she-goat, and her kid followed me home, which I afterwards killed also, because it would not feed.—De Foo, Life and Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.

With on or upon.

You cry against the noble senate, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else would feed on one another. Id., Coriolanus, l. 1.
Galen speaketh of the curing of the scirrhus of the liver by milk of a cow that feedeth upon certain herbs.—Bacon.

The Brahmins were all of the same race, lived in fields and woods, and fed only upon rice, milk, or herbs.—Sir W. Temple.

For on the grassy verdure as he lay,
Decouring close the helpless infant lay,
Fed on his trembling limbs, and lap'd his gore.
Pope.

All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy
Th' extensive blessing of his luxury.
Id., Essay on Man.

2. Pasture; place cattle to feed.

If a man shall cause a field to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field, he shall make restitution.—Leviticus, xii. 8.

Feed, s.

1. Food; that which is eaten.
A fearful deer then looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a shuddering kind of terror through all her principal parts.—Sir P. Sidney.

An old work'd on this as well as a young one:
their feed is much cheaper, because they eat no oats.
—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Pasture.

Besides his cote, his flocks and herds of feed
Are now on sale. Shakespeare, As you like it, II. 4.

3. Meal; act of eating.

Plenty hung
Tempting on nicks, to pluck and eat my fill
I spared not: for such pleasure till that hour
At feed or fountain never had I found.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 584.

With a, as 'a feed,' it means a good meal,
or feast. Colloquial, or slang.

Feeder, s.

1. One who, or that which, feeds.

a. By giving food materially.

Abel was a keeper [in the margin, a feeder] of sheep.—Genesis, iv. 2.

Ne'er looks to heaven amidst his gorgeous feast,
But with bowled head and languid attitude
Craves, and blasphemes his feeder.
Milton, Comus, 776.

The beast obeys his keeper, and looks up.
Not to his master's but his feeder's hand.
Sir J. Denham.

b. By encouragement; promoter.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and then shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my rhubs.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. v. 5.

It [flattery] is the poisoning of men's understanding, the feeder of humours.—Sir M. Sandys, Essays,
p. 176.

2. One who eats.

With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder.
Shakespeare, Richard II. II. 1.
But that our fasts
In every morn have fully, and the feeder
Digest it with a custom, I should blush
To see you so abstinent. Id., Winter's Tale, IV. 3.

We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrust, called the misel-thrust, or feeder upon misel-thrust.
—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

In a certain mode: (as 'a nice feeder,' 'a gross feeder').

But such fine feeders are no guests for me;
Riot agrees not with frugality;
Then, that unfashionable man am I,
With me they'd starve for want of ivory.
Dryden, Juvenal's Satires.

Feeding, s. [A.S. fedung.] Pasture. See Feed.

Finding the feeding, for which he had toil'd
To have kept safe, by these vile cattle spoil'd.
Dryden, Moon-calf.

Feel, preterite felt; pass. part. felt, v. n.
[A.S. felan.]

1. Have perception of things by the touch;
search by feeling.

They should seek the Lord, if imply they might feel after him, and find him.—Acts, xvii. 27.

2. Have a quick sensibility of good or evil, right or wrong.

Man, who feels for all mankind. Pope.

3. Apppear to the touch.

Blind men say black feels rough, and white feels smooth. Dryden.

Feel, v. a.

1. Perceive by the touch.

Suffer me that I may feel the pillars.—Judges,
xxvi. 25.

2. Try; sound.

We hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour.—Shakespeare, King Lear, l. 2.

3. Have perception of.

The air is so thin, that a bird has the rein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by.—Sir W. Raleigh.

4. Have sense of external pain or pleasure.

Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel.
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 335.

5. Be affected by; perceive mentally.

Would I had never tried this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!
Shakespeare, Henry VIII, III. 1.

The well-sung words shall south my pensive guest;
He best can paint them who can feel them most.
Pope.

6. Know; be acquainted with.

His overthrow leap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself
And found the blessedness of being little.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII, IV. 2.

Feel, s. Sense of feeling; touch.

The difference of these tumours will be distinguished by the feel.—Sharp, Surgery.

Feeler, s.

1. One who feels.

This hand, whose touch,
Whose every touch would force the fiercer's soul
To the oath of loyalty. Shakespeare, Cymbeline, l. 7.

2. One who perceives mentally.

Of my longing to see you I am a better feeder than a describer.—Sir H. Wotton, Letter to Sir B. Bacon, Reliquia Wottoniana, p. 399.

3. Horns or antennae of insects.

Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennae; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennae,
I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eyes, the same here named may be admitted.—

Derham, Physico-Theology.

4. Tentative action: (as, 'by way of a feeler').

Feeling, part. adj.

1. Expressive of great sensibility.

O wretched state of man in self-division!
O well thou say'st a feeling declaration
Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision!
Sir P. Sidney.

Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Id.
Maid till your ink be dry, and with your tears
Maid it again: and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity.
Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, III. 2.

2. Sensibly felt.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling wrongs,
Am pregnant to good pity.
Shakespeare, King Lear, IV. 6.

O'fall your royal favours; but this last Strikes through my heart. Southey.

Feeling, verbal abs.

1. Sense of touch.

Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as the eye could hold;
So obvious and so easy to be opened?
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at it through every pore?
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 98.

The sense of feeling can give us a notion of extension, shape, and all other ideas that enter at the eye, except colours. Addison, Spectator.

2. Perception; sensibility.

Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy: for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it.—
Bacon, Essays.

As they wandered home, they talked of Lady Caroline, to whom the duke mentioned that he must write. He had once intended distinctly to have explained his feelings to her in a letter from there;
but each day he postponed the close of his destiny, although without hope. Darcey the younger, The Young Duke, h. v. ch. ii.

Feelingly, adv. In a feeling manner.

1. With expression of great sensibility.

The princess might judge that he meant himself, who spoke so feelingly. Sir P. Sidney.
He would not have talked so feelingly of Cedrus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it.—
Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the leaf fang,
And cherish chills of the Winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery: these are rougher words,
That feelingly persuade me what I am.
Shakespeare, As you like it, II. 1.

He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late goal, and of the new purchased evil.—Sir W. Raleigh,
History of the World.

Feese, s. [connection with the preceding obscure.] Rush, or start, at taking a leap;
rush; impetus. Obsolete.

To leap without taking any race or feese, nullo procurari salire. Barrett, Alvaric: l. 1580.
The line of whose back makes the knees,
From whence love's lightest muses take their course.
Sir J. Davies, Witte's Pilgrimage, sign. N. 2. b.

They (the unless) met together with such wisdom, that both their backs were with the feese broken off, and so fed into the sea.—Kneller, History of the Turks, 878. (Ord 184.)

Feetless, adj. Being without feet.

Geoffrey of Bonildin brooded three feetless birds, called Alceians, upon his arrow.—C Camden.
There: behold the mangled, headless, handless,
feetless corpses of their fellow-countrymen.—Fulter,
History of the Holy War, p. 193.

Feese, v. a. [see last extract.] Chastise.

As he be proud with me,
I'll feese his pride.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, II. 3.

[To Fease, Feize, Feaze.—This word occurs in two main senses, the connection of which is by no means obvious, though it is impossible to treat them apart:
1, to whip, chastise, flog (Halliwell); and 2, to ravel out the end of a rope. To feaze, or feize, virgin caviers (Skinner). French, feaser, to whip; Provincial Danish, feke; German, fezen; Dutch, veet, to whip a child; Dutch, feizen, to whip. (Kilroy.) Provincial English, feak, a sharp twitch or pull. For the identity of feke and fezen, compare English twak and twick. The primary language seems to be the sound of switching with a light rod. Swiss, feasen, fezen, to switch, to reprehend, give a sharp reproof to; fezen, rods for children; fezen, to switch to and fro, to move to and fro with a light instrument, to fiddle, to write too fine and thin, or scrawl in writing, to ravel fine and thin. (Steider.) Hava-

FEIG. feign, to fiddle or twiddle with the fingers as in undulating a knot, pressing on the beads of a rosary or the like to do light minute work; feign (verb), to fiddle work. (Schmeller.) Feign (verb), to rain fine and thin, to ravel out threads; feign, feign, a thread, fibre. (Dumail.) Swiss, feign, a thin, poor creature, loose hanging threads; feign, feign, writing too fine and thin; feign, to ravel out, rain fine and thin, scrawl in writing, work in a piddling way, with too great attention to niceties; feign, to scrawl in writing; feign, a single thin stroke, or thread spun too fine. (Blalder.) Dutch, feign, feign, fibre, threads, straws; feign, feign der feign, fibres of the roots; Provincial English, feign, and hanging fibres of roots of plants. (Halliwell.) Feign of a cloth, fructillus, villus. (Pronunciation Parvularium.) I feign out an silk or velvet cloth, to ravel; my sleeve is feign, ravelle. (Palsgrave.) Swiss, feign, to ravel out; feign, hanging threads or tatters; English, feign, hanging, tatters; feign, tatters. (Halliwell.) German, feign, feign, to ravel, feign. (Halliwell.) Dictionary of English Etymology.

The spelling with ph commoner. See File-mot, Fere.

FEIGN. v. a. [N.Fr. feigner; Modern Fr. feigner; Lat. figo.]

1. Invent; image by an act of the mind.
Abominable, fittable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd,
Gorgons, and hydras, and chimeras dire!
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 626.
No such things are done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart. Schenck, vi. 8.

2. Make a show of doing anything; do upon some false pretence.
My gentle bella beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shadow, chides her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is bound. Pope.

3. Dissemble; conceal. Obsolete.
Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly long their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

FEIGN. v. n. Relate falsely; image from the invention; tell fabulously.
Therefore the poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his mind.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

FEIGNEDLY. adv. In fiction; not truly.
Those that come feignedly, and those that come unfeignedly.—Archbishop Cranmer, On the Sacrament, fol. 69.
Her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, with the Lord.—Jeremiah, iii. 10.
Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly,
in some of the heathens.—Baron.

FEIGNEDNESS. s. Attribute suggested by Feigned; fiction; deceit.

The church is not the school of feignedness and hypocrisy, but of truth and sincerity.—Harmer, Translation of Beza's German, p. 39.

FEIGNER. s. Inventer; contriver of a fiction.
And these three voices differ; as the thing done,
the doing, and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning, and the feigner; so the poem, the poetry, and the poet.—R. Johnson, Discoveries.

FEIGNING. verbal abs. False appearance; artful contrivance.

May her feignings
Not take your windows; but this day she batted
A stranger, a grave knight, with her loose eyes.
B. Jonson, Volpone.

FEINT. part. adj. Counterfeit; seeming.
The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it.—Locke.

FEINT. s. [Fr. feint.]
1. False appearance; offer of something not intended to be.
Courtly's letter is but a feint to get off.—Spencer.

2. Mock assault; appearance of aiming at one part when another is intended to be struck.
But, in the broad encamp'd, prepares
For well-bred feints and future wars. Prior.

FELICITATE. v. a. [Lat. felicatus, pass. part. of felicito.]
1. Make happy. Rare.

Gifts . . . felicitate lovers.—Translation of Lore-dance, p. 78: 104.
What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would ill and felicite his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey! Watts.
2. Congratulate; wish joy to any one.
They might proceed unto forms of speech, feli- citating the good, or deprecating the evil to follow.
—Sir T. Browne.

FELICITATE. adj. Made happy.
I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys;
And find I am alone felicitate
In your dear highness' love.
Shakespeare, King Lear, l. 1.

FELICITOUS. adj. Happy; prosperous.
In all which [wars] she was felicitous and victorious.—Sir R. Naughton, Fragmenta Regalia of Queen Elizabeth.

FELICITY. s. [Lat. felicitas; Fr. felicité.] Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin,
And grant that we, for whom thou didst die,
Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,
May live for ever in felicity. Spenser, Sonnets.
Others in virtue plac'd felicity;
But virtue join'd with riches and long life,
In corporal pleasure lost and careless ease.
Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 297.

The felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete. Bishop Atterbury.
How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel!—Ruyter.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the same skill, or the same ingenuity; things, equally easy in themselves, are not all equally easy to my single mind. Every writer of a book work examines errors, where there appears neither ambiguity to mislead, nor obscurity to confound him;
and, in a search like this, many felicities of expression will be casually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.—Johnson, Preface to Dic- tionary.

Their character [that of the Latin poems in the Muse Anglicana] does not, on the whole, pass me-docrity; they are often incorrect and somewhat turgid, but occasionally display a certain felicity in adapting ancient lines to their subject, and some liveliness of invention. Hallam, Introduction to the Literature of Europe in the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth centuries, pt. iv. ch. v. sect. 1, § 56.

FELINE. adj. [Lat. felineus, from felis—cat.]
Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canines, and in his tail which is feline, or long taper. Grece, Museum.
The Greeks, in their feline fables, represented the lion as the king of beasts, and gave him the royal attributes of clemency, mercy, and munificence.
It was not till late years that the observations of travellers and more accurate naturalists corrected the error, by showing that the lion is characterized by the ferocity, cowardice, and treachery, which are qualities common to all the feline tribe.—Sir G. G.
Lewis, On the Influence of Authority in matters of Opinion.

FELL. adj. [A.S. fell—cruel, tyrannical, fierce.] Cruel; barbarous; inhuman; savage.

No felicit fore,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep.
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an eye, shall grow dear friends. Shakespeare, Orsino, iv. 4.
That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
For since pursue me. Id., Ten'sth Night, i. 1.
It seemed fury, discord, madness, fell,
Flow from his lap when he unfolds the same. Fairfax.

I know thee, love I wild as the raging main,
More fell than tygers on the Libyan plain. Pope.

FELL. s. [Lat. fel; A.S. felle.] Gull. Rare.
Sweet Love, that doth his golden wings embay
In blowed nectar and pure Pleasure's well,
Untroubled of vile fear or bitter fell.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, iii. 11, 2.

FELL. s. [A.S. fell.] Hide; skin.
Wipe thine eye;
The gray-r shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Kre they shall make us weep. Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.

The time has been my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal tremor rouse and stir. Id., Macbeth, v. 5.

He ought to shear not to lay his sheep: to take Their fleeces, not their fells. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

FELL. s. [Norse, fjeld.] Hill; mountain.

This county abounds with mountains, which in the language of the country are called fells.—Burns and Nicolson, History of Westmoreland, &c., l. 2.
Greenwick town and castle lie about three miles from Cumbler over the fells.—Gray, Letters.

FELL. verbal abs. Felling.
Seventeen years' growth affords a tolerable fell.—
Edgyn, Sylva. (Ord MS.)

FELL. v. a. [A.S. fyllan.] Felling (of trees).
1. Knock down; bring to the ground.

Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock and felled him.—Sir W. Raleigh.
His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was felled.—Howell, Yvally Forest.
On their whole hunt I flew Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell;
Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled.
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 302.

With down.
Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down.—Shakespeare,
Henry VI. Part II, iv. 2.

Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him down.
And clef the circle of his golden crown. Dryden.

With along.
I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case.
Dryden, Indian Emperor.

2. Hew down; cut down.
Then would he seem a farmer that would sell,
Bargains of wood which he did lately fell.
Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

They stopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees.—2 Kings, iii. 25.
Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flash'd their fauchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so alone they struck,
There secur'd less force required to fell an oak.
Dryden.

FELLER. s. One who fells.
Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us.—Isaiah, xiv. 8.

FELLING. verbal abs. Act of one who fells
(a tree).

The nearest distance for these plantations ought never to be less than five feet at first, since every felling renders them wider for the benefit of the timber, even to thirty and forty feet, in five or six fel- lings.—Edgyn, Sylva. (Ord MS.)

FELLMONGER. s. [from fell—hide.] Dealer in hides.

It is thus only that we can account for such names as Fellmonger, Horsemonger, and Fleshmonger, Shoe- wright, and Shieldwright, Tanner and Salter Streets, and the like, which have long ceased to be exclusively tenanted by the industrious pursuers of those several avocations.—Kemble, The Saxon in Eng- land, h. ii. ch. vii.

FELLINESS. s. Attribute suggested by Fell.
Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage. Rare.

When his lord here saw the red blood rail
Adown so fast, and all his armour sleep,
For very felness loud he gan to weep.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

FELLOW. s. [A.S. felag, felawe.]

1. Companion; consort; associate; mate.
In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end.—Archam,
Schoolmaster.

2. One of the same kind; equal.
So you are to be hereafter fellows and no longer servants.—Sir P. Sidney.

To be your fellow
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shakespeare, Tempest, iii. 1.

Chieftain of the rest
I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now. Fairfax.
Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.
A shepherd had one favourite dog; he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of his fellows.—Sir E. L'Estrange.

3. One of a pair; match.
My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it. Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 5.

I walked about on the shore; . . . musing on my comrades that were drowned, and that there should not be one soul saved but myself; for, as for them, I never saw them afterwards, or any sign of them, except three of their hats, one cap, and two shoes that were not fellows.—De Foë, Life and Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.

When virtue is lodged in a body that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice, the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows.—Addison, Spectator.

4. Familiar application.

a. Import good or indifferent.

This is Othello's anecdote, as I take it.—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow.—Shakespeare, Othello, v. 1.

An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made him peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns.—Bacon, Apophthegms.

Full fifteen thousand lady fellows

With fire and sword the fort maintain;

Each was a Hercules, you tell us,

Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

b. Bad or contemptuous: (as, 'poor fellow!')

These great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal Justice to make them suffer death by their hands.—Sir P. Sidney.

I have great comfort from this fellow, methinks he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect fallows. Shakespeare, Tempest, i. 1.

How oft the sight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done; for had'st thou not been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of sinne,
This murder had not come into my mind.

Id., King John, iv. 2.
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow!

The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingratiate a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisydian seed
By fraud and theft assert his father's breed.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow as this Mr. Wood, could have got his Majesty's broad seal.—Swift.

You'll find, if care the monarch sets the monk,
Or, cozier-like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope.

5. Member with full rights and privileges of a corporation.

There should be mission of three of the fellows or brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries in which they were designed.—Bacon.

Indeed he did not yield till the Vicer Apostolic Leyburn, who seems to have believed on all occasions like a wise and honest man, declared that in his judgment the ejected president and fellows had been wronged, and that, on religious as well as on political grounds, restitution ought to be made to them.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. 12.

Common with an adjectival construction or as the first element in a compound: fellow-creature, helper, labourer, prisoner, servant, soldier, student, sufferer, traveller being the commonest.

Fellow. v. a. Suit with; pair with; match.

Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.
Following himself with every thing that had life in it.—Bishop Hall, Select Thoughts, § 100.

Fellow-commoner. s.

1. One with the same right of common as another.

He cannot appropriate, he cannot enclose, without the consent of all his fellow-commoners, all mankind.—Locke.

2. Commoner at Cambridge invested with certain privileges of the fellows.

About forty years since, forty pounds per annum for a commoner or pensioner, as the term is at Cambridge, and eighty pounds per annum for a fellow-commoner, was looked on as a sufficient maintenance.—Dean Prideaux, Letter to Lord Townshend, Life, &c., p. 190: 1715.

Fellow-feel. v. a. Sympathize with anything. Rare.

We should count her a very tender mother which should bear the pain twice and fellow-feel the infant's strivings and wrappings the second time, rather than want the child.—Rogers, Nauman the Syrian, p. 330, T.

Fellow-feeling. s.

1. Sympathy.

It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellow-feeling of the misfortune of my brother.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

2. Combination; joint interest.

Even your milk-woman and your nursery-maid have a fellow-feeling.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

Fellowlike. adj. Like a companion; on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he growth with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage.—Ca. de, Survey of Cornwall.

Fellowly. adj. Same as preceding.

One seed for another to make an exchange,
With fellowly neighbourhoof seemeth not straying.
Tanner, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Fellowship. s.

1. Companionship; consort; society.

This boy, that cannot tell what he would have but knave and holds up hands for fellowship.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 3.

From his fatal bow
Of amaranthine shade, fountain, or spring,
By the waters of life, wherever they sat
In fellowships of joy, the suns of light Hunted.

Id., Paradise Lost, xl. 77.
There is no man but that puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good: for men are made for society and mutual fellowship.

Catany, Sermon.
God having designed man for a social creature, made him not only with an inclination and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cement of society.—Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.

We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us.

Shakespeare, Henry IV., iv. 3.

Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war.—Kautler, History of the Turks.

3. Equality; partnership; joint interest.

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar ail.

Id., Paradise Regained, i. 400.

O love! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain.

Dryden.

4. Company; state of being together.

The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a sail!

Shakespeare, Othello, ii. 1.

5. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.

A great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods.—Bacon, Essays.

6. Establishment in the college, with share in its revenue.

Cardinals having, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went to London. Swift.

Do not renounce writing, but never trust entirely to authorship. If you have a profession, retain it; it will be like Prior's fellowship, a last and sure resource.—Rymer, Letter to Berlin.

The man without straps fulfilled his destiny and his duty. He eased his old governor, the curate, in Westmoreland, or helped his sisters to set up the ladies' school. He wrote a dictionary, or a treatise on comic sections, as his nature and genius prompted.

He got a fellowship, and then took to himself a wife and a living. He presides over a parish now, and asks it rather a desolate thing to belong to the Oxford and Cambridge Club; and his parishioners love him, and adore under his sermons.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xv.

Often preceded by good, or other adjectives, and treated as the second element of a compound.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

O you unbridled dinner-giving snobs, think how much pleasure you lose, and how much mischief you do, with your absurd generosity and hypersociability, and entertain each other to the ruin of friendship (let alone health) and the destruction of hospitality and good-fellowship—you win, but for the peacock's tail, might chatter away so much at your ease, and be so jovial and happy.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xx.

7. In Arithmetic. That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss.

Fellowly. adv. In a fell manner; cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fellowly. adv. In a fell manner; cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fellowly. adv. In a fell manner; cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fellowly. adv. In a fell manner; cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fellowly. adv. In a fell manner; cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fellowly. adv. In a fell manner; cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fellowly. adv. In a fell manner; cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fellowly. adv. In a fell manner; cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fellowly. adv. In a fell manner; cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fellowly. adv. In a fell manner; cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fellowly. adv. In a fell manner; cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;

As in a type, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast doth fell him oppress.

Spenser, Sonnets.
The hearts do never agree,
But fellly one another do upbraid.

Id., More, Song of the Soul.
Or like a lamp arm'd with pellucid horn,
Which rustling winds about do rudely toss,
And fellly lash with injury and worn.

Id.
Felly. s. [A.S. felga.] Curved piece of wood forming part of the circumference of a wheel.

Out, out, thou strumpet Fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and felloes from her wheel,
And bow the round nave down the hill of heav'n.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, ii. 2.
Their axle-trees, unweave, felloes, and spokes were all moteu.—1 Kings, vii. 33.

Fello-de-do. s. [L.Lat. felon upon himself.]

In Laurel. One who commits felony by suicide.

Making their nature a kind of fello-de-do to prompt the destroying itself.—Lively Oracle, &c., p. 90.

Felon. s. [L.Lat. felon, -onis.] One who has committed a felony. See Felony.

I apprehend thee for a felon here,
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, v. 3.

Chas'd even amid the fields, and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murderous deed.

Dryden.
Felon. s. [?] Whitlow; painful tumour furnish between the bone and its investing membrane.

The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wiemann, Surgery.

Felon. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman; fierce.

Ah me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,
Might be the cause of so impatient plight!

What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath stirred up so merciless a despite! Spenser.

He ask'd the waves, and ask'd the felon winds,
What loud mishap hath doom'd this gentle swain.

Milton, Lycidas, 91.

Felonious. adj. Wicked; traitorous; villainous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.

O thievish night!
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mild and lonely traveller?

Id., Comus, 193.
In thy felonious heart though venian lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen and dials. Dryden.

Feloniously. adv. In a felonious manner.

Parents have been most feloniously radical of their children.—Bishop Hall, Cases of Conscience.

Felonous. adj. Felonious. Obsolete.

[I] am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonious force of mine enemy.

Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, February.

Felonry. s. See extract.

Felonry, in the general acceptance of our English law, comprises every species of crime, which occasioned at common law the forfeiture of land and goods. This most frequently happens in those crimes for which a capital punishment either is or was liable to be inflicted for it. Treason itself, says Sir Edward Coke, was anciently considered under the name of felony. . . . Not only all offences now . . . capital are in some degree or other felonry; but this is likewise the case with some other offences not punishable with death. . . . So that, upon the whole, the only adequate definition of felony seems to be that which is before him down. . . . The word felony, or felonia, is of undoubted Saxon original; . . . in the Teutonic or German language, indeed, . . . we ought . . . to look for its signification. . . . Fel-on, then, according to him [Speelman], is derived from two northern words;
viz. which signifies (we well know) the fel, fiend, or hell; and on, which signifies prior or valm. Felony is, therefore, the same as præsumptuosus, the consideration for which a man gives up his fel; as we say, in common speech, such an act is as much as your life, or estate, is worth. In this sense it will clearly signify the feudal forfeiture, or act by which an estate is forfeited, or ceases to be to the lord.—Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, iv. 7.

Felpar. s. [see Felspathic.] See extract.

Felpar is a mineral crystallizing in oblique rhom-
boidal prisms, susceptible of two cleavages; lustre
more pearly than vitreous; spec. grav. 2.39 to 2.59;
scratches glass; yields no water when calcined;
fusible at the blowpipe into a white enamel; not af-

Felpar is a mineral crystallizing in oblique rhom-
boidal prisms, susceptible of two cleavages; lustre
more pearly than vitreous; spec. grav. 2.39 to 2.59;
scratches glass; yields no water when calcined;
fusible at the blowpipe into a white enamel; not af-

Felpar is a mineral crystallizing in oblique rhom-
boidal prisms, susceptible of two cleavages; lustre
more pearly than vitreous; spec. grav. 2.39 to 2.59;
scratches glass; yields no water when calcined;
fusible at the blowpipe into a white enamel; not af-

Felpar is a mineral crystallizing in oblique rhom-
boidal prisms, susceptible of two cleavages; lustre
more pearly than vitreous; spec. grav. 2.39 to 2.59;
scratches glass; yields no water when calcined;
fusible at the blowpipe into a white enamel; not af-

Felpar is a mineral crystallizing in oblique rhom-
boidal prisms, susceptible of two cleavages; lustre
more pearly than vitreous; spec. grav. 2.39 to 2.59;
scratches glass; yields no water when calcined;
fusible at the blowpipe into a white enamel; not af-

Felpar is a mineral crystallizing in oblique rhom-
boidal prisms, susceptible of two cleavages; lustre
more pearly than vitreous; spec. grav. 2.39 to 2.59;
scratches glass; yields no water when calcined;
fusible at the blowpipe into a white enamel; not af-

Felpar is a mineral crystallizing in oblique rhom-
boidal prisms, susceptible of two cleavages; lustre
more pearly than vitreous; spec. grav. 2.39 to 2.59;
scratches glass; yields no water when calcined;
fusible at the blowpipe into a white enamel; not af-

Felpar is a mineral crystallizing in oblique rhom-
boidal prisms, susceptible of two cleavages; lustre
more pearly than vitreous; spec. grav. 2.39 to 2.59;
scratches glass; yields no water when calcined;
fusible at the blowpipe into a white enamel; not af-

Felpar is a mineral crystallizing in oblique rhom-
boidal prisms, susceptible of two cleavages; lustre
more pearly than vitreous; spec. grav. 2.39 to 2.59;
scratches glass; yields no water when calcined;
fusible at the blowpipe into a white enamel; not af-

Felpar is a mineral crystallizing in oblique rhom-
boidal prisms, susceptible of two cleavages; lustre
more pearly than vitreous; spec. grav. 2.39 to 2.59;
scratches glass; yields no water when calcined;
fusible at the blowpipe into a white enamel; not af-

Felpar is a mineral crystallizing in oblique rhom-
boidal prisms, susceptible of two cleavages; lustre
more pearly than vitreous; spec. grav. 2.39 to 2.59;
scratches glass; yields no water when calcined;
fusible at the blowpipe into a white enamel; not affects by acids.—Urr, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Felspathic. adj. [The French and German forms are spath; the -r in the English spat being as incorrect as -r in Mariar or idear, as Maria and idea are sometimes sounded. Hence, the adjectival, from the basis spath direct, is the better form.] Consisting, or having the character, of felspar.

Felspar, then, is an ingredient in most rocks of igneous formation. . . . The second great division comprehends those rocks in which the felspathic ingredient has either itself undergone some further change by the action of heat, . . . or where, though the felspar remains, yet it is so intermixed with other minerals, that the external characters of the resulting rock are altogether changed.—Darbyney, Description of active and extinct Volcanoes, pt. i. ch. iii.

Felt. s. [A.S. felt.]

1. Cloth made of wool united without weaving. It wore a delicate stratagem to shoes
A troop of horse with felt.

2. (P) Cataphrestic for felt. Hide or skin. To know whether sheep are sound or not, see that the felt be loose.—Mortimer, Husbands.

Felt. v. a. Work up into a felt. This same wool one man felt into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into kersey.—Sir M. Hale, Origination of Mankind.

Felt. v. a. Mat together like felt; entangle. Rare.

Felted. part. adj. Matted. Rare. His felted locks, that on his bosom fell,
On rugged mountains brows and thorns resemble.

Felting. verbal abs. Act of one who felts; process by which felts are made.

Felting is the process by which loose flocks of wool, and hairs of various animals, as the beaver, rabbit, hare, &c., are mutually interlaced into a compact textile fabric. The first step towards making felt is to mix, in the proper proportions, the different kinds of fibres intended to form the stuff; and then, by the vibratory strokes of the bowstrings, to toss them up in the air, and to cause them to fall as irregularly as possible upon the table, opened, spread, and scattered.—Urr, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Feltmaker. s. One employed in making felt.

They put things call'd execrations upon me,
The charge of orphan, little sciences crannies,
Whom in their childhoods I bound forth to felt-makers.

To make 'em low and work away their gutsy.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit at several Wapons.

Coachmen, weavers, felt-makers, and other haw-mechanicks, are now by some thought able ministers and profound doctors of the church.—Fentley, Dippers Uph, p. 160.

Feltwort. s. Popular name for certain plants of the genus Gentiana (but probably applied to other plants) characterized either by their bitterness or astringency; ? when the latter was the case, they might be used for tanning, whence the name from felt = skin.

There be divers sorts of gentians and feltworts.—Gerard, Herball, p. 532; 1633.

Femelle. s. [Fr. femelle; Lat. femella.] Opposite to male in the way of sex.

Men, more divine,
Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,
Are masters to their females, and their lords.

Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, II. 1.

Femelle. adj. 1. Not male in the way of sex; not masculine.

Swarming next appear'd
The female bee, that feeds her husband drone.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 489.

Other males perhaps
With their attendant moans thou wilt deary,
Communicating male and female light,
Which two great sexes animate the world.

Ibid., viii. 148.

If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen.

Drayton.

2. In Prosody. Female rhymes. Double rhymes, so called because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in a weak or feminine; e.g.

'Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable.' (Cowley.)

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spanish pronouncedly, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems. — Drayden, Preface to Annus Mirabilis.

3. In Mechanics. See extract.

The screw may be formed either on the outside or inside of the cylinder: in the former case it is called the exterior or male screw; in the latter, the interior or female screw.—Reynolds, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art: Screw.

Femalise. v. a. Invest with the character of a female; emasculate.

Femalised. part. adj. Invested with the character of a female; emasculated. Rare.

When they consider the very formation of the word, upon the model of the other feminized virtues, they will no longer hesitate on this interpretation. Lord Shaftesbury, Characteristics. (Ord 318.)

Feminality. s. Female nature. Rare. If in the minority of natural vigour the parts of femininity take place, upon the increase or growth thereof the masculine appears.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Feminate. adj. Feminine, not masculine; becoming only a woman. Rare.

A nation warlike, and inured to practice
Of policy and labour, cannot brook
A feminine authority. Fort, Broken Heart.

Feminine. adj. 1. (Of the sex that brings forth young; female.

Thus we choose the end of wine
With water that is feminine,
Until the cooler nymph abate
His wrath, and so incorporate.

2. Belonging to women. It will be worth our pains to take notice of some principal of the orders she [Panda] made in those feminine weaknesses. — Feller, Holy State, p. 87.

There is almost the only exception I know to the observation, that something feminine—not effeminate, mind—is discoverable in the countenances of all men of genius. Look at that face of old Daupier, a rough sailor, but a man of exquisite mind. How soft is the air of his countenance, how delicate the shape of his temples! — Coleridge, Table Talk.

Her [Elizabeth Villiers'] influence over him [William III.] she owed not to her personal charms, — for it tasked all the art of Kneller to make her look (especially on canvases, — and to those talents which peculiarly belong to her sex, — for she did not excel in playful talk, and her letters are remarkably deficient in feminine ease and grace, — but in powers of mind which qualified her to partake the cares and guide the councils of statesmen. — Macaulay, History of England, ch. 22.

3. Effeminate; emasculated; wanting manliness. Nilus was no man of war at all, but altogether feminine and subjected to ease and delicacy. — Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

4. Soft; tender; delicate. Her heav'nly form
Angelic, but more soft and feminine.

5. In Grammar. At present [the word she] is uninflected. In Anglo-Saxon, however, it was a truly feminine form, from se. It had not, however, its present power; but rather coincided with the definite article [M.] as, [F.] see, [N.] that, in Greek [M.] is, [F.] is, [N.] is. — Dr. R. O. Latham, English Grammar for Classical Schools, § 97.

In one sense the infinitive is susceptible of gender, though not in the way that a participle is so. The gender of a participle is that of the agent. This for an infinitive is impossible. . . . But the kind of gender which makes gladius masculine, and hanta feminine, may make the same distinction between any two kinds of action. The Greek infinitives are all neuter; but, logically, they might just as well be masculine or feminine, as may be seen in the way in which they are translated into Latin. Though to move = ollum, to move = idum. — Id., Elements of Comparative Philology, p. 721.

By omitting the Substantive (gender), Feminine, like Masculine and Neuter, may become, in the way of construction, a Substantive, as, 'there are but few true feminines in English.' Female applies to sex rather than gender, and is a physiological rather than a grammatical term. Feminine applies to gender rather than sex, and is grammatical rather than physiological. See also Gender, Masculine, Neuter.

6. In the following extract it seems to mean anything female, or womanhood in general, nearly equivalent to the Greek τὸ θῆλυ.

O! why did God create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? And not fill the world at once
With men, as angels, with feminine.

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 880.

Feminine. s. Quality or property of woman; feminine character. Rare.

Neither great Venus brought this infant fair
... ysteread to be,
And trained up in true feminine.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, III. 6. 51.

There belong all these symptoms of femininity in the church of Rome. — Dr. H. More, Exposition of the Seven Churches, ch. vi.

Feminize. v. a. Make womanish.

Feminized. part. adj. Made womanish. Rare. The serpent said to the feminized Adam, why are you so demure? — Dr. H. More, Conjectura Cabalistica, p. 46; 1633.

Femoral. adj. [Lat. femoralis, from femur = thigh.] In Anatomy. Belonging to the thigh.

The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation. — Sharp, Surgery.

Fen. s. [A.S. fean.] Marsh; low, flat, and moist ground; mor; bog; (often used adjectivally or as the first element in a compound).

I go alone
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iv. 1.

The surface is of black fen earth. — Woodward, On Fossils.

Fence. s. [De-fence.] 1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.

That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. — Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Piety.

There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. — Sir R. L. Estlin.

To put them out of their parents' view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. — Locke.

Let us bear this awful corpse to Caesar,
And lay it in his sight, that it may stand
A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath.

Addison, Cato.

2. Enclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.

In vain did nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main;

Th' eternal fens overlap,
And pass at will the boundless deep.

Drayton, Translation from Horace, b. i. ode iii.

Of the vast mound that binds the Lorraine lake?
Or the dismaying sea, that, shut from thence,
Rears round the structure, and invades the fence?

Id.

Employ their wiles and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surmount the fair.

3. Art of fencing; defence. I bribed my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence. — Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, I. 1.

They agreed against both the will of Ancus and the master of fence Valerius Numanus, that Numanus should be sought forth to take away the stye as long as the government. — Idem, Translation of P. Marry. (Ord 318.)

4. Skill in defence. I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despite his wile fence and his active practice.

Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, v. 1.

Enjoy your dear wit, and pay rhetoric,
That hath so well been taught her dazling fence.

Milton, Comus, 790.

5. Slang for a receiver of stolen property.

Fence. v. a. 1. Enclose; secure by an enclosure or hedge.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass,
and set darkness in my path. — Job, xix. 8.

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews. — Ibid., x. 11.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. — 2 Maccabees, xii. 13.

Now that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail, or other inclosure. — Ascham, Parergon Juris Canonici.

2. Guard; fortify. So much of adder's wisdom I have learnt,
To fence my ear against thy sorceries.

Milton, Samson Agonistes, 928.

FENC

With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,
Fenced from the thorns, and trod the deep descent.

The wrump of the church would be redressed:
her property and dignity would be secured by new guarantees; and those wicked countrymen who had, in the day of her adversity, injured and insulted her would be signally punished.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. viii.

FENCE, v. n.

1. Practise the arts of manual defence; practice the use of weapons.

He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants' hands to fence with, and hang one another. Lacks.

2. Guard against; act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Lacks.

This sort of inference was probably never carried to a greater length than it was in one particular instance by Descartes, when, as a proof of one of his physical principles, that the quantity of motion in the universe is invariably, he had recourse to the immutability of Divine Nature. Reasoning of a very similar character is however nearly as common now as it was in his time, and does duty largely as a means of fencing off the more dangerous conclusions.—*J. S.
Mill, System of Logic*, b. v. ch. iii. § 8.

3. Fight according to the rules of fencing, or as a fencer.

If a thistle slug, he falls straight a capering:

He will fence with his own shadow.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 2.

A boisterous heifer in the wood is heard;
The stooping warriors aiming head to head,
Eunuch their clashing horns; with dreadful sound
The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;
They fence and push, and pushing, loudly roar,
Their downy and their sides are bath'd in gore.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies' and gamblers' company.—Lacks.

Fence-month. s. In Forest-law. Month, beginning about the ninth of June, and continuing till the ninth of July, in which it is prohibited to hunt in any forest, as the does are fawning. There is also a fence-month for fisheries.

The following statutes relate to . . . salmon and their fence-months.—Toulmin, Law Dictionary, Fish, (traveller).

Fenced. part. adj. Fortified.

Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain Destroyed have, each field to waste is laid;
In fenced towers beset in their grain,
Before thou couldst this kingdom to invade.

Fairfax.

Fenceful. adj. Affording defence or protection. Obsolte.

Blue-eyed Minerva . . .
Taught artists first the carving tool to wield, Chariots with brass to arm, and form the fenceful shield. Congreve, Hymn to Venus.

Fenceless. adj. Without enclosure; open.

The wall
Immoveable of this now fenceless world.

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 302.

Each motion of the heart rises to fury,
And love in their weak bosoms is a rage
As terrible as hate, and as destructive:
No the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,
And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,
Alike from north, from south. Ross, Jane Shore.

Fencer. s.

1. One who fences; one who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calumnies in great advantage; he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;
As cunning fencers suffer heat to fire.

A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off.—Sir A. Digby.

2. Horse good at leaping fences.

So he bought a spavined hack for the best fencer that ever topped a rail.—Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney.

Fenceable. adj. Capable of defence; appointed for defending.

No fort so fenceable, no walls so strong,
But that continual battery will give.

Spenker, Publick Quens, iii. 10, 10.
Forthwith a 'Parisian militia' shall be enrolled, Depart ye heads of districts, to labour in this great work; while we here, in permanent committee, sit alert. Let fenceable men, each party in its own range of streets, keep watch and ward, all night.—Carlyle, French Revolution, pt. i. b. v. ch. iv.

FENO

Fénelles. s. Regiments raised expressly for the defence of the country for a limited service and for a given time.

The most prominent of these objectionable estimates . . . was that of the Marquis Fénelles.—Windham, Speech on the Army Estimates, February 26,
1860. (Rich.)

Féneling. verbal abs. Art of one who fences.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or enlign-playing.—Arbuthnot and Pope.

Fend. v. a.

1. Keep off; shut out.

Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,
With fern beneath, to fend the latter cold.

Dryden, Virgil's Georgics.

2. In Navigation. See extract under Fender,

2.

Fend. v. n. Shift off, or parry, a charge.

The dexterous management of tern . . . and being able to fend and prove with them, possess for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge.—Lacks.

Fender. s.

1. Iron plate laid before the fire to hinder falling coals from rolling forward to the floor.

So he sat, with the elbows on his knees, and his feet on the fender.—Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney.

2. See extract.

Fend in the sea language imports the same as defend. Hence the phrase 'fending the boat,' &c.; that is, saving it from being dashed against the rocks, shore, or ship's side. Hence, also, fenders, any pieces of oak, plank, or boards of wood, &c., laid over the ship's side, to fend or keep other ships from rubbing against her, or to prevent her from striking or rubbing against a wharf or quay.—Encyclopædia, in voce.

Féding. verbal abs. Shifting or parrying of charges.

Such fending and such proving.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant.

Fénératio. s. [Lat. funeratio, -onis;
from funis, -oris usury.] Usury; gain of interest; practice of increasing money by lending. Rare.

The hare feared not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, but fénératio and usury from its fecundity and superfluity.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Fénestral. adj. [Lat. fenestralis; from fe-nestra = window.] Belonging to windows.

Anthony Wood collected the sepulchral and fe-nestral inscriptions of the several parishes in the county of Oxford.—Bishop Nicholson, English Historical Library.

Fénnel. s. [A.S. fennele; Lat. fenniculum.] Umbelliferous plant so called, native and cultivated; Fenniculum vulgare: (Hog's fennel, also, a name for the Peucedanum palustre, a plant of an allied genus).

A savory odor blown, more pleasant may some
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the treat
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at even.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 580.

A kind of fennel called fennel is cultivated to a great extent for precisely the same part of the plant, namely the blanchet footstalks (and roots) of the first set of leaves. . . . These blanchet roots and footstalks are eaten also raw, as a salad with oil and vinegar.—London, Encyclopædia of Gardening, § 113.

The tender stalks of common fennel are used in salads; the leaves boiled enter into many dishes; and raw are garnishes of several dishes.
The blanchet stalks of the variety called fennel are eaten with oil, vinegar, and pepper, as a cold salad, and they are likewise sometimes put into soups.—Ibid., § 401.

Fénny. adj. Having the character of, or deriving its character from, a fen.

Fillet of a fénny mink.
In the cauldron boil and bake.

Driving in of piles is used for stone or brick houses, and that only where the ground proves fénny or moorish.—Moran.

The hungry crocodile, and hissing snake,
Lark in the troubled stream and fénny brake.

Prior.

Fénowed. adj. [A.S. synigeon = become mouldy, corrupted, decayed.] Mouldy.

The old moth-eaten laden legend, and the folky and fénowed festival, are yet wearily laid up in coppers.—Dr. Fawcett, Antiquary's Triumph over Novelty, p. 334: 1610.

FERE

[FENCE FERN]

Fénugreek. s. Leguminous plant so called,
Trigonella Fenum græcum.

The fénugreek, . . . (Greek lag, was formerly cultivated in Italy, and still holds a prominent place in the agriculture of Egypt. In France it is cultivated to a limited extent near Paris for its seeds, which are used in medicine. —Lindley, Vegetable Kingdom.

Fend. s. See Fend.

Féodal. s. See Féodal.

Féodality. s. See Féodality.

Féodary. s. See Féodary, also Fédary.

Féodatory. s. See Féodatory.

Féodatory. adj. See Féodatory.

Féof. v. a. [N.F. faffer.] Invest (in the sense of put in possession) with anything.

Coleurs with thee that blessed patrimony, so féofed upon them, so possessed of them, that they can never be diseased.—Bishop Hall, Breathing of the Desert Soul.

If any man have a mind to féof a curse upon himself and his posterity, let him dote his fingers with the holy things of God. Seasonable Sermon,
p. 40.

By spirit men even, when they father false doctrine upon the spirit; by word, when they féof it upon true doctrine.—Shelford, Learned Discourses,
p. 231.

Féof. s. See Fief.

Féofee. s. One invested or féofed.

The late earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, conveyed secretly all his lands to féofees in trust, in hope to have cut off her majesty from the richest of his lands.—Spencer, View of the State of Ireland.

Féofment. s. Act of granting possession.

Thy young gentlemen proffered larger féofments,
but in vain. Bartholomew, A new out of Paraphrase.

Féofment [is] any gift, or grant of any honours, castles, lands, or of other immovable things, to another in fee-simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of seisin of the thing given; when it is in writing it is called a deed of féofment; and in every féofment the giver is called the féofor, féofiator, and he that receiveth by virtue thereof the féofor, féofatary. The proper difference between a féofor and a donor is, that the féofor gives in fee-simple,
the donor in fee-lail.—Seyd.

Patrons of both churches on account of their féofment, and with the consent of Fulk Burnyngham, archdeacon of Oxford.—Warton, History of the Parish of Kiddleington, p. 14.

Féraculous. adj. [Lat. ferax.] Fertile; fruitful. Latinism.

Those ages have been most féracious in the production of such persons.—Stillingfleet, Origines Sæcæ, i. 6.

This firm republic, that against the blast
Of opposition rose; that (thine own oak,
Nursed on féracious Aegleum, whose boughs
Still stronger shone beneath the rigid æv)
By loss, by slaughter, from the steel itself,
Even force and spirit drew.

Thomson, Liberty, pt. iii. (Ord MS.)

Féral. adj. [Lat. feralis.] Funereal; deadly.

Rare.

Such féral accidents can wound and penny produce.—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 164.

The world is miserably tormented and shaken with wars; dearth, famine, inundations, plagues, and many féral diseases, reign among us.—Ibid.,
p. 670.

By the wan moon-beam off the bird of night
Lengthens her féral note.

Healdy, On the Ruins of Broomholm Priory.

Férdigew. s. [O.Fr. verdugelle; from Spanish and Portuguese verdugo = rod;]

rods being used for the sake of spreading out the hoop. Faldigia, in Italian, is another form of this word, also falbala in French. These connect the following words, Falbala, Furbelow, Far-thingale; the one under notice bearing the closest resemblance to the original.]
Old form of Farthingale.

And I heard our nurse speak of a husband to-day,
Ready for our mistress; a rich man and a gay;
And we shall go in our French hoods every day;
In our silk rasmocks (I warrant you) fresh and gay;
In our lucks férdigewes and billiments of gold,
Brave in our suits of change, seven double folds.
Then shall ye see Tibet, sir, treade the moss
trimme;

Nay, why said I treade? ye shall see her glide and swimme.

Udall, Boyer Doyder.

Fere. s. [A.S. fera, gefera.] Companion; mate; equal: (formerly used either for husband or wife. In ferre is also an old expression for together, in company; and sometimes written y fere).

We shall bow afere.
As Orpheus and Eurydice his fere.
Chaucer, Trilussa and Cressida, iv. 701.

Was linked, and by him had many pledges dear.
Spenser, Fairie Queene, l. 10, 4.

Féretory. s. [Lat. feretrum.] Place in churches where the bier is set.

A third shrine was prepared, whereon to place the other two, and inclose his sacred body. The upper part of this feretory was all covered with plate of the purest gold.—Keape, Monumenta Westmonasteriana, p. 137.

Férial. adj. [Lat. ferialis; from feria—holidays.] Respecting the common days of the week; sometimes, holidays. Rare.

Concerning the ferial character: The ecclesiastical year, of old, began at Easter, the first week whereof was all holiday, the days being distinguished by prima, secunda, tertia, &c., added unto feria; from thence the days of any other week began to be called feria prima, secunda, &c.—Gregory, Poethanna, p. 131: 1650.

[They] did learn to dance, and to sing, and to play on instruments on the ferial days.—Dugdale, Origines Juridicæ, c. iv.

Fériation. s. Act of keeping holiday. Rare.
As though there were any feriation in nature, this season is commonly termed the physician's vacation.—Sir T. Browne.

Féris. s. Any day of the week not kept holy. Rare.

My first is turned into simple ferie.
Dante, De Monacho, lib. 22, l. 1.

Férine. adj. [Lat. ferinus; from fera—wild beast.] Wild; savage. Rare.

The only difficulty is touching those ferine, malicious, and unamiable beasts; as lions, tigers, wolves, bears.—Sir M. Hale.

There are brutish and unnatural desires, which the philosopher calleth ferine and inhumane.—Bishop Reynolds, On the Passions, c. xvi.

Ferineous. s. Attribute suggested by Ferine; barbarity; savageness; wildness. Rare.

A ferine and necessary kind of life, a conversation with those that were fallen into a lawless habit of life, would assimilate the next generation to barbarism and ferineousness.—Sir M. Hale.

Férité. s. Barbarity; cruelty; wildness; savageness. Rare.

All férité and inhumanity being laid aside.—Bishop Pearson, Exposition of the Creed, art. ii.

The férité of such minds bears no rule in retaliations. Sir T. Browne, Christian Morals, iii. 12.

[They] live by the rules of férité and lust, and differ from the beasts seemingly in little else but external shape.—Glanville, Scruona, p. 285.
He ruled him from the most abject and stupid férité to his senses, and to sober reason.—Wardlaw, Essay towards a Natural History of the Earth.

Fern. s. Obsolete.

1. Rent for a farm; firm itself.

Fern signified rent both in England and in France, says Madox, in his Firma Burgi: he might have added Scotland.—Chalmers, Sir D. Lindsay Glossary.

2. Dwelling; abode.

His sinful soul with desperate disdain
Out of her fleshy ferme fled to the place of pain.

Spenser, Fairie Queene, iii. 5, 23.

Ferment. v. a. Develop fermentation; act as a ferment; produce the intestine motion and change of composition which results from brewing and other kindred processes.

Ye vigorous swains! while youth ferments your blood,
And jenny spirits swell the sprightly flood,

Now rouse the hills, the thicket woods beset,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net.

Pope.

Ferment. v. n. Pass into fermentation.

If wine or cider do ferment twice, it will be harder, than if it had fermented but once.—Neale, Cider in Evelyn's Pomona.

Ferment. s. [Lat. fermentum.]

1. Fermentation.

Sublime and cool the ferment of desire.—Rogers, Sermons.

2. That which causes fermentation.

The semen puts females into a fever, upon impregnation; and all animal humours, which putrefy, are putrefying ferments.—Sir J. Eyer, Preliminary State of the animal Humours.

Fermentability. s. Capability of being fermented.

Ne man, it would seem, was unwilling to admit of the fermentability of milk, because it was contrary to the ideas he had entertained of an animal liquor.—Hunter, Georgical Essays, l. 197. (Ord MS.)

Fermentable. adj. Capable of being, or liable to be, fermented.

When the yeast has been decomposed by fermenting its delicate proportion of sugar, it loses its fermentable property and leaves the excess of sugar unaffected, forming a sweet vinous solution. . . .

When the expressed juice of the grape or must is inclosed in a vessel and out of contact with air, and is there subjected to the heat of boiling water, the small portion of oxygen present is rendered inactive, and the liquor experiences no fermentative change. —Vre, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines, Fermentation.

Fermental. adj. Having the power to cause fermentation. Obsolete.

Cucumbers, being watery, fill the veins with crude and windy serosities, that contain little salt or spirit, and debilitate the vital acidity and fermental faculty of the stomach.—Sir T. Browne.

Fermentation. s. Act of that which ferments; process by which anything is fermented; result thereof. See last extract.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus ardens.—Boyle.

A man, by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before.—Collier, Essay on Pleasantry.

When organic substances, under the influence of water, air, and warmth, are abandoned to the reciprocal action of their proximate elements, . . . they are entirely changed and decomposed so that their ultimate principles combine in new proportions and give birth to new compounds. To this process the general name of fermentation has been given. . . . The following may be enumerated as sufficiently distinct species of fermentation. 1. The saccharine fermentation in which starch and gum are converted into sugar. 2. The vinous fermentation, in which sugar is converted into alcohol. 3. The amellaginous fermentation, in which sugar is converted into slime instead of alcohol. 4. The acetous fermentation, in which alcohol and other substances are converted into vinegar. 5. The putrid fermentation, or putrefaction, which characterizes particularly the decomposition of animal organic substances.—Vre, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Fermentative. adj. Causing fermentation; having the power to cause fermentation.

Animal spirits destroy by their fermentative heat.—Arbuthnot.

(For a further example see extract under Fermentable.)

Fermentativeness. s. Attribute suggested by Fermentative; capability of fermenting.

The white of the egg, he concluded from its fermentativeness, to be impregnated with air.—Dr. Tyson, History of the Royal Society, iv. 172: 1684.

Fermented. part. adj. Acted on by a ferment.

(For example see extract under next entry.)

Fermenting. part. adj. Causing fermentation; fermentative.

The precipitate or lees which fall down when fermentation is finished, consist of . . . a mixture of the fermenting principle with the insoluble matters contained in the fermented liquor.—Vre, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines: Ferment.

Fermaillet. s. [Fr. fermaillet.] Buckle or clasp. Obsolete.

Those monks were sustained or stayed by buckles and fermaillets of gold for more firmness.—Doane, History of the Knights Templar, p. 40.

Fern. s. [A.S. fern.] Plant so called, of the division Filices.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood,
Hurled with fern and intricate with thorn;
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn.

Dryden.

Fernsmund. s. [? Fern Osmund.] ? Fern so called; ? Osmunda regalis. Rare.

Fernsmund [in] a herb of some called waterfern, hath a triangular stalk, and is like pollipody, and it grows in bogs and hollow grounds.—Markham, Cheap and good Husbandry, 1670. (Nares by H. and W.)

Férny. adj. Overgrown with fern.

The herd smil'd, did late repair
To ferny heaths, and to their forest-lair.

Dryden.

Ferocious. adj. [Fr. féroce; Lat. ferox.]

1. Savage; fierce.

Now rose a form in majesty of mud,
Shaking the horrors of his ample brows,
And each ferocious feature grim with oozes.

Pope, Dunciad.

2. Ravenous; rapacious.

The hare that became a prey unto man, unto beasts and fowls of the air, is fruitful even unto impregnation; but the lion and ferocious animal hath young ones but seldom, and but one at a time.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Ferociousness. s. Attribute suggested by Ferocious.

That a precept of courtesy is by no means unworthy of the gravity and dignity of an apostolical mandate, may be gathered from the pernicious effects which all must have observed to have arisen from harsh strictness and sour virtue; such as refuses to mingle in harmless gaiety, or give countenance to innocent amusements, or which transacts the petty business of the day with a gloomy ferociousness that clouds existence.—Johnson, Sermons, p. 206. (Ord MS.)

Ferocity. s. Savageness; wildness; fierceness.

An uncommon ferocity in my countenance, with the remarkable fatness of my nose, and extent of my mouth, have procured me the name of lion.—Addison, Guardian.

Untaught, untaught, as they were Incapable, full of ferocity.

Philips, Briton.

Férous. adj. Savage. Rare.

And in this he had a special aim and hope also, to establish Christian laws among infidels; and by domestic to chase away those férous and indomitable creatures that infested the land.—Wilson, Life of James I. (Nares by H. & W.)

Férreous. adj. [Lat. ferreus, from ferrum—iron.] Made, consisting, or having the nature, of iron. Rare.

In the body of glass there is no ferreous or magnetic nature.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Férret. s. [see last extract.] Animal (akin to the martens and polecats, partially domesticated,) so called, used chiefly for tracking rats and rabbits in their holes and burrows, over which it has a special advantage, from the nature of its eyesight, which is best in darkened places: (the eye being red, like that of an albino, has supplied numerous similes and metaphors, whence the word is often used adjectivally.) Mustela furo.

With what an eager earnestness she looked, having threatening not only in her ferret eyes, but while she spoke, her nose seemed to threaten her chin.—Sir P. Sidney.

Cicero

Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes,
As we have seen him.

Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, l. 2.

Comeys are taken either by ferrets or pursue-nets.—Mortimer.

'Let us have a look at this chap,' said the first, examining Vandykerken, whose peaked nose and chin, small ferret-eyes, and downcast look, were certainly not in his favour; neither were his old and now tattered habiliments. Certainly no one would have taken Vandykerken for a king's officer—unfortunately they took him for something else.—Mortimer, Shakespeare, vol. iii. c. 33.

[Férret.] 1. Spun silk and ribbon woven from it. Italian, ferretto; French, ferret, coarse ferret-silk (Florio); forest-silk (Cotgrave). German, ferret, the outer envelop of the silk-cod, dirt or dirt-silk, ferret-silk, ferret. Floret-band, a ferret ribbon. (Kittner.) 2. Italian, ferretto, ferretto; French, ferret; German, ferret, ferret-wood, a ferret, an animal used in hunting rabbits or rats in holes otherwise inaccessible. It is commonly supposed that the name of the animal has given rise to the verb signifying to poke in holes and corners, to search out. Italian, ferretare, ferretare, to ferret or hunt in holes, to grapple or fumble (Florio); French, ferret, to search, hunt, boylt out, spy narrowly into every hole and corner. (Cotgrave.) It seems to me far more likely that the ferret (exclusively a tame animal) is named from the purpose for which it is kept, viz. for rooting or poking in holes for rabbits or vermin. The German ferretieren would signify a vessel kept for the purpose designated by the verb ferret. Now we have Provencal ferret, French ferret, Bavarian ferret, to rub, to move to and fro over a surface. Moreover, ferret is identified with Provencal English ferret, Dutch ferret, by the common use of the three in the peculiar sense of to drudge, to earn with pains and difficulty. Wroden is also to poke the fire, to poke or root in the ground, as a pig with its snout. The same train of thought is found in Provencal ferret; Italian, ferrete, to rub, ferrete, to rub, to pinch and spare miserably, to grope, to fumble, ferrete (for ferrete), to fumble or grope for, to sweep an oven. And as ferrete, ferrete give rise to ferrete by the insertion of an e (as in umbrella for umbrella), so ferret, ferret, ferret, are converted by a similar change into Italian ferretiere.

(ferrare) furecare. The strongest objection to the foregoing explanation is French furus (Patols de Champagne), Spanish furus, a ferret. But furecare, furellare, to poke, pry, or search out, have so much the appearance of diminutives from a simple furus, that furus may well have been formed from that hypothetical form in the same way as Italian furegone from furegare, and with the same sense of poking, searching-out.—Waldwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Ferret. s. See beginning of last extract under preceding entry.

Red was and green ferret
Are fixed at the foot of the deers.

Rejected Address.

Ferret. v. a. Drive out of lurking-places, as the ferret drives the rat or rabbit.

The archbishop had ferreted him out of all his holes.—Heglin.

He went in quest of Hudibras.

To find him out where'er he was.

And, if he were above ground, you'd He'd ferret him, lurk where he would.

Butler, Hudibras.

Stay here a little, I'll ferret her out to you presently, I warrant.—With my Lady Fidget, wife, he is coming into you the back way.—Let him come, and welcome, which way he will.—Wycherly, The Country Wife.

So late as the year 1724 the Inquisition ferreted out, and drove into banishment, some considerable remnants of that unfortunate race, [persons in Spain of Moorish extraction].—Swissbarn, Travels through Spain, let. 20.

Ferrugineous. adj. [Lat. ferrugineus.] Partaking of particles and qualities of iron.

It may be made of any ferrugineus matter and astringent vegetable.—Johnson, Review of Huxley's Journal.

Ferruginous. adj. Partaking of the particles and qualities of iron.

They are cold, hot, purgative, diuretic, ferruginous, saline, petrifying, and bituminous.—Roy, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Ferrule. s. [Fr. virole; Lat. ferrum.] Iron ring put round anything to keep it from cracking.

The fingers' ends are strengthened with nails, as we fortify the ends of our staves or forks with iron hoops or ferrules.—Rag.

Ferry. v. a. [A.S. furan = pass.] Carry over in a boat.

Cymocks heard and saw,

He loudly call'd to such as were aboard,

The little bark unto the shore to draw,

And him to ferry over that deep ford.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Ferry. v. n. Pass over water in a vessel of carriage.

Then hurried back to fire,

They ferry over this Lethæan sound

Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment.

Milton, Paradise Lost, li. 603.

Ferry. s.

1. Vessel in which goods or passengers are carried over water; ferryboat.

By this time was the worthy Guyon brought Unto the other side of that wide strand,

Where she was rowing, and for passage sought:

His need not long call, she soon to hand

Her ferry brought.—Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Bring them with imagin'd speed

Unto the Traject, to the common ferry

Which trades to Venice.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 4.

I went down to the river Brent in the ordinary ferry.—Addison.

2. Passage over which the ferryboat passes.

Just above the ferry in the seat of Mr. Vernon, situated on an elevation, in the centre of this enchanting view.—Wandham, Tour through Monmouthshire and Wales.

A chieftain to the Highlands bound,

Cried, "Roman, do not tarry;

And I'll give ye a silver pound

To row me over the ferry!"

Campbell, Ballad of Lord Ullin's Daughter.

Ferryboat. s. Ferry (in its first sense).

A ferryboat to carry over the king's household.—2 Samuel, xii. 18.

Ferryman. s. One who keeps a ferry; one who for hire transports goods and passengers over the water.

I past, methought, the melancholy flood,

With that grim ferryman, which poets write of,

Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.

Shakespeare, Richard III., l. 4.

The common ferryman of Egypt, that waited over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks the ferryman of hell, and solemn stories raised after him.—Sir T. Browne.

The grisly ferryman of hell deny'd

Æneas entrance, till he knew his guide.

Lord Bacon.

Fertile. adj. [Fr. fertile; Lat. fertilis.]

Fruitful; abundant; plentiful.

I had hope of France,

As firmly as I hope for fertile England.

Shakespeare, Henry VI., Part II. fil. 1.

I have had a large, a fair, and a pleasant field; so fertile, that it has given me two harvests in a summer.—Dequien.

I ask whether in the uncultivated waste of America, a thousand acres yield as many conveniences of life as ten acres of equally fertile land do in Devonshire?—Locke.

With of, productive.

The earth is fertile of all kind of grain.—Camden Remains.

This happy country in extremely fertile, as of those above, so likewise of its productions under ground.—Woodward.

Fertile. v. a. Fertilize. Rare.

Their bounty falls like rain, and fertile all that's under them.—Psalmist, Psalms, xli. (Ord MS.)

Fertilness. s. Attribute suggested by Fertile; fruitfulness; fecundity.

He, according to the fertilness of the Italian wit, did not only afford us the demonstration of his practice, but sought to enrich our mind with the contemplation thereof.—Sir P. Sidney, Defence of Poesy.

Fertilitate. v. a. Make fertile. Rare.

A cock will in one day fertilize the whole race of chickens or cluster of eggs, not excluded in many weeks after.—Sir T. Browne.

Fertility. s. [Fr. fertilité; Lat. fertilitas.]

Fecundity; abundance; fruitfulness; plentifulness.

I will go root away

The noxious weeds, that without profit suck

The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

Shakespeare, Richard II., fil. 4.

Paradise itself exceeded in beauty and fertility; and these places had but a resemblance thereof.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

The quickness of the imagination is seen in invention, the fertility in the fancy, and the accuracy in the expression.—Dequien.

Fertilization. s. Act of making fertile;

process by which anything is fertilized:

(fertilization is the commoner term in Botany or Vegetable Physiology; fecundation in Zoology or Animal Physiology).

The anthers . . . burst open in various ways, generally from two longitudinal slits, from which the sides of the case fold back like doors, and allow the escape of the pollen. This substance is for the fertilization of the ovules, and makes it reach the stigma so as to have its influence conveyed down the style to the ovules, these latter never become perfect seeds.—Hensley, Rudiments of Botany, ch. i.

Fertilize. v. a. Make fruitful or fertile.

Having watered and fertilized by their passage, the grounds through which they [rivers] seemed to wander.—Boyle, Considerations on the Style of the Holy Scriptures, p. 56.

Rain-water carries along with it a sort of terrestrial matter that fertilizes the land, as being proper for the formation of vegetables.—Woodward, Essay towards a Natural History of the Earth.

Fertilized. part. adj. Impregnated.

The general law to which both homogeneous and heterogeneous conform, thus appears to be, that the products of a fertilized germ go on accumulating by simple growth, so long as the forces whence growth results are greatly in excess of the antagonistic forces; but that when diminution of the one set of forces, or increase of the other, causes a considerable decline in this excess, and an approach towards equilibrium, fertilized germs are again produced.—Herbert Spencer, Inductions of Biology.

Fertilizer. s. That which fertilizes.

When more is taken from the land than is given back, the purchase of extraneous fertilizers is the only resource.—London, Encyclopedia of Agriculture.

Fertilizing. part. adj. Rendering fertile.

Though the colossal statue of Ananias uttered its musical notes every morning at sunrise, still timely amid the desolation with which it was surrounded, and the Nile was still worshipped at midsummer by the husbandman, to secure its fertilizing overflow.—Shapiro, History of Egypt, ch. xiv.

A spermatozoon is doubtless a very general form of the essential matter of the sperm; but in tracing the modifications of the spermatozoon from mammals down the scale of animal life, we find them gradually reduced to the head or nuclear part, and discern in the vibratile caudal appendage an accessory relating to the passage of the fertilizing principle to the germ-cell, rather than to its essential operations when arrived there.—Owen, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, lect. ii.

Ferule. s. [Latin.] Instrument of correction with which young scholars are beaten on the hand.

The birch upon the breeches of the small ones, And humble with the ferule the tall ones.

Benjamin and Fletcher, Two Noble Kinsmen.

These differ as much as the rod and ferule.—Shore, Grammar.

Férule. s. Ferule. Rare.

Pids, and ferulans, rods, and scourges, have been the usual dainties in schools.—Martini, Reformation of Schools, p. 13: 1012.

Férule. s. Ferula, of which it is the Anglicized form.

Now my rhymes relish of the ferule still,

Some nose-wise pedant hiss.

Bishop Hall, Satires, iv. 1.

Before he had my down upon his chin, and whilst he was under the ferule.—id., Remains, p. 304.

From the rod to ferule I would have them free, as from the mousetrap of them.—B. Jonson, Discoveries.

They were always in their first garden, reaping harvest of their golden time, among their ferule and their Spilargia; in Arcadia still, but kings; the ferule of their sway not much harder, but of like dignity with that mild sceptre attributed to king Basilius: the Greek and Latin, their stately Pamela and their Philobea; with the occasional duncery of some untoward tyro, serving for a refreshing interlude of a Mopla, or a clown's duncery.—Lamb, Essays of Elia, The Old and the New Schoolmaster.

Fervency. s.

1. Heat of mind; ardour; eagerness.

Your liver

Did hang a sail on his hook, which he

With fervency drew up.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 5.

2. Pious ardour; flame of devotion; zeal.

We have on all sides but much of our first fervency towards God.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity dedication.

There must be zeal and fervency in him which propoundeth for the rest these suits and supplications, which they by their joyful acclamations must ratify.—Id.

When you pray, let it be with attention, with fervency, and with perseverance.—Archbishop Wake, Preparation for Death.

Fervent. adj. [Lat. fervens, -entis; pres. part. of fervere = boil; whence fervidus and fervor.]

1. Hot; boiling.

The fountain's

Bubbling wave did ever freshly waile,

No ever would through fervent summer fade.

Spenser.

From the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and serenity.—Sir H. Wotton.

2. Hot in temper; vehement.

They that are more fervent to dispute, be not always the most able to determine.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Ardent in piety; warm in zeal; flaming with devotion.

This man being fervent in the spirit, taught diligently the things of the Lord.—Acts, xviii. 25.

No spoke the fervent angel; but his zeal None seconded, as out of season judge'd, Or singular and rash.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 640.

Let all enquiries into the mysterious points of theology be carried on with fervent petitions to God, that he would dispose their minds to direct all their skill to the promotion of a good life.—South, Sermons.

4. Ardent in love.

Will you go to him then and speak for me? You have loved longer, but not ferventer.

Benjamin and Fletcher, Laws of Candy.

Fervently. adv. In a fervent manner.

1. In a burning degree.

It continued so fervently hot, that men roasted eyes in the mud.—Hakewill, Apology, p. 116.

2. Eagerly; vehemently.

Measure, whereunto a man is fervently moved.—Sir T. Elyot, Governour, fil. 182.

They all that charge did fervently apply, With greedy malice and importune toll.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

3. With pious ardour; with holy zeal.

Epaphras saluteth you, labouring fervently for you in prayers.—Colossians, iv. 12.

He cares not how or what his suffer, so he suffer well, and be the friend of Christ; nor where nor when he suffers, so he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably.—Jeremy Taylor.

933

Ferventness. s. Attribute suggested by Fervent; ardour; zeal.

Having great power, with constant ferventness of spirit, to declare his will.—Baird, Discourses on the Revolutions, pt. iii. disc. A. iii. h.

Fervid. adj. Hot; burning; boiling; vehement; eager; zealous.

The mounted sun Shot down direct his fervid rays, to warm Earth's lowest womb.—Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 300.

Fervidness. s. Attribute suggested by Fervid; ardour of mind; zeal; passion.

As to the healing of Malchus's ear, . . . in the account of the week Lamb of God, it was a kind of injury done to him by the fervidness of St. Peter, who knew not yet what spirit he was of.—Healey, Sermons, vi.

Fervour. s. [Lat. fervor; Fr. sergeur.] 1. Heat; warmth.

Were it an undeniable truth that an effectual fervour proceeded from this star, yet would not the same determine the opinion.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Take bright Aurora, whose reluctant ray Portends the forenoon of ensuing day, And warm the shepherd with his flock's retreat To leafy shadows, from the threatened heat.

These silver drops, like morning dew, Foretell the fervour of the day; So from one cloud soft showers we view, And blinding lightnings burst away.

2. Heat of mind; zeal.

Obvious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason so great as ought in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of rash proceedings, if in fervour of zeal they had renounced such things.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Ardour of piety.

There will be at Loretto, in a few ages, more jewels of the greatest value in Europe, if the devotion of its princess continues with its present fervour.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Fescue. s. [Lat. festuca.] young shoot, or stalk of a tree; hence festue the form in accordance with etymology.]

1. Small wire with which those who teach to read point out the letters.

Teach him an alphabet upon his fingers, making the points of his fingers of his left hand both on the inside to signify some letter, when any of them is pointed at by the forefinger of the right hand, or by any kind of fescue.—Hobbes.

Teach them how easily passions ought to move; For such we cannot think, can never love; And since these needs will judge the poet's art, Point 'em with fescues to each shuffling part.

2. In Botany. Grass so called; species or varieties of the genus Festuca.

The hard fescue (Festuca duriuscula) . . . is far less productive than the meadow fescue.—Morton, Cyclopædia of Agriculture, Festuca.

Fescol. s. [Fr. fuscole; Lat. phaseolus.] Kidneybeans. Rare.

Hindian not fescos or poor vetch to sow, Or care to make Egyptian lentils thrive.

Fesse. s. In Heraldry. See extracts.

The fesse is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing the third part of the escutcheon over the middle; if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you must name the field, and say so many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say barwise, or barry of six, eight, or ten, as the king of Hungary bears argent and gules barry of eight.—Boechius, On Blazoning.

Fesse, in heraldry; [but none of the nine honourable ordinaries of the escutcheon, which it divides horizontally in the middle, and separates the chief from the point. It is supposed to represent a broad girdle or belt of honour, such as those with which the knights-at-arms were originally dressed. It possesses the centre of the escutcheon, and contains in breadth one third thereof. . . . When the fesse takes up less than its proper breadth, it is called a bar. Freeman is the exact centre of the escutcheon.—Rees, Cyclopædia.

Festal. adj. [Lat. festus, festivus, festalis, from festum—feast; festivitas—at-is; Fr. festivité.] Respecting feasts; befitting a feast.

They would have thought, who heard the strain, They saw in Tempe's vale her native maids Amidst the festal sounding shades To some unwearied minstrel dancing.

Collins, Ode on the Passions.

Fest. s. [Fr. festin.] Anything hanging like a wreath or garland, suspended

These were festal chansons for enlivening the merriments of the Christmas celebrity.—T. Warton, History of English Poetry, iii. 142.

At festal seasons there may be supposed a very numerous company.—Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland.

Fester. v. n. Runkle; corrupt; grow virulent.

I might, even in my lady's presence, discover the more which had deeply festered within me.—Sir P. Sidney.

I have some wounds upon me, and they smart To hear themselves remembered.— Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude, And tent themselves with death.

Passion and mankindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery that makes it fester.—South, Sermons.

Festered. part. adj. Taken the character of a fester.

How should our festered sorrows be cured?—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Festing. part. adj. Taking the character of a fester.

Inward corruption and infected sin Not purged, not healed, behind remained still, And festing sore, did rankle yet within.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Festinate. adj. [Lat. festinatus, pass. part. of festinare—hasten; festinatio, -onis.] Hasty; hurried. Rare.

Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation: we are bound to the like.—Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 7.

Festinely. adv. Hastily; speedily; with speed. Rare.

Take this key! give enlargement to the swain; bring him festinately hither.—Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, iii. 1.

Festination. s. Haste; hurry. Rare.

Lay hands on him with all festination.—Preston, Tragedy of King Cambyses, 1561.

Festination may prove precipitation.—Sir T. Browne, Christian Morals, i. 23.

Festival. s. Time of feast; anniversary-day of civil or religious joy.

So tedious is this day, As is the night before some festal, To an impatient child that hath new robes, And may not wear them.

Follow, ye nymphs and shepherds all, Come, celebrate this festal, And merrily sing, and sport, and play; 'Tis Orinda's nuptial day.

The festal of our Lord's resurrection we have celebrated, and may now consider the chief consequence of his resurrection, a judgment to come.—Bishop Atterbury, Sermons.

Used adjectively.

The king forbid that they should profane the Sabbath and festal days.—1 Maccabees, i. 45.

He appeared at great tables, and festal entertainments, that he might manifest his divine clarity to men.—Bishop Atterbury.

Festival. adj. Festive (to which a writer like Sir T. Browne was likely to prefer it, though it may also be festal).

Their garlands . . . were convivial, festal, sacrificial, nuptial, honorary, funeral.—Sir T. Browne, Miscellaneous, p. 91.

Festive. adj. Joyous; gay; befitting a feast.

The glad circle round them yield their souls To festive mirth, and wit that knows no gall.

Thomson.

His vein was chiefly festive and satirical.—T. Warton, History of English Poetry, vol. I. dissertation 2.

Festivity. s.

1. Festival; time of rejoicing.

The daughter of Jephthah came to be worshipped as a deity, and had an annual festivity observed unto her honour.—Sir T. Browne.

There happening a great and solemn festivity, such as the sheep shearings used to be, David condescended to beg of a rich man some small repast.—South, Sermons.

2. Guilty; joyfulness; temper or behaviour befitting a feast.

To some persons there is no better instrument to cause the remembrance, and to enliven the attention to the article, than the recommending it by festivity and joy of a holiday.—Jeremy Taylor.

Festivous. adj. Merry. Rare.

(Used in the title of a work by Gayton quoted under Fausen.)

Festoon. s. [Fr. feston.] Anything hanging like a wreath or garland, suspended by the two extremes in a curved form, with its ends hanging down perpendicularly.

The mere flower-painter is, we are, obliged to study the form of festoons.—Lord Shaftesbury.

Festoon. adj. [Lat. festuca.] Straw-colour between green and yellow. Rare.

Therein may be discovered a little insect of a festoon or pale green, resembling a locust or grasshopper.—Sir T. Browne.

Festoonous. adj. Formed of straw. Rare.

We speak of straw, or festoonous divisions, lightly drawn over with oil.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Fet. v. a. Fetch. Obsolete.

Get home with thy fowl, make ready to fet, The sooner the easier carriage to get.

Thomson, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

In the preterite.

And they fet forth Urijah out of Egypt to Jeholai, who slew him with the sword.—Jeremiah, xxv. 23.

We hoist up mast and sail, that in a while We fet the shore.

Sackville, Induction to Mirrour for Magistrates.

In the participle.

On, you noblest English, Whose blood is fet from fathers of war-proof.

Herewith affrighted, Hero shrink away, And in her lukewarm place wander lay;

Whose lively heat, like fire from heaven fet, Would animate gross clay, and higher set The drooping thoughts of base-declining souls, Than dreary Mars-carousing ne'er did bow.

Milford and Chapman, Translation of Hero and Leander.

Fet. s. [F] Piece. Rare.

The bottom clear, Now laid with many a fet Of seed-pearl, ere she had't her there Was known as black as jet.

Drayton.

Fetal. adj. Having the character of a fetus.

The egg-shell is almost entirely fitted with a glutinous substance, laid up for the nourishment of the fetal animal.—Dr. Waterhouse, The Botanical, (Ord. MS.)

Fetation. s. Generation of a fetus.

Being ripened to fetation by the heat of the sun, they live upon leaves and grass.—Sir M. Hale, Origin of Mankind, (Ord. MS.)

(For another example see extract under Extrication.)

Fetch. v. a. [A.S. fæcan, from the same root as fing, i.e. that which catches. The Anglo-Saxon fa-n, and Danish faue, stand to fing as go to ging. The Danish preterite fik illustrates the change from the sound of -ng to that of k, hsh, tsk.]

1. Go and bring.

Go to the flock and fetch me from thence two kid goats.—Genesis, xxvii. 9.

2. Reach; arrive at; come to.

Mean time flew our ships, and straight we fetcht The Syrian's tale; a spiteful wind so strait Her wings to wait us, and so urg'd our keel.

Chapman.

Visitation of the sick is a duty required both by the law of humanity and of religion. Bodily infirmity is sad and comfortless, and therefore needs the presence and counsel of friends to relieve it; although, when we draw the curtains of those that are eminently gracious, we do rather fetch than bring a blessing.—Bishop Hall, Joseph with Elihu, (Ord. MS.)

If earth, industrious of herself, fetch day Travelling East; and with her part away From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray.

Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 137.

3. Obtain as its price.

During such a state, silver in the coin will never fetch as much as the silver in bullion.—Locke.

4. Perform; effect.

Note a wild and wanton herd, Or race of youthful and unhandled colts, Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

I'll fetch a turn about the garden, nipping The janks of hard'ed affections; though the king Hath charg'd you should not speak together.

Id., Cymbeline, i. 2.

When evening grey doth rise, I fetch my round, Over the mount.

Milton, Arcades, 24.

To come to that place they must fetch a compass three miles on the right hand through a forest.

Kneller, History of the Turks.

As if she had drunk Lethe, or had made Even with Heaven, did fetch so still a sleep, So sweet and sound.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Maid's Tragedy.

FIBR

In long reddish filaments, which may be deprived of colour by working them with the hands under a streamlet of cold water, and afterwards freed from any adhering gross by digestion in alcohol or ether. Fibrine, thus obtained, is solid, white, flexible, slightly elastic, insipid, inodorous, denser than water, but containing four-fifths of its weight of it, and without action on litmus. When dried, it becomes semi-transparent, yellowish, stiff, and brittle; water restores its softness and flexibility. . . . As the basis of flesh, it is a very nutritious substance, and is essential to the sustenance of marvellous animals. — Ors, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Fibrous. adj. Consisting of fibrine.

Of this inflammatory lymph there are described by Mr. Paget two varieties: the fibrinous and the corpuscular. — Watson, Lectures on the Principles and Practice of Physic, lect. x.

Fibrous. adj. Composed of fibres; consisting of fibre.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a predilection of moisture. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

I saw Petrus' arms rimpl'd 'round
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. — Dryden.

The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. — Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

The fibrous system consists:—1st. Of fibrous membranes—membrane fibrous—as the pericardium, the cerebral and spinal dura mater, the fibrous capsules, the sheath of the tendons, the aponeurotic epistomium, the sclerotic, &c. 2ndly. Of fibrous cords, in which the fibres are bound into sheath—organs fibrous, fasciculi. Several of the former should be viewed as compound structures; as the dura mater, the tunica albuginea, the fibro-synovial sheath, &c.; but the fibrous tissue constitutes their chief basis. With the exception of the fibrous membranes of a few glandular organs, it is easy to demonstrate that all the fibrous structures are connected together, and that the pericardium is the centre and basis of connection. This tissue consists of whitish, or greyish, shining, satiny fibres, of great thickness and strength. These are interwoven in various directions, in the first division of this tissue; and are placed parallel and very close to each other, in the second. Their cohesion is very great. Hence the fibrous tissue is the strongest in the body. . . . During prolonged debility, and in cases of extreme vital exhaustion, the cohesion of this tissue is diminished, and laceration or extension of it takes place with less violence. During constitutional disorder, or contamination of the system by specific miasmata, and in the scrophulous or gouty diathesis, it often becomes the seat of morbid action, and then evinces vital properties in a most evident manner. Injuries and irritations of this tissue, particularly when the vital functions are impaired or disordered, are often the source of the most violent and dangerous affections. — The fibrous tissue, however, is, with the exception of the pericardium and the capsules of joints, not very prone to disease; and, even when these are affected, a scrophulous or syphilitic taint has been the cause. — Copland, Dictionary of Practical Medicine.

Fibster. s. Liar in a small way.

She found him grinning over the bowl. She was discovered, and she blushed a little. 'Thank you, Monsieur,' she said. 'You see your ladies have been here. How good of you! I couldn't come before—I was in the kitchen making a pudding.' 'I know you were, I saw you through the arched railings as I drove up,' replied the old gentleman. 'You see everything,' she replied. 'A few things, but not that my pretty lady,' he said good-naturedly. 'You silly little fibster! I heard you in the room over head, where I have no doubt you were putting a little rouge on.' — Thackeray, Vanity Fair.

Fibula. s. [Latin.] In Anatomy. See extract.

[The fibula is] the outer and lower bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of this leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its lower side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. — Quincy.

Fickle. adj. [A.S. ficot.] Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; changeable; without steady adherence; subject to vicissitude.

A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. — Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 4.

Or likest hovering drowns.
The fickle poisoners of Morpheus' train. — Milton, Il Penseroso, p.

He would be lth
Us to abolish, lest the adversary
Triumph, and my fickle state, whom God
Most favours! — Id., Paradise Lost, ix. 943.

VOL. I.

FICT

They know how fictio common lovers are!
Their milks and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. — Dryden.

We in vain the fictio we pursue,
Who change the constant lover for the new. F.

Fickleness. s. Attribute suggested by Fickle; inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could settle his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom she complained. — Sir P. Sidney.
Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness.
In choice and change of thy dear loved dame. — Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences. — Addison, Freindler.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell, I found that what she liked one day she disliked another. — Id.

We believe a very little examination of the facts will suffice to show that the believers have been more consistent than their orators; and that they escape from the charge of fickleness at the expense of the authority due to the faith last proclaimed from his altar. It would, indeed, be difficult to select one leading principle or prevailing sentiment in Mr. Burke's latest writings, to which something extremely adverse may not be found in his former; we can hardly say his early works. — Lord Brougham, Historical Sketches of Statesmen of the Reign of George III., Mr. Burke.

Fickly. adv. In a fickle manner; without certainty or stability. Rare: the combination k + l + l giving an awkward compound in the way of pronunciation.

Do not now,
Like a young wasteful heir, forsake the hopes
Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms.
To raise a present power that's fickly hold
By the frail tenure of the people's will. — Southern.

Fictile. adj. [Lat. fictilis.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.

The cause of fragility is an impatience to be extended; and therefore stone is more frail than metal, and so fictile earth is more frail than crumbly earth. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Fiction. [Fr. fiction; Lat. fictio, -onis; fingo - feign; pass. part. fictus.]

1. Act of feigning or inventing.
If the presence of God in the human, by a mere fiction of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not that's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it? — Bishop Stillingfleet.

Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in our of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fiction. — Dryden, Translation of Ingres's Art of Painting.

2. Thing feigned or invented.

If through mine ears there any consolations,
By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or just fictions;
If ought I receive these hallow'd exclamations,
While that my soul, she, she, she lives in afflictions. — Sir P. Sidney.

No also was the fiction of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent which tempted Eve. — Sir W. Raleigh.

Fictionist. s. Composer of fictions; writer on feigned subjects.

He will come out in time an elegant fictionist. — Lamb, Letter to Wordsworth.

Fictious. adj. Fictitious (this latter being the commoner and more correct word).

Uninterrupted with fictious fancies,
I verify the truth. — Janet, Civil Wars of York and Lancaster.

With fancied rules and arbitrary laws
Matter and motion man restrains,
And studied lines and fictions circles draws. — Prior.

Fictitious. adj.

1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.

Draw him strictly so,
That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. — Dryden.

2. Feigned; imaginary.

The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty. — Pope.

3. Not real; not true; allegorical.

Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. — Addison, Spectator.

6 D

FIDD

Fictitiously. adv. In fictitious manner; falsely; counterfeitedly.

These pieces are fictitious set down, and have no copy in nature. — S. T. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

Fictitiousness. s. Attribute suggested by Fictitious; feigned representation.

It is commonly a representation of mean, and others of bad men; some think that its essence consists in the misrepresentation, others in the fictitiousness of the transaction. — Johnson, Rambler, no. 125.

Fictive. adj. Feigned; imaginary.

Time . . . to those things whose grounds were very true,
Though naked; and bare, (not having to content
The wayward ears) gave fictive ornament. — Drayton, Polyolbion, vi.

Fiddle. s. [Lat. fidelula, diminutive of fides in the sense of musical instrument; A.S. ffol.] Stringed instrument of music so called; violin.

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer. — Bishop Stillingfleet.

The adventure of the bear and fiddle
Is sung; but breaks off in the middle. — Butler, Hudibras.

She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow — very part of the string; but could not, for her her in it, and whereabout the time lay. — Addison, Guardian.

Be or play first fiddle. Act as head man in any undertaking, like the leader of a band in music.

Fiddle. n. n.

1. Play upon a fiddle.

Thenceforth being desired at a feast to touch into, he said he could not fiddle, but he could a small town a great city. — Bacon, Essays.
Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make wretches dance. — Pope.

2. Trifle; shift the hands often (like one who plays upon a fiddle), and do nothing.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together. — Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

Fiddlefaddle. s. Trifling, trivial, or fanciful matter.

Leave them fiddlefaddles. — Beaumont and Fletcher, If without Money.

She said that her grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda;
with abundance of fiddlefaddles of the same nature. — Speculator.

Fiddlefaddle. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a hustle about nothing.

She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her. — Arbuthnot.

'Fiddle, creature, don't tease me with your fiddlefaddle stuff; I have a thousand things to think of.' — Colman the clerk, The Judens Wife, v. 3.

Fiddler. s. One who fiddles.

Let no merry fiddler presume to intrude,
Unless he be sent for to vary our dances. — H. Johnson.

Nero put the fiddlers to death, for being more skilful in the trade than he was. — Jerome Taylor, Rule and Exercises of Holy Living.

These will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politics to jests,
To be repeated like John Dory.

When mbs delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may a fortune get. — Dryden.

Drunk as a fiddler. Common measure for the degree of intoxication.

O the musician! I prither, Master Edmund, call 'em in, and liquor 'em little. — Thick I will,
sweet captain father-in-law, and make each of them as drunk as a common fiddler. — Parthen, act. v. (Orl. M.)

My passion is as mustard strong,
I sit all sober and,
Drunk as a fiddler all day long,
Or like a March hare mad. — Swift.

Fiddlestick. s. Bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.

His grizzly beard was long and thick,
With which he strung his fiddlestick. — Butler, Hudibras.

Colloquial and contemptuous (sometimes as an interjection) for a thing below notice.

'Really,' answered the patient (Gutterback), 'I was forgetful of those matters; but my friend cares as little as myself about the grocer's basket of the table; and the least of intellectual converse is all that he desires in his brief sojourn beneath our roof?—Extract of Fiddlesticks, Mr. Clutterbuck I did over man talk such nonsense!—Sir E. B. Lytton, Pelham.

937

Fiddlestring. s. String of a fiddle.

A fiddlestring, moistened with water, will sink a nail in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lessened, and waterish. — A footnote, On the Effects of Air on human Bodies.

Worn to a fiddlestring. Thoroughly wearied and worn out.

Fiddling. part. adj. Trifling.

Time cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done. — Swift.

Fiddling. verbal abs. Act of one who fiddles or trifles.

Those degenerate arts and shifts, whereby many counsellors and governors gain both favour with their master and estimation with the vulgar, deserve no better name than fiddling; being things rather pleasing for the time, and graceful to themselves only, than tending to the weal and advancement of the state which they serve. — Bacon, Essay on the true Greatness of a Kingdom. (Ord MS.) (See also under F i d g e.)

Fidejussio. s. [Lat. fidejussio.] Suretyship; act of being bound for another. Rare.

If he will be a surety, such is the nature of fidejussio and suretyship, he must. — Farinon, Sermon, p. 15: 1647.

Fidejussor. s. [Lat. fidejussor.] Surety. Rare.

I know God might, if he would, have appointed godfathers to give answer in behalf of the children, and to be fidejussors for them. — Jeremy Taylor, Liberty of Prophecy, ser. 18. (Ord MS.)

Fidelity. s. [Fr. fidélité; Lat. fidelitas.]

1. Honesty; veracity.
The church by her public reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is fidelity. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

2. Faithful adherence.

They mistake credulity for fidelity. — Clarke.
The fidelity of the allies of Rome, which had not been shaken by the defeat of Thrasymenus, could not resist the fiery trial of Cannae. The Apulians joined the conqueror immediately, and Arpo and Salapia opened their gates to him. — Arnold, History of Rome, ch. xlv.

Fidg. v. n. Fidget.

Behold the graces of each dame! . . .
How some would leap upright as any bolt,
And some would dance and skip like a young colt;
And some would fidget, as though she had the itch.

Birds, Works of a Young Wit: 1577.
To fidge [in] to be fiddling here and there to no manner of purpose. — Outgrace, in v. Nieder.

Tim, thou'rt the Punch to stir up trouble;
You wriggle, fidge, and make a rout,
Put all your brother puppets out. — Swift.

Fidget. v. n. Move nimbly and irregularly, so as to show agitation or impatience.

Our lively hostess, whose fancy was impatient of the rein, disputed at this, and ventured to say, Nay, this is too much. — Roswell, Life of Johnson.
O why, my Lord Warlen, O why should you fidget in talking of matters you don't understand?
Or why should you write yourself down for an idiot
Because you, forsooth, have the pen in your hand?
— Moore, Twopenny Postbag.

Fidget. s. Restless agitation; fidgety person.

Colloquial.

Why, what can the vicountess mean?
Cried the square hoods in woeful fidget;
The times are alter'd quite and clean.

Gray, Long Story.
Fidgety. adj. Having the character of a fidget.

There she sat, frightened and fidgety. — Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney.

Fiducial. adj. [Lat. fiducius = confidence.]

Confident; undoubting.
Such a fiducial persuasion as cannot deceive us. — Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 294.

Fiducially. adv. Undoubtingly; confidently. Rare.

It is the Spirit of God alone, that proposes to the soul the grounds of hope, and then by an immediate and Almighty power enables the soul fiducially to close with and rest upon that object, upon those grounds. — South, Sermons, vi. 472.

Fiduciary. s.

1. One who holds anything in trust; trustee.
Prescription transfers the possession, and discharges the fiduciary from restitution. — Jeremy Taylor, Ductor Dubitantium. (Ord MS.)

2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification; and excludes good works from contributing any thing towards it. — Hammond.

Fiduciary. adj.

1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.

That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary assent to whatever the gospel has revealed. — Archbishop Wake, Preparation for Death.

2. Not to be doubted.

Elisiana can rely no where upon mere love and fiduciary obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience. — Howell.

The fiduciary or letters of credence of the churches. — Bishop Harecroft, Dangerous Positions and Proceedings under Pretence of Reformation.

3. Held in trust.

Every himself must pronounce that return of his for the acquitting of his fiduciary pledges, to be a most noble act. — Howell, Familiar Letters, ii. 61.

The High Admiral himself cannot grant it for longer than his own time, being but a trust and fiduciary power. — Spelman.

Fief. s. [see Fee.] Fee; manor; possession held by a feudal tenure under some superiority.

To the next realm she stretch'd her sway,
For pasture near adjoining lay;
A piteous province and alluring prey;
A chamber of dependencies was fram'd
And the whole fief, in right of poetry, she claim'd.

As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were in the nature of fiefs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at war. — Arbuthnot, Tables of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

Field. s. [A.S. feld.]

1. Enclosure: (the commonest, though not, perhaps, the original meaning of the term).
Or great Cairn, who first taught the swain
In Marian fields to sow the golden grain.
— Pope, Translation of the First Book of the Theodid of Statius.

2. Country, or open country in general: (often used adjectivally).

Every plant of the field, before it was in the earth. — Genesis, ii. 5.

Come, live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove,
That hills and valleys, dale and field,
And all the craggy mountains yield.

Mariouss.
Field lands are not exempted from milderms, nor yet from smut, where it is more than in enclosed lands. — Mortimer.

3. Expanse; space; compass; extent.
The god a clearer space for heav'n design'd;
Where fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous drops of earth below.

Dryden.
Ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove.
The ill-natured man gives himself a large field to expatiate in: he espouses failings in human nature. — Addison, Spectator.

4. Ground or space for anything brought within its compass.

Let the field or ground of the picture be clean, light, and well united with colour. — Dryden, Translation of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

5. In Heraldry. Surface of a shield.
Slight were his arms, a sword, a silver shield,
No marks of honour charg'd its empty field.

Dryden, Virgil's Æneid.
6. As the second element of a compound (battle-field) with the first element understood.

You maintain several factions;
And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. i. 1.
What though the field be lost,
All is not lost.

Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 106.

Fiduciale. s. See extract.

Ficht-ale . . . [was] a kind of drinking in the field by balliffs of hundreds, for which they gathered money of the inhabitants of the hundred to which they belonged. — Rees, Cyclopædia, Field.

Fiducial. s. Notebook used in surveying.

The paces of the field-book may be conveniently divided into five columns. In the middle column the angles at the several stations taken by the theodolite are to be entered. . . . The distances taken by the offset staff, on either side of the station line, are to be entered into the columns on either side of the middle column. . . . The names of the objects with proper remarks may be entered in the columns on either side of these last mentioned. — Rees, Cyclopædia, Field.

Fieldday. s. (both d's pronounced.)

1. Military review.

The general-in-chief would be far more usefully employed in superintending the instruction of his brigadiers by this method (the division of the force into two hostile bodies) than in himself conducting an aimless and uninteresting field-day against an invincible enemy. — Macdonnell, Modern Warfare as influenced by modern Artillery, pref.

2. Galu-day; fete.

Nobody . . . supposes that a dinner at home is characterized by the horrible ceremony, the foolish makeshifts, the mean pomp and ostentation which distinguish our banquets on grand field-days. — Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. 22.

Fieldea. adj. Being in field of battle.

Now, Mars, I prythee, make us quick in work:
That we with smoking swords may march from hence,
To help our felded friends.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 4.

Fielddare. s. [A.S. feallowe = fallow, yellow, (Lat. fulvus, as callow to calvus) + fare.] English bird of passage so called, Turdus pilaris.

Winter birds, as woodcocks and feldfarses, if they come early out of the northern countries, with us show cold winters. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Fielddmarshal. s. Officer in the army of the highest rank.

Perhaps you will be amused to know how the Electoral Court (of Hanover) was composed. There were the princes of the house in the first class; in the second the single feld-marshal of the army. — Thackeray, The Four Georges, George I.

Fielddmouse. s. Mouse that burrows in banks, and makes her house with various apartments.

The feldmouse builds her garner under ground. — Dryden.

Fielddpiece. adj. Small cannon used in battles, but not in sieges.

The base planting his feldpieces upon the hills, did from thence grievously annoy the defendants. — Arnold, History of the Turks.

Fielddpreacher. s. One who preaches in a field or open place.

Do you think the popish feld-preachers did not first learn their lesson, took no previous steps, made no provision, before they set out upon their expeditions? Read their legends, and be convinced. — Bishop Lexington to Mr. Whitfield, Enthusiasm of Methodists, &c. pt. ii. vol. i. p. viii.

Fielddpreaching. s. Act of pronouncing an harangue in a field or open place.

The fact you own, both of popish and methodical feld-preaching; you glory in it. — Bishop Lexington to Mr. Whitfield, &c. pp. 12.

Fielddroom. s. Open space (compare elbow-room); free room for military evolutions; freedom.

Falling back where they Might feldroom find at large. — Drayton, Polyolbion, xii.

They . . . had feldroom enough to expatiate upon the gross iniquity of the covenant. — Lord Clarendon, Life, ii. 294.

Fielddwork. s. Fortifications formed on the field for particular purposes and occasions.

Fieldworks are rarely constructed in a durable manner; they are, for the most part, formed by the excavation of the soil, correspond in figure with the parapet to be formed, and, from the resemblance of the ditch, are called trenches. — Rees, Cyclopædia.

Fielddy. adj. Open like, or having the character of, a field. Rare.

In feldy clouds he vanisheth away.
— Sylvestre, Translation of Du Bartas, 107. (Ord MS.)

Fieend. s. [A.S. feond.—see Friend.] Enemy (generally the enemy, i. e. Satan); infernal being; devil.

What now, had I a body again, I could,
Coming from hell; what fends would wish about
And Hannibal could not have wish'd to see.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

Fieendish. adj. Having the character of a fiend.

His look as he said this was perfectly fiedish. — James Henry Mackintosh.

Fiendishness. s. Attribute suggested by Fiendish.

Those dames which under a cloak of modestie and devotion, hide nothing but pride and fiendishness.—Bishop Hall, Holy Pasquiches. (Ord. M.B.)

Fiendish. adj. Full of evil or devilish practices.

Regard his hellish fall,
Whom fiendish fortune may exhort the wise
Only to wonder at unlawful things.

Marlowe, Dr. Faustus.

Fiendlike. adj. Resembling a fiend; savage; cruel; extremely wicked.

The cruel ministers
Of this dead butcher, and his fiendlike queen.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 1.

The last circumstance reveals a fiendlike appearance drawn by Shakespeare.—T. Warton, History of English Poetry, i. 100.

Fierce. adj. [Fr. fier; Lat. ferus and ferox.]

1. Savage; eager of mischief; violent; outrageous; vehement; passionate; angry.

Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel.—Genesis, xlix. 7.

A man brings his mind to be positive and fierce for positions whose evidence he has never examined.—Locke.

2. Strong; forcible; violent; with celerity.

The ships, though so great, are driven of fierce winds; yet are they turned about with a very small helm.—James, iii. 2.

Fiercely. adv. In a fierce manner.

The defendants fiercely assailed by their enemies before, and beaten with the great ordnance behind, were grievously distressed.—Kaulea, History of the Turks.

The air, if very cold, irritates the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorches in frosty weather.—Bacon.

Fierceness. s. Attribute suggested by Fierce.

1. Ferocity; savageness; eagerness for blood; fury.

Suddenly there came out of a wood a monstrous lion, with a sh-shen not far from him, of little less fierceness.—Sir P. Sidney.

2. Quickness to attack; keenness in anger and resentment; vehemence.

The Greeks are of strong and skilful to their strength, fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant.—Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, i. 1.

3. Violence; outrageous passion.

His pride and brutal fierceness I abhor;
But scorn your mean suspicions of me more.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Fierisfacias. s. [Lat. fieri, infinitive of facio—become, be made; facias, second singular conjunctive of facio—make—(literally) you may make to become.] In Law. Writ so called from these words, as is commonly the case in the names of writs, being the first conspicuous ones. Abbreviated in Fi. Fa.

Fieri facias [is] a judicial writ, that lies at all times within the year and day, for him that has recovered in an action of debt or damages, to the sheriff, to command him to levy the debt, or the damages of his goods, against whom the recovery was had.—Cowell.

Fieriness. s. Attribute suggested by Fiery.

1. Hot qualities; heat; acrimony.

The ashes, by their heat, their fieriness, and their dryness, belong to the element of earth.—Boyle.

2. Heat of temper; intellectual ardour.

The Italians, notwithstanding their natural fieriness of temper, affect always to appear sober and polite.—Addison.

Fiery. adj. Having the character of fire.

The eyes fiery bright,
Like Gorgon the monster appearing in the night.

Sir T. Ryot, The Governor, fol. 100.

Scarcely had fiery flames in the chimney
Yet harnessed his fiery footed steed,
No-rear'd about the earth his flaming crest,
When the last deadly smother soft did steam.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut, by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Through hills and the Grecian towns he flew;
Th' audacious wretch four fiery couriers drew.

Dryden.

See from the brake the whirling pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings;
Short in his joy, he feels the fiery wound,
Flatters in blood, and panting beats the ground.

Pope.

Fig. s. [German, pfeife.] Pipe blown to the drum; military wind-music.

Farwell the pined troops, and the big war
That make ambition virtue! oh farwell!
Farwell the neighing steed and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, th' ear-piercing fig.

Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 3.

Thus the gay victim, with fresh garlands crown'd,
Pleas'd with the mair'd fig's enlivening sound,
Through gazing crowds in solemn state proceeds.

Philips.

Fifteen. pr. Five and ten; in Arithmetical symbols 15. See Eight and Eighth.

Fifteenth. adj. Ordinal of Fifteen.

Fifth. adj. Ordinal of Five.

Fifthly. adv. In the fifth place in the way of numerical order.

Fiftieth. adj. Ordinal of Fifty.

Fifty. pr. Five tens; in Arithmetical symbols 50.

Fig. s. [Lat. figus; A.S. fic.] Fruit, so called, of the fig tree; tree itself.

It maketh figs better, if a figtree, when it beginneth to put forth leaves, have his top cut off.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The characters of the fig are: the flowers, which are always enclosed in the middle of the fruit, remind of the leaf, and are male and female in the same fruit; the male flowers are situated towards the crown of the fruit; and the female, growing near the stalk, are succeeded by small hard seeds: the entire fruit is, for the most part, turbinate and globular, or of an oval shape, fleshy, and of a sweet taste.—Miller.

A fig for you. Fig, here, means snap of the fingers, as a sign of contempt. When we snap our fingers, and the end of the middle finger comes in contact with the end of the thumb, the space enclosed has the outline of a fig. A line in Dante illustrates this: 'El free 'i figo con ambedue le mane,' i. e. He made the fig with both hands.

In the older writers the Italian figo is often used, and is entered by Johnson as an English word. It is scarcely this; nor, with such an expression as the one under notice, is it wanted.

The chariot had not proceeded far, before Mr. Adams observed it was a very fine day. 'Ay, and a very fine country, too,' answered Pounce. 'I should think so more,' returned Adams, 'if I had not lately travelled over the Downs, which I take to exceed this, and all other prospects in the universe.' 'A fig for prospects,' answered Pounce; 'one acre here is worth ten there; and, for my own part, I have no delight in the prospect of any land but my own.'—Piepling, Adventures of Joseph Andrews.

Fig. s. [? Figure.]

We laugh at poor Jocko the monkey dancing in uniform; or at poor James the dunkey, with his quivering calves and pluck lights; or at the nigger Marquis de Marmont, dressed out with sabre and epaulet, and giving himself the airs of a field-marshal. Lo! is not one of the Queen's pyramids in full fig, as great and as foolish a monster?—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xxix.

Fig. v. a.

1. Give a snap of the fingers to, or for, any one.

When Pistol lies, do this, and fig me like
The bragging Spaniard.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. v. 3.

2. Put something useless into one's head.

Slung.

Away to the sow she goes, and figs her in the crown with another story.—Sir E. R. Kestrange.

Fig. v. n. [? corruption of figge, as in figget.]

Move suddenly or quickly.

The bound . . .
Leaves whom he loves, upon the want doth ply,
Figs to and fro, and falls in clerical cry.

Sylvester, Translation of Du Bartas, 1606.

Figapple. s. Fruit (? kind of apple) so called.

A figapple hath no core or kernel, in these resembling a fig, and differing from other apples.—Mortimer, Leubandry.

Figary. s. Same as Vagary.

Ere long I will make 'em believe you can conjure with such a figary.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Fair Maid of the Inn.

Those mad figaries her whole sex
Is infected with.

Id., Cupid's Revenge.

A lady and her daughter having taken a figary in their heads to go on foot, and visit all the hospitals in Spain, and to minister in them.—M. Golden, Tracts, iii. 466: 1780.

Figant. adj. ? Fidgety.

Such a little figant thing.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Little French Lawyer, iii. 1. (Rich.)

God forgive me, what kind of figant memory have you?—Nay, then, what kind of figant memory has thou?—Knutson Ho, act iii. (Rich.)

Figging. s. See extract.

Figging, in the manner, [is] a kind of cant term among dealers in horses for thrusting 'a corn' (as they call it) of either into the fundament of a horse, or the veins of a mare, at the time of their being led out for show, for the purpose of producing irritation and causing them to lift their tail.—Eras, Cyclopaedia, in voce.

Figum. s. [?] Old game so called.

See, he splits fire.—Oh no, he plays at figum; The devil is the author of wicked figum.—R. Johnson, Devil's an Ass, v. 2. (Nares by H. & W.)

Fight. v. n. preterite fought; part. pass. fought. [A.S. fihtan.]

1. Contend in battle; war; make war; battle; contend in arms: (used both of armies and single combatants).

Fierce fiery warriors fought upon the clouds
In ranks and squadrons, and right form of war.

Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, ii. 2.

The common question is, if we must now surrender Spain, what have we been fighting for all this while? The answer is ready: we have been fighting for the ruin of the public interest, and the advancement of a private.—Swift.

2. Act as a soldier in any cause.

Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave.

Shakespeare, King John, ii. 1.

With.

Though ye fought with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper.—Jeremiah, xxiii. 2.

With against.

The stars in their courses fought against Siva.—Julius, v. 20.

Fight. v. n. War against; combat against.

Himself alone an equal match he boasts,
To fight the Phrygian and the Aonian hounds.

Dryden, Virgil's Æneid.

Fight. s.

1. Battle; combat.

Gabriel, lead forth to battle these my sons
Invincible, lead forth my armed saints,
By thousands and by millions rang'd for fight.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 46.

2. Something to screen the combatants in ships.

Who ever saw a noble sight,
That never view'd a brave war-fight!
Hang up your bloody valours in the air,
Up with your fights and your nettings prepare.

Dryden.

Fighter. s. One who, or that which, fights;

warrior; contender.

I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no fighter.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iii. 4.

Fighting. part. adj. Qualified for, or occupied by, war; fit for battle.

An host of fighting men that went out to war by bands.—2 Chronicles, xxvi. 11.

With cocks.

At the supper tables of the rich the Alexandrian singing boys were much valued; and no breed of fighting-cocks was thought equal to those reared up in Alexandria.—Nharpur, History of Egypt, ch. xlii.

Fighting. verbal abs. [A.S. fehtung.] Contention; quarrel; combat.

Without were fightings, within were fears.—A Corinthus, vii. 5.

From whence come wars and fightings among you?—James, iv. 1.

Figleaf. s. Leaf of the figtree; figuratively, from the original clothing of Adam and Eve, and also from the imitation of it, pu-dicitie causa, in the representation of the naked figure in sculpture, a flimsy covering.

They served figleaves together.—Genesis, iii. 7.

What pitiful figleaves, what senseless and ridiculous shifts are these, not able to silence, and much less satisfy, an accusing conscience!—South, Sermons, ii. 262.

I would as soon look upon a picture of Adam and Eve without figleaves as any of you, if I could help it; therefore keep off, and do not make us sick.—Wycherly, The Country Wife.

Figment. s. [Lat. figmentum; from figo— feign.] Invention; fiction; idea feigned.

Upon the like grounds was raised the figment of 939 not is such as signifies, figureth, and representeth their end.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff:
Oh why should ought less precious or less tough
Figure our loves? —Donna.

An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the ancients.—Dryden.

5. Image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood.—Sir W. Temple.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare, —Prior.

6. Prefigure; foreshow.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;
In this the heaven figures some event.
—Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. ll. 1.

Figure, v. n. Make a figure.

Who figured in the rebellion.—Lord Bolingbroke, Spirit of Patriotism, p. 253.

Figure-caster, s. Astrologer.

I by this figure-caster must be imagined in such distress as to use to Maronilla.—Milton, Apology for Smectynus.

Figure-finger, s. Figure-caster: (this latter being the less contemptuous term of the two).

Figure-fingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves.—Sir E. L'Estrange.

Quacks, figure-fingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters, cannot well live without it.—Cutler, Essay on Confidence.

Figured, part. adj. Put into figure; represented; adorned with figures; imaged; typified: (in Logic, applied to arguments of the full or typical kind, and opposed to unfigured. See Illation).

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almanack's gown,
My figured goblet for a dish of wood.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within;
As through a crystal glass the figured hours were seen.
—Dryden.

Accept this goblet, rough with figured gold.
—Id., Translation of Virgil.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more obscure and unfamiliar ideas, which to mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to.—Locke.

Now marks the course of rolling oris on high,
Over figured worlds now travels with his eye. —Pope.

Figure-head, s. Carved ornament at the prow of a ship.

All this time, Sampson was rubbing his hands, and staring, with ludicrous surprise and disdain, at a great, gorilla-eyed, blunt-nosed figure-head of some old ship, which was raised up against the wall in a corner near the stair, looking like a goblin or hideous idol whom the devout worshipped.—Dickens, Old Curiosity Shop, ch. lxi.

Figurist, s. One who employs himself upon figures. Rare.

But least of all does he favour the figurists, or ueniorialists.—Waterland, Works, vol. vii. p. 184. (Rich.)

Filaceous, adj. [Lat. filum = thread.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

They make cables of the bark of lino trees; it is the stalk that maketh the filaceous matter common, and sometimes the down that groweth above.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Filacer, s. [N.Fr. filace; Lat. filum.] See extract.

[A] filacer [is] an officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs wherein he makes process. There are fourteen of them in the several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt.—Harris.

Filament, s.

1. Slender thread; body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirr'd not the bodies interposed.—Sir T. Browne.

The lungs of consumptive have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments.—Harvey, Discourses of Consumption.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray
On the neat threads and filaments does bear,
Which form the springy texture of the air,

And those still strike the next, till to the sight
The quick vibration propagates the light.
—Sir E. Blackmore.

2. In Botany. Part of the stamen which supports the anther.

The stamen ... has a stalk generally slender, called the filament.—Harvey, Rudiments of Botany, ch. iii. sect. 5.

Filamentary, adj. Having the character of, or formed by, a filament.

(For example see extract from Owen under Fila.)

Filamentous, adj. Like a slender thread.

The doctrine of the filamentous cataract will become as familiar as any established theory among us, only by supposing this, like all other membranes, thickened and become opaque by disorders.—The Student, l. 341.

Filander, s. Worm in hawks.

This may probably destroy that obstinate disease of the filander, or hawkworm.—Sir T. Browne, Of Hawks, Miscellaneous, p. 118.

Filature, s. Spinning, especially of silk from the cocoon.

(For example see Floss-silk.)

Filbert, s. [see extract from Todd, and remarks.] Nut so called (Corylus Avellana).

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plums, pears, apples, cherries, filberts, muskmelons, moushounds of all colours.—Bacon, Essays.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed:
On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?
Yet in a filbert I have often known Maggots survive when all the kernel's gone.

—Lord Dorset.
[This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or hanks, as corrupted from full beard, or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filbert, the name of him who brought it hither. Much is Dr Johnson's etymological account of this word. Gower gives us a very different one in the following lines; which Mr. Horne Tooko also has agreed with me in noticing:

With that upon a green bough
A segnt of sylke, which she [Philis] there had,
She knit; and so herself she hid,
That she about her white were
It did, and hence herself there,
Whereof the goddess were moved,
And Demophon was removed,
That of the goddess' providence
Was shape such an evidence
Ever afterwarde upon the slow,
That Philis in the same throw
Was shape into a night tree,
That all men it might see:
And after Philis Philbert
This tree was clipped in the yerd;
And yet, for Demophon to shame,
Unto this day it beareth the name.

(Confessio Amantis, b. iv.)
The filbert is said to have been brought from Pontus. Hulot calls it 'Poutica nuc.'—Todd.

Of the three derivations suggested by the extracts, Johnson's alone has a presumption in its favour; though fill + beard has its supporters. No details, however, about the hypothetical Filbert are known. All that the present Editor sees his way to is the origin of the second syllable -bert, which he believes to be the -burd in Lombardy. In Neumich, where the filbert is treated as a variety of the hazel, one of its German synonyms means, in the first instance, Lombardy-nut, afterwards transformed into Lampert's nut, Lombard-nuss, Lampartes-nuss. How Lampert became Philibert (for some confusion of this kind is likely) has yet to be discovered.

Filch, v. a. [?] Steal; take by theft; pilfer; pillage; rob; take by robbery: (usually applied to petty thefts).

The champion robbeth by night,
And prowleth and filcheth by day.

—Tusser, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.
Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which neither enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed.

—Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 3.
He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in enclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

What made these ventures to betray,
And filch the lady's heart away? —Butler, Hudibras.
The phumio was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods.—Sir E. L'Estrange.
Pain would they filch that little food away,
While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey.
—Dryden.

Filcher, s. One who filches.

This filcher of affections.—Bosworth and Fletcher, Love's Pilgrimage.

Filching, part. adj. Stealing in a petty clandestine way.

He could discern crows like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drones.—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy.

Filching, verbal n. Act of one who filches; thing filched; dishonest perquisite.

By what perished moneys of value; by what reserved filchings from marketing; ... by what false charges for brazen narred and earthenware broken, had thus been cumbered to make these serve thee for thy sake!—Sir E. L'Estrange, Last Days of Pompeii, b. iv. ch. ii.

Fila, s. [from Fr. file; Lat. filum.]

1. Thread. Rare.

But let me resume the file of my narration, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted.—Sir H. Wotton.

2. Line or wire on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the fila.—Bacon.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse these, and then rank them into several files, according to the subject-matters.—Id.

The apothecary's train is wholly blind;
From fila a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make.

—Dryden.

3. Catalogue; roll; series.

Our present numbers grow upon the fila
To live-and-twenty thousand men of choice.
—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. l. 3.

Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
—Id., Macbeth, iii. 1.
These goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have plow'd like platted Mars, now bend, now turn Upon a tawdry front.

—Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, l. 1.
So mynre, on he lod his radiant fila,
Dazzling the moon. —Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 797.

Fila, v. a. [Fr. filer.] String upon a thread or wire: (whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge).

Thou dost file
One lie upon another well.
—Sir E. Renshaw, Translation of Guarini's Pastor Fido, p. 174.

From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports.—Arbuthnot and Pope, Martinus Scribbler.

Fila, v. n.

1. March in a file, not abreast, but one behind another: (with off).

All ran down without order or ceremony, till we drew up in good order, and filed off. —Tatler.

Did all the grower atoms at the call
Of chance file off to form the pondrous ball,
And undetermined into order fall?

—Sir K. Blackmore, Creation.

2. Rank with; be strung, as it were, upon the same thread or wire.

These, I take it,
Although she love you well, ... be examin'd,
Must needs, and reason for it, be examin'd,
And by her modesty; and fear'd too light too,
To file with her affections; You have lost her.

—Bosworth and Fletcher, Monsieur Thomas.

Fila, s. [from A.S. feol, filian = rub.]

1. Instrument for rasping metals.

A fila for the mattocks and for the coulters.—1 Samuel, xlii. 21.
The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,
Fila in their hands and hammers at their side.

—Dryden.
The rough or coarse-toothed fila, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging; the bastard-toothed fila is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough fila made; the fine-toothed fila is to take out the cuts or file-strokes, the bastard fila made; and the smooth fila is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the due fila made.—Maron.

2. Style; manner of writing. Rare, Latinism (from limas labor = labour of the file), implying correctness and smooth or polished work, as that of metal carefully filed.

And, were it not ill fitting for this file
To sing of hills and woods 'mongst wars and knights,
I would abuse the sterner sense of my stile.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, vii. c. 37.

3. Hard or wary person: (as, 'a cunning old file'). Slang.

File. v. a. [from file, the instrument.]

1. Rasp down; curtail.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less.—Hunter, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The eminent court . . . gives their tongues
Sweetness of language; makes them apt to please;
Files off all rudeness, and unweil behaviour.

Braumont and Fletcher, Noble Gentleman.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a bluntness by filing or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth.—Ray.

2. Smooth; polish.

For that old man of pleasing words had store,
And well could file his tongue as smooth as glass.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, i. l. 35.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, and his eye ambitious.—Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, v. 1.

His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd.
Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia.

File. v. a. Defile.

The corn is theirs, let others thresh,
Their hands they may not file.

Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, July.

She lightly kept out of her fil'd bed.

Id., Faerie Queene, iii. l. 62.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,
For them the gracious Duinian have I murder'd.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 1.

His words deeply fashion'd,
All fil'd and mangled.

Chapman, Translation of Homer's Iliad.

Filed. part. adj. Worked by the file. In the following extract polished. See File, s. 2.

There hath flourish'd in England so fine and fil'd phrases, and so good and pleasant poets, as may counterpoise the dolours of Virgil, Ovid, &c.—Gosse, Epitaphs, Epitaphs, &c., pref., 1863.

Fished. s. Fish so called, of the genus Bullia.

The first and strongest spine of the back in this fish is studded up the front with numerous small projections, which, under the microscope, have the appearance of so many points of enamel or pearl arising from the surface of the bone, giving a rough denticulated appearance; and hence the name of file-fish.—Tarrell, British Fishes.

Filicet. s. [corrupted from Fr. feuille morte = dead leaf.] Brown or yellow-brown colour; Poliomort. Obsolete.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filicet, turned up with red.—Swift, Advice to a Servant.

Spelt with ph.

One of them was blue, another yellow, and a third filicet, the fourth was a pink colour, and the fifth of a pale green. Addison.

Filial. adj. [Lat. filius = son.]

1. Pertaining to, having the character of, or befitting, a son.

My mischievous preceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit.—Sir J. Sidney.

He griev'd he wept, the slight air image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought.

Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

Where the old rattle her good influence sheds,
Springs of like leaf erect their filial heads;
And when the parent rose decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds arise.

Prior.

Filially. adj. In a filial manner; after the manner of a son.

There is no servant of God but serves filially.—Bishop Hall, Holy Pascegricks. (Ord. M.)

Filiation. s. Relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation grows were eternal.—Sir M. Hale, Origination of Mankind.

Among all the sons of God, there is none like to that One Son of God. And if there be so great a disparity in the filiation, we must make as great a difference in the correspondent relation.—Bishop Pearson, On the Creed, art. l.

Filiety. s. Sonship.

It is obvious, in fact, that if we take any two correlative names, father and son, for instance, although the objects denoted by the names are different, they both, in a certain sense, connote the same thing. They cannot, indeed, be said to connote the same attribute: to be a father is not the same thing as to be a son. But when we call one man a father, another his son, what we mean to affirm is a set of facts, which are exactly the same in both cases. To predicate of A that he is the father of B, and of B that he is the son of A, is to assert one and the same fact in different words. The two propositions are exactly equivalent: neither of them asserts more or asserts less than the other. The paternity of A and the filicity of B are not two facts, but two modes of expressing the same fact. That fact, when analysed, consists of a series of physical events or phenomena, in which both A and B are parties concerned, and from which they both derive names. What those names really connote, is this series of events: that is the meaning, and the whole meaning, which either of them is intended to convey. The series of events may be said to constitute the relation; the schoolmen called it the foundation of the relation, fundamentum relationis.—J. S. Mill, System of Logic, p. 45.

Filigree. s. [see last extract under next entry.] Older and more correct form of Filigree.

A curious filigree handkerchief, and two fair filigree plates brought out of Spain.—Dr. Brown, Travels, p. 147: 1695.

Adam and Eve in single-work, without filigree, upon canvas, curiously wrought with her ladyship's own hand; several filigree curiosities.—Tatler, no. 245.

Filigree. s. Ornamental work so called: (often used adjectivally). See preceding entry and last extract.

The churches of our ancestors shoot up into spires, towers, pinnacles, and filigree work.—Swinsburne, Travels through Spain, let. 44.

Filigree is . . . interwisted fine wire, used for ornamental gold and silver trinkets. The wire is seldom drawn round, but generally flat or angular; and soldered by gold or silver solder with borax and the blowpipe. The Italian word Filigree is compounded of filum and grana, or granular network; because the Italians, who first introduced this style of work, placed small beads upon it.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Filing. verbal abs. Act of one who files; small particle of that which is filed resulting therefrom: (often plural, as 'iron' or 'steel filings').

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copper.—Sir T. Browne.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors.—Felton, Dissertation on reading the Classics.

It was enacted that every person who informed against a clipper should be entitled to a reward of forty pounds; that every clipper who informed against two clippers should be entitled to a pardon; and that whoever should be found in possession of silver filings or parings should be burned in the cheek with a red-hot iron.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. 221.

Fill. v. a. [A.S. fyllan.]

1. Make full.

Jesus saith unto them, Fill the waterpots with water, and they filled them up to the brim.—John, ii. 7.

I am who fill

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 165.

The celestial quire, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld;
Birth-day of heav'n and earth; with joy and shout
The hollow universal orb they fill'd. Ibid. vii. 254.

He fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
And lakes and running streams the waters fill. Ibid. vii. 306.

2. Glut; surfeit; satisfy; content.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.—
Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, i. 1.

He with his courtier'd Eve
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse to hear.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 50.

Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and super-abundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings.—Chayne, Philosophical Principles of Natural Religion.

With out. Enlarge by extension from within.

I only speak of him

Whom pomp and greatness sits so loose about,
That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

With up.

a. Make full.

Hope leaps from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

b. Supply.

When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find must of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the underwork of the nation.—Addison, Present State of the War.

c. Occupy by bulk.

There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite.—Blackop Burnet.

d. Engage; employ.

Is it far you ride—

As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
Twixt this and supper. Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 1.

When applied to a supply of drink, the name of the vessel, cup, glass, goblet, or the like, is often understood, in which case the verb seems to be neuter.

In the cup which she hath fill'd, fill to her double.
—Revelation, xviii. 6.

We fill to the general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 4.

Fill up. Grow full.

Neither the Palm Meats nor the Fuzine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shallower.—Woodward.

Fill. s. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.

Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
That eye thereof her babes might suck their fill.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,
Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war.

Fairfax.

When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock,
And waters flowed out to your fill?—Isaiah, l. 50.

Fill. s. [? Thill.] Place between the shafts of a carriage.

This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Filler. s. One who, or that which, fills.

1. Anything that fills up room without use.
'Tis a mere filler, to stop a vacancy in the lecturer, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil.—Dryden, Translation of Virgil, dedication.
A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and ineffectual conceits, and of needless fillers up to the work.—Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They have six diggers to four fillers, so as to keep the fillers always at work.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. One who stores abundantly.

Brave soldier, yield; thou stock of arms and honour,
Thou filler of the world with fame and glory.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Bonduca.

Filler. s. [Fr. filet.]

1. Band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a filler to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes hides her hairs.

Dryden, Virgil's Æneid.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a filler binds her hair.

Pope, Windsor Forest.

2. Fleecy part of the thigh of the larger animals as prepared for the table.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd;

These morsels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillers for the feast.

Dryden, Translation of the First Book of Homer's Iliad.

3. Meat rolled together; and tied round.

Filler of a feunny make,
In the cauldron boil and bake.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1.

The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species.

Swift.

4. In Architecture. See last extract.

Pillars and their fillers of silver.—Isaiah, xxvii. 10.

Filler [is] a small flat face or band, used principally between mouldings to separate them from each other in classical architecture; it is also employed in Gothic architecture, and in the early English and decorated styles it is frequently worked upon larger mouldings and shafts.—Glossary of Architecture.

Fillet. v. a. Bind or fit with a fillet or bandage.

He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapters and filleted them.—Ezekiel, xxviii. 23.

Fillets. s. [Scotch Gaelic, filleadh-beg, i. e. filleadh and beg—little.] Literally, little plaid; kilt; or kind of petticoat reaching only to the knees, worn by the Scotch Highlanders.

The fillets, or lower garment, is still very common, and the honnet almost universal.—Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland.

Filling. part. adj. Causing fullness or satiety.

Things that are sweet and fat are more filling, and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Filling. verbal abs. Act of that which fills; process by which anything is filled.

1. Supply.

And why that spiteful character given to all crowds? mere fillings of his own, without warrant from his original.—Bentley, Philonthorus Lepidensis, § 24.

2. Act of growing full.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization.—Sharp, Surgery.

Filip. v. a. Strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.

If I do, filip me with a three-man hockie.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. 1. 2.

Then let the pobbles on the hungry beach
Filip the stars; then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun.

Id., Coriolanus, v. 3.

We see, that if you filip a lute-string, it sheweth double or treble.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

[Filip, says Skinner, is a word formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered. This is Dr. Johnson's opinion; but the word may be a corruption of the Latin alapa, a blow, a stroke.—Todd.]

Filip. s. Jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.

Yes, by my faith, master Bayley, there was a knave not fair.

Who caught one good philip on the brow with a dove-larre.

Gammer Gurton's Needle, act v. (Ord MS.)

Man's life is as a glass, and a filip may crack it.—Tragedy of Soliman and Perseda, 1699.

A gentleman,

If I, that so much love him, may commend him,

Of free and virtuous parts; and one, if foul play

Should fall upon us, for which fear I brought him,

Will not fly back for filips.

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances.

The dead epicure cannot but subscribe to the truth of Sardanapalus's tomb, which I find stored to have a hand in a posture of filipping, reaching out of the tomb; and the motto, (Omnia nec tanti), all is not worth a filip.—Whitlock, Observations on the present Manners of the English, p. 540: 1684.

Filly. s. [Fr. filie—daughter.]

1. Young mare: (opposed to a colt or young horse).

A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall.—Sir J. Suckling.

Used adjectively.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,
Neighing in harmony of a filly fool.

Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, ii. 1.

2. Wanton girl; flirt.

A skittish filly will be your fortune, Welford.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Scornful Lady.

I am joined in wedlock, for my sin, to one of those filles who are described in the old poet.—Adison, Spectator.

Film. s. [A.S. filma] Thin pellicle or skin.

While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle.—Bacon.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight
Had bred.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 412.

A stone is held up by the film of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it.—Grew, Observations on the Urinary System.

There is not one individual so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of sight, fancy, or coition, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies.—Bentley, Sermons.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day.

Pope, Messiah.

Film. v. a. Cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
While rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects inward.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 4.

It is thine ignorant and gross infidelity that hath film'd up thine eyes, that thou canst discern no spiritual object.—Bishop Hall, Sermons, p. 251.

Fimy. adj. Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

He showed me a little excrescence that he hath beginning upon the uttermost ball of his eye, a fimy matter, like the rudiment of a pin and web as they call it.—Sir H. Wotton, Esquisse Wottoniana, p. 441: 1624.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose fimy cord should bind the struggling fly.

Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toil
Flap fimy pinions off, to extricate

Their feet in liquid shackles bound, till death
Receives them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain.

Philips.

Loose to the winds their airy garments flow,
Thin fimy textures of the fimy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes.

Pope.

Filter. s. Percolator; strainer.

That the water, passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the salting particles will pass through a tenfold filter.

—Ray, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Filtration is a process purely mechanical for separating a liquid from the undissolved particles floating in it, which liquid may be either the useful part, as in the vegetable infusions, or of no use, as the washings of mineral precipitates. The filtering substance may consist of any porous matter, . . . as porous earthenware, window paper, cloth of many kinds, and sand. . . . Filter papers are first cut square, and then folded twice diagonally into the shape of a corner, having the angular parts cut off. . . . A filter covered with the sediment is most conveniently washed by spouting water upon it with a little syringe. . . . In general, relatively to the application of pressure to filters, it may be remarked that it cannot be pushed very far without the chance of deranging the apparatus or rendering the liquor muddy. The enlargement of the surface is generally speaking, the safest and most efficacious plan of increasing the rapidity of the filtration, especially for liquids of a glutinous nature. This expedient is well illustrated in the crossed bag filter now in use in most of the sugar refineries of London.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Filter. v. a. [L. lat. filtrare.] Strain through a filter.

Mixte this liquor with fair water, filter it through a paper, and so evaporate it.—Grew, Museum.

Filter. v. n. Percolate as through a filter.

Unless the soil is unusually stiff, the water will filter through.—London, Cyclopaedia of Agriculture.

Filth. s. [A.S. filð, from the root of foul.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; anything that soils or fouls.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile men vile;
Filth in favour but themselves.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 2.

Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth.

Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

How perfect then is man? From head to foot
Drell'd with filth, and rotten at the root.

Sandys.

Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly dings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and reverence,
To spare the folks that give him peace.

Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to plety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights.—Archbishop Tillotson, Sermons.

Filthy. adv. In a filthy manner; foully; grossly.

If she do not paint, she will look so filthy, thou canst not love her!—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 272.

It stuck filthily in the camel's stomach that bull, bear, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless.—Sir R. L. Estrenge.

Filthiness. s. Attribute suggested by Filthy.

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others' filthiness.—Sir P. Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness polluted this same gentle soil long time.

That their own mother loath'd their baseness,
And gave alior her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable.—South, Sermons.

Filthy. adj.

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 1.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all glories are not proper subjects for an epic poem of a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them.—Dryden, Translation of La Fontaine's Art of Painting.

Filtrate. v. a. Strain; percolate; filter.

The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and these ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Filtration. s. Method by which liquors are procured fine and clear.

We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and evaporation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible.—Boyle.

Fimble. s. [see last extract.] Male hemp.

Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own, In May a good housewife will see it be sown;

And afterwards trim it, to serve at her need,
The fimble to spin and the carle for her seed.

Twiss, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

The light summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

[Fimble, German femel, femel-hauf, fimel, the male plants of hemp which are soonest ripe, and have to be picked out by hand from among the female, left to ripen their seed. The larger and stronger growth of the seed-bearing plants probably led to their being called in England carle, or male-hemp, and this perhaps has led to the supposition that fimble is a corruption of female, as the word is commonly explained. The real signification is the act of picking out the early ripe plants, which is termed fimble in German, and femeler in the North of France, while the plants so picked out are called fimels, (filcart.) The Dutch fimelen, or femelen, is applied to any light action with the fingers, to tease wool, flax, or hemp, to trifles, genitalia digitis, frustra facitare rem frivolam. Femel, cannabii brevior, discoloris, convulsa, humm carptum, vulsum. (Kilian.) The verb is a diminutive of Frisian fimpele, to grasp at anything with the hands (Dutten); Swedish fimla, to grope. To fimble, to touch lightly and frequently with the ends of the fingers. (Forby.) Old Norse fimla, Provincial Danish fimle, to touch with the fingers, to handle.—Widdowood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Fimbriate. v. a. [Lat. fimbria.] Fringe; hem. Rare, except in Herakly, where in its participial or adjectival form it means bordered, and in Botany, where it means fringed. (In the latter the purely adjectival form fimbriate is the commoner.)

Besides the divers tricking or dressing (heraldic cresses); as piercing, voiding, fimbriating, &c. inasmuch that cresses alone, as they are variously disguised, are enough to distinguish all the several families of gentlemen in England.—Fuller, History of the Holy War, p. 271.

Fim. s. [A.S.] Part of a fish by which it balances its body, and moves in the water; (in Ichthyology) organ of locomotion, extremity, or limb.

He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hows down oaks with rudder.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 1.

Thus at half-ebb a rolling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,
Rest on their fins awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wondrous way.

Dryden.

In most fish, besides the great fin—the tail—we find two pairs of fins upon the sides, two single fins upon the back, and one upon the belly, or rather between the belly and the tail. The balancing use of these organs is proved in this manner. Of the large-headed fish, if you cut off the pectoral fin, that is the pair which lies close behind the gills, the head falls prone to the bottom; if the right pectoral fin only be cut off, the fish leans to that side; if the ventral fin on the same side be cut away, then it loses its equilibrium entirely; if the dorsal and anal fins be cut off, the fish reels to the right and left; when the fish dies, that is, when the fin ceases to play, the body turns upwards. The use of the same parts for motion is seen in the following observation upon them when put into action. The pectoral, and more particularly the ventral fin, serve to raise and depress the fish; when the fish desires to have a retrograde motion, a stroke forward with the pectoral fin effectively produces it; if the fish desire to turn either way, a single blow with the tail the opposite way sends it round at once; if the tail strike both ways, the motion produced by the double lash is progreder, and enables the fish to dart forwards with an astonishing velocity. The result is not only in some cases the most rapid, but in all cases the most gentle, pliant, easy, animal motion with which we are acquainted. However, when the tail is cut off the fish loses all motion, and it gives itself up to where the water impels it. The rest of the fin, therefore, so far as respects motion, seem to be merely subsiding to this. In their mechanical use the anal fin may be reckoned the keel; the ventral fin outriggers; the pectoral fin the oars; and if there be any similitude between these parts of a boat and a fish, observe that it is the resemblance of imitation, but the likeness which arises from applying similar mechanical means to the same purpose. — Paley, Natural Theology.

943

All writers on animal mechanics have shown how admirably the whole form of the fish is adapted to the element in which it lives and moves. . . . The pectoral fin, those curled prototypes of the forelimbs of other Vertebrata, with the last segment, or hand, alone projecting freely from the trunk, . . . present a condition analogous to that of the embryonic limbs of the homologous members in the higher Vertebrata. . . . In the act of flexion, the fin slightly rotates and gives an oblique stroke to the water. . . . We find, moreover, as numerous and striking modifications of the pectoral fin, in adjustment to the peculiar habits of the species. In Finca, we do of the forelimbs in any of the higher classes. This fin may wield a formidable and special weapon of offence, as in many Silurid fishes. . . . The ventral fin or homologous of the hind-legs are still more rudimentary: still more embryonic, having in view the comparison with the stages of development in a land animal—than the pectoral fin; and their small proportional size reminds the homologist of the later appearance of the hind limbs, in the development of the land Vertebrata. . . . In most fishes the ventral fin merely combine with the pectoral fin in raising, and in preventing as outriggers the rolling of the body; but some very interesting modifications of the ventral fin, in relation to particular habits of certain species, may be noticed. In the Blennius, the Forked Hake, the Forked Beard, and some other fishes, the ventral fin are reduced to filamentary feelers. . . . In the large-headed thornie and juncular fishes, the loose suspension of these fin, and the absence of any connection with a sacral part of the vertebral column, permits their transference forwards, to aid the pectoral fin in raising the head. — Quoy, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy.

Finable. adj. Capable of being fined; admitting, liable to, or deserving, a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. — Bacon.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. — Sir J. Hayward.

If juryman, after sworn, eat and drink, . . . they are finable. — Zonlin, Law Dictionary (Orange), voce Jury.

Final. adj. [Lat. finalis, from finis = end.]

1. Ultimate; last.

And over them triumphant Death his dart shook; but delay'd to strike, though oft invoked With vows, as their chief good, and final hope. — Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 401.

2. Conclusive; decisive.

There be many examples where sea-fights have been final to the war. — Bacon.
Henry spent his reign in establishing himself, and had neither leisure nor opportunity to undertake the final conquest of Ireland. — Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

3. Mortal; destructive.

At last resolv'd to work his final smart,
He lifted up his hand, but back again did start. — Spenser, Faerie Queene.

4. Respecting the end or motive for which an effect is produced: (as opposed to the efficient or physical cause by which it was immediately preceded). See Teleology.

Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be rescued from life, observing them. — Hucker, Ecclesiastical Policy.

By its gravity air raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines, and performs all those fin's which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final; namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuum. — Ray.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. — Collier, Essay on Thought.

Finale. s. [Ital.] End: (generally applied with the notion of grandeur, show, or magnificence, to the conclusion of anything, especially a theatrical representation in which the grand tableau in a scenic, or a great crash of music in a musical, entertainment forms the conclusion).

It was arranged that the two horsemen should first occupy the arena: . . . that Glancus and the lion should next perform their part in the bloody spectacle; and the tiger and the Nemean be the grand finale. — Sir R. L. Butler, Last Days of Pompeii, b. v. ch. ii.

Finality. s. Final character; completeness: (often, especially in modern politics, used subjectively, indicating a man who, having made certain concessions, considers that he has done everything needed).

He was a middle-class Whig, had faithfully supported that party in his native town during the days they wandered in the wilderness, and had well earned his share of the milk and honey when they vanquished the promised land. In the spring-tide of liberalism, when the world was not analytical of free opinions, and odious distinctions were not drawn between finality men and progressive reformers, Mr. Wallinger had been the popular leader of a powerful body of his fellow-citizens, who had returned him to the first reform parliament, and where, in spite of many a waning reputation, he had contrived to remain. — Disraeli the younger, Coningsby.

Finally. adv. In a final manner.

1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.

May chance to number thee with those,
Whom patience finally must crown.
— Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1201.

2. Completely; without recovery.

Not any house of noble English in Ireland was utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only. — Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.
Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no men's sins to answer for but their own. — South, Sermons.

Finances. s. Revenue; income; profit.

This sort of finance hath been increased. — Bacon.
The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain; as be the excheats and forfeitures. — Id.
His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their piracy, though he practised the same trade when he was stratagem in his finances at the siege of Byzantium. — Arbuthnot.
I hope, however, he will not rely too much on the fertility of Lord North's genius for finance. — Junius, Letters, l.

With the accent on the second syllable; though Dr. Johnson places it on the first. It may be curious to observe, that we formerly used the word finance in the sense of an end; and that, in the enlarged edition of Bullock, 1636, it has found a place, but it had then been long obsolete. — Tiedt.
[In the forensic language of the middle ages the Latin finis was specially applied to the termination of a suit, and finalis dies, finalis judicium, finalis concordia, were respectively the day of trial, the judicial decision, or the agreement by which the suit was terminated. Finis by itself is frequently used for the settlement of a claim by composition or agreement, as by Matthew Paris in the life of Henry III. 'Glancus capitis fuit, et tacto facto finis, interpositis tunc et juramentis et christi, cunctis dominis.' 'Quod illi cunctis tunc et nullum tunc acceptum concilium intercessit ut si quo modo possent sedum cum Imperator componerent, dicerent. Nullum ulterius ab eo finis habebimus (we shall get no further terms from him), and junctus Romanis omnes nos de partibus illis expellet.' (Ducange). The clergy and knights who held in capite having been summoned to London to pass over with the king on military duty into France, it was announced, 'quod archiepiscopus, &c., servitium domini regi debentes possent facere finem pro eodem (might compound for it) si vellet.' (Bart. Cotton, p. 324.) It was then transferred to the money paid as the price of settlement, and Latin finare, finire, French finer, were used in the sense of paying an exaction or composition. 'Quam vero plagas aut fortis—quo evenirent—sicut supra diximus est finantur,' shall be compounded for, (Ducange). 'Laudis qu'il ne le laisserait point aller jusqu'à ce qu'il eût finé sa lux, et force lui fut finer sa chevalerie & eue avec lui.' (Joinville). Hence fin in English and the derivative finance in French were used in the sense of an exaction or compulsory payment. Monstrelet informs us that Jacques Coeur was made prisoner, 'pour ce qu'il eût extorqué indeument plusieurs grands finances sur le pays du Roi, tant en Languedoc, Languedouy, comme ailleurs.'

The name of finance was subsequently extended to all monies levied on the people for the behoof of the royal treasure or revenue. — Wagwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Financial. adj. Relating to, or connected with, finance.

Europe was filled with astonishment, when they saw England borrow in one year twelve millions. It was thought, and very justly, no small proof of national strength and financial skill, to find a fund for the payment of the interest upon this sum. — Burke, Observations on the present State of the Nation: 1790.

Goldsmith, whom he did not love, and could not control, but whose financial skill had been greatly misused during the summer, was brought back to the Treasury, and made First Comptroller. . . . Letcher, who was the Lord President's own man, fin into the board, but no longer presided there. — Macaulay, History of England, ch. xvi.

Financier. s. One who investigates questions, suggests measures, or directs or administers details, of Finance.

I therefore, whom only love and duty to your majesty and your royal line hath made a financier, do intend to prevent unto your majesty a perfect box of your coin, like a perspective glass to draw your estate nearer to your sight. — Bacon, To King James I, 2 Jan. 1618, Coblet, p. 8.

It will know that more names exercise a mighty influence on the public mind; that the most perfect trimmings which a legislator could construct would be unpopular if it were called the Star Chamber; that the most judicious tax which a financier could devise would excite murmurs if it were called the Shipmoney; and that the words Standing Army then had to English ears a sound as unpleasant as either Shipmoney or Star Chamber. — Macaulay, History of England, ch. xxiii.

Finch. s. [A.S. finc.] Bird so called, chiefly of the genus Fringilla: (a generic, rather than a specific, name when standing alone; so much so that it is difficult to say to what bird the simple name applies. Hence, when its signification is definite and undoubted, it is the second element in a compound, as in bramblefinch, bullfinch, chaffinch, goldfinch, greenfinch, hawfinch).

The finch, the sparrow, and the lark,
The plain-song cuckoo gray,
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And darts not answer lay.
— Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, iii. 1, song.

They sang as hylthe as finches sing,
Which flutter loose on golden wing,
And frolic where they list;
Strangers to liberty, 'tis true,
But that delight they never knew,
And, therefore, never missed. — Cowper.

Find. v. a. (pret. and past part. found.) [A.S. findan.]

1. Obtain by searching or seeking.

In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight,
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by yent'ring both,
I oft found both. — Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 1.

2. Come to; attain.

The sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth; there first receiv'd
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. — Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 94.

3. Discover; detect.

The fox that first this cause of grief did find,
Gave first thus plain his case with words unkind.
— Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.
Physicians

With sharpen'd sight some remedies may find. — Dryden.

Thy maid! ah! doubt no nobler theme,
Whereon thy doubts to place. — Cowley.

4. Reach.

They are glad when they can find the grave. — Job, iii. 22.

5. Supply; furnish: (as, 'He finds me in money and in victuals').

A war with Spain is like to be lucrative, if we go roundly on at first; the war in continuance will find itself. — Bacon.

He that shall marry thee, had better spend the poor remainder of his days in a dung-harpe, for two-pence a week, and find himself. — Boswell and Fletcher, Woman-Hater.

6. In Law.

To find a bill, there must at least twelve of the [grand] jury agree. — Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England.

Find in one's heart. Be either bold enough or hard-hearted enough to do or dare a thing; make up one's mind to a thing. Harden one's heart, as in 'Harden your heart and go in for it,' applied to one who hesitates, is a newer form with the same meaning. In the extract from Spenser (of which the note is a paraphrase) the substantive is probably omitted.

In the way to drown herself she find.
Rather than of that tyrant to be caught.

Spenser, Marie Queen, iii. 7, 20.
She found in her heart, she chime rather to drown herself than to be caught of that tyrant.—Upton, Notes on Spenser.

Find one's self. Fare with regard to ease or pain, health or sickness: (generally as a question with how, as 'How do you find yourself?') In French, 'Comment vous portez-vous?'—how do you bear yourself? More closely in German and Danish, 'Wie befinden Sie sich?' and 'Hvi befinde De dem?').

Pray, sir, how d'you find yourself? says the doctor.
—Sir R. L. Rattray.

Find out. Discover; detect; invent. Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?—Job, xl. 7.

A man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and to find out every device which shall be put to him.—2 Chronicles, ii. 14.

There are agents in nature able to make the particles of bodies stick together by very strong attractions, and it is the business of experimental philosophy to find them out.—Sir I. Newton.

The principal part of painting is to find out and thoroughly to understand what nature has made most beautiful. Dryden.

What hinders then, but that thou find her out, And hurry her away by mimic force? Addison, Cato.

Out is added often without any other use than to add some force or emphasis to the verb.

While she proudly march'd about, Greater conquests to find out,
She beat out Susan by the foot. Cowley.

It is agreeable to compare the face of a great man with the character, and to try if we can find out in his looks and features either the haughty, cruel, or merciful temper.—Addison.

He was afraid of being insulted with Greek, for which reason he desired a friend to find him out a clergyman rather of plain sense than much learning. Id., Spectator.

Out omitted.

When first found in a lie, talk to him of it as a strange monstrous matter, and so shame him out of it.—Locke, Thoughts on Education.

Find, s. Discovery; thing found: (specially applied, in Numismatology, to a collection of coins found in any particular place).

Specimens were among the find of coins at High Wycombe in 1827.—Evans, Coins of the ancient Britons, p. 78.

By far the most important find was that at Nunney, near Frome.—Ibid., p. 144.

Finder, s. One who finds.

1. Detector: (second element in a compound, e.g. witch-finder).

We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iii. 4.

2. Specially. See extract.

Finders, mentioned in several ancient statutes, seem to be the same with those which we now term searchers, who are employed for the discovery of goods imported or exported without paying custom.—Toulmin, Law Dictionary. (Gruenger.)

Findfault, s. Censurer; enviler: (see Preface for observations on this combination (an active verb with a substantive following it) as a compound, as well as for a notice of words like Findfaulting). Rare.

We are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our place, upon the mouth of all findfaults.—Shakespeare, Henry V., v. 2. Radicals, grangers, persecutors, findfaults.—Translations of Theocritus, p. 48: 1828.

Findfaulting, adj. Cavilling; captious.

She doth not set business back by unequal brawling and findfaulting quarrels.—Wallace, Observations on the present Manners of the English, p. 347: 1654.

Finding, verbal abs. Act of one who finds; process by which anything is found.

1. Discovery.

Go you the next way with your findings.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iii. 3.

With out.

The finding out of parables is a wearisome labour of the mind.—Reverendistene, xiii. 26.

2. In Law. Return made by the jury to the bill of indictment.

Where there are two distinct counts, viz. one for a riot and the other for an assault, and the grand jury find a true bill as to the assault, but condemn ignorant as to the riot, this finding bars the indictment as to the count panel just as if there had been originally only that one count.—Toulmin, Law Dictionary. (Gruenger.)

Findy, adj. [A.S. findig, applied to corn.] Plump; weighty; firm; solid. Rare, obsolete, or provincial.

A cold May and a windy.
Makes the barn fat and findy.
means that it stores the barn with plump and firm grain.—Proverb.

Fine, adj. [Fr. fin.]

1. Not coarse.

He was array'd in purple and fine linen.—Luke, xvi. 19.
Not any skill'd in loops of fine-ring fine,
With this so curious network might compare. Spenser.

2. Refined; pure; free from dross.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold.—Ezra, viii. 27.

3. Subtile; thin.

This is a pleasant title...
The eye subtil and fine. Tragedy of Damon and Pythias.

When the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object in the grosser things show greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium and the object in the finer.—Bacon.

4. Minutely complex.

In substance he promised himself money, honour, friends, and peace in the end; but these things were too fine to be fortunate and succeed in all parts.—Bacon.

Whether the scheme has not been pursued so far as to draw it into practice, or whether it be too fine to be capable of it, I will not determine.—Sir W. Temple.

5. Keen; thin; smoothly sharp.

Great affairs are commonly too rough and stubborn to be wrought upon by the finer edges or points of wit.—Bacon.

6. Clear; pellucid; transparent: (as, 'the wine is fine').

Let the wine without mixture or stum be all fine,
Or call up the master. B. Jonson.

7. Artful; dexterous.

The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes' affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, than solid and grounded courses to keep them aloof.—Bacon.

8. Fraudulent; sly; knavishly subtle.

Through his fine handling, and his cleanly play,
He all those royal signs had stol'n away. Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Thou art too fine in thy evidence; therefore, stand aside.—Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, v. 3.

9. Elegant; beautiful in thought or language.

To call the trumpet by the name of the metal was fine.—Dryden.

10. Beautiful with dignity: (applied to the person).

Guido has been rather too lavish in bestowing this beauty upon almost all his fine women.—Spence.

11. Accomplished; elegant of manners.

He was not only the finest gentleman of his time, but one of the finest scholars.—Fellon, Dissertation on reading the Classics.

12. Showy; splendid.

It is with a fine genius as with a fine fashion; all those are displeased at it who are not able to follow it.—Pope.

The satirical part of mankind will needs believe, that it is not impossible to be very fine and very silly.—Swift.

13. Ironically: (as in 'fine fellow').

That man know, Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master drunk, that ever governed frenzy.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 1.

They taught us, indeed, to cloath, to dwell in houses.

To find, to sleep on down, to be profuse;
A fine exchange for liberty. Philips, Briton.

14. Taper; slender.

Like a crane, his neck was long and fine.

Spenser, Marie Queen, i. 4, 21.
They gather'd flowers to fill their baskets,
And with fine fingers crop'd full fragrant flowers.
The tender stalks. Id., Prothalamion.

No looser shall the ladies apply lace!
From thy full bosom to thy slender waist
That air and harmony of shape express,
Fine by degrees and beautifully less. Prior.

Fine, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. Refine; purify.

There is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold,
where they fine it.—Job, xxviii. 1.

2. Embellish; decorate; make fine. Obsolete.

Hugh Capet also, who usurp'd the crown,
To star his title with some shows of truth,
Convey'd himself as heir to the lady Lincare.
Shakespeare, Henry V. i. 2.

3. Make less coarse.

It fines the grass, but makes it short, though thick.
—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Fine, s. [Lat. finis.]

1. End; conclusion: (now seldom used except adverbially, in fine = to conclude, to sum up all, to tell all at once).

In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what it pleased God, the powers of his spirit depending of her. Sir P. Sidney.

His resolution, in fine, is, that in the church a number of things are strictly observed, whereof no law of scripture maketh mention one way or other. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece. Dryden.

2. Legal fiction by which certain suits are ended. From the payment herein implied come the meanings under the next head.

The law on this subject... is... chiefly implicated with that of recovery... A fine... is a solemn amicable agreement or composition of a suit (whether that suit be real or fictitious) made between the defendant and tenant, with the consent of the judges; and enrolled among the records of the court where the suit was commenced; by which agreement freehold property may be transferred, settled, and limited. The most distinguishable properties of fin are, 1. the extinguishment of dormant titles;... 2. barring the issue in tail immediately;... 3. limiting fees to covert. These constitute the peculiar qualities on account of which a fine is most usually, if not always, resorted to, as one of the most valuable of the common measures of the realm; being now, in fact, a fictitious proceeding to transfer or secure real property by a mode more efficacious than ordinary conveyances.—Toulmin, Law Dictionary. (Gruenger.)

3. Mulet; pecuniary punishment; penalty; forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty.

Ev'n this [il] night your breathing shall expire, Paying the fine of rated treachery. Shakespeare, King John, v. 4.

The spirit of wantonness is sure servant out of him; if the devil have him not in de-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, in the way of waste, attempt us again. Id., Merry Wives of Windsor, iv. 2.

The killing of an Irishman was not punished by our law, as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an irkfine. Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

Besides fin set upon plays, games, balls, and feasting, they have many customs which contribute to their simplicity.—Addison.

How vain that second life in others breath,
The estate which with inherit after death I
Ease, health, and life for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fin! Pope.
(See also last extract under Fine v. a.)

Fine, v. a. (Ylu a Legal sense). End. Rare.

Time's office is to fine the hate of foes,
To rat up error by opinion bred. Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.
(Sarnes by li & w.)

Fine, v. a. [from the substantive.] Punish with pecuniary penalty.

To fine men one third of their fortune, without any crime committed, seems very hard.—Locke.

Fine, v. n. Pay a fine.

What poet ever fin'd for sheriff? or who
By rhymes and verse did ever lord mayor grow? Oldham.

The kings of France indeed claimed the prerogative of forbidding the marriage of their vassal's daughters to such persons as they thought unfriendly or dangerous to themselves; but I am not aware that they ever compelled them to marry, much less that they turned this attribute of sovereignty into a means of revenue. But in England, women, and even men, simply as tenants in chief, and not as vassals, and to the crown for leave to marry whom they would, or not to be compelled to marry any other. Towns not only fined for original grants of franchises, but for repeated confirmations. The Jews paid exorbitant sums for every common right of mankind, for protection, for justice. In return, they were sustained against their Christian debtors in demands of money, which superaddition and tyranny rendered enormous. Men fined for the king's good will; or that he would remit his anger; or to have his mediation with their adversaries. Many fined even, as they were, imposed in sport, if we look to the cause; though their extent, and the solemnity with which they were recorded, prove the honour to have been differently relished by the two parties. Thus the lordship of Winchester paid a tun of good wine for not reminding the king (John) to give a gristle to the countess of Albemarle; and Robert de Vaux five best palfrays that the same king might hold his peace about Henry II's wife. Another paid four marks for leave to cut (prolixia comendandi). But of all the alonms which deformed the Anglo-Norman government, none was so flagitious as the sale of judicial redress. The king, we are often told, is the fountain of justice; but in those ages it was one which gold alone could unseal. Men fined to have right done them; to sue in a certain court; to implead a certain person; to have restitution of land which they had recovered at law. From the side of that justice which every citizen has a right to demand, it was an easy transition to withhold or deny it. Fines were received for the king's help against the adverse suitor; that is, for perversion of justice, or for delay. Sometimes they were paid by opposite parties, and of course for opposite ends. These were called counter-fines; but money was sometimes, or, as Lord Lyttelton thinks, invariably, returned to the unrescued suitor. Hutton, Vice of the State of Europe during the middle ages, ch. viii. p. 2.

Finedraw. v. n. Sew up a rent with so much nicety that it is not perceived.

It was in my best part of kerseymeres, but, thanks to the skillful little seamstress, I got them finedrawn; and that with not any inconvenient delay.—Murray, Peter Simple.

Finely. adv. In a fine manner.

1. Beautifully; elegantly; more than justly. Speech finely framed delighted the ears of them that read the story.—Macpherson, xv. 33.

The walls are painted, and represent the labours of Hercules; many of them look very finely, though a great part of the work has been cracked.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

2. Keenly; sharply; with a thin edge or point.

Get you black lead, sharpened finely.—Pemham, On Drawing.

3. Not coarsely; not meanly; gaily.

He was alone, save that he had two persons of honour, on either hand one, finely attired in white.—Bacon, New Atlantis.

4. In small parts; subtly; not grossly.

Saltpetre was but grossly beaten: for it should not be finely powdered. Boyle.

5. Wretchedly; in such a manner as to deserve contemptuous notice. Ironical.

Let laws be made to obey, and not to be obeyed, and you will find that kingdom finely governed in a short time.—South, Sermons.

For him she loves:
She nam'd not me; that may be Torrimond,
Whom she has thrice in private seen this day:
Then I am finely caught in my own snare.

Dryden, Spanish Friar.

6. Subtly; artfully.

We may rate this one secret, as it was finely carried, at least, in present memory.—Sir H. Wotton, Parallels of the Duke of Buckingham and Karl of Essex.

We think by experience, that no authority is so full of regimen, and will so finely force obedience, as that which is seated in the conscience; and therefore Numa Pompilius made his laws, and imposed them with a force of religious solemnity.—Jeremy Taylor, Polemical Discourses. (Ord MS.)

7. Wholly. Rare; provincial.

My wife was finely well to day.—Diary of H. Earl of Clarendon, ii. 363: 1680.

Fineless. adj. [from fine = end.] Unbounded; endless.

Poor and content is rich, and rich enough;
But richer fineless is as poor as winder
To him that ever fears he shall be poor.

Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 3.

Fineness. s. (two n's.) Attribute suggested by Fine.

1. Elegance; beauty; delicacy.

Every thing was full of a choicest fineness, that if it wanted any thing in majesty, it supplied with increase in pleasure; and if at the first it struck not admiration, it ravished with delight.—Sir P. Sidney.

As the French language has more fineness and smoothness at this time, so it had more compass, spirit, and force in Montaigne's days.—Sir W. Temple.

The softness of her sex, and the fineness of her genius, conspire to give her a very distinguishing character.—Prior.

2. Show; splendour; gaiety of appearance.

The fineness of clothes destroys the ease; it often helps men to join, but can never rid them of any; the body may languish under the most splendid cover.—Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Piety.

3. Subtlety; artfulness; ingenuity.

It [the Directory] should have been compassed with so much artifice and fineness, that it might have been to all the world an argument of their learning and excellency of spirit, if not of the goodness and integrity of their religion and purposes.—Jeremy Taylor, Discourse on Extempore Prayer.

4. Purity; freedom from dross or base mixtures.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals; as whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height; but when they come to such a fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no further.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

5. Smoothness; not coarseness.

Needwood...

Of Britain's forests all...

For fineness of her turf surpassing.

Dryden, Polydion, xli.

Finer. s. [from fine, adj.] One who purifies metal.

Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer.—Proverbs, xlv. 4.

Finery. s. [from fine, adj.]

1. Show; splendour of appearance; gaiety of colours.

Dress up your houses and your images,

And put on all the city's finery.

To consecrate this day a festival. Southern.

The encephaly of a lady are sometimes apt to fall short in cultivating cleanliness and finery together.—Swift.

Don't chuse your place of study by the finery of the prospects, or the most various scenes of sensible things.—Watts.

They want to grow rich in their trades, and to maintain their families in some such figure and degree of finery, as a reasonable Christian life has no occasion for.—Lase.

2. Forge at iron-works.

The refinery of cast iron, or its conversion into bar-iron in England, ... is naturally divided into three distinct parts. The first, or the finery properly so speaking, is executed in peculiar furnaces called running-hot fires; the second operation completes the first, and is called puddling; and the third consists in welding several iron bars together, and working them under large hammers, and between rolls. The finery furnaces are composed of brickwork about nine feet square, rising but a little above the surface of the ground.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines, Iron.

Finespoken. adj. Using a number of fine phrases.

Be cautiously upon your guard against the infinite number of finessed and finespoken 'chevellers of industry'.—Lord Chesterfield.

Finespun. adj. Ingeniously contrived; artfully invented.

That mistress in the art of making

The finespun lies, that tells so dear

False words, false hopes. Sir E. Parnham, Transition of Quares's Pastor Fido, p. 63.

Have they not led us deep in the disclosure

Of finespun nature, exquisitely small?

Young, Night Thoughts, ix.

Men ... who did not amuse their readers with empty declarations and finespun theories of toleration, while they themselves were agitated with a furious iniquitable spirit.—Bishop Lowth, Letter to Warburton, p. 65.

Finesse. s. [Fr.] Artifice; stratagem.

A circumstance not much to be stood upon, in case it were not upon some finesse.—Sir J. Hayward.

Lo Yala! without the least finesse of art.

He got applause!—I wish he'd got his part.

Churchill, The Boarist.

Finfooted. adj. Having feet with membranes between the toes: (Webfooted the commoner word). See Palmiped.

It is described like fowl-ped, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmiped, or fish-footed, like weasels and geese, according to the method of nature in insatiable or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet.—Sir T. Browne.

Finger. s. [A.S.]

1. Flexible and divided extremity of the hand by which men catch and hold.

You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying
Upon her skinny lips. Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 3.

2. Breadth of a finger.

Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,
Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;
Or seven at most, when thickest is the beard.

Dryden, Juvenal's Satires.

One of these bows with a little arrow did pierce
Through a piece of steel three fingers thick.—Bishop Wilkins, Mathematical Magick.

3. Instrument of work.

Fool, that forgets her stubborn look

This softness from thy finger took.

Waller.

4. Touch in music: (especially applied to execution on the piano).

For the performance of the 'Gottin' up Stairs,' I have no other name but that it was a stammer. First, Miss Wirt, with great deliberation, played the original and beautiful melody, cutting it as it were out of the instrument, and fining off each note so loud, clear, and sharp, that I am sure Stripes must have heard it in the stable. 'What a finger!' cried Mrs. Ponto; and, indeed, it was a finger, as knotty as a turkey's drumstick, and spaying all over the piano.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xlv.

The confounded instrument never stops; when the young ladies are at their lessons, Miss Wirt hammers away at those stunning variations, and keeps her magnificent finger in exercise.—Ibid. ch. xlv.

Often used adjectively, or as the first element of a compound. With end, a common combination, we have probably two words rather than a true compound.

On taking up and contemplating an apple, there arises in consciousness, partly by presentation through the senses, and partly by representation through the memory, what seems to be one state; but what analysis proves to be an extremely complex group of many states, combined after a special manner. The greater number of these remain to be considered analytically in subsequent chapters; and can here be simply enumerated. Among them we have primarily, the existence in time of the contemplating subject and the contemplated object; we have ... that relative position of the two in space which we call proximity; that group of impressions on the finger-end, in virtue of which we conceive the object as not only having a position in space, but as occupying space, and a certain limited amount of space; that more complex group of tactile and motor impressions gained by moving the fingers about it, and constituting our notion of its tangible form; that supplementary group of impressions by which we recognize its surface as smooth; and that yet other group by which we form an idea of its hardness.—Herbert Spencer.

Have anything at one's finger-ends. Be thoroughly familiar, or off-hand, with anything.

Finger. v. a.

1. Touch lightly; toy with.

Go, get you gone, and let the papers lie;
You would be finering them to anger me.

Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, i. 2.

2. Touch unseasonably or thievishly.

Up from my cabin,

My sea-gown scarf'd about me, in the dark
Group'd I to find out them; had my desire;
Finger'd their packets; and, in due withdraw
To mine own room again; making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unseal
Their grand cambric. Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 2.

You would fain be finering

This old sin-offering of two hundred, Tantalus.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Tamer Tamed.

His ambition would needs be finering the sceptre, and hoisting him into his father's throne.—South, Sermons.

The children packed off (as it is supposed) to the nursery, but really only to the staircase, down which they slide during the dinner-time, wlaying the dishes as they come out, and finering the round bumps on the jellies, and the forced-meat balls in the soup.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xx.

3. Touch an instrument of music.

You're a fair viol, and your music the strings;
Who finer'd to make man his lawful music.
Would draw heaven down, and all the gods to hearken.

Shakespeare, Pericles, i. 1.

4. Handle without effort or violence.

Who touched me? with our Saviour, when the bloody-faced woman finer'd both the hem of his garment.—Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 93.

Johnny Ducks had his fiddle in his hand, holding it with the bow downwards like a bass viol, for he always played it in that way, and he occasionally finer'd the strings, pinching them as you do a guitar, so as to send the sound of it off, that Mr

FING

Vandykeren might suppose that they were all met for mirth. — Murray, Barclay, vol. 1, ch. v.
Finger-reading. s. Reading, for the blind, by means of letters of which the outline is thrown out in relief sufficiently strong to be felt.

Though we have no direct proof of analogous modifications in nervous structures; yet indirect proof is given by the greater efficiency that follows greater activity. This is manifested alike in the senses and the intellect. The palate may be cultivated into extreme sensitiveness, as in professional tea-tasters. An orchestral conductor gains, by continual practice, an unusually great ability to discriminate differences of sound. And in the finger-reading of the blind, we have evidence that the sense of touch may be brought by exercise to a far higher capability than is ordinary. — Herbert Spencer, Inductions of Biology.

Fingerboard. s. Board at the neck of a fiddle, guitar, or the like, where the fingers operate on the strings.

Well, though he played far sweeter than Balthar, yet Balthar's hand was more quick, and could run it inensibly to the end of the fingerboard. — Life of A. Wood, p. 104.

Fingered. adj. Having fingers.
Fingered and thumbed. Skelton, Poems, p. 124.

Fingering. verb. abs.

1. Act of touching lightly, or toying with.
 One that is covetous is not so highly pleased with the mere sight and fingering of money, as with the thoughts of his being considered as a wealthy man. — Grew, Cosmologic Sacra.

2. Manner of touching an instrument of music.

Madam, before you touch the instrument, To learn the order of my fingering, I must begin with rudiments of art.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iii. 1.
 She hath broke the lute . . .
 I did but tell her she mistook her frets,
 And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering.
Ibid, ii. 1.

3. Work exquisitely performed with the fingers.

Not any skill'd in looms of fingering fine,
 With this so various net-work might compare.
Spenser.

fingering. s. Fish so called, Salmo Sul-mulus.

It would be very desirable to discontinue the use of all the names bestowed upon this fish, except those of Parr and Samlet; the terms Brandling, Fingering, Skirling, Gravelling, Laspring, Sparling, &c., not being sufficiently defined, but referring either to some quality or habit observed in all species. — Yarrell, British Fishes, The Parr.

Fingerpost. s. Guide post with arms, pointing towards the places for which it shows the road; generally of wood, and sometimes with a hand and pointed forefinger, either painted on the arm, or figured at the extremity.

Having interred this, he threw himself in the attitude of a finger-post, unthinkingly and mutely suggesting that I should find myself away from his presence. — Theodore Hook, Jack Brag.

Fingling. s. Trifle. Colloquial.

We agree in nothing but to wrangle
 About the slightest fingling. — Batter, Hudibras.

Fistal. s. In Architecture. Finishing ornament of a spire or pinnacle.

The introduction of fistals was contemporary with that of crockets. — Gleason, History of Architecture.

Fine. adj. or s. Finical, or finikin person.

Does he think to be courted for acting the finick and conceited? — Cutler, Essay on Education. (Ord MS.)

Finical. adj. Nice; foppish; pretending to superfluous elegance.

A whorl, glancing, super-serviceable, finical rogue. — Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 2.

I cannot bear a finical top romancing, how the king took him aside at such a time; what the queen said to him at another. — Sir R. L. Estange.

Finicalness. s. Attribute suggested by Finical.

It is for such little writers as the preacher of Lincoln's Inn to hide their barrenness by the finicalness of culture. — Bishop Warburton, Letters to Hurd, vol. 50, note.

Fifty. v. a. [fine.] Make fine; adorn. Barbarous.

The printer's profit, not my pride,
 Hath this line finied.
Occasion's Offering: 1654. (Nares by H. & W.)

FINI

Finikin. adj. Same as Finical.
 Your compass and trips
 With your legs and your lips,
 Your madams and lords,
 And such finikin words.
Brome, The Leveller. (Rich.)

Finig. verb. abs.

1. In Metallurgy. Refinery.

The finig pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold. — Proverbs, xvii. 3.

2. Clarifying.

It is good also for fuel, not to omit the slaving of it for the finig of wine. — Mortimer, Husbandry.
 Instead of the blood [in sugar-refining] many refiners use a mixture of gelatinous alumina and gypsum, called finigs, prepared by adding a solution of alum to a body of lime-water, collecting, washing, and draining the precipitate upon a filter. Other refiners use both the blood and finigs with advantage. — Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Finis. s. [Lat.] End: (common by itself at the end of a book; rare with a context).

The child would thank you for your kindness,
 And read quite backward from our finis.
Prior, Alani. (Ord MS.)

Finish. v. a. [Fr. finir.] Bring to the end purposed; complete; make perfect.

For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it? — Luke xiv. 28.
 As he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace. — 2 Corinthians, viii. 6.
 A poet uses epistles; but epistles, taken separately, finish nothing. — Browne, On the Olynthus.

Finished. part. adj. Made perfect or complete.

I would make what bears your name as finished as my last work ought to be; that is, more finished than the rest. — Pope.

Lanuz was in every respect the man for the present emergency. He had courage and a sense of honour, he had been accustomed to eccentric adventures, and, with the keen observation and ironical pleasantry of a finished man of the world, had a strong propensity to knight errantry. — Macaulay, History of England, ch. ix.

Finisher. s.

1. One who puts an end to, completes, or accomplishes, anything.

This was the condition of those times; the world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail; the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocence, the other a finisher of all his troubles. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
 The author and finisher of our faith. — Hebrews, xii. 2.

2. Winder-up. Colloquial.

Give me your hand, lackington, and assure yourself that you need go no further on your flying tour to matrimony; my house and my heart alike are open to you both. — "This was a finisher," said lackington. — "You married her?" asked Dillmanton. — "I did," replied the other. — Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney, vol. ii. ch. vi.

Finishing. part. adj. Making perfect or complete: (as, 'He gave the finishing touch to his work').

Finishing. verb. abs.

1. Completion.

They hindered the finishing of the building. — 1 Kings, v. 73.

2. Last touch of a composition.

Mallot arose to give it [the Roman history] the last finishing of art and genius. — Bishop Warburton, Enquiry into the Prophecies and Miracles, p. 73.

Finite. adj. [Lat. finitus, pass. part. of finio = end.]

1. Limited; bounded; terminated: (the compounds, as Infinite, Definite, &c., commoner).

Nervus conceives no more thereby than a finite number for indelibility. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.
Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinity. — Locke.
 That supposed infinite duration will, by the very supposition, be limited to two extremes, though never so remote asunder, and consequently must needs be finite. — Bentley.

2. In Grammar. See Infinitive.

A simple sentence has in it but one subject, and one finite verb; as, Life is short. — Murray, Grammar. (Ord MS.)

FIR

Finiteless. adj. Without bounds; unlimited. Rare.

It is ridiculous unto reason, and finiteless as their desires. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Finity. adj. In a finite manner; within certain limits; in a certain degree: (compound commoner).

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finity distant from us. — Bishop Stillingfleet.

Finiteness. s. Attribute suggested by Finite; limitation; confinement within certain boundaries: (compound commoner).

I ought now to notice the current of my passion, and love without other boundary than what is set by the finiteness of my natural powers. — Norris.

Finition. s. Ending; conclusion. Rare.

Play is nothing but the space in which quantitative bodies have essential relation and finition. — Jerome Taylor, Real Presence of Christ in the Sacrament, sect. II. (Ord MS.)

Finitude. s. Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries. Rare.

Finitude, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degrees of affections or properties of those things to one another; infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections or properties. Chyco.

Finity. s. Character of being bounded; limitation. Rare.

The finity of sin, that in its own nature cannot merit an infinite punishment. — An Objection answered by Richard Burchenger, M. A., in his 'Census Dei, or an Apology for God's' epistle dedicatory, p. ii. l. 12: 1675.

Finless. adj. Wanting fins.

He answers me
 With telling of the maddway and the nut,
 And of a dragon and a finless fish.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. iii. 1.

Finlike. adj. Furnish in imitation of fins.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
 And outland Indian, on the stream did slide:
 Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
 Or finlike cars did spread from either side.
Drayton, Anna Mirabilis.

Finned. adj. Having fins; having broad edges spread out on either side like fins.

They plough up the turf with a broad fined plough. — Mortimer, Husbandry.

Finny. adj. Furnished with fins.

Fish over the main in wat'ry pump he rides,
 His azure ear and finny corners smiles;
 Proclaims his name. — Deft, a Translation of Virgil.

Finray. s. In Ichthyology. Rigid, or comparatively rigid, part of the fin in fishes.

The formula of the number of fin-rays (in the perch) may be thus stated:

D 15, I 13, P 14, V 11, A 2, C 17.
 And the mode of fin-ray notation employed is thus explained:—D, the dorsal fin, has, in the first fin, 15 rays, all spinous; in the second fin, 1 spinous plus 13 that are soft. P, pectoral fin, 14 rays, all soft. V, the ventral fin, with 1 spinous ray plus 6 that are soft. A, the anal fin, with 2 spinous rays plus 8 that are soft. C, the tail or caudal fin, 17 rays. In counting the rays of the caudal fin, those only from the longest ray of the upper portion to the lowest ray of the lower portion, both inclusive, are enumerated. — Yarrell, British Fishes, Perch.

Finseal. s. Native freshwater fish so called, Leuciscus erythrophthalmus; rudd; roud; shallow: (given by Yarrell in the synonymy, but not in the text).

Finthead. adj. Same as Finfooted.

Such creatures as are whole footed, or finthead, viz. some birds and quadrupeds, are naturally directed to go into the water and swim there. — Ray, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Fipple. s. [Lat. fíbula.] Stopper. Rare.

You must know, that in recorders, which go with a gentle breath, the concave of the pipe, were it not for the fipple, that straiteneth the air much more than the simple concave, would yield no sound. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Fir. s. [see last extract.] Tree so called of the genus Pinus.

He covered the floor of the house with planks of fir. — 1 Kings, vi. 15.

— [The fir] is ever green: the leaves are single and for the most part produced on every side of the branches: the male flowers, or catkins, are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are propagated on cones, which are square. — Miller.

[At first sight the English word fir does not look very like the Latin quercus, yet it is the same word. If we trace fir back to Anglo-Saxon, we find it under the form furh. According to Grimm's law, f points to p, h to k, so that in Latin we should have to look for a word the consonantal skeleton of which might be represented as p r c. Guttural and labial tenues change; and an Anglo-Saxon ff points to quingue, no furh leads to Latin quercus, oak. In Old High German, foraha in Pinus silvestris; in Modern German forfir has the same meaning. But in a passage quoted from the Lombard laws of Rothar, foraha, evidently the same word, is mentioned as a name of oak (roborum aut quercum quod est foraha); and Grimm, in his dictionary of the German language, gives forch, in the sense of oak, blood, life.—Max Müller, Lectures on the Science of Language (Second Series), lect. v. appendix.]

Used adjectivally.

The fir-trees rejoice at thee, and the cedars of Lebanon.—Isaiah, xiv. 8.

Fire. s. [A.S. fyrr.]

1. Element so called: (generally singular).

The force of fire ascended first on high
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky;
Then air succeeds, in lightness next to fire. Dryden.

With set and on; on following. Burn, or attempt to burn.

Hercules courageously set upon the horsemen, and set fire also upon the stables where the Turk's horses stood.—Kneller, History of the Turks.

He that set fire on a plain-tree to spite his neighbour, and the plane-tree set fire on his neighbour's house, is bound to pay all the loss, because it did all rise from his own ill intention.—Jerome Taylor, Rule and Exercises of Holy Living.

2. Thing burning; flame; light; conflagration: (singular or plural).

Where two raging fires meet together,
They do consume the thing that feeds their fury.
Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, II. 1.
So contraries on Titus's top couple;
Here hoary frosts, and by them breaks out fire.
Cowley.

Though safe thou think'st thy treasure lies,
Conceal'd in cloths from human eyes,
A fire may come, and it may lie
Buried, my friend, as far from thee. Grangeville.

3. Discharge of firearms.

War—even an offensive warfare—must in future consist in taking up such positions as shall oblige the enemy to attack, on account of the deadly fire to which troops advancing to the attack of a position over open ground are now exposed.—Madison, Modern Warfare as influenced by Modern Artillery, ch. xiii.

(See also extract under Flinch.)

4. Torture by burning.

Did Shadrach's soul my glowing breast inspire,
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire! Prior.

5. Ardour of temper; violence of passion.

He had fire in his temper, and a German blunt-ness; and upon provocations, might strain a phrase.—Bishop Atterbury.
One of my companions was a scholar with fire; and the other a soldier of the same complexion. My learned man would fall into disputes, and argue without any manner of provocation or contradiction. The other was declaiming without words, and would give a shrug or an oath to express his opinion.—Tatler, no. 61.

6. Liveliness of imagination; vigour of fancy; intellectual activity; force of expression; spirit of sentiment.

Nor can the snow that age does shed
Upon thy reared head,
Quench or allay the noble fire within,
But all that youth can be thou art. Cowley.
Exact Racine, and Corneille's noble fire,
Taught us that France had something to admire. Pope.

Thee, bold Longinus, all the nine inspire,
And warn the critic with a poet's fire. Id.

7. Passion of love; flame.

Love various hearts does variously inspire:
It stirs in gentle bosoms gentle fire,
Like that of love on the altar laid;
But raging flames tremendous walls invade;
A fire which every windy passion blows,
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

Fellow of fire. Man of spirit. Slang in Queen Anne's time.

You see, in the very air of a fellow of fire, something so expressive of what he would be at, that, if it were not for self-preservation, a man would laugh out.—Tatler, no. 61.

With set and on; on preceding. Kindle; inflame.

Not set the Thames on fire. A person of whom it is said that 'he will not set the Thames on fire' (who will not set it on fire is not suggested) is considered as dull, slow, stupid, or anything but otherwise. When written, the word Thames is spelt with a capital T, and as if it were the name of the river. Such it is, doubtless, generally understood to be. The Great Fire of London, or the fairs held on the frozen river during certain severe winters, and the effect of certain combustibles that blaze on water, are for the most part, referred to as the original suggesters of the metaphor. Another explanation, however, suggested by a contributor to 'Notes and Queries' (March 25, 1865), makes tem, or teme, a common name meaning sieve or sifter. The bottom of a sieve, when made of wooden laths, canvass, or other similar materials, when corn or meal has passed through it for some time, and with more than ordinary friction, may certainly grow warm, and possibly catch fire; and when worked by hand, an extremely quick worker may be said to have set the sieve alight; a slow worker, on the other hand, being one who is in no danger of ever doing so. See Tammy.

St. Anthony's fire. In Medicine. Erysipelas.

Erysipelas, in the sense now explained, called in Scotland the rose, in this country St. Anthony's fire, resembles other disorders of the same group.—Wilson, Lectures on the Principles and Practice of Physic, lect. lxxix.

Fire. v. a.

1. Set on fire; kindle.

They spoiled many parts of the city, and fired the houses of those whom they esteemed not to be their friends; but the rage of the fire was at first hindered, and then appeared by the fall of a sudden shower of rain. Sir J. Hayward.
The breathless lady thus bewail'd, they lay,
And fire the pile. Dryden.

2. Inflame the passions; animate.

Yet, if desire of fame, and thirst of pow'r,
A haughty princess, with a crown in du'r,
So fire your mind, in arms assert your right. Dryden.

3. Drive by fire.

He that parts us, shall bring a brand from heav'n
And fire us hence. Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.

4. In Farriery. Canterize.

5. Discharge from, or as from, an explosive weapon.

He paralysed one half of his army by shutting it in behind the ravine, where it did not fire a shot.—Madison, Modern Warfare as influenced by Modern Artillery, ch. xiii.

With away.

There is a tendency in the soldiers... to fire away their ammunition in a reckless and aimless manner under the excitement of battle.—Ibid.

With off.

The talk is Birmingham talk. The wag of the party, with bitterness in his heart, having just quitted his laundress who is dunning him for her bill, is firing off good stories; and the opposition wag is furious that he can't get an innings.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xx.

(For another example see extract under Finger, s. 4.)

Fire. *v. n.*1. Take fire; be kindled; be inflamed with passion: (generally with up). Colloquial.

2. Discharge any firearms.

The fainting Dutch remotely fire,
And the fam'd Eugene's iron troops retire. Smith.
Fire away. Set to work. Colloquial.

Fire-side. s. [Two words rather than a compound.] Hearth; chimney corner.

My judgment is, that they ought all to be depeached, and ought to serve but for winter talk by the fire-side.—Bacon.

Love no more is made
By the fire-side, but in the cooler shade. Carver.
What art thou asking of them, after all? Only to sit quietly at thy own fire-side.—Arsenal, History of John Bull.

It was now the dusk of the evening, when a grave person rode into the inn, and committing his horse to the hostler, went directly into the kitchen, and having called for a pipe of tobacco, took his place by the fire-side, where several other persons were likewise assembled.—Felding, The Adventures of Joseph Andrews.

Firearms. s. Arms which owe their efficacy to gunpowder an inflammable and explosive mixture; guns, pistols, cannons.

Ammunition to supply their few firearms.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Before the use of firearms there was infinitely more scope for personal valour than in the modern battles.—Pope.

Fireball. s.

1. Grenade; ball filled with combustibles, and bursting where it is thrown.

Judge of those invidious boasts of conscience, which, like so many fireballs, or mouth grenades, are thrown at our church.—South, Sermons.

The same great man hath sworn to make us swallow his coin in fireballs.—Swift.

2. Meteor so called; see extract.

Fireballs (called also bolides and fiery meteors) in meteorology are luminous bodies, which suddenly appear in the sky, usually at a great height above the earth, and shoot through the heavens with immense velocity, and are sometimes accompanied with the fall of an aerolite.—Brande, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Fireblast. s. See extracts.

Fireblast, a disease or accident to which the hop-plant is much exposed, . . . is supposed by most hop-planters to depend upon the particular state of the air or weather at the time.—Rees, Cyclopædia.

Fireblast (a term of very doubtful meaning, like the word blight. In agriculture it is sometimes applied to plants which are suffering from the mildew, fungi, or minute insects; but the legitimate use would appear to be applicable only when the delicate parts of plants are suddenly exposed to a brilliant sun, and the rapid transpiration which takes place in consequence dries up and shrivels their leaves.—Brande, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Firebrand. s.

1. Piece of wood kindled.

I have caused my father-in-law of a firebrand, to set my own house in a flame.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

2. Incendiary; one who inflames factious; one who causes mischief.

He sent Surrey with a competent power against the rebels, who fought with the principal band of them, and defeated them, and took alive John Chamber their firebrand.—Bacon.

Firebrief. s. Letter circulated to solicit subscriptions for sufferers from a fire.

We laugh at firebriefs now, although they be commended to us by his Majesty; And 'tis no treason, for we cannot guess, Why we should pay them for their happiness. Carver, 1651. (Nares by H. & W.)

Firebrush. s. Brush which generally hangs by the fire to sweep the hearth.

When you are ordered to stir up the fire, clean away the ash from betwixt the bars with the fire-brush.—Swift.

Fireclay. s. Clay that resists fire.

The third coal shale or series of argillaceous coal, between the third and fourth grit rock, reckoning from the mill-stone grit upwards, which traverses Derbyshire and part of Yorkshire, and produces croston and fossil reeds in great abundance, contains a very excellent fire-clay, which is dug at Hease-nether-end, Wheatcroft, Birkling Lane, and other places.—Rees, Cyclopædia.

Firecock. s. Fireplug.

Churchwardens in London and within the Bills of Mortality are to fix fire-cocks at proper distances in streets.—Rees, Cyclopædia.

Firecross. s. Bloody cross with the ends burnt black, anciently used in Scotland as a token for calling the nation to arms, by being passed from hand to hand.

He sent his heralds through all parts of the realm, and commanded the firecross to be carried; namely two firecrosses set in fashion of a cross, and pitched upon the points of a spear.—Sir J. Hayward.

Fire-damp. s. See extract.

Flame requires a very high temperature for its existence; and consequently, if we can devise any mode of cooling it, it will be extinguished. A very small flame, for instance, is extinguished by bringing a large mass of metal near it, or by carefully surrounding it by a coil of wire. The metal abstracts the heat. . . . These . . . we owe to Sir H. Davy, who most ingeniously applied them in the construction of his miner's safety-lamp. Coal mines are often infected by a species of inflammable gas (carburetted hydrogen) known under the name of fire-damp, which, mingled in certain proportions with atmospheric air, forms a mixture which explodes upon the contact of flame. . . . At length Davy constructed a lamp upon the principles explained. It is obvious that, if we place a lighted lamp or candle within a perfect cage of wire-gauze, no flame will be able to penetrate from within to the surrounding medium in consequence of the cooling power of the metallic tinnæ.—Brande, Manual of Chemistry, p. 136.

FIRE

Fire-drake. s.

1. Fiery serpent.

By the hissing of the snake,
The rustling of the fire-drake,
I charge thee thou this place forsake,
Nor of queen Mab be prattling.

Drayton, Nymphidia.

2. Ignis fatuus; will-o'-the-wisp.

It may be 'tis but a glow-worm now, but 'twill
Grow to a fire-drake presently.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Beggar's Bush.

Fire-escape. s. Machine or apparatus for the escape of persons from the upper stories of buildings on fire.

The principal parts of this machine, which is called the sliding fire-escape, are as follows.—Rees, Cyclopaedia.

Firefork. s. ? Poker; etymologically, at least, if connected with fork, a different word from Firefork.

Item 2 sund'ry, a spers-freke, a fire panne and a pair of tongs xxd.—Inventory, 1636. (Nares by H. & W.)

A fire-fork, furca ignaria.—Witthall's Dictionary, p. 166; ed. 1696. (Nares by H. & W.)

Fire-faire. s. Fish akin to the rays so called, Raja (Trygon) pastinaca.

The flesh is said to be rank and disagreeable, and when laid bare by skinning or cutting into, is very red, a circumstance which may account for the old name of fire-faire.—Zarrell, British Fishes.

Firefly. s. See extract.

Firefly (ic) a name commonly given to those insects which have the singular property of emitting a luminous secretion. This power is not confined to insects of one organization or order. Among the coleoptera the Blater Noctiluca and the female glowworm are conspicuous examples.—Brande, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Firehook. s. See extract.

Instrumentum arcuatis restituentibusque incendiis accommodatum. A firehook such as they occupy to pull down houses set on fire.—Nomenclator. (Nares by H. & W.)

Firelock. s. Soldier's gun.

Prime all your firelocks, fasten well the stake.
Gay.

Used adjectively.

My chaunces was late to have a peerless fire-lock piece,
That, to my witten, was ney the like in Turke nor in Greece.
Gawwigne, Complaint of the Greene Knight. (Rich.)

Fireman. s.

1. One employed to extinguish burning houses; stoker of an engine.

The fireman sweats beneath his crooked arms;
A leatheren croupe his vent'rous head defends,
Boldly he climbs where thickest smoke ascends.
Gay.

2. Man of violent passions.

I had last night the fate to drink a bottle with two of them fire-men.—Teller, no. 61.

Firemaster. s. See extract.

Firemaster, in our train of artillery, is an officer who gives the directions and proportions of the ingredients for all the compositions of fireworks, whether for service in war or for rejoicings and recreations.—Rees, Cyclopaedia.

Firenew, or Firenew. adj. New from the forge; new from the melting-house; Brand-new.

Armado is most illustrious wight,
A man of firenew words, fashion's own knight.
Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, l. 1.

Some excellent Jews, firenew from the mint.—Id., Twelfth Night, iii. 2.

Upon the wedding-day I put myself, according to custom, in another s.t. firenew, with silver buttons to it.—Adams, Guardian, no. 113.

Firepan. s.

1. Pan for holding fire; vessel of metal to carry fire.

His firepans, [and] all the vessels thereof, thou shalt make of brass.—Exodus, xxvii. 3.

Four of it upon a firepan well heated, as they do rosewater and vinegar.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Receptacle for the priming-powder in a gun; pan.

Fireplace. s. Place in buildings for the fire.

The earliest fire-places which remain are of the twelfth century, as at the castle of Rochester and Colchester.—Glossary of Architecture.

FIRE

Fireplug. s. Firecock.

The turncock opened a fireplug, or rather a water-plug.—Gudwin, Caleb Williams.

Firepot. s. Inflammable missile used in sea-fights.

The Portugals seeing them still stand away, came both aboard of us, the one in the one quarter, and entered 100 of their men, having fire-pots, and the other in the other, and divers sorts of fireworks upon our decks, the frigate (as many as could lye about us) threw fire-pots in at the ports and stuck fire-pikes in her sides, all which (by the great mercy and assistance of God) we still put out.—Taylor (the Waterpoet); 1654. (Nares by H. & W.)

Fireproof. adj. Proof against fire.

How thoroughly this was fireproof was shown by the deeds which were found in it. They were perfectly legible, notwithstanding the conflagration that had raged above them.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Fire. s. One who fires.

1. Incendiary.

Others burned Mowse, and the rest marched as a guard for defence of these fires.—Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

2. One who incites or inflames.

Kindlers and fires of men's minds.—Articles of Religion; 1536.

Fireship. s. Ship filled with combustible matter to fire the vessels of the enemy.

Our men bravely quitted themselves of the fireship, by cutting the spirital tackle.—Walsman, Surgery. A real misapplication about disaster.

Made all their usual matters incorrect: Three fireships lost their amiable existence before they reach'd a spot to take effect: The match was lit too soon, and no assistance could remedy this hideous defect: They blew up in the middle of the river. While, though 'twas dawn, the Turks slept fast as ever.
Byron, Don Juan, vii. 28.

Fireshovel. s. Instrument with which the hot coals are thrown up in kitchens.

Culinary utensils and irons often feel the force of fire; as tongs, fireshovels, prongs, and irons.—Sir T. Brown.

The neighbours are coming out with forks and fireshovels, and spits, and other domestick weapons.—Dryden, Spanish Friar.

I took a fireshovel and tongs, which I wanted extremely; as also two little brass kettles, a copper pot to make chocolate, and a gridiron; and with this cargo, and the dog, I came away.—De Foe, Life and Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.

Firestick. s. Lighted stick or brand.

Children, when they play with firesticks, move and whirl them round so fast, that the motion will open their eyes, and represent an entire circle of fire to them.—Sir K. Digby, Treatise on the Nature of Bodies.

Firestone. s.

1. In Mineralogy. Pyrites, of which it is an approximate translation. Obsolete.

The firestone, or pyrites, is a compound metallick fossil, composed of vitriol sulphur, and an unmetallick earth, but in very different proportions in the several masses. The most common sort, which is used in medicine, is a greenish shapeless kind found in our clay-pits, out of which the green vitriol or copperas is procured. It has its name of pyrites, or firestone, from its giving fire on being struck against a steel much more freely than a flint will do; and all the sparks burn a longer time, and grow larger as they fall, the inflammable matter struck from off the stone burning itself out before the spark becomes extinguished.—Sir J. Hill, Materia Medica.

Firestone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. In Geology. Kentish stone, Kent stone, or Kentish rag; a synonym, though not a common one, for the stone which in the parts about Maidstone and other districts, chiefly in Kent, represents the Upper Green Sand of the formation so called. With a more general import, it means any stone that resists the action of fire.

Firework. s. Shows of fire; pyrotechnical performances.

We represent also ordnance, and new mixtures of gunpowder, wildfires burning in water and unquenchable; and also fireworks of all variety.—Bacon, New Atlantis.

His philosophy degenerates into levity, his magnanimity into bombast; the light of his fine mind is not sunshine, but the glister of an artificial firework.—Copley, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, vol. i. appendix, Hafmann.

The service in the abbey was followed by a stately banquet in the hall, the banquet by brilliant fire- works, and the fireworks by much had poetry.—Hallam, Constitutional History of England, vi. iv.

FIRM

{FIREWORKS FIRM

Firing. s.

1. Fuel.

They burn the cakes, firing being there scarce.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Setting on fire.

Besides the wasting of our fields, the driving away of herds, as well of people as cattle, the firing of villages, the ruin and havoc they made, and in every place nothing but fire and sword.—Hollau, Translation of Livy, p. 206. (Rich.)

3. Catching fire.

The greatest inconvenience of their wooden building is the aptness for firing, which happeneth very oft and in very fearful sort, by reason of the dryness and fitness of the fir, that, being once fired, burneth like a torch, and is hardly quenched till all be burnt up.—Hacking, Voyages, l. 486. (Rich.)

4. Discharge of firearms.

This tendency would be much increased by the increased facility of rapid firing conferred by breech-loaders. . . . It may be worth consideration whether firing should not be more in valleys by word of command, and less by independent files.—Mortimer, Modern Warfare as influenced by modern Artillery, ch. xiii.

5. In Veterinary Surgery. Application of the cautery.

The utility of firing or applying the actual cautery is doubtful.—Rees, Cyclopaedia, in voce.

Fire. v. a. [?]

1. Whip; beat; correct; chastise.

I'll fire him and ferret him.—Shakespeare, Henry V, iv. 4.

Besides, it is not only foolish, But vile, idolatrous and popish, For one man out of his own skin To fire and whip another's sin. Butler, Hudibras.

2. Drive.

Hail'd thou my business, thou couldst ne'er sit so;
'Twould fire thee into air a thousand mile.
Middleton, The Witch.

Fire. s. Stroke.

This is a pretty juvenile fork of wit for a grave ancient divine to use.—Annotator, &c. on Truth, &c. p. 211; 1683.

Fire. s. [fourth part of a barrel.]

1. Vessel containing nine galleons.

Strutt's servants got such a haunt about that shop, that it will cost us many fires of strong beer to bring them back again.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

2. Small vessel.

You heard of that wonder of the lightning and thunder
Which made the eye so much the louder;
Now let to another, that miracle's brother,
Which was done with a fire of powder.
Sir J. Denham.

Fire. adj. [Lat. firmus.]

1. Strong; not easily pierced or shaken; hard; (opposed to soft).

The flakes of his flesh are joined together: they are firm in themselves, and they cannot be moved.—Job, xii. 23.

Love's artillery then checks
The bravest works of the firmest sex. Cleaveland.
There is nothing to be left void in a firm building; even the cavities ought to be filled with rubbish.—Dryden.

That body, whose parts are most firm in themselves, and are by their peculiar shapes capable of the greatest contact, is the most firm; and that which has parts very small, and capable of the least contact, will be the most soft.—Woodward.

2. Constant; steady; resolute; fixed; unshaken.

We hold firm to the works of God, and to the sense which is God's lamp.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The great encouragement is the assurance of a future reward, the firm persuasion whereof is enough to raise us above any thing in this world.—Archbishop Tillotson, Sermons.

3. Solid; not giving way; not fluid.

God caused the wind to blow to dry up the abundant alluvial mud of the earth, and make the land more firm.—Sir W. Raleigh.

The muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nile, settled by degrees into a firm land.—Sir T. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

Firm. s. Mercantile term for the name under which a partnership carries on business.

The bill was carried by a very small majority, consisting of partners in the firm.—Burke.

Firm. s. Same as Firmán.

A privilege (was) given to Anthemius, the archbishop [of Cyrrus] in that age, to subscribe his 919

name to all public acts in red letters, which was an honour above that of any patriarch, who writes his name or firm in black characters.—Sir P. Egmont, Present State of the Greek and Armenian Churches, p. 90: 1670.

Firm, v. a. Rare.

1. Settle; confirm; establish; fix.

Of the death of the emperor they advertised Polyman, Arming those letters with all their hands and wails. Kueller, History of the Turks.
'Tis ratify'd above by every god,
And Jove has firm'd it with an awful nod.

Dryden, Athos and Albanian.
The powers, said he,
To you and yours, and mine, propitious be,
And firm our purpose with their augury.

O thou, who farest me from my doubtful state,
Long lost and wander'd in the maze of fate!
Be present still: O goddess, in our aid
Proceed, and firm those omens thou hast made.
Lyne, Translation of the First Book of Statius.

2. Fix without wandering.

He on his earl and compass Arms his eye,
The masters of his long experiment.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Firmament, s. [Lat. firmamentum.] Sky; heavens.

Even to the heavens their shouting shrill
Doth reach, and all the Firmament doth fill.

The Almighty, whose hieroglyphical characters Are the unnumber'd stars, sun and moon, written on these large volumes of the Firmament.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.
The clouds climb up the first ascent with pain;
And when the middle Firmament they gain,
If downward from the heavens my head I bow,
And see the earth and ocean hang below,
Ev'n I am seiz'd with horror.

Addison, Translation from Ovid.
What an immeasurable space is the firmament, wherein a great number of stars are seen with our naked eye, and many more discovered with our glasses.—Derham, Astro-Theology.

Firmament, adj. Celestial; of the upper regions; belonging to, or constituted by, the firmament.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In Firmament waters dipt above.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis.

Firman, s. [Turkish, firman.] Grant or licence given by Asiatic potentates.

We prepared to be gone; but could not till Mahomet Ally-beg gave his consent. . . . At length importunity prevailed. . . . The king's phirma was then interpreted. Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years' Travels into Africa and the Great Asia,
p. 214.

Firmation, s. Settlement; steady.

Rare.
It is also true that man only sitteth, if we define sitting to be a firmation of the body upon the ischias.
—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, p. 176. (Ord MS.)

Firmity, s. [Fr. fermeté; Lat. fermitas.] Strength, firmness. Rare.

The strength and firmity of my ascent must rise and fall together with the apparent credibility of the object.—Chillingworth, Religion of Protestants a safe Way to Salvation, vi. § 7.

Firmitude, s. Stability; firmness. Rare.

Thy covenant implies no less than firmitude and perpetuity. Bishop Hall, Cases of Conscience, iv. 2.
By a general custom of the world, the right hand is more used than the left, and by general use acquireth a greater degree of firmitude and strength.
—Bishop Pearson, Exposition of the Creed, art. vi.

Firmly, adv. In a firm manner.

1. Strongly; impetuously; immovably.

Though thou wert firmer than a rock,
How very hard particles, which touch only in a few points, can stick together so firmly, without something which causes them to be attracted towards one another, is difficult to conceive.—Sir I. Newton, Optics.

2. Steadily; constantly.

Himself to be the man the fates require;
I firmly judge, and what I judge desire.
Dryden, Virgil's Æneid.
The common people of Lucra are firmly persuaded, that one Lucrine can beat five Florentines.
—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Firmness, s. Attribute suggested by Firm.

1. Hardness; compactness; solidity.

It would become by degrees of greater consistency and firmness, so as to resemble an habitable earth.—
G. Burnet.

2. Durability; stability.

Both the easiness and firmness of union might be conjectured, for that both people are of the same language.—Sir J. Hayward.

3. Certainty; soundness.

In persons already possessed with notions of religion, the understanding cannot be brought to change them, but by great examination of the truth and firmness of the one, and the flaws and weakness of the other.—South, Sermons.

4. Steadiness; constancy; resolution.

This arduous Job with firmness and fortitude.—
Bishop Atterbury.

First, adj. [see Former.—superlative of Fore, q.v.] Having priority amongst more than two, in respect to order or sequence.

1. In time (as a date).

In the six hundredth and first year, in the first month, the first day of the month, the waters were dried up from off the earth.—Genesis, viii. 13.

2. In time: (opposed to last).

The first covenant had also ordinances of divine service.—Hebrews, ix. 1.

3. In dignity.

Three presidents, of whom Daniel was first.—
Daniel, vi. 2.
'Tis little Will, the scourge of France,
No godhead, but the first of men. Prior.

4. In excellence.

Where will you go? My first son,
Take good Cominius
With thee. Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 1.

Used adverbially.

a. Before anything else; earliest.

He, not unskillful of his usual art,
First in dissembled fire attempts to part;
Then roaring bounds and running streams he tries.
Dryden, Virgil's Georgics, iv.
Heav'n, sure, has kept this spot of earth unur'd,
To shew how all things were created first. Prior.

b. Before any other consideration.

First, metals are more durable than plants; secondly, they are more solid and hard.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

At first. At the beginning.

At first the silent venom slid with ease,
And seiz'd her cooler senses by degrees.
Dryden, Virgil's Æneid.

Excepting fish and insects, there are very few or no creatures that can provide for themselves at first, without the assistance of parents.—Beattie, Sermons.

First-hand, Directly; immediately: (used either adjectively, as 'first-hand intelli- gence,' or adverbially, with at, as 'I got it at first-hand'.)

First and last. Throughout; on an average.

First or last. At one time or other.
But sure a general shewn on man is past,
And all are fools and lovers first or last. Dryden.

Firstborn, adj. Eldest.

If the first-born son be hers that was hated.—
Deuteronomy, xxi. 15.

Firstfruits, s.

1. What the season earliest produces or ma- tures of any kind.

A sweetly reaper from his tillage brought
First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 434.
The blooming hopes of my then very young patron have been confirmed by most noble first-fruits, and his life is going on towards a plentiful harvest of all accumulated virtues.—Prior.

2. First profits of anything.

Although the king loved to employ and advance bishops, because, having rich bishopricks, they carried their reward upon themselves; yet he did use to raise them by steps, that he might not lose the profit of the first-fruits, which by that course of elevation was multiplied.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

First-fruits (primitive) [are] the profits after avoidance of every spiritual living for the first year according to the valuation thereof in the king's books. They were given in ancient times to the pope throughout all Christendom, and were first claimed by him in England for such foreigners as he bestowed benefices on here by way of provision; afterwards they were demanded of the clerks of all spiritual patrons, and at length of all other clerks on their admission to benefices; by throwing off the pope's supremacy . . . they were translated and vested in the king.—Toulmin, Law Dictionary.
(Granger.)

3. Earliest effect of anything.

See, Father, what first-fruits on earth are sprung,
From thy implanted grace in man!
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 22.

Firsthood, s. State or condition of priority.

Rare.

So that in election Christ held the primacy, the first-hood.—Goodwin, Works, vol. i. serm. 6. (Rich.)

Firstling, adj. That which is first produced or brought forth.

All the firstling males that come of thy herd, and of thy flock, thou shalt sanctify unto the Lord thy God.—Deuteronomy, xv. 19.

Firstling, s.

1. First produce or offspring.

A shepherd next,
More meek, came with the firstlings of his flock,
Choicest and best. Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 434.
The tender firstlings of my woolly breed,
Shall on his holy altar often bleed.

Dryden, Translation of Virgil.
The firstlings of the flock are doom'd to die.
Pope.

2. First thing thought or done.

The slightly purpose never is struck,
Unless the deed go with it: from this moment,
The very firstlings of my heart shall be
The firstlings of my hand.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1.

Firstly, adv. In the first place; as first in order.

Christ shed his blood, by 's wound to save us,
And save the wound sh' old serpent firstly gave us.
Sylvester, On Barlas, 46. (Ord MS.)

Firstness, s. Attribute suggested by First.

Rare.

When I give . . . a firstness of precedence and presidency to the pope, he tells me he is confident I know not how much more is allowed him by the universal consent of all Catholics.—Hammond, ii.
163. (Rich.)

First-rate, adj. [often as two words, i.e. in certain constructions, as, 'This is first- rate.'] Preeminent; (a word of modern adoption, from a ship of the first rate or size).

Ellipsis or defect in the first-rate authors often makes the language strong and close, and pleases an intelligent reader, by leaving something for him to fill up, and giving him room to exercise his own thought and sagacity.—Blackwell, Several Classics defended and illustrated, i. vi. (Ord MS.)
At billiards he is said to be first-rate.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xxix.

First-rate, s. That which is first-rate.

Hence poets have been held a sacred name,
And placed them with first-rate in the lists of fame.
Oldham, Horace's Art of Poetry, imitated in English.

Fisc, s. [Lat. fiscus.] Public treasury. Rare.

They had resolved (in appropriate to the fisc
a certain portion of the landed property of their conquered country. Barb.

Fiscal, s.

1. Exchequer; revenue.

War, as it is entertained by diet, so can it not be long maintained by the ordinary fiscal and receipt.
—Bacon.

2. Treasurer.

Don Pedro Rodriguez Campomanes, fiscal of the council of Castille, is likewise a man of letters.—
Strachan, Travels through Spain, lib. 42.

Fiscal, adj. Belonging to the public trea- sury; coming to the public purse.

It behoveth the prince to have a vigilant eye on such fiscal ministers, whose cruelty and covetous proceedings do oftentimes occasion great hate.—*Sir
W. Raleigh, Arts of Empire*, p. 62.

Fiscus, s. [Lat.] Treasury. Rare.

The proud are exalted, and the wicked are delivered, and evil men reign over us, and the covetous snatch our little bundles of money from us, and the fiscus snatches our rents, and every where the wisest and the best men are oppressed.—Jeremy Taylor, Sermon on the Death of Judas. (Ord MS.)

Fish, s. [from Fr. fiche.—see extract.] Counter or marker at cards.

[From French ficher, to fix, the noun fiche is used for a gardener's dibble, for the iron pegs used to mark distances in surveying, for branches stuck in the ground to mark positions in setting out a camp;
fiche or ficht, the peg used in marking at cribbage or the like. Hence, in defiance of etymology, the term was transferred to the loose counters which serve to mark the state of the game at cards, and was adopted in English under the form of fich.—
Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Fish, s. Instrument for raising the anchor.

See Fluke (of an anchor)

Fish, s. [A.S. fisc.]

1. Member of the division of vertebrate ani- mals so called.

There are fishes that have wings, that are not strangers to the airy regions; and there are some birds that are inhabitants of the water, whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days.—Locke.

Because the vicars of Peter and their disciples will not have for their teachers a Plato, a Virgil, a Terence, and the rest of the herd of philosophers, who soar aloft like the birds of the air, or dive into the depths like the fishes of the sea; ye say that they are not worthy to be doorkneppers, because they know not how to make verses. Peter is indeed a doorknocker—but of heaven.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, l. v. ch. xii.

2. Flesh of the same: (opposed to that of terrestrial animals).

We mortify ourselves with the diet of fish, and think we fare curiously if we abstain from the flesh of other animals. Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Neither fish nor flesh; sometimes Neither fish nor flesh nor good red herring. Neither one thing nor the other.

A pretty kettle of fish. Anything made a mess of.

Fish, v. n. Be employed in catching fishes; endeavour at anything by artifice.

While others fish, with craft, for great opinion, I, with great truth, catch mere simplicity. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iv. 4.

Fish, v. a.

1. Search in quest of fish or anything else.

Some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit.—Swift.
Oft, as he fish'd her wretched realms for wit,
The goddess favour'd him, and favours yet. Pope, Dunciad.

2. In Navigation. Raise by means of the Fish.

The next day we were enforced to stand out of the way to the southward of the island Lamoudez, when we found our danger; and there we lay five days without sails, to fish our punts and yards, and mend our sails. Continuation of Kneller's History of the Turks. (Ord MS.)

Fisher, s. One who fishes.

They were fishers. And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men.—Matthew, iv. 19, 19.

A soldier now, be with his coat appears;
A fisher now, his trembling angle bears. Pope.

Fisherboat, s. Boat employed in catching fish.

The king went down to a miserable fisherboat, that Hakes had provided for carrying them over to France.—Bishop Burnet, History of his own Times: 1694.

Fisherman, s. One who gains a livelihood by catching fish.

At length two monsters of unequal size,
Hard by the shore, a fisherman espies. Waller.

Fishertown, s. Town inhabited by fishermen: (fishing commoner as the first element).

Others of them, that time, hurried that fishertown Monmouth. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.
Lime in Dorsetshire, a little fishertown.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Fishery, s. Business of catching fish; place for fishing, or where fish are caught.

We shall have plenty of mackerel this season: our fishery will not be disturb'd by privateers.—Addison, Spectator.

Fishy, s. Disparaging (approximate) synonym for Fishwife.

Fishy, adj. Abounding with fish; stored with fish.

Thus morn in state, and calm in sprits,
My fishy pond is my delight.

Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

It is walled and guarded with the ocean, most commodious for traffick to all parts of the world, and watered with pleasant, fishy, and navigable rivers.—Claudian, Romaine.

Fishgarth, s. Fishpond; fish preserve; stew.

Previous to the year 1830, and even during some part of it, there were fish garths in the rivers Ouse and Hamble, but they were found so injurious to the trade of York, by preventing the free passage of ships, that the lord-mayor petitioned parliament for their removal.—Allen, History of the County of York, i. 68. (Ord MS.)

Fishy, s. [see Gig.] Kind of dart or harpoon with which scamen strike fish.

Canst thou with fishy pierce him to the quick,
Or in his skull thy barbed trident stick?

G. Sandys, Paraphrase of the Book of Job.
Such [dolphins] we malted as we could entice to taste our hooks or fishy.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years' Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 25.

We saw also abundance of flying fish, and their continual enemies, the albacore and dolphin; the latter we strike now and then with a fishy or harpoon.—Alkins, Voyage to Guinea, Brazil, and the West Indies, p. 33.

Fishhook, s. Hook to catch fishes.

A sharp point, bended upward and backward, like a fish-hook.—Greville, Maennu.

Fishy, v. a. Turn to fish. Colloquial.

Here comes Romeo.—

Without his ros, like a dried herring:

O fishy, fishy, how art thou fishy!

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, ii. 4.

Fishing, verbal abs. Opportunity for taking fish; art or practice of fishing.

There also would be planted a good town, having both a good haven and a plentiful fishing.—Spencer, View of the State of Ireland.

Of recreation there is none

So free as fishing is alone;

All other pastimes do no less

Thum mind and body, both, possess;

My hand alone my work can do,

So I can fish and study too.

Isaac Walton, Complete Angler, Angler's Song.

Used adjectively.

This Bethesda, not identical with that just before mentioned by St. Luke (ix. 10), and for distinction called Bethesda Julia, the city of Philip and Andrew and Peter (John i. 44), lay on the western side of the lake, in the same direction as, and near to, Capernaum; is indeed generally supposed to have been a sort of fishing suburb of that town.—Archbishop Trench, Notes on the Miracles, no. 17.

Fishkettle, s. Caldron made long for the fish to be boiled without bending.

It is probable that the way of embalming among the Egyptians was by boiling the body in a long caldron like a fishkettle, in some kind of liquid balsam.—Greville, Maennu.

Fishlike, adj. Resembling fish.

He smells like a fish; a very ancient and fishlike smell.—Shakespeare, Tempest, ii. 2.

Fishmeal, or Fishmeal, s. Diet of fish; abstemious diet.

Thin drink doth overcool their blood, and making many fishmeals, they fall into a kind of male green-sickness. Shakespeare.

Fishmonger, s. Dealer in fish; seller of fish.

I fear to play the fishmonger; and yet so large a commodity may not pass in silence.—Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

The surgeon left the fishmonger to determine the controversy between him and the pike.—Sir R. L. R. R.

Fishpond, s. Pool for fish.

Fish-ponds are no small improvement of wat'ry boggy lands.—Mr. Turner, Husbandry.

Fish-ponds were made where former forests grew, and hills were level'd to extend the view. Prior.

After the great value the Romans put upon fishes, it will not appear incredible that C. Hirtius should sell his fish-ponds for quadrages H.S. 35,2914. 13s. 4d.—Arbuthnot.

Fishpear, s. Dart or spear with which fishermen strike fish.

Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons? or his head with fishpears?—Job, xli. 7.

Fishwife, s. Woman who sells fish about the streets.

I heard it of a fishwife.

A woman of fine knowledge!
Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances.

Fishwoman, s. Woman who sells fish.

Pope's imitation of Spenser is a description of an alley of fishwomen.—J. Walton, Essay on the Writings and Genius of Pope.

Fishy, adj.

1. Consisting of, or inhabited by, fish.

Better pleas'd
Than Amleus with the fishy tune
That drove him, though enamour'd, from the spouse
Of Tobit's son. Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 167.

2. Having the qualities or form of fish.

Only the stump [in the margin, the fishy part] of Dagon was left to him.—A. S. S.
Few eyes have escaped the picture of mormals, that is, according to Homer, a monster with a woman's head above, and fishy extremity below.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.
He patronized, he fostered me, and I was grateful; and after having looked at me with his fishy eyes for a minute or two, he asked me, with a gravity which I confess was more than adequate to the occasion, 'whether I had ever eaten mormal mormal.'—Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney, vol. ii. ch. vii.

3. Bad; rank; foul: (i.e. of bad odour, as stinking fish). Slung.

'I thought it was all up. Didn't you, Henry Sydney?'—The most fishy thing I ever saw, said Henry Sydney. 'Well, we were fairly frightened here,' said Selwick. 'The first report was, that you had gone, but that seemed without foundation; but Coningsby was quite given up.'—Diarrhoe the younger, Coningsby, h. i. ch. ix.

Fisk, v. n. [Swedish, faska.] Whisk.

I saw...

Tom Tankard's cow...
Plucking about his half-acre, fasking with her tail.
Gammer Gurton's Needle, l. 2: 3531.

Fisking, part, adj. Whisking; busy.
A fisking morn'g, a running danc'd, a scolding or waundering flirt.—Colgrave, in v. Tradition.

Fissile, adj. [Lat. fissilis; fissus (cloven), pass. part. of fundo - cleave; fissura = cleavage.] Having the grain in a certain direction, so as to be cleft.

This crystal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water or crystal of the rock, and without colour: colouring a red heat without losing its transparency, and in a very strong heat calcining without fusion.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

Fissility, s. Capacity for being cloven.

Rare.

By which it is evident, that diamonds themselves have a grain or a fisky texture, not unlike the fissility, as the schools call it, of wood.—Boyle, Works, vol. iii. p. 521. (Rich.)

Fission, s. Cleaving.

Cohn observed, in Loxodes Bursaria, that the two individuals produced by longitudinal fission had almost the same size and shape as the previous single individual; whilst the two resulting from transverse fission seemed longer to remain as mere halves or mutilated individuals. Sometimes one of the individuals or halves from the longitudinal division will set up another act of fission before it has quite separated from its fellow. The circulation of the green globules is arrested during the process of spontaneous fission. In some species this spontaneous fission, which corresponds in so interesting a manner with the earliest phenomenon in the development of the ovum in the higher animals, is arrested before its completion. Cornu, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, lect. ii.
Fission and protophyta show us that form of disintegration called spontaneous fission: two or four individuals being produced by the splitting-up of the original one.—Herbert Spencer, Inductions of Biology.

Fissiparus, adj. [Lat. pario = bring forth.] In Biology. Propagating by fission.

Nor is the procreative function so abundantly or so variously enjoyed by any other animal as in the Polypodia; they are fissiparus, gemmiparus, oviparus, and viviparus.—Owen, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, lect. ii.

Fissipede, adj. [Lat. pes, pedis = foot.] Cloven-footed. Rare.

The pelican is described like fissipede, or birds which have their feet or claws divided.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, p. 230. (Ord MS.)

Fissure, s. Cleft.

The stone was distinguished into strata or layers: these strata were divided by parallel fissures, that were included in the stone.—Woodward, Essay towards a Natural History of the Earth.

I saw

The gaping fissures to revive the ruin.

Thomson, Seasons, Autumn.
In the Virginian opium the bony palate presents eight distinct perforations, besides the incisive foramina; the palatal processes of the palatine bone extend as far forward in the median line as the third molars: a long and narrow fissure extends for an equal distance (three lines) into the palatal processes both of the palatine and maxillaries: behind these fissures and nearer the nasal line are two smaller oblong fissures; external and a little posterior to these are two similar fissures, situated in the palato-maxillary suture; lastly, there are two round perforations close to the posterior margin of the bony palate.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrata.

Fissure, v. a. Make a fissure.

By a fall or blow the skull may be fissured or fractured.—Wiseeman, Surgery.

Fist, s. [A.S. fyst.]

1. Hand clenched with the fingers doubled down, in order to give a blow, or keep hold.

She quick and proud, and who did Fis despite,
Up with her fist, and took him on the face;
Another time, quoth she, become more wise;
Thus Fis did him her hand with little grace.

Sir P. Sidney.

And being down, the villain sore did beat
 And bruise with clownish fat his manly face.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.
 Anger causeth paleness in some; in others trembling, swelling, and lending the fat.—Bacon.
 And the same hand into a fat may clow,
 Which instantly a palm expanded shows.
Sir J. Denham.
 Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,
 Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fat.
Dryden, Virgil's Æneid.

2. Hand (meaning penmanship). Colloquial.
Fist. v. a.

1. Strike with the fist.
 I saw him spurning and fisting her most unner-cially.—Dryden.
 2. Grippe with the fist.
 We have been down together in my sleep,
 Unlinking helms, fisting each other's throat,
 And wak'd half dead with noisings.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 5.

Fistulous. s. Battle with the fist; blows with the fist.

She would seize upon John's commons; for which they were sure to go to fistulous.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.
 My invention and judgment are perpetually at fistulous, till they have quite disabled each other.—
Swift.

Fistula. s. [Lat. = pipe.] See extracts.
 That fistula which is recent is the easiest of cure:
 those of a long continuance are accompanied with ulcerations of the gland and caries in the bone.—
Wierow, Surgery.

Fistula lacrymalis [is] a disorder of the canal leading from the eye to the nose, which obstructs
 the natural progress of the tears, and makes them trickle down the cheek; but this is only the first and mildest stage of the disease; in the next there is matter discharged with the tears from the puncta lacrymalia, and sometimes from an orifice broke through the skin between the nose and angle of the eye. The last and worst degree of it is when the matter of the eye, by its long continuance, has not only corroded the neighbouring soft parts, but also affected the subjacent bone.—Sharp, Surgery.

Fistula [are] communications formed between adjoining or contiguous surfaces or organs during the progress of structural changes in disease. . . .
Fistula have been observed between the salivary ducts and the external surface; between the pharynx and larynx in phthisis laryngea; between the oesophagus and trachea; and between the pharynx or plu-mon and the chest.

Fistula have formed between the stomach and colon; between the former and the duodenum; between the stomach and small intestine;
 between the former and the pleural cavity or lungs;
 between the stomach and portal vein, and between the stomach and pericardium. . . . Fistula between the gall-bladder and other parts have been frequently observed; between it and the stomach on very rare occasions; between it and the colon; between it and the duodenum; between the gall-bladder and the cæcum, &c.—Copland, Dictionary of Practical Medicine.

Fistular. adj. Hollow like a pipe; having the character of a fistula.

Such, too, is the character of the mucous membrane in fistular canals.—Translation of Bichat's Physiology.

Fistulary. adj. Fistular.
 On th' other part, Apollo, in his friend,
 Form'd th' art of wisdom, to the binding end
 Of his vowed friendship; and for further meeds
 Gave him the far-heard fistulary reed.
Chapman, Translation of Hymn to Hermes. (Rich.)

Fistulate. v. a. Make hollow like a pipe;
 perforate.

The tracheas or first stamina in animals are their tubes, pipes, or ducts, fistulated, or hollowed, to circulate the blood and juices.—The Student,
 ii. 375.

Fistulous. adj.

1. Full of fistular passages.
 As for the flesh of the polype, it is, to use to, fistulous and spongy, like unto honeycombs.—Holland, Translation of Putzsch, p. 527. (Rich.)

2. Having the nature of a fistula.

How the sinuous ulcers become fistulous, I have shewn you.—Wierow, Surgery.

Etymologically, fistulous (fistulosus) means 'abounding in fistulas;' so that for 'having the character of a fistula,' the form in -ar is preferable, though not generally preferred.

Fisty. adj. Connected with the fist: (in the extract, pugilistic: fistic the commoner colloquial expression).

In twice five years the 'greatest living poet,'
 Like to the champion in the fisty ring,
 Is call'd on to support his claim, or show it,
 Although 'tis an imaginary thing.
 Even I—albeit I'm sure I did not know it,
 Nor sought of fooling subjects to be king,—
 Was reckon'd, a considerable time,
 The grand Napoleon of the realm of rhyme.
Byron, Don Juan, xl. 54.

Fit. s. [see last extract.]

1. Paroxysm or exacerbation of any intermittent distemper.

Small stones and gravel collect and become very large in the kidneys, in which case a fit of the stone in that part is the cure.—Sharp, Surgery.
 'Have I not been ill, corporal?' said Mr. Vandy-perken, whose memory was impaired for the time.—
 'Mein Gott! yes, mynheer.'—'There was something happened, was not there?'—'Mein Gott! yes, mynheer.'—'I've had a fit; have I not?'—'Mein Gott!
 yes, mynheer.'—'My head swims now.'—Maryat, Sunrises.

2. Any short return after intermission;
 interval.

Sometimes 'tis grateful to the rich to try
 A short vicissitude, and fit of poverty.
Dryden, Translation from Horace.
 Religion is not the business of some fits only and intervals of our life, to be taken up at certain days and hours, but a system of precepts to be regarded in all our conduct.—Rogers, Remorse.

All fits of pleasure we balance by an equal degree of pain or languor: 'tis like speculating this year part of the next year's revenue.—Swift.

3. Any violent affection of mind or body.

The life did fit away out of her nest,
 And all his senses were with deadly fit oppress'd.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.
 An ambitious man puts it in the power of every malicious tongue to throw him into a fit of melancholy.—Addison.

4. Disorder; distemperature.

For your husband,
 He's noble, wise, judicious, and best known
 The fit o' th' season. Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 2.

5. Used, without an epithet of discrimination, for the hysterical disorders of women, and the convulsions of children; and by the vulgar for the epilepsies.

Mrs. Hall was so much curst, that she fell downright into a fit.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.
 The children upstairs are yelling, as their mind is cramping their miserable rickets with hot tapers, teasing Miss Emmy's hair out by the roots, or scrubbing Miss Polly's dumpty nose with notched soap till the little wretch screams herself into fits.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. 25.

By fits, or by fits and starts. Intermittently.

Men that are habitually wicked now and then,
 by fits and starts, feel certain motions of repentance.
Sir R. L. Estlin.

By fits my swelling grief appears,
 In rising sighs and falling tears.

Thus o'er the dying lamp th' unsteady flame
 Hanges quivering on a point, hays off by fits.
 And falls again, as loth to quite his hold. Id., Cato.

[Fit.—An attack of pain or illness, an intermittent period. Italian fitta, traffita, a thrust, a stab, a sharp intermittent pain. (Mittell.) From figgere, traffire. Perhaps, in whole a more probable origin may be Italian fata, Old French fede, futz, intermittent period, turn,

 time. 'Don't as grace abandoned his jurs as bono o par fede as mink; and by fits to the fact. (St. Bernard.) 'Tierce fede Mounel apela o tierce feiz & Hely returna.' (Livredes Rois.) In the latter Allus fythe, futz.—Wadsworth, Dictionary of English Etymology.

Fit. s. [A.S. fite = song, fittian = sing.]

Part of a song, or canto of a poem; section or chapter of a book; strain in music;
 measure in dancing; division generally.

The first fit here find we.

The first fit of Anacrusis with King William Rufus.
Bale, Actes of English Volaries, pt. II. sign. II.
 7, b: 1650.

Who knoweth where is ere a mynatroll?
 By the name, I would faine go dancin a fitte.
Old Morality of Lady Juvenius.

He, sitting me beside in that same shade,
 Provoked me to plaid some pleasant fit.
Spenser, Colin Clouts come Home again.

The epithalamium was divided by branches into three parties, to serve for three several fits or times to be sung.—Pattenham, Art of English Poets, p. 61.

Come to the bride; another fit

Yet show, sirs, of your country wit.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Fit. s. Adaptation of one thing to another

(as of a coat to its wearer).

He'd . . . two shoes, and one shoe's a boot and not a fit. T. Hood, The Last Child.

Fit. adj. [Fr. fait, faict (Lat. factus), pass.
 part. of faire = make. Hence that which is fit is as that which is fashioned or made for anything. A coat that fits, even if bought ready made, is one that looks as if it were made for the wearer.]

1. Qualified; proper: (with for before the noun, and to before the verb).

Men of valour, fit to go out for war and battle.—
 1 Chronicles, vii. 11.

He lends him vain Goliath's merred sword,
 The fittest help just fortune could afford.

Croley, David's.

This fury fit for her intent she chose,

One who delights in wars and human woes.

Dryden, Virgil's Æneid.

It is a wrong use of my understanding to make it the rule and measure of another man's; a use which it is neither fit for, nor capable of.—Locke.

2. Convenient; meet; proper; right.

Since we have said it were good not to use men of ambitious natures, except it be upon necessity, it is fit we speak in what cases they are so.—Newton.

It is fit for a man to know his own abilities and weaknes, and not think himself obliged to imitate all that he thinks fit to praise.—Bayle.

If our forefathers thought fit to be grave and serious, I hope their posterity may laugh without offence.—Addison.

3. With the.—Gr. τὸ ἁπλοῦς.

The idle generalities we meet with . . . about the ideas of the good, the fit, and the becoming, have taken their rise from the same undue influence of popular epithets on the speculations of the learned.
 —Dugald Stewart, Philosophical Essays, p. 218.

Fit. v. a.

1. Accommodate to anything; suit one thing to another.

The carpenter marketh it out with a line: he fitteth
 it with planes.—Isaiah, xlv. 13.

Would fate permit
 To my desire I might my fortune fit.

Sir J. Denham.

2. Suit a person with anything: (us, 'The tailor fits his customer').

A trussmaker fitted the child with a pair of taddies, stuffed on the lame side.—Wierow, Surgery.

3. Be adapted to; suit any thing or person; become.

How evil fits it me to have such a son; and how much doth thy kindness upbraid my wickedness.—
Sir P. Sidney.

But the same things, sir, fit not you and me.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Beggar's Bush.

As much of the stone as was contiguous to the marasite, fitted the marasite so close as if it had been formerly liquid.—Boyle.

Fit out. Furnish; equip; supply with necessaries or decoration.

The English fleet could not be paid and manned, and fitted out, unless we encouraged trade and navigation.—Addison, Freholder.

The same combination, with the order of the elements reversed, forms the substantive Outfit.

Fit up. Furnish; make proper for the use or reception of any.

He has fitted up his farm.—Pope, Letter to Swift.

Fit. v. a. Be proper; be becoming: (as,
 'The coat fits').

Nor fits it to prolong the feast

Timeless, indecent, but retire to rest.

Pope, Homer's Odyssey.

Fitch. s. Same as Vetch.

Now is the season,
 For sowing of fitches, of beans, and of pease.

Tanner, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

The fitches are not thrashed with a thrashing instrument.—Isaiah, xxvii. 27.

Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentils, and millet, and fitches.—Ezekiel,
 iv. 9.

Fitchet, also Fitchew. s. [Fr. fissau.]

Polecat.

'Tis such another fitchew! marry, a perfum'd one:

What do you mean by this haunting of me?

Shakespeare, Othello, iv. 1.

The fitchet, the fulmar, and the like creatures, live upon the face and within the bowels of the earth.—J. Walton, Complete Angler.

Fistul. adj. Varied by paroxysms; dis-ordered by change of maladies.

Duncan is in his grave;
 After life's fistul fever, he sleeps well.

Treason has done his worst: nor steel nor poison
 Can touch him further.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 2.

Fifty. adv. In a fit manner.

1. Properly; justly; reasonably.

Where a man cannot fitly play his own part, if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage.—Bacon.
I cannot fitly compare marriage than to a lottery; for, in both, he that ventures may succeed, and may miss; and if he draw a prize, he hath a rich return of his venture; but in both lotteries there lies a pretty store of blanks for every prize.—Boyle.

2. Commodiously; meetly.

To take a latitude,
Run or stars are fitly view'd
At their brightest; but to conclude
Of longitudes, what other way have we
But to mark when and where the dark eclipses be?
Kepler.

An animal, in order to be movable, must be flexible; and therefore is fitly made of separate and small solid parts, replying with proper fluids.—Arbutnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Fitness. s. Something adapted to a particular purpose. Rare.

Poor becoming: 'twas a fitment for
The purpose I then followed.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 3.

Fitness. s. Attribute suggested by Fit; propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.

In things the fitness whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgement of antiquity, concurring with that which is revived, may induce them to think it not unfit.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Fitter. s. [from fit.] Often used as the second element in a compound, as gun-fitter, &c.

1. One who, or that which, fits, or makes fit, anything.

Nowing the sandy gravelly land in Devonshire and Cornwall with French furze seed, they reckon a great improver of their land, and a fitter of it for corn.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Specialty. See extract.

A fitter is a person who keeps an office for the sale of coals to ships. In 1660, the fitters, or coal-sellers, under the name of boatmen, were incorporated by a charter of Queen Elizabeth.—Flinders, Ports of Great Britain, p. 30. (Ord MS.)

Fitters. s. [German, fitzen.] Rags and tatters; pieces: (as in 'Gone to pieces,' 'All in pieces').

Where's the Frenchman?
Alas! he's all to fitters.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Custom of the Country.
They were in fitters about prosecuting their titles to this city.—Fuller, History of the Holy War, p. 225.

Fitting. part. adj. Becoming.

In the judicial law of Moses, adultery was punished with death; but it will not be prudent for a commonwealth to write after this copy, unless they have as great reason and the same necessity, and the same effect be likely to be consequent. It was highly fitting there, where it was so necessary to preserve the genealogy, and where every family had houses and inheritances, and expectations of its own; and where the crime of adultery was infinitely more inexcusable, by the perpetration of divorces and polygamy, than it can be with us.—Jeremy Taylor, Doctor Dubitantium, l. 384. (Ord MS.)

Fittingly. adv. In a fitting manner; properly; suitably.

It is rightly termed a new name, and very fittingly writ upon these Philadelphia.—Dr. H. More, Exposition of the Seven Churches, p. 138.

Which abstract terms do very fittingly agree with the notion we have put upon this symbolical earth.—Id., Conjectura Cubalica, p. 142.

Fitten. s. Fiction. Rare.

These things considered, I doubt not, but of your courtships, and ye will take back your fittens unto yourself.—Jewish Defence, p. 150. (Rich.)

The title of Paul the Fifth to the chair of Peter in the lawfulness of his election, is diversely reported; hath he therefore no true claim to his seat? But who ever placed Gregory's pond in Sicily? This is one of the fittens of his Fitz-Simons.—Bishop Hall, The Honour of the married Clergy, b. iii. s. 2. (Rich.) He doth feed you with fittens.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, l. 1. (Rich.)

Five. pr. [A.S. ff.] Numeral so called arithmetical symbol 5.

Bunch of fives. Slang.

Fivefold. adj. Multiplied by Five. See Eight.

Fiveleaf. s. Native plants so called, of the genera Potentilla and Tormentilla, of which the five-leaved character is well marked. Five-finger is the only name the editor has heard; and he doubts whether the word be really vernacular, and not a mere translation of the French cinquefoil. The following extract, which is from a polyglott dictionary, suggests this:

Piceleaved grass, or cinquefoil, groweth in low and shadowy places, sometimes by the water-side; it is dry in the third degree.—Barret, Alesorio: 1580.
Campana here he crows . . .
And from the falling-off by fiveleaf doth restore,
And melancholy cures by fiveleaf hellebore.
Drayton, Polyolbion, xlii.

Five. s. Colloquial for anything that counts as five: (as, 'a five,' i.e. stroke counting for five, at cricket).

Five. s. Game so called: (often used adjectively, as 'five court,' i.e. court in which fives are played).

Fives. s. [Fr. avives.] In Farriery. Disease, consisting in inflammation of the parotid glands, in horses. See Vives.

His horse sped with marina, rayed with the yellow, past cure of the fives, and stark-spoiled with the staggers.—Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iii. 2.

Fix. v. a. [Lat. fixus, pass. part. of figo; Fr. fixer.]

1. Make fast, firm, stable, or settled; establish invariably.

When custom hath fixed his eating to certain stated periods, his stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour.—Locke.

In Pope I cannot read a line,
But with a sigh I wish it mine;
When he can in one couplet fix
More sense than I can do in six. Swift. (Ord MS.)

2. Direct without variation.

Why are thine eyes set to the millen earth,
Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight?
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. l. 2.
Thus while the Trojan prince employs his eyes,
Fix'd in the walls with wonder and surprise.
Dryden, Virgil's Æneid.

3. Deprive of volatility.

We pronounce concerning gold that it is fixed.—Locke.

4. Transfix. Latinism.

While from the raging sword he vainly flies,
A bow of steel shall fix his trembling thighs.
G. Sandys.

Fix. v. n.

1. Rest; cease to wander.

Your kindness laments your fear,
Resolv'd to fix for ever here. Waller.

2. Lose volatility.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little slit and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

With on. Settle the opinion, choice, or resolution; decide; determine; select.

If we would be happy, we must fix upon some foundation that can never deceive us.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

He made himself their prey.

T' impose on their belief and Troy betray;

Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent

To do undaunted, or to circumvent.

Dryden, Virgil's Æneid.

Here hope began to dawn resolv'd to try,

She fix'd on this her utmost remedy.

Death was behind; but hard it was to die. Ibid.

In most bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we must fix on, and are most led by.—Locke.

Fix. s. Difficulty; quandary: (as 'being in a fix,' for which an equivalent phrase is 'fixing in cleft stick').

Fixation. s.

1. Stability; steadiness; firmness.

Which some would fain set up as idols to such an immovable fixation, as if it were impious to endeavour to remove them.—Jeremy Taylor, Artificial Happiness, p. 57.

A vehement desire of affection, with an unalterable fixation of resolution.—Killingbeck, Sermons, p. 32.

The fixation of your creed, sir, is the great object. . . . Hisbert the custom has been to fix creeds from Scripture. But Scripture you seem prepared to discard, whenever it does not please you.—Horne, Letter to Dr. Priestley, p. 7.

2. Settlement in a certain place.

To light, created in the first day, God gave no proper place or fixation.—Sir W. Nicolai, History of the World.

3. Confinement; forbearance of excursion.

They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects.—Watts.

4. In Chemistry. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.

Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed; the colour, the fragility or pliancy, and the volatility or fixation, compar'd with the simple bodies.—Bacon.

It is more difficult to make gold of other metals less ponderous and less material, than to make silver of lead or quicksilver, both of which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any roudness.—Id.

5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.

Salt dissolved upon a fixation return to its affected cubes.—Glanville, Synopsis Scientiarum.

Fixed. part. adj.

1. Determined; resolute: (as 'a man of fixed character').

2. In Chemistry, chiefly in combination with air, in which case it means gas which, until liberated by something which frees it from its combination, comport itself as a solid. Usually it means carbonic acid as liberated from chalk, or the like, by the addition of a stronger acid, or the air which causes the effervescence in soda water, bottled malt-liquor, champagne, and the like, by the removal of pressure.

Fixedly. adv. In a fixed manner.

1. Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.

If we pretend that the distinction of species, or sorts, is fixedly established by the real and secret constitutions of things.—Locke.

2. Steadfastly.

Her look is quaint, with which wisely beholding one, she fixedly looked upon another.—Translation of Boetius, p. 71: 1623.

From fixt.

Omnipotency, omniscience, and infinite goodness enlarge the spirit while it fixtly looks on them.—Bishop Burnet.

Fixedness. s. Attribute suggested by Fixed.

1. Stability; firmness.

The heavens, or any part of them, never stood still, but once, since they were made: but the earth was made for fixedness and stability.—Bishop Hall, Romains, p. 68.
The fixedness of the eternal Pates.
Dr. H. More, Song of the Soul, ii. 114.

2. Want or loss of volatility.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex ideas signified by the word gold.—Locke.

3. Solidity; coherence of parts.

Fluid or solid comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies.—Boyle.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.

The peril that arises to the heart from passion, is the fixedness of it, when, like a revolving planet, it enters into the vortex.—Bishop Hall, Contemplations, b. iv.

Fixidity. s. Fixedness: (in the extract, a chemical term, as opposed to volatility).

Rare.

Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to fixidity and volatility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them.—Boyle.

Fixing. verbal abs. Act of one who fixes anything; process by which anything is fixed; settlement; fixation.

They were ineffective and insignificant, but only present entertainments of their obedience, and divertments and fixings of their thoughts, apt to wander to the Gentile nations.—Jeremy Taylor, Doctor Dubitantium, l. 300. (Ord MS.)

Fixity. s. Fixedness; fixed character; coherence of parts: (opposed to volatility).

And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is consumed by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and re-action between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them?—Sir I. Newton, Optics.

Fixture. s. That which is fixed; specially, article of furniture fixed to a house, which is generally taken as part of the house itself: (as, 'He took the fixtures at a fair valuation').

Questions respecting the right to fixtures chiefly arise between three classes of persons: 1. landlord and tenant; 2. the executor of tenant for life or tenant in tail, and the remainder man or reversioner; 3. the personal representative and the heir of the deceased owner of the inheritance.—Toulmin, Law Dictionary. (Gruanger.)

Fixure. s. Rare.

1. Position.

The fixure of her eye hath motion in't,
As we were mock'd with art.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, v. 3.
Whose glorious fixure in so clear a sky.

Dryden, Baron's Wars, 1.

2. Stable pressure.

The firm fixure of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, III. 2.

3. Firmness; stable state.

Frights, changes, horrors,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their fixure.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, I. 2.

Flag. s. Kind of firework so called; (figuratively) gadabout, flighty person, flirt: (sometimes confounded with Fish-gig).

Then starts forth a flaggys,
And she brought a bear-flag.

Skelton, Poems, p. 138.

Flag. v. n. Emit a slight and transient or a slight continued noise; make a kind of hiss.

Fl- (+ b, s, &c.) As this begins a series of decidedly onomatopoeic words, the following extract is given in full.

'Flabby, Flap.'—The sound produced by the flapping of a loose broad surface is represented by the syllable flab, flap, flag, flack, flad, flat, varying, as usual in like cases, with the vowels a and i. Dutch flabberen, fladderen, to flap, flutter (Weiland); Platt Deutsch fladdrig, flaggy, fluttering; Dutch flaggeren, to flag, or hang loose (Kilian); German fladdern, flattern, flackern, to flap, flutter, flicker. From the first of the foregoing forms is English flabby, of such a nature as to give the sound flab, soft and limber, hanging loose. Dutch flabbe, a slap, a fly-flap, the flap of a wound; Platt Deutsch flabbe, a hanging lip. In like manner from the second form, a flap is any broad thin body hanging by one side so as to be able to give a blow with the flat surface, or a blow of such a nature. Then, as a loose, flapping condition is a sign of a want of elasticity, or of a faded condition in vegetable or animal structures, Provincial French flappe, faded, soft, rotten; une poire flappe. Flappi et terni, faded and tarnished. Italian flappo, flappy, withered. (Florio.) Flack, Flaccid, Flicker.—The third and fourth of the forms mentioned in the preceding article give rise to a wide range of derivatives. French flac, onomatopoeic d'un coup qu'on donne sur un corps retentissant (lécure); a slap, flap, slap, or clap, given by a thing that is thrown against a wall or unto the ground, and the report made by hands struck one against the other; flacquer, to make a thing to flap or clap by casting it violently against the ground. (Cotgrave.) Flack, a blow, especially with something loose and pliant. (Forby.) To flack, to hang loose, to palpitate.

"Her cold breste began to heat,
Her berte also to flacks and beat."

(Gower.)

German flacken, to move to and fro, to flicker. To flacker, to flutter, quiver; to flacket, to flap about, to flicker, fligger, to flutter. (Halliwell.) Then signifying the quality of things which flap, French flaque, flache, Breton flak, Italian flacco, weak, flabby, drooping, faint; Latin flaccere, to be flabby, flaccid, limber. From other modifications of the same radical image we have English slack, Latin laxus (= lak-s-us), loose, and with the nasal, languere, to flag, to be faint. Flag is one of the forms by which we represent the sound of a cloth flapping. Hence a flag is a portion of cloth fastened by one edge to a staff in order that it may be conspicuous as an ensign floating in the wind. Then, as Latin flaccere, to flag, to fall together, to droop, to become faint. The name of flag, Danish flag, is given to several sorts of marsh and water plants with simple sword-shaped leaves. As the leaves are strong enough to stand upright of themselves, it cannot be from the notion of drooping. In most European languages the name is taken from a sword, German schwertel, Spanish espadaña, Latin gladius, whence French glaiue (also called couteau des moissons), corn-flag, sword-grass. (Cotgrave.) There can be little doubt that the name of flag also is intended to mark the sword or flame-shaped figure of the leaves, probably from the wavy motion of flame or of a brandished sword. Danish flagre, to wave to and fro as flame; Spanish flamear (of snails), to shiver in the wind; French flambe, iris, water-flags; flamberge, a sword. The name of flammula is given to a ramunculus with spear or sword-shaped leaves. French flammule, spear-wort, or spear crowfoot. (Cotgrave.) Old Norse flag-brinn (brinn, gristle), cartilage ensiformis. In the dialect of Carinthia flegge is a lath. The syllable flag is used to represent other sudden noises, as a squall, blast of wind, or wind and rain, a flash of lightning; flaw, a blast of wind, sudden flash of fire, storm of snow. (Jamieson.) Swedish fluga, vind-fluga, a flaw of wind. (Willegran.) Dutch vlaege, a squall. (Kilian.) Again, applied to the sound of cracking or splitting, it gives Swedish fluga, a crack, breach, flaw; fluga sig, to scale off, fly off in scales; flaga (as French éclat, a splinter, from éclater, to crack), what separates in such a manner, the dross of iron driven off under the hammer, a flake of snow (provincially also called flag, Halliwell), the crust of a wound; flagna af, to separate in scales, to flake off. Hence must be explained Provincial Danish flag, flav, English flag, a turf or sod peeled off from the surface of the ground; Old Norse flagu, to cut turfs, and as a noun, a sod, chips, splinters. A flagstone is one that separates in layers or flakes. So Danish flise, to splinter, and as a noun, a flaw, a flagstone; Old Norse flis, a fluke, a splinter; Swedish snö-flis, a snow-flake. No doubt the designation of a piece or separate lump of anything may be derived from the sound of a blow in a different manner, viz. from the sound of a lump thrown on the ground, as Scotch blaud or dawd, English dod. So we have Bohemian flak, a blow, a good piece, a lump of meat or the like, and this perhaps may be the origin of Old Norse flak, a plank, a slice, English steaches, the portions into which a log of timber is sawn up. (Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.)

Fläbbargast. v. a. Confound. Slang.

The aldermen and town-councillors were what is sometimes emphatically styled fläbbargast; they were speechless from bewilderment.—Diercks the younger, Contingency, b. v. ch. iii.

Flabby. adj. Soft; not firm; easily shaking or yielding to the touch.

Followed a weak pulse, palpitations of the heart, flabby and black flesh, are symptoms of weak fibres.—Doan.

Pulls out the race contriv'd to prop
Her flabby dugs, and down they drop. Swift.

Flaccid. adj. [Lat. flaccidus.] Weak; limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be is, that the part against which the sun beateth wasteth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower.—Bacon.

They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unfit to pronounce the letter r.—Holler, Elements of Speech.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce sanguis, or as they harden and produce phlegm.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Flaccidity. s. Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with immobility.—Wiseeman, Surgery.

Flacket. s. Flask. Rare.

And he took an ewe laden with brende, and flacket of wine, and a kyddle, and sent them by David his sonne unto Saule.—1 Samuel, c. xvi. 2. Bible: 1651. (Rich.)

Flag. s. Flagstone.

Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other.—Woodward, On Fusils.

Flag. v. a. [from flag = stone.] Lay down with flags as in paving.

The sides and floor are all flagged with excellent marble.—Samuels.

A white stone used for flagging floors.—Woodward, On Fusils.

Flag. v. n.

1. Hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Heads of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in the which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives, and children lie together.—Doan.

It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl.—Boyle, New Experiments physico-mechanical touching the Spring of the Air.

2. Grow spiritless or dejected; grow feeble; lose vigour.

His stomach will expect victims at the usual hour, either fretting itself into a troublesome rage, or flagging into a downright want of appetite.—Locke.

Fame, when it is once at a stand, naturally flags and languishes.—Addison, Spectator.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
My love above the starry vault I raise,
Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust. Arbuthnot.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches till it begins to flag; he goes about watching when to devour us.—Swift.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen.—Id.

Time! on whose arbitrary wing
The varying hours must flag or fly.

Whose tardy winter, fleeting spring,
But drag or drive us on to die.

Byron, Occasional Pieces, To Time.

The writers before Aristotle are censured by him for inaccuracy, in placing under the head of introductions, as properly belonging to them, many things which are not more appropriate in the beginning than elsewhere; as, e.g. the contrivances for exciting the hearer's attention; which, as he observes, is an improper arrangement; since, though such an introduction may sometimes be required, it is, generally speaking, anywhere else rather than in the beginning, that the attention is likely to flag.—Whately, Elements of Rhetoric, pt. i. ch. iv. § 1.

Flag. v. a. Let fall into feebleness; suffer to droop.

The thought of dying may cool appetite and passion; it may blunt the edge of desire, and flag projects, chiefly those laid at a great distance.—Bishop Burnet, Sermons, p. 181.

Nothing so flags the spirits, disorders the blood, and enfeebles the whole body of man, as intense studies.—Richard, Grounds of the Contempt of the Clergy, p. 22.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
As well as Cupid, Time is blind;
Soon must those glories of thy face
The fate of vulgar beauty find.

FLAG

The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die.
Prior.

Flag. s. In Botany. In ordinary language this word applies to the leaf of several plants rather than to any particular plant as a whole. The leaf of the Typhaceæ, for instance, is often called a flag; though, when the very characteristic head, or flower, appears, no one would call the plant anything but a bulrush. Again, the common yellow Iris is called Cornflag, rarely flag; whilst the Acorus Calamus is the Sweetflag.

Such is the case in common language. In systematic Botany, with the Linnæan classification, Flags translates Alga; and has a meaning not only much wider than the ordinary one, but one which is wholly different from it. It means both the fresh and salt water cryptogamic plants, the Algæ and Conferve, not one of which is an ordinary flag, and many of which have nothing in common with the group. It is not impossible that, in this case, it may be a transformation of the word Alga itself.

She took an ark of bulrushes and laid it in the flage by the river's brink.—Ezekiel, ii. 3.
Can bulrushes but by the river grow?
Can flage there flourish where no waters flow.

There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flage or stones.—L. Walton, Complete Angler.
Cut flage roots, and the roots of other weeds.—
Mortimer, Household.

Flag. s. General term including banners, standards, signals, and colours of all kinds.

These flage of France that are advanced here,
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endamagement.

He hangs out as many flage as he deserveth vexill; square, if ship; if gallica, pendants.—G. Sandes, France.

Democritus are less subject to addition than where there are strips of nobles; for if men's eyes are upon the persons, it is for the business sake as flage, and not for flage or pedicure.—Lucan.

Let him be girt
With all the gridy legions that troop
Under the rocky flage of Achiron,
Harpies and hydrae, or all the monstrous forms
Twist Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,
And force him to restore his purchase back,
Or drag him by the curls to a foul death.

The French and Spaniard, when your flage appear,
Forget their hatred, and consent to fear.
The interpretation of that article about the flage is a ground at pleasure for opening a war.—Sir W. Temple.

In egipt's flage the golden serpents bear,
Erecting crests alike, like volucres rear,
And mingle friendly hissing in the air.

Then they, whose mothers, frantic with their fear,
In woods and wilds the flage of Bacchus bear,
And lead his dancers with diabevoil'd hair.

Flagging. part. adj. Languishing; having a tendency to faintness, weariness, or flaccidity.

The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead men's graves.

Juice in languor is somewhat less than blood;
for if the words be but becoming and signifying,
and the sense gentle, there is juice; but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarcely covering the bone, and shows like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that;
and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good.—B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,
The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
Forsake by fits, and fill the flagging sails.—Dryden.
My flagging soul flew under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air too clump, and legs along
As if she were a body in a body.

Flag-officer. s. Commander of a squadron.
Her grandfather was a flag-officer.—Addison, Spectator.

FLAG

Flagellation. s. [Lat. flagellatio, -onis = scouring, flogging; flagellum = scourge, lash.] Use of the scourge.

He underwent these previous pains which customarily antecede that suffering, as flagellation and bearing of the cross.—Bishop Pearson, Exposition of the Creed, art. iv.

By Brightwell all descended
As morning pray'r and flagellation end.
Garth, Dispensary.

Laurentius determined on one last effort; it was prompted, as he declared, by a heavenly vision. He appeared one morning before the king, and, casting off his robe, showed his back scarred and bleeding from a recent and severe flagellation. The king inquired who had dared to treat with such indignity a man of his rank and character. The bishop averred that St. Peter had appeared to him by night, and had inflicted that piteous last merited punishment for his cowardice in abandoning his heaven-appointed mission.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, b. iv. ch. iii.

Flageolet. s. [Fr.] Small flute; small instrument of wind music.
Play us a lesson on your flageolet.
Dr. H. More, Divine Dialogues.

Flaggy. adj.
1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,
Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
In gather'd full, and worketh speedily way.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

That basking in the sun thy legs may lie,
And resting there, thy flagegy pinions dry.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.
(Graft an apple on upon the stock of a colewort, and it will bear a great flagegy apple.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Flagitious. adj. [Lat. flagitiosus.]
1. Wicked; villainous; atrocious.

No villany or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it.—South, Sermons.

There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline.—Sir E. L'Estrange.

First, those flagitious times,
Pregnant with unknown crimes,
Conspire to violate the nuptial bed.

Perjury is a crime of no flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it.—Addison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purged off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a death in those flagitious times.—Pope.

2. Guilty of crimes.
He dies, and outcast of each church and state,
And, harder still, flagitious, yet not great.—Pope.

Flagitiousness. s. Attribute suggested by Flagitious; wickedness; villany.

A and others would intentionally avoid all acts of flagitiousness and villany.—The Student, Defence of Religion, l. 170. 170.

Flagon. s. [Fr. flacon.] Vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he poured a flageon of Rhonish on my head once.—Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 1.
More mad men with him by a snail in Clunee two silver flageons.—Bacon, A p. phlegma.
Did they coin phlegma, bowls, and flageons
Int' officers of horse and dragons?

One flageon walks the round, that none should think
They either change, or stint him of his drink.
Dryden, Juana's Sattire.

Flagrance. s. Notoriousness; glaring offence.

They bring to him a woman taken in the fragrance of her adultery.—Bishop Hall, Contemplations, b. iv.

Flagrancy. s.
1. Burning; heat; fire.

Last caught a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Notoriousness; glaring impudence.
In some places they will assemble diverse of their fastest courtiers, to draw the modest beauty of a virgin out of the flagrancy of her looks.—Sir E. Sandes, State of Religion.

Flagrant. adj. [Lat. flagrans, -antis, pres. part. of flagro = burn.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager; (generally used figuratively). Obsolete.

A thing which fills the mind with comfort and U P 2

FLAI

FLAI

heavenly delight, stirr'd up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto which which the words contain.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Policy.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Happpo, at her toilet's greasy task,
Then issuing flagrant to an evening mask:
No morning insects, that in muck burrow,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the setting sun.—Pope.

3. Red; imprinted red.
Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The devil's lash still flagrant on their back.—Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming into notice.
When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation.—Swift.

With equal poise let steady justice sway,
And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;
But till the proofs are clear the stroke delay.—Smith.

Flagrantly. adv. In a flagrant manner; notoriously.

An epigram of four lines [is] a species of wit as flagrantly unsuitable to the dignity, and as foreign to the nature of the lyric, as it is of the epic muse.—Warton, Essay on the Genius and Writings of Pope.

Flagrating. adj. Burning; deflagrating.

This lamp stands on the foot of an eagle or hawk, thereby, says Kircher, to represent how Typhon's destructive and flagrating power, lying hid in the sun, was made more temperate.—Græcuhil, Art of Enchanting, p. 336. 1708.

Flagration. s. Burning; (Conflagration the usual form).

See I in this glad farewell he doth appear,
Black with the constellations of his sphere,
Starting we num'd hard no flagration,
Hath cur'd all his fire in this one Onus.—Londoners.

Flagship. s. See extract.

Flag-officers [are] those who command the several squadrons of a fleet; as admirals, vice-admirals, and rear-admirals. The flag-officers in our sea pay, are the admiral, vice-admiral, and rear-admiral of the white, red, and blue; [a] flagship [is] a ship commanded by a general or flag-officer, who has a right to carry a flag in contradistinction to the secondary vessels under the command thereof. Flagstaves are the staves set on the heads of the top-gallant masts, serving to let fly, and unfurl, the flag.—Rees, Cyclopaedia.

Flagstaff. s. Staff on which a flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,
On wings of all the winds to combat flew;
His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,
And bloody crosses on his flagstaffs rose.

Flagstone. s. Stone for the pavement for foot-passengers. See Fl.

Flagstones will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flag, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata.—Woodward, On Fossils.

Flagworm. s. Grub bred in watery places, and found at the root of flags or sedges.

He will in the three hot months bite at a flagworm, or a green gracie.—L. Walton, Angler.

Flail. s. [German, fliegel.] Instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear; tool of the threshers.

Our soldiers, like the night owl's lazy flight,
Be like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fell gently down as if they struck their friends.

When in one night, ere glitt'ring of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thrav'd the corn,
That ten day-labourers could not end.

In this pile shall reign a mighty prince,
Born for a scourge of it, and flail of sense.—Dryden.

The dexterous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder (Hudson and Cline) skill in arms and government.—Locke.

The thrasher, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;
The proverb says, no fence against a flail.—Swift.

In the following extract it means a particular kind of flail-like weapon, which during the time of the Popish plots of the reign of Charles II. was carried by Protestants who feared, or affected to fear, danger to their persons.

Trenchard belonged to the extreme section of the Whig party. . . . He had, in the days of Popery-burnings and of Protestant flails, been one of the renowned Green Ribbon Club; he had been an active member of several story parliaments. . . . he had led to the Continent: he had been long an exile, and he had been executed by name from the general pardon of 1688.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xix.

Flake. s.

1. Anything that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles, like red flakes in the element, when the weather is hottest.—Sir L. Sidney.
And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Illum all amas'd, and almost made a beard.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice.—T. Burnet.

Small drops of a misting rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured teicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow.—Grew, Chymical Surgery.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

2. Stratum; layer; film; lamina.

The flake of his tough flesh so firmly bound,
As not to be divorced by a wound. G. Sandys.
The teeth out away great flakes of the metal, till
It received the perfect form the teeth would make.—Morson, Mechanical Exercises.

3. In Archaeology. Flint instrument of rude make; see extract.

As regards their form, they are grouped by Mr. Evans under three heads:—1. Flint flakes, apparently intended for arrowheads or knives; 2. Pointed weapons, analogous to lance or spear heads; 3. Oval or almond-shaped implements, presenting a cutting edge all round. The flakes offer no special peculiarities. . . . Similar articles have been used by savages in all ages and countries, where flint or obsidian was obtainable.—Sir J. Lubbock, On the Antiquity of Man, in Natural History Review, no. 7.

4. In Horticulture. Variety of picotee in which the colours are distributed in flakes.

Flake. v. a. Form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inelement blow,
Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow.
Pope or Brome, Translation of the Odyssey.

Flaky. adj.

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on
And flaky darkness breaks within the East.
Shakespeare, Richard III. v. 3.
The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire.

Pope.

Hence, when the snows in winter cease to weep,
And undissolved their flaky texture keep,
The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in summer, and those banks disdain.

Sir E. Blackmore.

2. Laminar.

(For example see extract under Flaccidity.)

Flam. s. [?]

1. Freak; whim; fancy.

Hard trifles, anagrams,
Or ecstasies, or your finer flams
Of eyes and halberds, cradles and a hearse,
A pair of scissors, and a comb in verse!

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Thou hast more of
These flams in thee, these musty doubts.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Loyal Subject.

She sings admirably!
But still when any hope was, as 'tis her trick
To minister enough of those, then presently
With some new flam or other, nothing to the matter,
And such a frown, as would sink all before her,
She takes her chamber.

Id., Humorous Lieutenant.

2. Falsehood; lie; illusive pretext.

A flam more senseless than the merry
Of old arumpsey and aury. Butler, Hudibras.
Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or, indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion.—South, Sermons.

What are most of the histories of the world but lies? Lies immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity.—South, Sermons.

I laughed in my sleeve at your solemn pleadings, when lo! while I was valuing myself upon this flam put upon you in New South Wales, the devil in England, jealous possibly of any lie-children not his own, or working after my covet, has actually insigated our friend (not three days since) to the commission of a matrimony, which I had only conjured up for your diversion.—Lamb, Distast Correspondence.

Flam. v. a. Deceive with a lie. Slang.

For so our ignorance was flamm'd,
To damn ourselves 't' avoid being damn'd.

Butler, Hudibras.

God is not to be flamm'd off with lies, who knows exactly what thou canst do, and what not.—South, Sermons.

adverb. s. [Fr.] Lighted torch.

The king seized a flambeau with seal to destroy.

Dryden.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death.
—Addison, Guardian.

Flame. s. [Lat. flamma.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, no hot as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

What flame, what lightning e'er
So quickly an active force did bear?

Cowley.

2. Fire.

Joe, Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now.

Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest flame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame;
In both our English souls is express'd,
Lofty and bold, but negligently dress'd.

Waller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Amid with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.

Pope.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire.
(Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love.
No warning of th' approaching flames;
Swiftly like sudden death it came:
I lov'd the moment I beheld.

Cowley.

Id.

Granville.

6. Sweetheart: (as, 'She is an old flame of mine').

In a flame. (Figuratively) Excited.

While the west was thus rising to confront the king, the north was all in a flame behind him. On the sixteenth Belamere took arms in Cheshire.— Macaulay, History of England, ch. ix.

Flame. v. n.

1. Shine as fire, or as flame; burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this?—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 2.

Hail the Almighty Power
Hurld headlong flaming through the ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 44.

A dungeon horrible on all sides round
As one great furnace flam'd; yet from those flames
No light, but rather darkness visible
Served only to discover sights of woe. Id. l. 61.

2. Break out in violence of passion.

Lawless fires, should such flame in you,
As I must ne'er believe.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Lover's Progress.

Flame. v. a. Inflame; excite; animate.

Much was he mov'd at that rustic sight;
And, flam'd with zeal of vengeance inwardly,
He ask'd who had that dame so foully slight.

Spenser, Faerie Queen, v. 1, 14.

And since their courage is so nobly flam'd,
This morning we'll behold the champions
Within the list.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Coronation.

Flame-colour. s. Colour of flame.

The first was Splendour in a robe of flame-colour.
—B. Jonson, Masques at Court.
Changing it from a red-rose crimson to flamecolour.—Sir W. Petty, in Sprat's History of the Royal Society, p. 280.

Flame-coloured. adj. Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferently well in flame-coloured stockings.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, l. 3.
August shall bear the form of a young man of a stern and choleric aspect, in a flame-coloured garment.—Pascham.

Flame-eyed. adj. Having eyes like flames.

Nor sea, nor shade, nor shield, nor rock, nor cave,
Nor silent desert, nor the sullen grave,
Where flame-eyed Fury means to smite, can save.

Quarles, Emblems.

Flameless. adj. Destitute of, or wanting, flame or incense.

Both king, and priest, obnoxious to his hate,

Desecrate his sanctuary, and forsake
His flameless altar. G. Sandys, Lament, p. 4.

Flamen. s. [Latin.] Priest; one that officiates in solemn offices.

The heathen Romans had their flamens, and arch-flamens, the Britons and Gauls their druids.—Forbes, Hippocris Dipl., p. 130.

A drear and dying sound
Affrights the flamens at their service quaint.

Milton, Ode on the Nativity.

Then first the flamens tasted living food;
Next his grim idol smear'd with human blood.

Pope.

Flaming. part. adj. Showing like flame: (generally used, with a wide application, in a bad sense, meaning ostentatiously gaudy as applied to articles of dress; exaggerated as applied to a narrative, e.g. 'he gave a flaming account, or description').

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And closing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

Flaming. verbal abs. Act of bursting out in flames.

Which honour I to fiery flames compare;
For when they flash and flourish most of all,
Then suddenly their flames quench'd are.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 228.

Flamingo. s. Bird so called, Phenicopterus ruber, combining the characters of the crane (in its legs) with those in its beak, which has also the special characteristic of curving downwards) of the goose tribe.

Here [at the Mauritius island] are also species of hawks, and sundry other birds; as godawks, hob-bles, pame-flamingoes, geese.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years' Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 383.

Flaminal. adj. Belonging to the Roman priest.

Superstitious copes and flaminal vestures.—Milton, Reason of Church Government, li. 2.

Flammability. s. Capability of being inflamed: (Inflammability commoner).

In the sulphur of bodies torried, that is, the oily, fat and mucous parts, consist the principles of flammability.—Sir T. Browne.

Flammation. s. Act of setting on flame.

Rare.
White or crystalline arsenick, being artificial, and sublimed with salt, will not endure flammation.—
Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Flammaceous. adj. Consisting of flame; resembling flame. Rare.

This flammaceous light is not over all the body.—*Sir
T. Browne*.

Flamy. adj.

1. Inflamed; burning; blazing.

My thoughts imprison'd in my secret wood,
With flamy breaths do issue off in sound.

Sir P. Sidney.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mix-gle, yet bound in by a body they will.—Boon, Natural and Experimental History.

3. Flame-coloured.

A flamy redness will overspread the heavens.—*Sir
T. Herbert, Relation of some Years' Travels into Africa and the Great Asia*, p. 83.

Flank. s. [Fr. flanc.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank.
—Pascham.

Do not those goodly flanks and brackets march up in your stately chargers?—Milton, Animadversions upon a Defence of the Humble Remonstrance.

2. In man. Lateral part of the lower belly.

He covereth his face with his flanks, and maketh collops of fat on his flanks.—Job, xv. 27.
He mid, and poit'd in air the jav'lin sent;
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corset pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downward near his flank descends.

Pope.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from the rampier in front, and from the galleries that lay at us in flank.—Boon, Considerations on War with Africa.
Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such sort as he might take the flank of the enemy.—
Sir J. Hayward.

2. In Fortification. See extract.

Flank, low, covered, or retired, is the platform of the element which lies hid in the bastion; otherwise called the orillon. Flank is that from whence a cannon playing fresh bullets directly in the face of the opposite bastion. Flank razant, or rasant, is the point from whence the line of defence begins, from the conjunction of which with the curtain the shot only reach the next bastion, which happens when the face cannot be discovered but from the flank alone. Flanks simple are lines going from the angle of the shoulder to the curtain, whose chief office is for the defence of the most and place. . . . Flanked nucle . . . is the angle formed by the two faces of the bastion, which, of course, forms the point of the bastion. Flanking, in the general, is the act of discovering and firing upon the side of a place, body, bastion, &c. To flank a place is to dispose a place, or other work, in such a manner that there shall be no part of the place but what may be played on both in front and rear. Any fortification that has no defence but just right forward is faulty; and to render it complete, one part ought to be made to flank the other.—Ross, Cyclopaedia, in voce.

Flank, v. a. (Overlook or command, by a strategic movement, the side of an opponent, whether in the way of men or fortifications; take anything sideways. It may apply to either an attack or a defence which consists in a counter attack.

We cannot talk in rank and file, and flank and rear our discourages with military allusion.—Scott, Sermon before the Artillery Company, Works, li. 24: 1600.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,
Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay.

Flank, v. n. Border; touch.

That side, which flanks on the sea and haven, needs no art to fortify it.—Huller, Remains (Tyler's ed.), l. 417.

Flanked, part. adj. See extract under Flank, s. 2.

Flanker, s. That which flanks; fortification jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and sore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire.—Knutler, History of the Turks.

Like storms of hail the stones fell down from high,
Cast from the bulwarks, flankers, ports, and towers.

In this disorder, a flanker by mischance was blown up; but the siege continued.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 100.

Flanker, v. a. Defend by lateral fortifications. Rare.

The city is compassed with a thick wall, flanked, and mounted about.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 40.

The castle was neither so weakly manned, nor flanked, as they were made to believe.—Ibid., p. 277.

Flanker, v. n. Come on sideways. Rare.
Where sharp winds do rather flanker than blow fully opposite upon our plantations, they thrive best.—Reyn, Sylva, l. iii. § 8.

Flanking, verbal abs. See extract under Flank, s. 2.

Flannel, s. [Welsh, gwlanen = wool.] Light woolen fabric, less close than cloth and less massy than blanketing or felling, first woven in Wales.

I am not able to answer the Welsh flannel.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 3.

Flap, s.

1. Anything (often part of a dress) that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side; motion of anything broad and loose.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air.—Sir T. Browne.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal by turning down the flaps.—Sharp, Surgery.

2. In Farriery. See extract.

When a horse has the flaps, you may perceive his lips swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the bilium is like the white of an egg; cut some sinews with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure.—Farrer's Dictionary.

Flap, v. a.

1. Fan with a flap.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt that stinks and stings.

Pope, Epistle to Arbuthnot.

2. Take off by flapping down on anything.
A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a boot; the eagle flap'd off the former, and devoured the other.—Sir E. L'Estrange.

3. Move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of anything broad.

With fruitless toil
Flap slimy pinions off, to extricate
Their feet in liquid sharks' blood.
Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;
And shrinking at her window thence
The raven flap'd his wing.

Philips.
Flap, v. n. Give the sound or appearance of a flap.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maddened, to carry people from be-young.—Sir E. L'Estrange.

Flapping, part. adj. Acting as that which flaps.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn,
Let thy word wig, long used to storm, be worn;
This knows the powder'd footman, and with care
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair.

Gey, Trinia.

Flapping, verbal abs. Act of that which flaps.
The dire flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel.—Dryden.

Flapdragon, s. Small edible taken out of a pan or dish of some urulent spirit to which light has been set, and swallowed, as the weakness of the flame allows it to be done with impunity, while burning; sometimes the word applies to any fanciful or unnatural viand which can be drunk off at a gulp out of liquor; snapdragon.

Drinks candles ends for flapdragons, and rides the wild mare with the boys.—*Shakespeare, Henry
IV. Part II.*, li. 4.

Flapdragon, healths, whiffs, and all such swaggering humours.—B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Flapdragon, v. a. Gulp, or swallow, as a flapdragon.

But to make an end of the ship, to see how the sea flapdragons it.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale,
iii. 3.

Flapped, adj. Having loose and broad ears.
A whorson, beetle-headed, flapped knave.—
Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iv. 1.

Flapjack, s. [?] Pancake; fritter.
We'll have fish for holidays, fish for fasting-days,
and moreover puddings and flapjacks; and thou shalt be welcome.—Shakespeare, Pericles, ii. 1.

Flapmouthed, adj. Having loose lips.
When he [the hound] had flap'd his noise,
Another flap-mouth'd mourner, black and grim,
Against the welkin valleys out his voice,

Shakespeare, Venus and Adonis

Flipper, s. One who, or that which, flaps: (In the following extract, one who endeavours to make another remember, the metaphor being taken from Swift's account of the flappers, or remembrancers, of the philosophers of Laputa.)

I write to you, by way of flipper, to put you in mind of yourself.—Lord Chesterfield.

Flare, v. n. [Danish, flægge.] Show like flame: (the word differs from blaze in suggesting no notion of sound; from flash in suggesting no notion of dazzling or suddenness; and from burn in suggesting but slightly the notion of heat: hence it often applies to bright and gaudy colours, meaning little more than flam.)

I cannot stay
Flaring in sunshine all the day.

Prior.
With ribands pendant, flaring 'bout her head.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iv. 3.

Flare up. Rouse yourself; make a show.

Slang.

Flaring, part. adj. Having the character of that which flares.

Doctrine and life, colours and light, in one
When they combine and mingle, bring
A strong regard and awe; but speech alone
Doth vanish like a flaring thing,
And in the ear, not conscience, ring. G. Herbert

When the sun begins to ding
His flaring beams, me, sudden, bring
To arched walks of twilight groves.
Milton, Il Penseroso, 181.

Flash, s.

1. Sudden, quick, transitory blaze.

When the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heav'n, I did prevent myself
Even in the aim and very flash of it.

Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, i. 3.

We see a flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

One with a flash begins, and ends in smoke;
The other out of smoke brings glorious light.
*Lord Bacon, Translation of Horace's
Art of Poetry*.

And as flashes, when with heaven he strove,
Died, the fiery lightning from afar,
At fifty mouths his flaming breath expires,
And flashes for flashes returns, and fires for fires.

Dryden, Virgil's Aeneid.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.
Where he your gives now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar?—Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 1.

Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for awhile suspend reflection, and baffle the sinner from himself, to such discourses as awaken conscience.—Rogers.

3. Short transient state.

The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash.
—Bacon.

4. Slang of thieves. Construction adjectival, as 'a flash-looking woman,' 'flash man,'
'flash note.'

Flash, v. n.

1. Glitter with a quick and transient flame.

This salt, powdered and put into a crucible, was,
by the injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash divers times almost like melted nitre.—Boyle.

2. Burst out into any kind of violence.

By day and night he wrongs me; every hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds.

Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 3.

3. Break out into wit, merriment, or bright thought.

They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought.—Fulton, Dissertation on reading the Classics.

4. Cut a figure.

Can't see any disgrace in taking up a brown munket, or the end of a woman's ear, or a knot, anything better than bickering me, or spunging upon my customers, and flashing it away in their old clothes.
—O'Keefe, Pointe-a-la-Pic, iii. 1.

Flash, v. a.

1. Strike up large bodies of water from the surface; splash.

With his raging arms he rudely flash'd
The waves about, and all his armour swept,
That all the blood and filth away was wash'd.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

If the sea-water be flushed with a stick or oar, the same catcheth a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire.—Carver, Survey of Cornwall.

2. Trick up in a showy manner.

Off have I wash'd my savoury periods
With sugred words, to delude Gustave's taste;
And off embellish'd my entreative phrases
With smelling flowers of verbiage rhetoric,
Lamming and flushing it with various dyes,
To draw proud Venus to me by the eyes.

Brewer, Comedy of Languages, l. 1: 1607.

3. ? Flush.

The Israelites were so flushed with their former victories, that now they think no wars or men can stand before them.—Bishop Hall, Achan. (Ord Mt.)

Flash-house, s. House of call for thieves.

The excesses of that age remind us of the humours of a gang of footpads, revelling with their favourite beauties at a flash-house.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Italian's Constitutional History.

Flashiness, s. Attribute suggested by Flashy.

It is reported that cucumbers will prove more tender and dainty, if their seeds be steeped a little in milk; the same experiment may be made in artichokes and other seeds, when you would take away either their flashiness or bitterness.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Flashy, adj.

1. Empty; not solid; showy without substance.

Flashy will cannot fathom the whole extent of a large discourse.—Sir K. Digby, Operations and Nature of Man's Soul.

When they list, their lean and flasky songs
Grate on their acranal pipes of wretched straw.
Milton, Lycidas, 123.
This mean conceit, this darling mystery,
Which thou think'st nothing, friend! thou shalt not buy;
Nor will I change for all the flasky wit.

Dryden, Persius's Satires.
What a high notion of honour!—a much handsomer man, too, than either Tallyho or the Colonel —Ere, he's a charming, flasky beau!—O'Keefe, Funtasticism, iii. 3.

2. Insuper; without force or spirit.
Distilled books are, like common distilled waters, flasky things.—Bacon, Essays.
The taste that most offend in fruits, herbs, and roots, are bitter, harsh, sour, watery, or flasky.—
Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Flask. s.

1. Bottle; vessel.
Thou for the Bourdeaux you may freely ask;
But the Champagne is to each man his flask.
King.

2. Powderhorn.

- Powder in a skilless soldier's flask
Is set on fire. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iii. 3.

3. Quiver.

- The sun is spent, and now his flasks
Send forth light squibs, no constant rays.
Donne, Poems, p. 35.

Flasket. s.

1. Vessel in which viands are served.
Another plac'd
The silver stands, with golden flaskets grac'd.
Pope, Homer's Odyssey.

2. Long shallow basket.

- Each one had a little wicker basket,
Made of fine twigs, entailed curiously,
In which they gather'd flowers to fill their flasket.
Spenser, Prothalamion.

Flat. adj. [German, platt.]

1. Level, either in respect to the absence of inclination or slope, or the application of protuberances, prominences, or anything in relief.

In the dawning of the next day we might plainly discern it was a land flat to our sight, and full of bosquage. Bacon.

2. Horizontal: (as opposed to erect).

- The wood-horn people fall before her flat,
And worship her as goddess of the wood.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.
That lamentable wound,
Which laid that wretched prince flat on the ground.
Daniel.

In them is plainest taught, and easiest learnt,
What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so,
What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat.
Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 361.
That Christ-church stands above ground, and that the church of Westminster lies not flat upon it,
Is your lordship's commendation.—South, Sermons.

3. Figuratively. Insuper.

- How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!
Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 2.
He, like a pulling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece.
Id., Troilus and Cressida, iv. 1.

Taste no divine! that what of sweet before
Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this and harsh.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 107.
To one firmly persuaded of the reality of heavenly happiness, and earnestly desirous of obtaining it, all earthly satisfactions must needs look little, and grow flat and unavailing.—Bishop Atterbury, Sermons.

The wily fields,
Rejoicing in rich mold, most ample fruit
Of beautiful form produce; pleasing to sight,
But to the tongue inelegant and flat.
Philips.

4. Dull; unamused; frigid.

- Short speeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intentions; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted.—Bacon.
Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff.
Dryden, Don Sebastian.

5. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.

- I feel my genial spirits droop,
My hopes all flat, nature within me woe
In all her functions weary of herself.
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 304.

6. Peremptory; absolute; downright.

- His horse with flat urging taught him, that discrete stays make speedy journeys.—Sir P. Sidney.
It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word.
—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes;
Those prisoners you shall keep.—I will, that's flat.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 3.

Thus repuls'd, our final hope
In flat despair: we must exasperate
The Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 142.

If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Faintly give pardon by submissiveness:
But he that loads, shuts that out of his story:
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy
With his meek clod of earth the spacious sky.
G. Herbert.

You had broke and robb'd his house,
And stole his tallanquique loaves;
And all his new-found old inventions,
With flat felonious intentions. Butler, Hudibras.
Come, pray hind, let's go abroad before the late;
For I will go, that's flat and plain.—Wycherley, The Country Wife.

7. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
The upper end of the windpipe is ended with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate
it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp.—Ray, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Used adverbially.

Last a passion of repent
Told me flat, that Desire
Was a brand of love's fire. E. Greene, Poems.

Flat. s.

1. Level; extended plane; even ground; low district.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
To o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 1.
Half my power's this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln wastes have devour'd them.
Id., King John, v. 6.

The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board, and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower.—Bacon.

Because the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expose flesh or fish, both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth.—Id.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear.—*Sir
H. Wotton, Elements of Architecture.*

He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

2. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shadows and of flats.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 1.

The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and muds, if wind and weather be not very favourable.—Sir W. Raleigh, Essays.

Having newly left these grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, they are now turn'd into their unballasted wits in fa-tionless and unquiet deeds of controversy.—Milton, Tractate on Education.
Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
And dangerous flats, in secret ambush lay
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray.
Dryden.

Must we now have an ocean of more flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation?—Bentley.

3. Broad side of a blade.

A darted mandata came
From that great will which moves this mighty frame,
Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the demon of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that stay behind.
Dryden.

4. Surface without relief or prominences.

Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills?—Bentley, Sermons.

5. In Music. Kind of additional or half note, contrived, together with sharps, to remedy the defects of musical instruments; which, taking the name of the natural note next above it, and having a distinctive mark, is called a flat. Thus D flat signifies a semitone below D natural.

6. Story of a building: (especially when fitted up for the accommodation of a family on a single story, each story being a house, as 'In Edinburgh and many continental towns, when a family in London has to take a house, it takes a flat.'

7. Person easily duped; witless person.

Flat. v. a.

1. Level; depress; make broad and smooth.

The ancients say, if you take two tips of several fruit-trees, and flat them on the sides, and bind them close, and set them in the ground, they will come up in one stock.—Bacon.

With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,
Distends their swelling tips, and flats their nose.
Cresset.

2. Make vapid.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrap'd in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four feet deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were;
otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juices somewhat flatt'd.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

3. Render unanimated or evanid.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and blunder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpreparedness and confused variety to distract and lose it.—Bishop Basilike.

It mortifies the body, and flats the pleasure of the senses.—Glaucilla, Sermons, p. 270.

Flat. v. n. Grow flat: (opposed to swell).

I burst it the second time, and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more than at first. Sir W. Temple.

The hopes of these great actions promis'd by the imperialists this summer on the Rhine began to flat.
—Id., Works, i. 418. (Ord. MS.)

Flat-cap. s. Name or nickname given to the citizens of London from the shape and fashion of their headgear.

Trade! to the city, child,
A flat-cap will become thee.
*Beaumont and Fletcher, Honest Man's Fortune,
v. last scene. (Nares by H. & W.)*

Flatness. adj. Producing wind; flatulent. Rare.

Kat not too many of those apples; they be very flatice.—Drover, Comedy of Lingua, 1637.

Flatting. v. With the flat put down- wards; not edgewise. See Groveling.

What a blow was there given!—An it had not fallen flatting. Shakespeare, Tempest, ii. 1.

Flatly. adv. In a flat manner.

He in those wars had flatly refused his aid.—*Sir
P. Sidney.*

Thereupon they flatly disavouch
To yield him more obedience, or support. Daniel.
Pray give me your advice. First, says Paul, I will give you my opinion, which is flatly that you are in the wrong; for supposing what is in the wrong, was the subject of your contention any ways material?—Fielding, Adventures of Joseph Andrews.

Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of each as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his existence, exclude him from directing the world.—Bentley.

Flatness. s. Attribute suggested by Flat.

1. Evenness; level extension; want of relief or prominence.

It appears so very plain and uniform, that one would think the corner looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture.
—Addison, Dialogue on the Usefulness of ancient Medals.

2. Deadness; insipidity; vapidness.

Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel.—
Kortimer, Husbandry.

3. Dejection of fortune.

The emperor of Russia was my father;
Oh, that he were alive and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iii. 2.

4. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.

How flat does obscurity, flatness, and importunity flow in upon our meditations! 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourse.—Collier.

FLAT

5. Dullness; insipidity; frigidity.

Some of Homer's translators have swelled into fatness, and others sunk into flatness.—Pope, Preface to the Translation of Homer's Iliad.

6. Contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.

Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pall of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Flat-nosed. adj. Having a flat nose; canorous.

If she be flat-nosed, she is lovely.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 222.

What vicious clerk would fear to dwell there, where all the crew are white, be they never so black; and where flat-nosed people are the most comely.—Bishop Norton, Discharge of five Imputations from the Romish Party, p. 226.

Flatness. v. a.

1. Make flat.

As if for that time their round bodies flattened were.

Lucretius, Poem, p. 228.

2. Bent down to the ground.

If they should lie in it, and beat it down, or flatten it, it will rise again.—Norimer, Husbandry.

Flatness. v. n. Grow even or level; grow dull and insipid.

Here joys that endure for ever, fresh and in vigour, are opposed to satisfactions that are attended with satiety and surfeit, and flatten in the very tasting.—Sir E. D. Estrange.

Flatter. v. a.

1. Soothe with praises; please with blandishments; gratify with servile obsequiousness; gain by false compliments.

He that flattered his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet.—Proverbs, xix. 2.

He flattered himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful.—Psalm, xxxvi. 2.

When I tell him he flatters flatters, He says he does; being then most flattered.

Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, ii. 1.

2. Please; soothe.

A concert of voices supporting themselves by their different parts makes a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears and flattens them.—Dryden, Translation of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

Flatterer. s. One who flatters; fawner; wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing flatteries.

Some praise proceed merely of flattery, and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man; if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and in most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer cuttle him to perforce.—Bacon, Essays.

If we from wealth to poverty descend, Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend.

Dryden.

After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants.—Addison, Grandison.

The publick should know this; yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer.—Swift.

Flattering. part. adj. Having the character of a flatterer; fallacious.

Who always vaunt, always amiable, Hopeless of, flattering sales

Milton.

Translation of Ad Pyrrham, Hor. Carm. l. 6.

Flatteringly. adv. In a flattering manner.

Flatteringly to creep, to dissemble.—Bale, Discourses on the Revelations, pt. i. sign. l. iii. h. 1550.

He flatteringly encouraged him in the opinion of his own merits.—Sir T. Browne, Microscopica, p. 108.

His pictures of women are flatteringly drawn.—Cumberland, Observer, no. 58. (Ord. M.)

Flattery. s. False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness.

And hold it mean to borrow ought from flattery.

Boyle.

Simple pride for flattery makes demands.

Pope.

See how they beg an aim of flattery!

They languish, O! support them with a lie.

Young.

Flatfish. adj. Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.

There are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flatfish shape.—Woodward, On Fossils.

Flatulence. s. See Flatus.

When flatulences of the stomach or even of the colon is excessive, the pressure on the diaphragm and heart occasioned by it, especially if it rises from the stomach into the œsophagus, and is interrupted from escaping, causes intermissions of the pulse, most distressing feelings in the region of the heart and epigastrium, closely resembling angina pectoris, or even occasional paroxysms of this complaint; and in cases of fatty softening or degeneration of the walls of the heart, it may even cause sudden death.—Copland, Dictionary of Practical Medicine.

FLAU

Flatulency. s.

1. Windiness; fullness of wind; turgescence by wind confined.

Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency.—Arbuthnot.

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.

Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions.—Glanville.

3. See Flatus.

Flatulent. adj.

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles, are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion.—Arbuthnot.

Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again.—Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity.—Glanville, Serpentina Scientifica.

How many of those flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works.—Dryden.

3. See Flatus.

Flatulosity. s. Windiness; fullness of air.

Rare.

The cause is flatulosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expand; and all purgers have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly.—Bacon.

Flatulous. adj. Windy; full of flatus.

Rimbarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatulous nor kail-some; and so sendeth it to the mesenteric veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Her mother hath of late been much troubled (and I think as much in her fancy, which is the greater cure, as in her body,) with a pain in her side, which changed place, and therefore is sure but a flatulous infirmity.—Sir H. Wotton, Reliquia Wottoniana, p. 402.

Flatus. s. [Latin.]

1. Breath of air.

You make the soul, as being a mere flatus, to have a more precious substance, even than mere matter itself.—Clarke, Letter to Duboult, p. 31.

2. Wind collected in the intestines; disturbance caused by it; act of getting rid of it, for which it is a convenient euphemism.

Flatulence means the general condition of the system rather than any particular collection of wind, i.e. windiness rather than wind. Flatulency is, perhaps, the commoner term, though in the work quoted, as in many others, both are used.

Flatulency of the stomach will be considered—in respect of its idiopathic occurrence; as a symptom of other disorders; and with reference to the disturbances it tends either to induce or to aggravate.—Primary or idiopathic flatulency of the stomach is met with chiefly when the stomach is empty, or after the process of digestion in this viscus is completed; and is seldom associated either with impaired appetite, or diminished powers of digestion. It is most troublesome in the morning before breakfast, or during long fasting; or when an unusually protracted period has elapsed between meals. In such cases, the flatus often rises into the œsophagus, producing much uneasiness and often distress, owing to its exertion being prevented by the spasmodic constriction of the upper part of this tube, or by the descending innervation; and in this way a very painful spasmodic dysphagia is often produced.—Copland, Dictionary of Practical Medicine.

Flatwise. adj. With the flat downwards; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the side of the stratum in which it was reposed.—Woodward, On Fossils.

Flaunt. v. n. [?]

1. Make a fluttering show in apparel.

You not, you loiter about alhousen, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

FLAW

FLAW

2. Face; carry a bold or saucy appearance.

The tropical rhetorician and the flaunting orator, the jibing satyr and scurrilous comedian.—Bishop Selk Ward, Apology for the Mysteries of the Gospel, p. 15: 1672.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently vain enough to immoderate their own desires to their vanity.—Boyle.

3. Be hung with something loose and flying.

Fortune to men has some small difference made: One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade.

Pope, Essays.

Flaunt. s.

1. Anything loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble, Wildly bound up, what would he say? or how Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold The sternness of his presence?

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

2. Ostentatious display; brag.

But thou comest hither with thy flourish, Thy flaunts, and levees, to abuse men's manners?—Beaumont and Fletcher, Pistol One.

Flaunting. part. adj. Displaying itself ostentatiously.

'Twas when young Eustace sought his battles in compliments and cruises, when his understanding waved in a flaunting feather, and his best contemplation looked no further than a new-fashioned doublet.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Elder Brother.

With ivy canopied, and interwoven

With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton, Comus, 644.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,

For useless ornament and flaunting show;

We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,

And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine.

Dryden, Juvenal's Satires.

Bully Bluck and Magog Wrath, with all their fierce looks, flaunting colours, loud cheers, and desperate assaults, were, after all, only a couple of Conservative ruffians.—Disraeli the younger, Coningsby, b. v. ch. iv.

Flavoured. adj. Endowed with flavour.

Sweet grapes degenerate there, and fruits, declin'd From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind.

Dryden.

Flavour. s. [See last extract.]

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early.—Addison, Spectator.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blinding rose, With bending hawthorn, so high their bloom disclose, Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows.

Dryden.

[Flavour.—From French saïce, to smell, vent, wind, also to breathe out a scent, yield a savour (Colgrave); we had formerly fleur, flours, flavours, a strong smell, a stink, from whence to flavour would be an easy step, aided perhaps by the resemblance of savour, which is applied in like manner both to taste and smell.

'With an corrupt flours name mycht hyde nere.

(D. V. 78. 18.)

—Latrum inter odorem.

'Ane strang flours throwis up in the are.

(207. 28.)

—nevanque exhalat opaca nephitis.

'Bledit up his lang berde and hare

Quhilk scallit thus ane strange flours did cast.

(119. 21.)

—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology, s.

Flavour. v. a. Give flavour to anything.

Flavour it with a little spice.—Miss Acton, Modern Cookery.

Flavoured. part. adj. Having a fine flavour; (generally with a prefix, as well, ill, high, full).

Neptunian Albion's high testaceous food,

And flavoured Chian wines.

Dyer.

Flavous. adj. [Lat. flavus = yellow.] Yellow.

The membrane itself is somewhat of a flavous colour, and tends more towards that of gold, than any other part whatsoever.—Smith, Portrait of Old Age, p. 219: 1668.

Flaw. s.

1. Crack or breach in anything.

Wool, new-shorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the lumps of wax.

—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,

Or some frail China-jar receive a flaw.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin.—Swift.

2. Fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scribes and broken do value unsound men to serve their own turn.—Beacon, Essays.

Traditions were a proof alone:
Could we be certain such they were, so known:
But since some flaws in long descents may be,
They make not truth, but probability. Dryden.
And laid her dowry out in law,
To null her jointure with a flaw. Butler, Hudibras.

Their judgement has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admire.—Addison, Spectator.

3. Sudden gust; violent blast. Obsolete, or archaic.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall, 't' expel the winter's flaw.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 1.

What flaws and whirls of weather,
Or rather storms, have been aloft these three days.
Beaumont and Fletcher, The Pilgrim.

One kind of these storms they call a flaw, or flawp, which is a mighty sale of wind passing suddenly to the shore, and working strong effects upon whatever it encounters in its way.—Carow, Survey of Cornwall.

As a huge fish, laid
Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw frigid, Shoots back; so, sent against the ground, was fold'd Urialus.
Chapman, Translation of Homer's Iliad.

Expect rough seas, flaws, and contrary blasts.—Sir T. Browne, Christian Morals, i. 1.

Bursting their brazen thumgum, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,
Boreas, and Cæcias, and Arcticas loud,
And Thræcias rend the woods, and sent upturn.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 607.

And these flaws, though mortal fear them,
As dangerous to the pillar's frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,
Are to the main as inconsiderable
And harmless, as not wholesome, as a sneeze
To man's less universe.
Id., Paradise Regain'd, iv. 454.

Like flaws in summer laying lusty corn.
Tranyson, Idylls of the King, Knid.

4. Tumult; tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,
Until the golden circuit on my head . . .
Do calm the fury of this madhead flaw.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. iii. 1.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,
And deluges of armies from the town
Came pouring in: I heard the mighty flaw
When first it broke, the crowding engines saw,
Which choak'd the passage. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

5. Sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would become
A woman's story at a winter's fire.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 4.

Flaw. v. a.

1. Crack; damage with fissure.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup.—Boyle.
The brassen cauldrons with the frosts are flaw'd,
The garment stiff with ice, at heart's is thaw'd.
Dryden.

2. Invalidate. Rare.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchants' goods.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. i. 1.

Flawless. adj. Free from flaw or defect.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous.—Boyle, Experiments and Considerations touching Colours.

Flaws. s. [A.S. flena; fluden=thin cake; flan=custard.] Pancake.

Fill oven full of flaws, Glum, pass not for sleep,
To-morrow thy father his wake-day will keep.
Tusser, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.
As flat as a flaw.—Ray, Proverbs.

Flax. s. [A.S. flæx.] Plant so called, of the genus Linum; fibres of the same: (in tl.

second extract applied to that of the distaff of the Parcae or Fates, who spun the threads of human life).
I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs,
To apply to'n bleeding face.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 7.

960

Then on the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn'd the wheel apace,
And turning sung.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid.

Flaxen. adj.

1. Made of flax.

The matron at her nightly task,
With pensive labour draws the flaxen thread.
Thomson, Seasons, Winter.

The best materials for making leucures are the flaxen thread that shoemakers use.—Sharp, Surgery.

2. Fair, long, and flowing, as if made of flax; also as having the colour of flax.

I bought a fine flaxen long wig.—Addison.

Flaxy. adj. Of a light colour; fair.

The four colours . . . signify these four virtues. The flaxy, having whiteness, appertains to temperance, because it makes 'em candid as mundam animum.'—Sir M. Sandys, Essays, p. 16: 1654.

Flay. v. a. Strip off the skin from anything.

They flay their skin from off them, break their bones, and chop them in pieces.—Milch, iii. 3.

I must have been eaten with wild beasts, or have fallen into the hands of the Spaniards, and been flayed alive.—Sir W. Raleigh.

While the old Levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices.—South, Sermons.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins.—Swift.

It might have been supposed that the prospect of dying in Newgate, with a back flayed and an eye knocked out, would not have seemed very attractive.—Macanlay, History of England, ch. xv.

Flies. s. [A.S. fleah.] Wingless insect of the genus Pulex.

While wormwood hath seed, get a handful or twain,
To save against March, to make flies to refrain:
Where chamber is swept, and wormwood is sown,
No flies for his life dare abide to be known.
Tusser, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Fliesbane. s. Plant so called.

It [fliesbane] hath undivided leaves, which for the most part are glutinous, and have a strong scent: the cup of the flower is for the most part scaly, and of a cylindrical form: the flower is composed of many florets, which are succeeded by seeds with a downy substance adhering to them.—Miller.

Fleabite. s. Bite of a flea; mark caused thereby; figuratively, trifle, or that which bears the same relation to a serious matter as a slight bodily mischief like the bite of a flea to some serious ailment or disease.

A gout, a chulick, a cutting off an arm or leg, or wearing the flesh, are but fleabites to the pains of the soul.—Harvey.

Fleabiting. s. Same as Fleabite.

a. Applied to the mark.

The attendance of a cancer is commonly a breaking out all over the body, like a fleabiting.—Wise-man, Surgery.

b. Applied to the pain.

That which is but a fleabiting to one causeth insufferable torment to another.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 13.

What fleabittings were there in comparison of those inward torments!—Bishop Hall, Contemplations, b. iv.

The same expence that breaks one man's back, is not a fleabiting to another.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

Fleabitten. adj.

1. Bitten by flea.

Itching, as if they were fleabitten, or stung with planities.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 208.

2. Mean; worthless.

Fleabitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ains, like the rule
Cham of proselytry, where laymen guide,
With the lame woolpack clergy by their side.
Gloucester.

3. Applied to the colour of horses, when it consists of small reddish spots or lines on lighter ground.

A fleabitten horse never thins.—Proverb.

Fleak. s. Small lock, thread, or twist.

The business of men depend upon these little long fleaks or threads of hemp and flax.—Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism.

Fleam. s. [Dutch, vlème.] Cattle lancet.

A case of fleams, as it is called by barbers, comprehends six sorts of instruments: two hooked ones, called drawers, and used for cleansing wounds a penknife, a sharp-pointed lancet for making incisions; and two fleams, one sharp and the other broad-pointed: these last are somewhat like the point of a lancet, fixed in a flat handle, only no longer than is just necessary to open the vein.—Rose, Cyclopaedia.

Fleek. v. a. Spot; streak; dapple; variegate.

The grey-eyed morn smiles on the frowning night,
Check'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light;
And fleek'd darkness, like a drunkard, reels
From forth day's path, and Titan's fiery wheels.
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, ii. 3.

Let it not see the dawning fleek the skies,
Nor the grey morning from the ocean rise. Savage.
Fleek'd in her face, and with disorder'd hair,
Her garments ruffled, and her bosom bare.
Cingrove, Translation from Juvenal.

Fleek. s. Spot; lock.

And fleeks of wool stick to their withered lips.
Theodore Martin, Translation of Calaneo.

Flection. s. See Flexion.

The one gives flection and extension with strength.
—Smith, Portrait of Old Age, p. 60.

Flector. s. See Flexor.

Their origination may be either from the back, inwardly, as the chief flector, the psoas, &c.—Smith, Portrait of Old Age, p. 60.

Fledge. adj. [German, flügge; flügel=wing.] Full feathered; able to fly; qualified to leave the nest. Rare.

We did find

The shells of fledge souls left behind. G. Herbert.
A stripling divine or two of those newly fledge probationers.—Milton, Calaneo.

His locks behind
Illustrous on his shoulders fledge with wings,
Lay waving round. Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 628.

Fledge. v. a. Furnish with wings; supply with feathers.

The birds were not as yet fledged enough to shift for themselves.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

The speedy growth of birds that are hatched in nests, and fed by the old ones till they are fledged, and come almost to full height in about a fortnight, seems to me an argument of providence.—Bay, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Fledgling. s. Bird just fledged.

This time he puts them forth into the danger alone, even as some loving mother-bird thrusts her fledglings from the nest, that they may find their own wings and learn to use them.—Archbishop Trench, Notes on the Miracles, no. 17.

Flee. v. n. preterite fled. [see Fly.] Run from danger; have recourse to shelter; take flight.

Behold, this city is near to flee unto.—Genesis, xiv. 20.

Were men so dull they could not see
That I've painted; should they flee
Like simple birds, into a net,
So grossly wove and ill set?
Waller.

None of us fall into these circumstances of danger, wait, or pain, that can have hopes of relief but from God alone; none in all the world to flee to but him.—Archbishop Tillotson, Sermons.

Fleece. s. [A.S. flise.] As much wool as is shorn from one sheep.

Giving account of the annual increase
Both of their lambs and of their woolly fleece.
Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

The sheep will prove much to the advantage of the woollen manufacture, by the fineness of the fleece.—Swift.

Fleece. v. a.

1. Clip the fleece off a sheep; strip; pull; plunder: (us when a sheep is said to be robbed of his wool).

Courts of justice have a small pension, so that they are tempted to take bribes, and to fleece the people.—Addison.

2. Whiten; spread over as with wool. Rhetorical.

Mean time, light shadowing all, a sober calm
Fleece unbounded ether.
Thomson, Seasons, Autumn.

Fleece. s. One who fleeces; i.e. strips or plunders.

Not fleece but feeders; not butchers, but shepherds.—Huntley, (i.e. Pygmalion), Breviary of the Priests, p. 203: 1657.

Fleecy. adj. Woolly; covered with wool; having the appearance of fleeces of wool, or a fleecy character in general; with regard to either shape or colour.

Not all the fleecy wealth
That doth enrich these downs, is worth a thought
To this my errand. Milton, Comus, 504.

Let her glad valleys smile with vary corn;
Let fleecy flocks her rising hills adorn. Prior.

FLEE

Flee. v. n. [Norse, flyra, fira.]

1. Mock; gibe; jest with insolence and contempt.

Dare the slave
Come hither, cover'd with an antick face,
To flee and scorn at our humanity?
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, l. 5.
Do I, like the female tribe
Think it well to flee and gibe?
Swift.

2. Leer; grin with an air of civility.

How popular and courteous; how they grin and flee upon every man they meet!—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy.

With their court dog-tricks, that can fawn and flee,
Make their revenue out of legs and faces,
Echo my lord, and lick away a mirth.
B. Jonson, Volpone.

Flee. v. a. Mock; flout.

I was vain to drive him like a sheep before me;
I blush to think how people flee'd and scorn'd me.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Spanish Curate.

Flee. s. Mockery expressed either in words or looks; flout.

Mark the flee, the gibes, and notable scorns,
That dwell in every region of his face.
Shakespeare, Othello, iv. 1.

He shall generally spy such false lines, and such a sly treacherous flee upon the face of deceivers, that he shall be sure to have a cast of their eye to warn him, before they give him a cast of their nature to betray him.—South, Sermons.

Flee. s. One who fleers; mocker; flouter.

Damocritus, thou ancient fleeper.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Nice Valour.

Fleet. s. [L. Lat. flota.—see Float.] Company of ships; navy.

Our prayers are heard; our master's fleet shall go
As far as winds can bear, or waters flow.
Prior.

Fleet. s. [A.S. fleót = ditch. Fleet-ditch is a tautology.—see Float.] Creek; inlet of water.

They have a very good way in Essex of draining of lands that have land-floods or fleets running through them, which make a kind of a small creek.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Fleet. adj. [see Float.]

1. Swift of pace; quick.

Upon that shore he eyed Atin stand;
There by his master left, when into he had
In Phœria's fleet lurk.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.
He had in his stables one of the fleetest horses in England.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

His fear was greater than his haste;
For fear, though *fleet*er than the wind,
Believes 'tis always left behind.
Butler, Hudibras.
He told us, that the wicket would be clear
When swallows fleet near high and sport in air.
Gay.

2. Light; superficially fruitful (applied to soils); shallow (as, 'a fleet pun or vessel, fleet water'). Provincial.

Mari coye ground is a cold, stiff, wet clay, unless where it is very fleet for pasture.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Used adverbially.

Those lands must be plowed fleet.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Fleet. v. n. [see Float.]

1. Fly swiftly; vanish.

How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash enmities despair!
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 2.

2. Float.

Who swelling sails in Caspian sea doth croud,
And in frail wood on Adrian gulf doth fleet.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, ii. 7, 14.

So when this world's compounded union breaks,
Time ends, and to old Chaos all things turn,
Confused stars shall melt, celestial fire
Fleet on the floods, the earth shoulder the sea,
Affording it no shore.
R. Greene, Translation of the First Book of Lucan.

Our several navy too
Have knit again, and fleet.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 11.

Fleet. v. a. Rare.

1. Pass time away lightly.

Many young gentlemen fleet to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly as they did in the golden age.—Shakespeare, As you like it, l. 1.

2. Skim milk; take off the cream: (whence 'fleeing dish'; flood in Danish means cream).

He fleeted off the cream of the king's manors.—
Sir A. Weldon, Court of King James, p. 61.

Fleeten-face. s. One who has a pale, wholey face, like cream or skimmed milk.

VOL. I.

FLES

You know where, you are fleeten-face.—Beaumont and Fletcher. (Mares by H. & W.)

Compare—

'The devil damn thee black, thou cream-faced loon!'
(Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 3.)

Fleetfoot. adj. Swift of foot.

Like a wild bird, being tam'd with too much handling,
Or as the fleet-foot roe that's tir'd with chasing.
Or like the forward infant, stilled with dandling.
Shakespeare, Venus and Adonis.

Fleeting. part. adj. Passing; transient.

O fleeting joys
Of Paradise, dear-bought with lasting woes!
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 741.

While I listen to thy voice,
Chloris! I feel my life decay:
That powerful nolo
Calls my fleeting soul away.
Waller.

As empty clouds by rising winds are lost,
Their fleeting forms scarce sooner found than lost.
Prior.

Our understanding, to make a complete notion,
must add something else to this fleeting and unre-markable superficiality, that may bring it to our acquaintance.—Sir K. Digby, Treatise on the Nature of Bodies.

Fleek. s. Jerk.

With sudden fleek the fatal hemp lets go
The humming fleek, which with a deadly blow
Pierc'd instantly the basin's ghastly front.
Sylvestre, Translation of Du Bartas, 190.
(Ord MS.)

Flesh. s. [A.S. flesc.]

1. Muscles distinguished from the skin, bones, tendons; blood; animal food distinguished from vegetable.

Flesh should be forlorn as long as he is in coat, or at least till he is two or three years old.—Locke.
Aridity in the infant may be cured by a flesh diet in the nurse.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

2. Body of beasts or birds used in food: (as opposed to that of fishes).

There is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law. Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, ii. 4.
We mortify ourselves with flesh; and think farce comely, if we abstain from the flesh of other animals.—Sir T. Browne.

3. Body distinguished from the soul.

And thou, my soul, which turn'st with curious eye
To view the beams of thine own form divine,
Know, that thou canst know nothing perfectly,
While thou art clouded with this flesh of mine.
Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.

4. Animal nature.

The end of all flesh is come before me.—Genesis,
vi. 13.

5. Carnality; corporeal appetites.

Name not religion; for thou lov'st the flesh.
Shakespeare, Henry V, Part I, l. 1.
Feasting serves to mortify the flesh, and subdues
the lusts thereof.—Bishop South, Sermons.

6. In Theology. Carnal state; worldly disposition: (with the).

They that are in the flesh cannot please God.—
Romans, viii. 8.
The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh.—Galatians, v. 10.

7. Near relation: (a scriptural use).

Let not our hand be upon him; for he is our flesh.—Genesis, xxvii. 27.
When thou seest the naked, cover him; and hide not thyself from thine own flesh.—Isaiah, lviii. 7.

More commonly with blood.

The Pope, John VIII., highly approved of this insurrection, commending it as such, because he had overthrown the new Holiness, and had not spared his own flesh as blood.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, b. v. ch. vi.

Flesh. v. a.

1. Initiate: (from the sportsman's practice of feeding his hawks and dogs with the first game that they take, or training them to pursuit by giving them the flesh of animals).

Full bravely hast thou flesh'd
Thy maiden sword.
Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part I, v. 4.

Every puny swordman will think him a good tame quarry to enter and flesh himself upon.—Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.

2. Harden; establish in any practice, as dogs by often feeding on anything; inure.

These princes finding them so fleshed in cruelty as not to be reclaimed, secretly undertook the matter alone.—Sir P. Sidney.

6 G

FLES

{FLESH
FLESHING

The women ran all away, saving only one, who was so fleshed in malice, that neither during nor after the fight she gave any truce to her cruelty.—
Sir P. Sidney.

His whole troops
Raced not twenty thousand, but old soldiers
flesh'd in the spoils of Germany and France.
Beaumont and Fletcher, False One

He that is most flesh'd in sin, commits it no without some remorse.—Miles, Golden Remains,
p. 100.

3. Glut; satiate.

The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us;
And he is bred out of that bloody strain,
That hunted us in our familiar paths.

The tyrant Ottoman spreads his victorious arms and is fleshed in triumph.—Glanville, Sermons.

Fleshbrush. s. Brush to rub the flesh
with.

The fleshbrush is an exercise extremely useful for promoting a full and free perspiration and circulation.—Chayne.

Fleshcolour. s. Colour of flesh.

A compilation of ideas together makes up the single complex idea, which he calls man, whereof white or fleshcolour in England is one.—Locke.

A loose earth of a pale fleshcolour, that is, white with a bluish of red, is found in a mountain in Cumberland.—Woodward.

Fleshed. adj.

1. Fat; having abundance of flesh: (generally preceded by well, or some modifying adverb).

Very well flesh'd, and excellent fat.
Old Song, The King and Miller of Mansfield.

2. Hardened; enured.

A flesh'd ruffian,
That hath so often taken the strappado,
That 'tis to him but as a lofty trick
Is to a tumbler.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Custom of the Country.

Fleshfly. s. Fly that feeds upon flesh, and deposits her eggs in it.

I would no more endure
This wooden slavery, than I would suffer
The fleshfly blow my mouth.

Shakespeare, Tempest, iii. 1.
It is a wonderful thing in fleshflies, that a fly-maggot, in five days' space after it is hatched, arrives at its full growth and perfect magnitude.—Ray,
Works of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

O that a verse had pow'r and could command
Far, far away, these fleshflies of the land.
Cowper, Progress of Error, 324.

Fleshhook. s. Hook to draw flesh from the cauldron.

All that the fleshhook brought up the priest took.
—1 Samuel, ii. 12.

Fleshiness. s. Attribute suggested by Fleahy; plumpness; fullness; fitness.

A diet pulling up the soul with a slimy fleshiness.
—Milton, Reason of Church Government, b. ii.
With their round fleshiness, they [the broads] protect and preserve the heart from outward storms.
—Austin, Dec Homo, p. 123.

Fleshing. s. (generally in plural.) Covering resembling the natural skin, worn by actors, &c.

'Now, Mrs. Sleeve, mind and be very particular with the fleshings.' And all the ladies who had assisted at the purification of John Gay went to get themselves measured for all flesh-coloured leggings and blue satin slips for a piece of mythology.
—Douglas Jerrold, Men of Character, Jack Runnymede.

Fleshless. adj. Destitute of, or wanting,
flesh.

Whom wither'd skins, more dry than sapless
wood,
Cleave to their fleshless bones.

When fleshless cadavers abate not the exorbitan-cies of the flesh.—Sir T. Browne, Christian Morals,
iii. 10.

Fleshliness. s. Attribute suggested by Fleahy; carnal passions or appetites.

Rare.

When strong passions or weak fleshliness
would from the right way seek to draw him wide,
He would, through temperance and steadfastness, Teach him the weak to strengthen, and the strong suppress.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Corrupt manners in living, breed false judgment in doctrine; sin and fleshliness bring forth seeds and heresies.—Ascham.

Fleshling. s. Mortal set wholly upon the carnal state. Rare.

961

Their contents was to set forth the justice of God, which is to reward the spiritual, his elects, with the blessings promised; and the fleshly, the reprobate, with the plagues threatened.—Confutation of Nicholas Shaxton, sign. l. 6: 1530.

Fleshly. adj. Rare.

1. Corporeal.

Nothing resembles death so much as sleep;
Yet then our minds themselves from slumber keep,
When from their fleshly bondage they are free.
—Sir J. Denham.

2. Carnal; lascivious.

Is-lial, the dissolute spirit that fell,
The sensualist; and, after Amosad,
The fleshliest lucubus.
—Milton, Paradise Regained, li. 120.

3. Animal; not vegetable.

'Tis then for nought that mother earth provides
The stores of all she shows, and all she hides,
If men with fleshly mouths must be fed,
And claw with bloody teeth the breathing bread.
—Dryden.

4. Human; not celestial; not spiritual.

Else, never could the force of fleshly arm
Ne molten metal in his flesh outburn.
—Spenser, Faerie Queere.

To set forth the praises of the hoist, and to magnify a fleshly king.—Esther, xiv. 10.

Fleshment, or Fleshmēt. s. Animal food; flesh of animals prepared for food.

The most convenient diet is that of fleshments.—Sir J. Poyer.

In this prodigious plenty of cattle and dearth of human creatures, fleshment is monstrously dear.—Swift.

Fleshment. s. Initiation. Rare.

[He] got probes of the king,
For him attempting who was self-subdu'd;
And in the fleshment of this great exploit,
Drew on me here. —Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 2.

Fleshmenger. s. One who deals in flesh; pimp.

Was the duke a fleshmenger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him?—Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, v. 1.

Fleshpot. s. Vessel in which flesh is cooked; thence plenty of flesh. Figuratively, high living, from the 'fleshpots of Egypt,' for which the Israelites hankered in the wilderness.

If he take away the fleshpots, he can also alter the appetite.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Reason of holy Living.

Fleshquake. s. Tremor of the body. Rare.

They may, blood-shaken then,
Feel such a fleshquake to possess their powers,
As they shall cry like ours:
In sound of peace or war,
No harp e'er hit the stars.
—B. Jonson, New Inn.

Fleshy. adj.

1. Plump; full of flesh; fat; muscular.
All Ethiopians are fleshy and plump, and have great lips; all which betoken moisture retained, and not drawn out.—Bacon.

We say it is a fleshy stile when there is much periphrasis and circuit of words, and when with more than enough it grows fat and corpulent.—B. Jonson, Diacrisea.

2. Pulpy; plump; (with regard to fruits).

Those fruits that are fleshy as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink by mixture of water.—Bacon.

3. Corporeal.

Neither could they make to themselves fleshy hearts for stony.—Ecclesiasticus, xvii. 10.
He, nor man priest, sleeping his regal head, ...
Poor fleshy tabernacle entered.
—Milton, Ode on the Passion, 13.

Fletch. v. a. [Fr. fleche = arrow.] Feather an arrow.

He dips his curses in the gall of irony; and, that they may strike the deeper, fletches them with a profane classical parody.—Bishop Warburton, Doctrine of Grace, p. 185.

Fletcher. s. Maker of bows and arrows.

It is commended by our fletchers for bows, next unto yew.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Flew. s. [Dutch, flabbe.] Lateral and hanging part of the upper lips of a dog; chap. The chief example of the word is the adjective of the next entry. Lee, who has imitated the passage, makes his hounds flew like tigers; perhaps thinking the word meant flecked or marked. Golding, from whose translation of the Metamorphoses Shakespeare took the word, has great-flew; and the chap was the part of the hound which he meant. The dog's name, Labros, he evidently connected with labrum; and though, in reality, it was the Greek λάβρος, the error serves as well as a more accurate translation to show what part was meant.

Flewed. adj. Having flews.

My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
No flew'd, no sandled, and their heads are hung
With ears that sweep away the morning dew.
—Shakespeare, Midsummer Night's Dream, iv. 1.

Flexanimous. adj. [Lat. flecto = bend; pass. part. flectus + animus = mind.] Having power to bend or change the disposition of the mind. Rare.

That flexanimous and golden-tongued orator.—Horrell.

Flexibility. s. Capability of being bent; pliability.

a. Physically.

Is not the myx which differ in refrangibility differ also in flexibility? And are they not, by their different inflexions, separated from one another, so as after separation to make the colours?—Sir J. Newton, Opticks.

Corpuscles of the same set agree in every thing; but those that are of diverse kinds differ in specific gravity, in hardness, and in flexibility, as in bigness and figure.—Woodcock.

b. Mentally. Easiness to be persuaded; pliancy; facility of temper.

Resolve rather to err by too much flexibility than too much perverseness, by meekness than by self-love.—Hammond.

Flexible. adj.

1. Capable of being bent; pliant.

a. Physically.

Take a stock-gillyflower, tie it upon a stick, put them both into a glass full of quicksilver, so that the flower be covered; after four or five days you shall find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was.—Bacon.

b. Mentally.

Phocyon was a man of great severity, and no ways flexible to the will of the people.—Bacon.

2. Capable of being accommodated to various forms and purposes.

This was a principle more flexible to their purpose.—Rugers.

Flexibleness. s. Attribute suggested by Flexible; capability of being bent; pliancy; pliancy.

The flexibleness of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable.—Locke.

Flexile. adj. Pliant; easily bent; obsequious to any power or impulse.

Every flexile wave
Obeys the blast; the aerial tumult swells.
—Thomson, Seasons, Summer.

Flexion. s.

1. Act of bending.

To sit doth not [here] signify any peculiar inclination or flexion, any determinate location or position of the body, but to be in heaven with permanence of habitation.—Bishop Pearson, Exposition of the Creed, art. vi.

2. Double; bending; part bent; joint; turn towards any part or quarter.

Of a sinuous pipe that may have some four flexions, trial would be made.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Pity causeth sometimes tears, and a flexion or cast of the eye aside.—Ibid.

3. In Grammar. Inflection: (the compound being the commoner form).

The English language has properly no dialects: the style of writers has no profound diversity in the use of words, or of their flexions, and terminations, nor differs but by different degrees of skill or care.—Johnson, Grammar of the English Language.

Flexor. s. [Lat.] In Anatomy. Muscles which acts in contracting the joints.

Flatterers, who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back.—Arbutnot.

Fléxuous. adj.

1. Winding; full of turfs and meanders; tortuous.

In regard of the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow crannies, and the restrained flexuous rivulets of corporeal things, are all contemptible.—Sir K. Digby, Operations and Nature of Man's Soul.

2. Bending; not straight; variable; not steady.

The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we do not feel; and the flexuous burning of flames doth show the air beginneth to be unquiet.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Fléxure. s.

1. Form or direction in which anything is bent.

Contrary is the fléxure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joints of their hind legs bend backward.—Ruy.

2. Act of bending.

The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy; His legs are for necessity, not fléxure.
—Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 3.

3. Part bent; joint.

His mighty strength lies in his able loins,
And where the fléxure of his navel joins.
—G. Sandys.

Flibbergib. s. Flouter. Rare.

And when these flatterers and flibbergibbes another day shall come and claw you by the back, your grace may answer them thus.—Latimer, Sermons, fol. 39. (Nares by H. & W.)

Fliek. v. a. Flip.

At a state christening the lady who held the infant was tired and looked unwell, and the Princess of Wales asked permission for her to sit down. 'Let her stand,' said the Queen, *fliek*ing the snuff off her sleeve.—Thackeray, The Four Georges, George III.

Flieker. v. n.

1. Flutter.

'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid of night,
And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flieking on her nest, made short ways to sing.
—Dryden.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;
Then, flieking to his pallid lips, she strove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love.
How hard he breathes! over the snow
I heard just now the crowing cock.
The shadows flieker to and fro:
The cricket chirps; the light burns low:
'Tis nearly twelve o'clock.
—Tennyson, The Death of the Old Year

When the light grew dim, and *flieker*d on the altar, their hands trimm'd the lamp, and fed the sacred flame.—Huckle, History of Civilization in England, vol. ii. ch. iii.

2. Fluctuate; move with uncertain and hasty motion.

An old lizard, that hath one foot in his grave, shall flieker after a young lusty wench that is bith and a bonny.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 629.

Fliekering. part. adj. Fluttering.

Riding o'er the fliekering wave.
—Dyer, Fleeces, b. iv.

The shades of evening were fast descending—the curtains of the chamber were not closed—the blaze of the fire had died away. The fliekering light fell upon the solemn countenance of Henrietta Temple, now buried in the shade, now transiently illumined by the fitful flame.—DIsraeli the younger, Henrietta Temple, b. ii. ch. v.

Fliekermouse. s. Same as Flittermouse.

Come, I will see the fliekermouse.—B. Jonson, New Inn.

Flies. s.

1. One who, that which, flies.

The gates are open, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them;
Not for the flies. —Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 4.
Now the flies from and forerunners of their places carry the parliamentary power along with them.—Bibb, Basilisks.

2. Part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest: (as in a jack). See Fly in Mechanics.

The fly, tho't had leaden feet,
Turn'd so quick, you scarce could see't.
—Swift.

Fligger. v. n. Fleer. Obsolete.

Then Nature has with beauty, more with scorn,
That they must fligger, scoff, deride and jeer, Appoynt their servants certain hours t' appear.
—History of Albino and Bellina: 1638.
(Nares by H. and W.)

Flight. s.

1. Act of flying.

For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
That from this lower tract he dur'd to fly
Up to the clouds and thence with pinions light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky.
—Spenser, Mulopotmos.

2. Removal from place to place by means of wings.

For the bat bath flown
His cloister'd flight... there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 2.
Edgar, v. 4.

The fowls shall take their flight away together—
Fowls, by winter fore'd, forsake the floods,
And wing their heavy flight to happier lands.

Dryden, Translation of the Aeneid.

3. Flock of birds, or winged creatures, flying together.

Flights of angels sing thee to thy rest!
They take great pride in the feathers of birds, and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited into it by the infants flights of birds that came up to the high grounds—Baron,
New Atlantis.

I can at will, doubt not,
Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, on my rump attend.

Milton, Paradise Regain'd, ii. 383.

4. Birds produced in the same season: (as, 'the harvest flight of pigeons').

Escape, or try to escape, through fleetness, whether by wings or any other member.

And now, too late, he wishes for the flight,
That strength he wasted in ignoble flight.

Mir J. Denham, Cooper's Hill.
He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,
And claims the prize because he best did run.

Dryden, Indian Emperour.
As eager of the chase, the mail
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan saw and he'd, and, hurrying with desire,
Pursued her flight; her flight increas'd his fire.

Pope.

With take.

The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Larian palace took her flight.

Dryden, Translation of the Aeneid.
Winds that tempests law,
When through Arduian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spite.

6. Volley; shower; as much as is discharged at once.

At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full threescore Scots they slew.

Ballad of Chery Chase.
Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, jerked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs.

Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

7. Effort of imagination giving sublimity to a composition.

Old Phidias's flights by him are reach'd,
When on that gale his wings are stretch'd.

Mir J. Denham.
He shew'd all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he had failed in some of his flights, it was but because he attempted every thing.—Pope.

8. Excessive display of temper; caprice.

Strange graceless still, and stranger flights also had;
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad.

Pope, Moral Essays, ii.
Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail.

9. Sally.

If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one would imagine that the interest of France were lost to conserve its present greatness.—Mir W. Temple.

With high.

Temple having attained his favourite ambition, to be able to smoke 'shag,' had some thoughts of trying opium, which he believed a higher flight, but Singleton dissuaded him.—Hansard, Singleton Postenoy,
b. i. ch. vii.

10. Particular kind of arrow.

Here be of all sorts; flights, rovers, and but-shafts.
A flight drawn home,
A round stone from a sling.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Bonduca.

11. Ancient sport of shooting with arrows, called roving.

He set up his bills here in Messina, and challeng'd Cupid at the flight.—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, i. 1.

12. Range of steps, or of stairs connecting one floor with another.

A flight of steps called Scala Gemonia, or steps of wailing, ... led down towards the career, and thence to the forum.—Dyer, History of the City of Rome, book i.

Flight, adj. Quick. Rare.

So flight is melancholle to darke disgrace,
And deadly drowne to a bright good morrow?

Copley, Pig for Fortune, p. 11: 1806.
(Nares by H. and W.)

Flight-shot. s. Long shot as of a roving arrow.

The passage into it at full sea is a flight-shot over —Island, Illegary.
Jack was already gone a fly-shot beyond his patience.—Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 6.

Flightiness. s. Attribute suggested by Flighty (generally in its sense of wild); irregularity of conduct; capriciousness; eccentricity.

But her innate flightiness made her dangerous.—
Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney.

Flighty, adj.

1. Fleeting; swift.
Thou, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1.

2. Wild; full of imagination.

You've had, my boy, a very narrow escape from a very troublesome affair with a very flighty young lady.—Marryat, Jacob Faithful.

Flinch. s. Whim; trick; cheat; petty fiction.

This is a pretty flinch.—Beaumont and Fletcher,
Little French Lawyer.
Here are recounted a thousand flinches, as impertinent as necessary to the understanding of this famous history. Continuation of Shelton's Translation of Don Quixote, ch. xiv.

Flinchiness. s. Attribute suggested by Flimsy.

There is a certain flinchiness in poetry, that seems expedient in a song.—Shadwell.

Flimsy, adj. [film.]

1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture;
unsubstantial.

Wharton and Russell wrote to the same effect. In reply came flimsy and unmeaning excuses: 'I am not qualified for a court life: I am unequal to a place which requires much exertion: I do not quite agree with any party in the State: in short I am unfit for the world: I want to travel: I want to see Spain.'—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xx.

2. Mean; spiritless; without force.

Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines.
Whish was in general a flimsy and frigid writer.—
J. Walton, Essay on the Writings and Genius of Pope.

Flinch. v. n. [from the root of Flick.]

Shrink from any suffering or undertaking;
withdraw from any pain or danger.

If I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die.

Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, ii. 1.
Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other: nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South, Sermons.

A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.

Oh luxurious, that John Bull, whom I have boasted with my friendship, should flinch at last,
and pretend that he can dispense me more money!—
Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

Conspicuous in bravery even among those brave English was Cutts. In that building courage which finches from no danger, however terrible, he was unrivalled. There was no difficulty in finding hardy volunteers, German, Dutch, and British, to go on a forlorn hope: but Cutts was the only man who appeared to consider such an expedition as a party of pleasure. He was so much at his ease in the hottest fire of the French batteries that his soldiers gave him the honourable nickname of the Salamander. —
Macaulay, History of England, ch. xxi.

Men are made uneasy; they flinch; they cannot bear the sudden light; a general restlessness super-venues; the face of society is disturbed, or perhaps convulsed; old interests and old beliefs are destroyed before new ones have been created.

Huckle, History of Civilization in England, vol. ii, ch. vi.

Flincher. s. One who flinches, shrinks, or fails in any matter.

But make this good upon us as you have promis'd,
You shall not find us flinchers.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Bloody Brother.
After that sharp reprehension of flinchers from the faith, he returns to encourage and corroborate the church in Smyrna.—Dr. H. More, Exposition of the Seven Churches, p. 81.

Flinching. verbal abs. Shrinking.

All this he bore without flinching.—Buckle, History of Civilization in England, vol. ii, ch. v.

Flinchermouse. s. See Flittermouse.

Large wings on him did grow,
Fraud'd like the wings of flinchermice.

Googe, Justice of Life, p. 9: 1565.
The other... had wings like a lacke or flinchermouse. Knight, Trial of Truth, fol. 9, b: 1590.

Fling. v. a. pret. and past part. flung.

1. Throw.
The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs
Upon him. Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 1.
Tis fate that flings the dice! and as she flings,
Of kings maketh peasants, and of peasants kings.

Dryden.

2. Dart; cast with violence.
How much unlike that Hector who return'd Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung.

Sir J. Denham.

3. Scatter.
Wedgwoods, with musky wing,
About the cedars balmy fling
Nard and cedar's balmy smoke. Milton, Comus, 189.
Every levin new transient colours flings, Colours that change when'er they wave their wings. Pope.

4. Drive by violence; throw.
A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds.—T. Baruel, Theory of the Earth.

5. Move forcibly.
The knight seeing his habitation reduced to so small compass, ordered all the apartments to be flung open.—Addison, Spectator.

6. Cast: (in an ill sense).
I know thy generous temper:
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It strait takes fire. Addison, Cato.

Fling away. Effect; dismiss.
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII, iii. 2.

Fling down. Demolish; ruin.
These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward, Essay towards a Natural History of the Earth.

Fling off. Battle in the chase; defeat of a prey.
These men are too well acquainted with the chase to be flung off by any false steps or doubles.—Addison, Spectator.

Fling. v. n.

1. Plounce; wince; fly into violent and irregular motions.

Neither flies it otherwise than with some wild colt, which, at the first taking up, flings and plunges, and will stand no ground.—Bishop Hall, Select Thoughts, § 50.

The angry beast
Jegan to kick, and fling, and wince.
As if he'd been beside his sense. Boswell, Hudibras.
Their countenances are called by it, and this makes them wince and fling as if they had some matter.—
Archbishop Tillotson.

2. Fling out. Grow unruly or outrageous: (from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs).

Duenna's horses,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contriving 'gainst obedience.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 4.

Fling. s. Throw; cast. Figuratively, gibe; sneer; contemptuous remark.

Esau would I have a fling at Winchester.
Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part II, iii. 1.

No little scribbler is of wit so bare,
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair. Addison.
Is he love to have a fling
Both at woman-house and king,
Thought an method more commodious
Than to show their vices odious.

Swift.

Have one's fling. Enjoy one's self to the full; run loose. Colloquial.

Flinging. verbal abs. Throwing; in the extract, throwing itself, i.e. plunging.

Fearing last, fated at too much ease, he [the horse] was headstrong, and fell to kicking and flinging, instead of carrying his rider well and quietly.—Warner, Translation of Desu's Sermons,
p. 379: 1857.

Flint. s. [A.S.]

1. Hard splintery siliceous stone so called.

Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred,
A flint will break upon a featherbed. Chaucer, Ind.
There is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun.—South, Sermons.

Take this, and lay your flint-edg'd weapon by.
I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighbouring wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and draw the food.
Prior, Henry and Rupa.

2. Anything eminently or proverbially hard.
Your tears a heart of flint
Might tender make. Sponsor.

Flinthearted. adj. Having a hard heart;
cruel.
Under the conduct of great Rollman,
Have I been chief commander of an host,
And put the flint-hearted Persians to the sword.
Tragedy of Rollman and Persius: 1890.

Flinthearted. adj. Same as preceding.
'Oh, pity, can she cry, 'flint-hearted boy.'
Shakespeare, Venus and Adonis.

Flinty. adj. Made of, abounding in, characterized by, or having the character of, flint; hence (when applied to temper) hard of heart, cruel, inexorable.
He made him to suck honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock.—Deuteronomy, xxi. 13.
The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them on heaps, is no good husbandry.—Saunders, Natural and Experimental History.
Through flinty Tartar's bowmen, would pump forth,
And answer thanks.
Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, iv. 4.
Flinty hearts of men turned into flesh.—Bishop Hall, Estate of a Christian.

Flip. s. [?] Beer with spirits and sugar.
The tarpaulin and swabber is rolling at Madagascar, with some drunken sunburnt whor, over a can of flip.—Uranian.
Ay, or a bowl of punch, or a can of flip, Mr. Sterling, for it looks like a cabin in the air.—G. Colman and D. Garrick, The Clandestine Marriage, ii. 2.

Flippant. adj.
1. Nimble; movable: (used only of speech).
It becometh good men, in such cases, to be brisk and gay in their looks, flippant and free in their speech.—Burrows, Sermon on Guisepander Treason.
An excellent anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain flippant, which render it so wonderfully voluble or flippant.—Addison.

2. Pert; petulant; wagging.
Away with flippant epilogues. Thomson.

Flippet. s. Flirt. Rare.
How now, my wanton flippet?
Secondant Lady. (Nares by H. & W.)

Flirt. v. a.
1. Throw anything with a quick elastic motion.
Dick the scavenger Flirts from his cart the mud in Walpole's face. Swift.

2. Throw out words carelessly; blurt.
Our cousin Archy hath more privilege than any; for he often goes with his foot's-coat where the infants lie with her ladies, and flirts out what he lists.—Hoswell, Familiar Letters, i. iii. 18.

3. Move with quickness.
Permit some happier man
To kiss your hand or flirt your fan. Lord Dorset.

4. Jeer; treat with scoffs.
I am suah'm'd, I'm scorn'd, I'm flirted.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase.

Flirt. v. n. Comport one's self as a flirt; act with more show than earnestness.
With these, as with his other studies and mistresses, he just flirted while the humour lasted.—Reuben Malicoll.

Flirt. s.
1. Quick elastic motion.
In unfurling the fan, are several little flirts and vibrations, as also gradual and deliberate openings.—Addison, Spectator.
Before you pass th' imaginary sights,
While the spread fan ornaments your closing eyes,
Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies. Pope.

2. Sudden trick.
Have licence to play,
At the hedge a flirt,
For a sheet or a shirt.
B. Jonson, Masque of Queens.

3. Pert hussey; coquette; one who loves to attract ephemeral attention.
I do not apologise here for any headstrong, unruly, wanton flirts.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy.
Salute the skirts
Of her, to whom all ladies else are flirts.
B. Jonson, Masque.
Several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world.—Addison, Guardian.

4. Jeer; gibe.
They have play'd their prizes with me,
And with their several flirts they have lighted dangerously;
But sure I shall be quit.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Spanish Curate.

Flirt. adj. Pert; wanton.
Scoury knave! I am none of his flirt gills.—Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, ii. 4.
Thou took'st me up at every word I spoke,
As I had been a newkin, a flirt gillan.
Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances.

Flirtation. s. Quick sprightly motion: (hence the more modern acceptance, a desire of attracting notice).
Flirtation is short of coquetry, and intimates only the first hints of approximation.—Lord Chesterfield, World, no. 101.
Addison devoted several papers in the Spectator to playful satire on these toys, from whence the now general terms of flirt and flirtation have been derived.—Agnes Strickland, Lives of the Queens of England, Catherine of Braganza.
It claimed that two attorneys and a scrivener, who had come down from town to the Hertford, had been overheard, on that unhappy night, talking over their wine about the charms and flirtations of the handsome Quaker girl, in the light way in which such subjects are sometimes discussed even at the circuit tables and mews tables of our more refined generation.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xiv.

Used adjectively.
A muslin noisette, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air. Pope.

Flirting. part. adj. Behaving as, or having the character of, a flirt.
The wife that gads not, giglot-wise,
With every flirting gill.
Translation of Bullinger's Sermons, p. 224.

Flisk. v. n. Flit. Rare.

Flisking. part. adj. Flitting. Rare.
We're fumes and flaps of feathers fond,
To flit away the flisking fies. Gunsen, Pleasant Quizzes: 1890. (Nares by H. & W.)

Flit. v. n.
1. Fly away; flutter; rove on the wing.
Likest it seemeth, in my simple wit,
Unto the fair sunshine in summer's day,
That when a dreadful storm away is flit,
Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray. Spenser, Faerie Queene.

2. Remove; migrate.
It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out of one body into some other.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
Seventeen individuals have been seized in the Champe Elysees, by exploratory Patriotism; they flitting dim-visibility, by flitting dim-visibility.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. ii. b. vi. ch. vi.

Flit. adj. Swift; nimble; quick. Rare.
And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,
And dandy sharp, he held; whose heads were dight in poison and in blood of malice and despite.
And life itself as flit as in the air we breathe.
P. Fletcher, Purple Island, ii. 7.

Flitch. s. [A.S. fliecc.] Side of a hog salted and cured.
Another brought a spycke
Of a bacon flitch.
But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,
On birth days, festivals, or days of state,
A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare.
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.
While he from out the chimney took
A flitch of bacon off the hook,
And freely from the fattest side
Cut out large slices to be fry'd.
Swift, Naucis and Philemon.
He sometimes accompanys the present with a flitch of bacon.—Addison.

Flitcher. s. Flitch. Rare.
Fower flitchers of bacon in the chimney.—MS. Inventory of Goods: 1668. (Nares by H. & W.)

Flitter. v. n. Be in agitation.
Fends flittered in the ayre for fere.—Liber Fusticelle, fol. 38, b.

Flitter. s. Rag; tatter.
The box was audry's saunder, and the wig torn all to flitters.—Aubrey, Miscellanies, p. 116.

Flittering. part. adj.
Under such props false fortune builds her bower
On sudden change her flittering frames be set.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 508.

Flittermouse. s. [German, flodermaus.] Bat.
The blood of a flittermouse.—Middleton, The Witch.

Flittiness. s. Unsteadiness; lightness.
Had we but the same delight in heavenly objects, did we but receive the truth in the love of it, and mingle it with faith in the hearing, this would fix that volatileness and flittiness of our memories, and make every truth as indelible as it is necessary.—Bishop Hopkins, Exposition of the Lord's Prayer, p. 314.

Flitting. part. adj. Fluttering; flickering; roving unsteadily on the wing; wandering; moving; restless.
Himself uphig he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding air, which high too feeble found
Her flitting parts, and element unbound.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.
The especial cause of this evil and flitting disposition, in the common and ordinary sort of men, is their inability to discern the strength of such reasons as may be framed against them.—Hales, Golden Remains, p. 12.
He made a glancing shot, and mis'd the dove;
Yet mis'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd by the foot the flitting bird.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Flitting. verbal abs. Removal.
Seeing our whole life is but a vapour, or a flitting.
—Dr. J. J. Moore, Nine Sermons, p. 55: 1821.
Two flittings are as bad as one fire, i.e. household goods are as much injured by two removals as by one fire. North.—Gross.

Flitty. adj. Unstable. Obsolete.
Burying their brains in the mysterious toys of flitty motion.—Dr. H. Moore, Song of the Soul, l. i. 11.

Fliz. s. Down; fur; soft hair.
With his hol'd tongue he faintly licks his prey;
His warm breath blows her fliz up as she lies;
She trembling crows upon the ground away,
And looks back to him with beseeching eyes.
Dryden.

Fliz. s. [for flux.] Dysentery.
The father of Publius lay sick of the fever, and of a bloody fliz.—Acts, xxviii. 8. (Translation of 1678.)

Flizwood. s. [for flux.] See extract.
Flizwood is called Thalictrum, . . . but improperly. . . the Paracelsians who do vaunt and brag very much of a herbo called Sophia, adding thereto the surname Paracelsi, which they imagine to do wonders, whether this be the same plant is disputable, the controversy not as yet decided; nevertheless we must be content to accept this for the true Sophia, until some disciple or other of his do show or set forth the plant wherewith their master Paracelsus did such great matters; in English we call it flizwood of his faculty against the fliz.—Gerarde, Herbal, p. 1068: 1633.

Float. v. n. [see last extract.]
1. Lie on the surface of the water, the water buoying it up (as opposed to Sink), also leaving it comparatively free in respect to its direction, rather than acting upon it by its current; drift.
When the sea was calm, all boats alike
Shew'd mastership in floating.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 1.
That men, being drown'd and sunk, do float the ninth day, when their gall breaketh, are popular affirmations.—Sir T. Browne, 'ulgar Errors.
Three blustering nights, borne by the southern blast,
I float; and discover'd land at last.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.
His rosy wreath was dropt not long before,
Borne by the tide of wine, and floating on the floor.
Ibid.
Carp are very apt to float away with fresh water.
—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Move with buoyancy through the atmosphere.
What divine monstra, O ye gods, were these,
That float in air, and fly upon the seas!
Dryden, Indian Emperor.
Swift they descend, with wing to wing conjoin'd,
Stretch their broad plumes, and float upon the wind.
Pope.

3. Pass with a light irregular course: (perhaps mistaken for fleet or flit).
Floating visions make not deep impressions enough to leave in the mind clear, distinct, lasting ideas.—Locke.
[The meanings of float are very numerous, but they may probably all be derived from the notion of flowing water. Old High German flotan, German fliegen, Old Norse flyt, flaut, flotid, at flota, to flow; Swedish flyta, Danish flyde, to flow, and also to float; flyta and strömmen, to swim with the stream; gufvot flyder med vand, the floor swims with water. Anglo-Norse flotan, fluctuate; Scotch, to flit, flit, to flow, to float, and figuratively to abound. (Jamieson.) Neaviger, to sail, to float. (Hollyband.) The same form appears as a noun in Old Norse flot, a river; English float, a creek up which the tide flows.

In a figurative sense to float is to flow away, to escape, move rapidly away, whence the notion of transitory, swift, rapid. . . . The participial floating in the sense of what passes quickly away is very common. Italian fluare, transitory, fleeting (Florio); Old Norse flotar, flotlogr, English float, swift. The original image is the flapping movement of a resolute body, the representation of which is made to express also the wavering of a fluid surface. Platt Deutsch flutern, fludern, to flap, flutter, flicker; Bavarian flodern, to flutter, flicker; fludern, to flap, flutter, to make to flow, to float wood. . . . From the frequentative form in which the word seems earliest to have appeared was formed a root fluk, flod, plud, signifying undulating movement. German pludern, wide flapping breeches; Lithuanian pluduranti, to swim here and there, to drift; pludas, what swims on the surface, flowing; pludis, a raft; pluditi, plauti, to float. . . . The Anglo-Saxon flota, a ship, Platt Deutsch flote, a raft, is essentially the same word with Old Norse floti, Danish flaede, French flote, a fleet. The Old French flote, a crowd, may probably be from the notion of abundance, above pointed out as being expressed by English flote. From the form of the root ending in a d instead of t we have Gothic flotas, Old Norse flot, Swedish flod, English flod, a flowing water, river, inundation, tide. . . . The change of d into s gives Anglo-Saxon flotas, flawas, and English flaw, Dutch vloed, vloeden, Platt Deutsch flugen, to flow. With these latter forms may be claimed Bohemian plaviti, to swim, Polish plawiti, to float, convey by water, to hover in the air; Russian plavat, to swim, sail, navigate; plaviti, to float; plavok, the float of a net; Serbian plaviti, to overflow, to skim milk; plaviti, to swim, to float with the stream. Again, we have Russian plaviti, plaviti, to swim, float, sail, flow; plaviti, swimming. Thus we are brought to Latin fluere, to flow, fluvius, a river, and Greek fluere, to fluctuate, sail, swim, navigate, fluere, a ship. Some of the derivatives of Latin fluere are the participle fluens, and fluens, wave, would indicate that the original root of the verb had a final e, instead of t or d as in flod, flut, but this is only another instance of that equivalence of labials, dentals, and gutturals in representing many kinds of natural sounds already exemplified under flabby, where it was shown that the roots flab, flap, flad, or flap, flack, flut, are used with apparent indifference in expressing a flapping, flickering, fluttering action. The sense of shallow is probably derived from the notion of swimming on the surface, skimming the surface. Shallow is what keeps near the surface. So we have Bohemian plaviti, to swim, flow, float; plaviti, swimming, navigation; Polish plyt, a float or raft; Bohemian-Polish plytki, shallow. Platt Deutsch flut, shallow. On this supposition we must regard the resemblance to flut as accidental, though it must be confessed the words resemble each other both in sound and sense in a remarkable manner. French plat and Friulan flack signify both flat and shallow; Dutch clack, flat, clack, a shallow estuary; Swedish flata flöjen, a shallow in the sea. (Serenius.)—Waldwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Float. v. a.

1. Cover with water; flood.

Proud Pictulus floats the fruitful lauds,
And leaves a rich manure of golden sands.
Dryden, Translation of the Kæcid.
Venice looks, at a distance, like a great town half floated by a deluge.—Addison, Travels in Italy.
The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make:
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake.
Pope.

2. Give buoyancy to anything; set or keep afloat; (specially applied to commercial schemes, as 'float a company').

In the following the construction is only apparently active, being like 'stay a night.'
On frothy billows thousands float the stream,
In cumbersome mail.
Philips.

Float. s.

1. Act of flowing; rise of tide; (opposed to ebb). Obsolete.

Our trust in the Almighty is, that with us contentions are now at their highest float.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity, prof.
There is some disposition of bodies to rotation, particularly from east to west; of which kind we conceive the main float and reflux of the sea is, which is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Any body so contrived or formed as to lie on the surface of the water; raft; apparatus for buoying persons in water.

That they should bring cedar-trees from Libanus, which should be brought by floats to the haven of Joppa.—1 Esdras, v. 22.
They took it for a ship, and, as it came nearer, for a boat; but it proved a float of weeds and rushes.—
Sir R. L'Estrange.
A passage for the weary people make;
With cedar floats the standing water show,
Of many stones make bridges if it flow.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

3. Cork or quill by which the angler discovers the bite of a fish.

You will find this to be a very choice bait, sometimes casting a little of it into the place where your float swims.—J. Walton, Complete Angler.

4. Measure among bankers, i.e. makers of embankments.

Banks are measured by the float or floor, which is eighteen foot square and one deep.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

5. Wave. Rare.

For the rest o' the fleet,
Which I dispers'd, they all have met again,
And are upon the Mediterranean float.
Shakespeare, Tempest, l. 2.

Floatation. s. Quality of floating.

Archimedes is the father of naval architecture as a science, . . . and in order to understand the principles of floatation, we must understand his great law of displacement, . . . that a floating body displaces a weight of water equal to its own weight.—J. Scott Russell, The Modern System of Naval Architecture,
vol. i. ch. ii.

Floater. s. One who, or that which floats.

Pity the floaters on the Ionian sea.
Boswell, Translation from Ovid's Metamorphoses, l. iv.

Floatergrass (Fliotergrass). s. Native grass so called, Poa (Glycerium) fluitans, less properly Catabrosa aquatica.

Floater-grass hath a long and round root, somewhat thick. . . . Spike floater-grass, or spiked floatergrass, groweth at the top of each slender creeping stalk one spiked ear and no more; the other many;
which maketh a difference betwixt them; otherwise they are one like the other. . . . Likewise in English it is called floater-grass and floater-grass because they swimme and floate in the water.—Gerardus, Herball, p. 15: 1553.

Floating. part. adj. Lying on the surface of water, the water simply buoying it up, rather than acting upon it by its current; with several special applications which, however, give two words rather than a compound: (sometimes the import is material, as in 'floating batteries'; sometimes figurative, as 'floating capital,' i.e. free to be used as occasion requires, as opposed to money sunk in any particular speculation or investment).

(For examples see Floatation and Flooring.)

Floating. verbal abs. Act or condition of that which floats.

What more necessary while we are at sea, in the floatings of this world, than the faithful adviser?—
Whitlock, Observations on the present Manners of the English, p. 391: 1654.

Floaty. adj. ? Given to float loosely and without any definite direction, rather than made for a straight course.

The hindrance to stay well is the extreme length of a ship, especially if she be floaty, and want sharpness of way forwards.—Sir W. Raleigh, Essays.

Floccipend. v. a. [fluere = lock of wool; pendo = balance, value.] Value lowly. Rare.

Many other ridiculous articles they layd to hym, whiche the cares of every honest creature knowynge
the duetie of the subject to his pryncce, would abhorre and succipend.—Math. Henry VII. an. 4. (Rich.)
By reason whereof he should be floccipendit, and had in contempte and disdayne of the Scottish people.—Id. ib. an. 11. (Rich.)

Flock. s. [from Lat. fluere = lock of wool.]

1. Lock of wool.

A house well furnish'd shall be thine to keep;
And, for a flock bed, I can hear my sheep.
Dryden.

2. Shreddy or flocculent pieces; drugs.

Not to leave any floccs in the bottom of the cup.—
Nash, Complaint of Pierce Penniless: 1592. (Sarus by H. & W.)

Flock. s. [from A.S. flocc.]

1. Company; (usually of birds or beasts).

She that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
That live in her? Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, l. 1.

2. Aggregation of sheep: (distinguished from herds, which are of oxen).

The cattle in the fields, and meadows green,
Those rare and solitary, those in flocks
Feasting at once, and in broad herds upspring.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 400.
France has a sheep by her, to show that the riches of the country consisted chiefly in flocks and pasture.—Addison.

3. Body of men.

The heathen that hath fled out of Judaea came to Nicanor by flocks.—2 Maccabees, xiv. 14.

Flock. v. n. Gather in crowds or large num- bers.

Upon the return of the ambassadors, the poor of all sorts flocked together to the great master's house.
—Kautila, History of the Turks.

Stilph, when the people flocked about him, and that one said, The people come wondering about you, as if it were to see some strange beast; No, saith he, it is to see a man which Hogenes sought with his lantern at noon-day.—Bacon.

Seeing the spirits swelling the nerves cause the arm's motion, upon its resistance they flock from other parts of the body to overcome it.—*Sir A.
Digby, Treatise on the Nature of Bodies.*

The wife of the town came thither:
'Twas strange to see how they flock'd together:
Each strongly confident of his own way,
Thought to gain the laurel of that day.
Sir J. Suckling.

The Trojan youth about the captive flock.
To wonder, or to pity, or to mock. Sir J. Denham.
People do not flock to courts so much for their majesties' service, as for making their fortunes.—*Sir
R. L'Estrange.*

Flock. v. a. Crowd. Rare.

Though in the morning I began to roo,
Good follows trouping, flock'd me so,
That make what haste I could the sun was set,
Ere from the gates of London I could get.
Taylor (the Water-Poet): 1600. (Sarus by H. & W.)

Flocking. s. Little member of a flock; lamb.

But she takes not as much for curing of a thousand mortal people, as I have spent in turpentine and tarre to keep my flockings cleanly in a spring-time.
—Brome, Queen and Conscience: 1639. (Sarus by H. & W.)

Flog. v. a. [Lat. flagrum, flagellum = lash.]

Lash; whip; chastise.
'Flog him; flog him well, doctor,' cried Mrs. B.—
Coleridge, Table Talk.

Flog. v. n. Be employed in flogging.

The schoolboy's desire is a play day,
The schoolmaster's joy is to flog.
Gay, Songs and Ballads.

Flogging. verbal abs. Act of one who flogs.

I surely have some friend amongst the writers of the Monthly Review; for I have not only escaped a flogging, but am treated with great civility.—Shenstone, Letters, vi. (Ord MS.)

Flood. s. [A.S. flōd.]

1. Body of water; sea; river.

His dominion shall be also from the one sea to the other, and from the flood unto the world's end.—
Psalm, lxxii. 8.
Arcadia's flow'ry plains and pleasing floods.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

You see this confluence; this great flood of vi-tors.
Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, l. 1.

2. Flow; flux: (as opposed to ebb or reflux); rising or swelling of a body of water.

We seek to know the moving of each sphere,
And the strange causes o' th' ebb and floods of Nile.
Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.

3. General deluge: (with the).

It is commonly opinioned that the earth was thinly inhabited before the flood.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

4. Catamenia.

Those that have the good fortune of miscarriage,
or being delivered, escape by means of their floods,
revelling the humours from their lumps.—Marston, Discourses of Conceptions.

Flood. v. a. Deluge; cover with waters.

Where meadows are flooded late in spring, roll thru with a large barley-roller.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Floodgate. s. Gate by which the water-course is closed or opened at pleasure.

As if the opening of her mouth had opened some great floodgate of sorrow, whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sunk to the ground.
—Sir P. Sidney.

Yet there the steel staid not; but inly late
Deep in his flesh, and opened wide a red floodgate.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.

His youth and want of experience in maritime service had somewhat been shrewdly touched, even before the sluice and floodgates of popular liberty were yet set open.—Sir H. Wotton.
The rain descended for forty days, the catenars or floodgates of heaven being opened.—T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Flooding. s. In Medicine. Uterine hæmor- rhage.

The diseases which give rise to uterine hæmor-rhage are principally cancer, fibrous tumour or polyp; . . . affections which may . . . produce frequent attacks of bleeding—sometimes so severe as to amount to fluor.—Tanner, Practice of Medicine, p. l. ch. vii. § 9.

Flook. s. Same as Fluke.

What will my swelling pavilion's furze usage?
No more can I sustain this tempest's rage,
Than anchor's flook, drop on loose ground astorm.
Anonymous, Fletcher's Morals, iii. 411. (Ord MS.)

Floor. s. [A.S. flor.]

1. Pavement; foundation; part on which one treads.

His stepmother, making all her gestures counter-fit affliction, lay almost groveling upon the floor of her chamber. — Sir P. Sidney.

He rent that iron door
Where entered in, his foot could find no floor,
But all a deep descent as dark as hell.

He winnoweth barley to-night in the threshing floor. — Ruth, iii. 8.

Look how the floor of heaven
Is thick lay'd with patterns of bright gold:
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quivering to the young eye'd cherubim.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.
The ground lay strewn with pikes so thick as a floor is usually strewn with rushes. — Sir J. Heyward.

2. Story; flight of rooms.

He that building stays at one
Floor, or the second, hath erected none.

J. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy, and five sleeping, cooking, &c. rooms, on the fourth floor.
— Leah, Letter to a Gentleman.

The huge pit ceiling is approached by steps, and so tall that it might be let off in floors, for sleeping-rooms for all the Arabian family. — Thackeray, Book of Noah, ch. xviii.

Floor. v. n. Make, or furnish with, a floor.

Hewn stone and timber for casplings, and to floor
the houses. — 2 Chronicles, xxxiv. 11.

Thus treated, even newly sown boards will floor far better than a many years dry seasoning, as they call it. — Boyle, Sylva, p. 822. (Ord MS.)

Floor. v. n. Knock down; stun. Slung.

(Our question . . . floored successively almost every witness in favour of abolition to whom it was addressed. — Saturday Review, February 10, 1861.)

Floorer. s. Blow (real or figurative) which floors a person. Slung.

Flooring. verbal abs. Foundation; pavement.

'Mosaic is a kind of painting in small pebbles, cocks, and shells, of sundry colours; . . . but of most use in pavements and floorings. — Sir H. Wot-ton, Religioe Walpoleana, p. 63.

The flooring is a kind of red plaster made of brick, ground to powder, and afterwards worked into mortar. — Adams.

He had volunteered to take the command of a flooring battery which was a raft, consisting merely of a number of beams nailed together, with a flooring to support the guns; it was square, with a breast-work full of port-holes, and without masts, carrying twenty-four guns, and one hundred and twenty men. — Smithy, Life of Nelson.

When a gallery is to serve at once for several distinct purposes, a greater height is given to it, and a flooring is laid on at a certain level. — Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Flop. s. Contact of anything with a sound like that of a soft tenacious substance.

Flop. v. n. Flap; plump down.

Flop. adv. In a flopping manner: (as, 'it fell down flop').

Flopping. part. adj. Falling with a flop.

A blackbird was frightened almost to death with a huge flopping kite that she saw over her head. — *Sir
R. L'Etienne*.

Flora. s. [Lat. — the goddess of flowers;
and, as such, a proper rather than a common name.] List of the flowers of a district; product in the way of vegetable species of a district. See Fauna, with which it is often joined; sometimes contrasted.

Collections of botanical descriptions may be of different sorts, as:—1. Monographs, or descriptions of one genus, tribe, or class: as Lindley's Monogra-phia Rosarum, 2. Flora, or an enumeration of the plants of any one district or country: as Smith's Flora Britannica, 3. Gardens, or an enumeration, descriptive or nominal, of the plants cultivated in any one garden: as Aston's Hortus Kewensis, 4.
General works, in which all known plants are described. — London, Encyclopædia of Gardening,
p. 40.

Floral. adj.

1. Relating to either the goddess Flora, or flowers.

Let one great day
To celebrated sports and floral play
Be not aside.

2. In Botany. Appertaining to, or constituting, the flower: (as opposed to stem or leaves).

Some botanists call bracts either the leaf from the axil of which a flower is developed, . . . or else all those leaves which are found upon the inflorescence, and are situated between the true leaves and the calyx. Others refuse the name of leaf to any organ except such as are manifestly dissimilar to the ordinary foliage; and this is the common practice, more leaves, to which flowers are axillary, being called floral leaves. — Lindley, Introduction to Botany, i. l. ch. ii. sect. 4.

Soon after the appearance of the calyx, the margin of the central tubercle becomes raised into five smaller tubercles, which are rounded, alternating with the segments of the corolla, and thus representing the floral whorl which immediately succeeds it.
— Id. ib. b. l. ch. ii.

Flórentine. s. Custard so called.

I went to Florence, from whence we have the art of making custards, which are therefore called Flórentine. — Wife's Interpreter, p. 23. (Nares by
H. & W.)

If stealing custards, larks, and Flórentines,

By some late statute be erected treason,
Beaumont and Fletcher, Woman-Hater, v. 1.
(Nares by H. & W.)

Flóret. s. [from Lat. flor, flor-is.] Small or imperfect flower.

Suppose the flowers of a simple umbel to be deprived of their pedicels, and to be seated on a receptacle or enlarged axis and have a capitulum or flower-head. If this is surrounded by an involucre, the compound flower, as it is inaccurately called by the school of Linnaeus, of composites is produced.
. . . The flowers of flórets borne by the flower-head in its circumference are usually flat or ligulate, and different from those produced in its circumference.
Those of the former station are called flórets of the ray, and those of the latter flórets of the disk. —
Lindley, Introduction to Botany, b. l. ch. ii. sect. 4.

Flóret. s. [Fr. flóret.] Fencing sword.

In such fencing just has proved earnest, and flórets have all turned to swords. — Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue, p. 121.

Flórage. s. Bloom; blossom. Rare.

And where the trees unfold their bloom,
And where the banks their flórage bear.
J. Scott, Ode.

Flóricultural. adj. Appertaining to Floriculture.

A flóricultural catalogue as copious as that which we have given of culinary plants and fruits would greatly exceed our limits. Plants grown for ornament are so numerous, that we cannot particularize separately the culture of each individual species;
but, with the exception of some of the more choice sorts, as the flóret flowers, &c., must collect them into groups. . . . Flóret flowers are so called as being those either originated by flóret by means of hybridation or otherwise; or so improved by cultivation as to appear quite different from what the same flower was in its original state. . . . The Dutch were the first to bring this department of gardening into notice, and more particularly by the great excellence to which they arrived in the culture of flóret bulbs. — London, Encyclopædia of Gardening, 5170-1.

Flóriculture. s. [Lat. cultura — cultivation.]

See extract.

Flóriculture we consider as comprehending whatever relates to the culture and arrangement of plants, whether ligneous or herbaceous, grown chiefly on account of their flowers, or as objects of taste or curiosity. . . . Flóriculture is obviously of limited interest and utility compared with horticulture. — London, Encyclopædia of Gardening, 5015.

Flórid. adj. [Lat. flóridus.]

1. Productive of flowers; covered with flowers.

Our flórid and purely ornamental garlands, delightful unto sight and useful as of more free election. — Sir T. Browne, Miscellaneous, p. 92.

2. Bright in colour.

Our beauty is in colour inferior to many flowers;
and when it is most flórid and gay, three fits of an ague can change it into yellowness and leanness. —
Jerry Taylor, Rule and Reason of holy Living.
The qualities of blood in a healthy state are to be flórid, when let out of the vessel, the red part emgearing strongly and soon. — Arbuthnot, Nature and Choice of Aliments.

3. Embellished; splendid; brilliant with decorations.

The flórid, elevated, and figurative way is for the passions; for love and hatred, fear and anger, are exalted in the soul, by showing their objects out of their true proportion. — Dryden.

How did, pray, the flórid youth offend,
Whom speech you took, and gave it to a friend?

Pope.
Leo, no doubt, felt his strength; he could cope with the minds of the people, and make the pulpit what the rostrum had been of old. His sermons singularly contrast with the flórid, declamatory, and often imaginative and impudently style of the Greek preachers. They are brief, simple, severe, without fancy, without metaphysical subtlety, without passion: it is the Roman censor unimpaired with nervous majesty on the view of the people;
the Roman praetor detailing the law, and delivering with authority the doctrine of the faith. — *Milman,
History of Latin Christianity*, ch. iv. h. ii.

The first letter which William unrolled seemed to contain only flórid compliments; but a pen of classical was lighted; a liquor well known to the diplomats of that age was applied to the paper; an unwary steam filled the closet; and lines full of grave meaning began to appear. — Macaulay, History of England, ch. xv.

Flóridity. s. Florid character.

There is a flóridity in the face from the good digestion of the red part of the blood. — Sir J. Flóger, Præternatural State of the animal Humours.

Flóridly. adv. In a florid, showy, and imposing manner.

If they see a man talk seriously, they talk flóridly non sense. — Life of A. Wood, p. 274.

Flóridness. s. Attribute suggested by Flori-
d.

1. Freshness of colour.

Another infallible indication is the nature and flóridness of the plants, which it officiously produces. — Evelyn, Terra.

2. Vigour; spirit. Obsolete.

The ancient Greeks as so much extol it [dancing], deriving it from the name and flóridness of the warm-spirited blood. — Felltham, Rhetoric, l. 74.

3. Embellishment; ambitious elegance.

Though a philosopher need not delight readers with his flóridness, yet he may take a care that he disguise them not by flatness. — Boyle.

Flórimor. s. [flour velour.] Plant so called; see extract.

This plant is called in Greek ἀνάρδος, because it does not wither or wax old; in Latin Ananthurus, purpureus; in Dutch Sanuit blommee; in Italian Flor velluto; in French l'asse velours; in English Floure gentile, purple Velvet flower, Flórimor, and of some Floure velour. — Gerard, Herball, p. 325; 1632.

Flórin. s. Coin of various value first made by the Florentines: (that of Germany is in value 2s. 4d.; that of Spain, 4s. 43d.; that of Palermo and Sicily, 2s. 6d.; that of Holland, 2s.; and that of England, 2s.).

You mistake the value of the flórens, such as was used in Chaucer's time; which taking the name of the workmen, being Florentines, were called flórens; as sterling money took their name of Ex-terlinges, who refused and coined the silver in the time of King Henry the second. — F. Thynne, Antimoniensis on Myrtil's Chryser.

In the imperial chamber the proctors have half a flórin taxed and allowed them for every substantial recess. — Ayliffe, Parergon Juris Canonici.

The first gold that King Edward III. coined, was in the year 1343; and the pieces were called flórens, because Florentines were the coiners. — Cannon, Remains, p. 242.

Flórist. s. Cultivator of flowers; flower fancier.

I have the honour of employment from the king, in a place of his delight, which doth so consist with the opportunity of my charge here that it hath given me acquaintance with some excellent flórist, as they are styled; and likewise with mine own disposition, who have ever thought the greatest pleasure to consist in the simplest ornaments and elegancies of nature. — Sir H. Wotton, Letter to the Earl of Hodderness, 1623.

Some botanists or flórist at the least.

Pope, Dunciad.
And while they break
On the charm'd eye, th' exulting flórist marks
With secret pride the wonders of his hand.

Thomson, Seasons, Spring.
The art of representing by flowers, leaves, plants,
&c., vegetable nature in her ornamental productions, constitutes the business of the artificial flórist. —
Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.
(See also Flóricultural.)

Flósculous. adj. Composed of flowers;
having the nature or form of flowers.

The outward part is a thick and carnosous covering,
and the second a dry and flósculous coat. — *Sir T.
Browne, Vulgar Errors*.

Floss. s. [?] In Metallurgy. See extract.
Floss of the puddling furnace is the fluid gas floating upon the iron produced by the vitrification of the oxides and carbin which are present.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Floss. s. [Italian, flossia.] See extract.
After separating a downy matter from the outside of the cocoons, called floss, they are thrown into warm water.—Aikin, Arts of Life. (Ord MS.)

Floss-silk. s. See extract.
Floss-silk is the name given to the portions of revolved silk broken off in the flossure of the cocoons, which is rarely like cotton or wool, and spun into a soft coarse yarn or thread, for making handkerchiefs, neckties, and other common silk fabrics. . . . The female peasants of Lombardy generally wear clothes of homespun floss-silk. Of late years by improved processes pretty fine fabrics of this material have been produced both in England and France.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Flota. s. See Flotilla.
The stir here [at Cadix] is prodigious during the last months of the stay of the flota.—Swinsburne, Travels through Spain, lib. 24.
She will sit out armaments upon the ocean, by which the flota itself may be intercepted; and thus the treasures of all Europe, as well as the largest and surest resources of the Spanish monarchy, may be conveyed into France.—Burke, On the present State of Affairs: 1793.

Flota. v. a. Skim. Obsolete.
Such cheques, good Clakey, ye skoted too nigh.
Tusser, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Flotilla. s. Etymologically a diminutive of Flota, meaning a comparatively small fleet preceeding the larger one; more generally applied to a company of flat-bottomed vessels drawing but little water, as opposed to ships. Flota has generally the same meaning, but as an English word it is much rarer.
The second object was to profit by
The moment of the general consternation,
To attack the Turk's flotilla, which lay nigh
Extremely tranquil, anchor'd at its station.

Myron, Don Juan, vii. 24.

Flotium. s. In Law. Goods from a wreck that drift without an owner, or are washed ashore. See Jetson.

Flotium is, where wrecked goods continue swimming on the surface of the waves.—Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England.

Flou. v. n.
1. Move with violence in the water or mire; struggle or dash in the water.
With his broad fins and forked tail he leaves
The rising surge, and floues in the waves.
Addison, Translation from Ovid.

2. Move with weight and tumult.
Six flouing Flanders mares
Are e'en as good as any two of theirs.
Prior.

3. Move with passionate agitation.
When I'm duller than a post,
Nor can the plainest word pronounce,
You neither flou, nor fret, nor flouce.
Swift.

Flouce. v. a. [see Frounce.] Deck with flourishes.
Nin was flouced and furbelowed from head to foot; every ribbon was crinkled, and every part of her garments in curl.—Addison, Spectator.

They have got into the fashion of floucing the pattern so very deep, that it looks like an entire coat of lutealring.—Pope.

Flouce. s. [?] 1. Gesture indicating impatience; starting off from anything.
While thus I debated, in reverie centered,
An acquaintance, a friend as he called himself, entered;
An underbred free-spoken fellow was he,
Who smiled as he looked at the venison and me.
'What have we got here?—Why this is good eating!
Your own, I suppose, or is it in waiting?'
'Why, whence should it be?' replied I, with a flouce;
'I got these things often, but that was a bouncer;
'Some lords, my acquaintance, that settle the nation,
Are pleased to be kind—but I have outation.'

Goldsmith, The Banquet of Venison.

2. Anything sewed to the garment, and hanging loose, so as to swell and shake.
Nay, off in dreams invention we bestow,
To change a flouce or add a furbelow.
A muslin flouce made very full, would be very agreeable.—Id.

Furbelows and flouces have been disposed of at will, the stays have been lowered behind.—Guaridan, no. 148.

Miss Emily Ponto at the piano, and her sister Maria at that somewhat exploded instrument, the harp, were in light blue dresses that looked all junior and spread out like Mr. Green's balloon when inflated.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. xiv.

Flounder. s. Native fish of the genus Pleuronectes, so called.

Like the flounder, out of the frying-pan into the fire.—Candem.

Flounders will both thrive and breed in any pond.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

The flounder is one of the most common of the flatfish, and in the sea and near the mouths of large rivers all round our coast, being more particularly abundant where the bottom is soft, whether mud, clay, or sand. All the bays, creeks, and inlets of Orkney produce it, according to Mr. Low; and it is taken in abundance in different parts of Scotland, where it is called skate and Maycock skate—a term having reference to the flattened form of the fish. It is common at Berwick and Yarmouth, at which latter place it is called a but—a northern term; and these flounders that are caught in the extensive backwaters behind Yarmouth, where there is a considerable deposit of mud, are in consequence so dark in colour as to be distinguished from the lighter-coloured ones caught on the sands of the sea by the name of black-butts. This similarity in colour between certain skates and the bottom upon which they are found has been already referred to as affording security to the defenceless from the attacks of their enemies, and exhibits a beautiful instance of the design employed for the preservation of species.—Yarrell, British Fishes.

Flounder. v. n. [Dutch, flodderen.] Struggle with violent and irregular motions: (as a horse in the mire).

Down goes at once the horseman and the horse;
That courser stumbles on the fallen steed,
And *flounder*ing throws the rider off his head.
Dryden.

The more inform'd, the less he understood,
And deeper sunk by *flounder*ing in the mud. Id.
He plung'd for mure, but found no bottom there;
Then writ and flounder'd on, in mure despair. Pope.

Flour. s. [The same word as Flower in 'flowers of brimstone,' &c., where it applies to a powder. The spelling with u differentiates the terms.] Meal of corn.
I can make my audit up, that all
From me do lack receive the flour of all,
And leave me but the bran.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 1.

Flourish. v. n. [Lat. florere, florresco.]
1. Be in vigour; not fade.
The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree.—Psalms, xlii. 12.

Where'er you tread, the blushing flow'rs shall rise,
And all things flourish where you turn your eyes.
Pope.

2. Be in a prosperous state.
Harry, that prophesied thus should 't be king,
Dull comfort thee in sleep; live thou, and flourish.
Shakespeare, Richard III., v. 3.

Miss Kelly we never see; Talford not this half year: the latter flourishes, but the exact number of his children, God forgive me, I have utterly forgotten; we single people are often out in our count there.—Lamb, Letter to Wordsworth.

3. Use florid language; speak with ambitious copiousness and elegance.
Whilst Cicero acts the part of a rhetorician, he dilates and flourishes, and gives example instead of rule.—Baker.

They dilate sometimes, and flourish long upon little incidents, and they skip over and but lightly touch the drier part of their themes.—Watts, Logick.

4. Describe various figures by intersecting lines; play in wanton and irregular motions.
Impetuous spread
The stream, and smoking, flourish'd o'er his head.
Pope, Dunciad.

5. In Musical. Play some prelude without any settled rule.
To flourish as musicians or men of fence do, before they play earnestly; to prove or assay what he can do, before he comes to the thing.—Barret, Dictionary: 1580.

6. Make flourishes.
(For example see Flourish, s. 4.)

Flourish. v. a.
1. Adorn with vegetable beauty.
With shadowy verdure flourish'd high,
A sudden youth the groves enjoy.
Penton.

2. Work with a needle into figures.
All that I shall say will be but like bottoms of thread close wound up, which, with a good needle, perhaps may be flourish'd into many works.—Bacon, Considerations on War with Spain.

3. Move anything in quick circles or vibrations by way of show or triumph.

And all the powers of hell in full applause flourish'd their snakes, and toss'd their flaming brands.
Crashaw.

Against the post their wicker shields they crush, flourish the sword, and at the plankton push.
Jephtha, Translation of Juvenal.

4. Adorn with embellishments of language; grace with eloquence ostentatiously diffusively.

The labours of Hercules, though flourish'd with much fabulous matter, yet containeth set forth the content of all nations and ages in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating giants, monsters, and tyrants. Bacon.

As they are likely to over flourish their own case, so their flattery is hardest to be discovered.—Collaer.

5. Adorn; embellish; grace.
To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin,
Fifth that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the device.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iv. 1.

Flourish. s.
1. State of prosperity. Rare.
The Roman monarchy in her highest flourish never had the like.—Hume, Instructions for Foreign Travel, p. vi.

2. Bravery; beauty; ambitious splendour.
I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;
I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was.

Shakespeare, Richard III., i. 2.

The flourish of his soldier youth,
Was the pride of naked truth.
Crashaw.

3. Ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness; furbelowed elegance.
This is a flourish, there follow excellent parables.
—Bacon.

We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

The apprehension is so deeply rivetted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen or brush it out.—Dr. H. More, Devises Dialogues.

Villanias have not the same countenance, when there are great interests, plausible colours, and flourishes of wit and rhetoric interposed between the sight and the object.—Sir R. L. Estlin.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly thus thrust ward they spoke, tho' least believed by them.—South, Sermons.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he shuns his crimes:
He hurls with flourishes his long language;
'Tis fine, say'st thou; what, to be prais'd and hang?
Dryden.

4. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.
A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and printed, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat characters and flourishes of a bible curiously printed.—Boyle.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishes about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye.—Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism.

You never wrote what I call a schoolmaster's hand, like C—; nor a woman's hand, like S—; nor a misal hand, like Porson; nor an all-of-the-wrong-side-sloping hand, like Miss H—; nor a dramatic, Mele-and-Persian, peremptory hand, like R—; but you ever wrote what I call a Grecian's hand.

... By your flourishes, I should think you never learned to make crotchets or corkers, or flourish the governors' names in the writing-school; and by the tenor and cut of your letters, I suspect you were never in it at all.—Lamb, Letters.

I have seen, ere now, an original Rembrandt (with a flourish to the R at which the best of sceptics would not dare to cavil) dated 1680.—Nath. Dutch Pictures, The Shadow of a young Dutch Painter.

5. Musical prelude.
The late's light genius now does proudly rise,
Heav'd on the surges of swain rhapsodies;
When flourish, meteor-like, doth curl the air
With flash of high-born fancies here and there Dancing in lofty measures. Crashaw, Poems, p. 88.

Flourisher. s. One who flourishes (in pride, or in prosperity).
They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they may,
For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in pow'r.
Chapman, Translation of Homer's Iliad.

Flourishing. part. adj. Vigorous; prosperous.

Yet even during this internal feud, Latin Christendom was gathering into a separate unity. The churches of Gaul and Spain appeal at once to Rome and to Carthage; Arles, indeed, in southern Gaul, may still have been Greek. But the high character of Cyprus, and the flourishing state of the African churches, combined with their facility to endow them with this concurrent primary in the West.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, b. i. ch. i.

Flourishingly. adv. In a flourishing manner.

1. Ostentatiously.

She is flourishingly decked with gold, precious stones, and pearls.—Shakspeare, Titus Andronicus, pt. ii. act. i. v. b. 1030.

2. In an embellished manner of speaking.

To utter his mind eloquently, flourishingly, and finely.—Barret, Alceste, 1540.

Flowery. adj. [from flour.] Menly. Rare.

The shaft the wheel, the wheel the treble turns, And that the stone which grinds the flowery corns. Sylvester, Du Bartas, 4th day, 1st week. (Ord. MS.)

Flout. v. a. Mock; insult; treat with mockery and contempt.

He mock'd us when he beg'd our voices; Certainly he flouted us down-right.

The heretical spirit of Luther, for I cannot be flouted out of that word, hated the brotherhood of their elders.—Bishop Hall, Honour of married Clergy, p. 42.

Flout. v. n. Practise flouting or mockery; behave with contempt; sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off this argument?—Shakspeare, As you like it, i. 2.

With talents well endu'd To be scurrilous and rude; When you perty raise your snout, Flout and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

Flout. s. Mock; insult.

He would ask of those that had been at the other's table, Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given?—Bacon.
He opened it, and read it out, With many a smile and leering flout. Butler, Hudibras.

How many flouts and jeers must I expose myself to by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an intemperate cup?—Chalmers, Sermons.
Their doors are barr'd against a bitter flout; Shalt, if you please; but you shall snarl without. Dryden.

Flouter. s. One who flouts or jeers.

Democritus, that common flouter of folly.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, to the Reader.
What's that to you, Goodman flouter?—Deamont and Fletcher, Little French Lawyer.

Flow. v. n. [A.S. flowan.]

1. Run or spread as water.

Fields of light and liquid either flow, Purged from the pond'rous drops of earth below. Dryden.
Endless tears flow down in streams. Swift.

As opposed to standing waters.

With flow floats the standing water flow; Of many stones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden.

2. Rise; not ebb.

This river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between. Shakspeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 4.

3. Melt.

O that thou wouldst rend the heavens, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence!—Isaiah, lxi. 1.

4. Proceed; issue.

The knowledge drawn from experience is quite of another kind from that which flows from speculation or discourse.—South, Sermons.

5. Abound; be crowded.

The dry streets flow'd with men. Chapman.

Flow. v. a. Overflow; deluge.

Watering hops is scarce practicable, unless you have a stream at hand to flow the ground.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Flow. s.

1. Rise of water: (opposed to fall).

Some, from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flow and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.
The ebb of tides, and their mysterious flow, We as art's elements shall understand. Dryden, Annus Mirabilis.

2. Sudden plenty or abundance.

The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greedily, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood.—Pope.

3. Stream of diction; volubility of tongue.
Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better.—South, Sermons.

Flower. s. [Fr. fleur; Lat. flor, floris.]

1. Part of a plant which contains the reproductive organs.

Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays
Brush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

2. Flowering plant in general.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations.—Watts.

As late each flower that sweetest blows,
I pluck'd, the garden's pride,
Within the petals of a rose
A sleeping Love I spied. Coleridge.

3. Ornament; embellishment.

The nomination of persons to those places, being so prime and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

This discourse of Cyprinus, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator.—Hakewill, Apology.

4. Best part of anything.

Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long:
In flow's of age you perish for a song. Pope.
The choice and flower of all things profitable the poetical do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form.—Hosier, Ecclesiastical Poils.
The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects; the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars.—Addison.
He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb.—Shakspeare, Romeo and Juliet, ii. 5.

The London clergy, then universally acknowledged to be the flower of their profession, held a meeting.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. viii.

4. Fine parts of a solid obtained by sublimation, as common sulphur, or 'flowers of brimstone.'

Flower de Luce. s. [Fr. fleur de lis.] Native plant so called; cornflag; iris.

The iris is the flower de luce.—Poacham.
The goodly flower-de-luce. Drayton, Polyolbion, xv.

Flower. v. n.

1. Be in flower; be in blossom; bloom; put forth flowers.

Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd,
Opening their various colours. Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 517.

2. Be in the prime; flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,
I like a swallow swift I wander'd here and there;
For heat of breathless heat me did no sting,
That I of doubtful danger had no fear. Spenser.

3. Froth; ferment; muddle: (as new-bottled beer).

These above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little; whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

4. Come off as flowers by sublimation.

If you can accept of these few observations, which have flower'd off, and are, as it were, the burnings of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of.—Milton, Tractate on Education.

Flower'd. adj. Devised or decorated with figures in imitation of flowers.

Child, child, talk not to me of charity. Who gives twenty pounds to charity? But you are a strippling. You know nothing of the world. Besides, charity begins at home. Twenty pounds would buy me a complete suit of flower'd silk, trimmings and all.—Smollett, Expedition of Humphrey Clinker.

Floweret. s. Small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would agitate
With gaudy garlands of fresh flowerets light,
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. Spenser, Faerie Queene.

That same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
Now now within the pretty floweret's eye,
Like tears that did their own disease bewail. Shakspeare, Midsummer Night's Dream, iv. 1.

To be the sylvan lodge
They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flowerets deck'd, and fragrant smells. Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 377.

Then laughs the childish year with flowerets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around;
But no substantial nourishment receives,
Infirm the stalks, unsolid are the leaves. Dryden, Fables.

Flowering. part. adj. Displaying, adorning with, flowers; showing itself as a plot of ground in the season of flowers.

So forth they march'd in this goodly sort,
To take the solace of the open air,
And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport. Spenser, Faerie Queene.
To leafless shrubs the flowering palms succeed,
And odorous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope, Messiah.

Flowering. verbal abs.

1. State of blossom: (as, 'flowering of bulbous plants').

2. Frothiness. [see Flower, v. n. 3.]

An extreme clarification doth spread [the spirits so smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowering.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Flowery. adj. Full of flowers; adorned with flowers real or fictitious.

Day's harbingers
Come dancing from the East, and leads with her
The flowery May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose. Milton, Song on May Morning.

To her the shady grove, the flow'ry field,
The streams and fountains, no delight could yield. Pope.

Flowing. verbal abs. Rise of the water; flow.

In religious forms, what ebblings and flowings have been, and daily are, as to the vulgar opinion!—Cervus Taylor, A Rightful Humaneism, p. 184.
We must have perpetual ebblings and flowings of mirth and melancholy.—Novell, Instructions for Foreign Travel, p. 42.

Flowing. part. adj.

1. Waving.
He was clothed in a flowing mantle of green silk, interwoven with flowers.—Spectator.

Turner ran no serious risk. . . . A warrant was, however, issued for his apprehension; and his friends had little hope that he would long remain undiscovered; for his nose was such as none who had seen it could forget; and it was to little purpose that he put on a flowing wig, and that he suffered his beard to grow.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xvii.

2. Overflowing; abundant; liberal.

Then shall our names
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shakspeare, Henry IV. iv. 3.

3. Gliding smoothly: (especially applied to composition).

This discourse of Cyprinus, and the flowing of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been of a great wit and flowing eloquence.—Hakewill, Apology.
Did sweetest words adorn my flowing tongue
Than over man pronounced, or angels sung. Prior.

Flowingly. adv. In a flowing manner.

On the whole, affairs went on flowingly enough.—Dierail the younger, Coningsby, b. vii. ch. v.

Flowingness. s. Attribute suggested by Flowing. Applied to Language. Stream of diction.

Dr. Tillotson polished over whatever was left rough in the compositions with his smooth language, and flowingness of his easy eloquence.—Nichols, Defense of the Doctrine and Discipline of the Church of England, introd.

Flowk. s. Fluke, as flounder.

Amongst these the flowk, sole, and plaice follow the tide up into the fresh waters.—Cervus, Survey of Cornwall.

Floweretry. s. Flowery work.

Nor was all this floweretry, and other ecstacy on the cedar, lost labour, because concealed.—Fulcr, A Pleasant Sight of Palestine, pt. i. b. iii. ch. iii. (French).

Fluctuant. adj. [Lat. fluctuans, -antis; pres. part. of fluctuo; fluctuatio, -onis.] Wavering; uncertain. Rare.

Such is the fluctuant condition of human generation, and of those relations which arise from thence, that he, which is in this day a son, the next may prove a father, and in the space of one day more, without any real alteration in himself, become neither son, nor father, losing one relation by the death of him who legal him, and the other by the departure of him that was begotten of him.—Blotus Pearson, Exposition of the Creed, art. i.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand wishing and hankering as a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion!—Sir E. D. Strange.

Fluctuate. v. n.

1. Roll to and again as water in agitation; move with uncertain and hasty motion.

FLUC

The tempter . . .

Now part puts out and, as to passion mov'd,
Fluctuates disturb'd.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 653.

2. Be in an uncertain state; feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has been hitherto of an uncertain and volatile nature, either tith upon me, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements.—Addison, Spectator.

Fluctuating, part. adj. Rolling to and fro as a wave; oscillating; uncertain.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious motions whirling there,
And the wide regions of the land proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame.
Sir R. Blackmore.

Fluctuation, s.

1. Fluctuating motion of the water.

Fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, currents, shelves, and every interjacency irregularizes.—Sir T. Browne.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a proselyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgement little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error.—Boyle.

3. Violent agitation.

I have seen a crowd of disorderly people rush violently, and in heaps, till their utmost border was restrained by a wall, or had quitted the fury of the first fluctuation and watery progress; and by and by it returned to the contrary with the same earnestness, only because it was violent and ungoverned.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercise of holy Dying, v. § 8.

Flue, s. [?] Small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

A gardener has, to a certain degree, the command of rain and sunshine, by the help of his watering-pots, glasses, hot-beds, and flues.—Whately, Elements of Rhetoric, pt. i. ch. ii. § 8.

Fluellen, s. [Welsh, rather than English, but recognized in the English botanical synonymies.] Native plant of the genus Veronica, especially the Paul's Betony, Veronica serpyllifolia: (the Veronica hybrida is called Welsh Speedwell).

These plants are comprehended under the general name Veronica. . . . We do call them in English Paul's Betony or Speedwell: in Welsh it is called Fluellen; and the Welsh people do attribute great virtues to the same.—Gerard, Herball, p. 629: 1633.

Fluency, s. Fluency. Rare.

Poetry indeed hath a fluency of expression.—Whitlock, Observations on the present Manners of the English, p. 478: 1654.

Fluency, s.

1. Flowing character, especially in respect to equability and copiousness; (applied to language and style) volubility, smoothness.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasures for admirers of points of wit.—Garth, Preface to Translations from Ovid.

We reason with such fluency and fire,
The braux we battle, and the burn'd tire.
The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is a master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both.—Swift, Thoughts on various Subjects.

2. Affluence; abundance. Obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease,
. . . behold him tend on seas.
G. Sandys, Paraphrase of the Book of Job.

God riches and renown to men imparts.
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Id.

Fluent, adj. [Lat. fluens, -entis, pres. part. of fluo = flow.]

1. Flowing.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being independent upon another, it doth not follow that because anything moves this moment, it must do so the next.—Ray, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

2. Ready; copious; voluble.

These have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech.—Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that's within me,
And with most fluent utterance.—Sir J. Denham, Sophy.

FLUM

Fluent, s.

1. Stream; running water. Rare.

Confusing in these lands, that sed'ious strive
To cut th' outrageous fluent; in this distress,
Ev'n in the sight of death. Philips.

2. In Mathematics. See Fluxions.

They must know to find fluxions from fluents.
Bishop Berkeley, Analyst, § 47.

Fluently, adv. In a fluent manner; with ready flow; volubly; readily; without obstruction or difficulty.

To speak divinely, or by inspiration, was the usual phrase whereby they expressed speaking fluently, pathetically, and with coherence.—J. Spenser, Variety of vulgar Prophecies, p. 74.

Fluid, adj. Having parts easily separable; not solid.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

Fluid, s.

1. Anything not solid.

The doctrine and laws of fluids are of the greatest extent in philosophy.—Chambers.

2. (Generally plural.) In Physiology. Any animal juice: (as opposed to solids).

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not imprudently, altered the whole course of the fluids.—Arbuthnot and Pope, Martinus Scribner.

Fluidity, s. Quality opposed to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenuous liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity.—Arbuthnot.

Fluidly, adv. In a fluid manner. Rare.

This being fluidly disposed did run into these places which were hollow.—Translation of Plutarch's Morals, (Orel MS).

Fluidness, s. Attribute suggested by Fluid.

What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too?—Boyle.

Fluke, s. [German, pfug = plough.] Broad part of an anchor which takes hold of the ground.

For having with her pecked beak-head stricken a fishermen's ship, with the violence of the blow, shook out her own nether, which by one of the flukes (no doubt) took first hold of it, as if it had been a grappling hook, by the pro of the other ship.—Holland, Translation of Linn., p. 102. (Rich.)

Fish is a machine employed to hoist and draw up the flukes of the ship's anchor towards the top of the bow, in order to slow it after it has been cast. It is composed of four parts, viz. the pendant, the block, the hook, and the tackle.—Falmer, Marine Dictionary, (Hume.)

Fluke, s. [A.S. floc.]

1. Flounder.

2. Hydatid so called from its likeness to a flounder.

A little fluke, in general appearance much like a miniature flounder, lives, steeped in gall, in the biliary vessels.—Walton, Lectures on the Principles and Practice of Physic, lxxiii.

Fluky, adj. Furnished with a fluke or flukes.

No loud-mouthed voice call with harsh command,
To leave the fluky anchor from the sand.
Rose, Translation of Lucan's Pharsalia, l. iii. (Rich.)

Flummery, s. [German, pfummerei, from pfum = plume.] The ordinary derivation is from the Welsh, flumry, described as fermented and subacid outment, and either the same as, or closely allied to, the Irish and Scotch sowins.

If the exact nature of the true English dish were known, the question of origin would be simplified; but the import of the word is not uniform. In Miss Acton's work, the only notice of it is 'Jaumange, or jaume manger, sometimes called Dutch flummery; and jaume manger is the viand to which the editor has oftentimes heard the word flummery (simply, i.e. without the prefix Dutch) applied. There are no plums (as suggested by pfummerei) in this, but neither are there outs (as in flumry). Meanwhile, the dish is more like the cheese (as dunsom cheese) of a green or yellow plum than anything else, and it is suggested that this was the original dish; also that it was a German one, a view of which the word Dutch improves the probability.

FLUS

{FLUCTUATING
FLUSH

Milk and flummery are very fit for children.—Locke.

Flummery, s. [? flam.] Nonsense.

I tell you, madame, 'tis all flummery.—Fiddling, Tom Thum.

I tell you I don't. I only love to hear men's arguments, and I into their flummery.—What do you call flummery?—Flattery, you blockhead! I dish too often served up by a paltry poor man to paltry rich ones.—Colman the younger, The poor Gentleman, ill. 1.

Flunkey, s. Livery servant: (sometimes the word refers to the gorgeousness of dress of the more magnificent kind of footman, and sometimes to servility of manner).

I don't frequent opera and parties in London like you young flunkies of the aristocracy.—Thackeray, The Newcomes, li. 40.

Suddenly, in the midst of their pride, a little bell was rung, a side door opened, and (after setting down their royal mistress) her Majesty's own crimson-footmen, with queuelets and black plumes, came in. It was pitiable to see the other poor John slink off at this arrival! Not one of the lowest private plumes could stand before the royal flunkies. They left the walk; they sneaked into dark lodges, and drank their beer in silence. The royal plunk had possession of the entrance, and the royal plunk dinger was announced, when it retired, and we heard from the pavilion where they dined conversative cheers, and speeches, and Keatsish fire. The other flunkies we never saw more. My dear flunkies, so absurdly concealed at one moment, and so abject at the next, are but the types of their masters in this world.—Id., Book of Snobs, ch. ii.

Fluor, s. [Lat.] Fluid state.

The particles of fluids which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a minuteness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep them in a fluore, are most easily separated and rarified into vapours.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

Fluor [spar.] See extract, and next entry.

Fluor-spar seems subordinate to metallic veins; as to those of lead in Derbyshire; of tin, in Saxony and Bohemia; but it is found also in masses or veins, either in crystalline rocks, associated with quartz, heavy spar, &c.; as in Auvergne, France, Vesuvius, Norberg, in Sweden; Norway; Peterburgh; near Hull; Gourock, in Scotland, &c.; or among secondary limestones, slates, and sandstones, in Derbyshire, Cumberland, Cornwall, and New Jersey. It exists also in the amygdaloids of Scotland, and in the volcanic products of Monte Somma at Vesuvius. The variously-coloured specimens called Derbyshire spar are worked upon the turning lathe into vases and other ornamental objects. Cer, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Fluorine, s. In Chemistry. Elementary substance, belonging to the same class as chlorine, iodine, and bromine.

Fluorine has not hitherto been isolated, for its powers of combination are such, that nothing has been found capable of resisting its action. It is found as a component of a few minerals only; one of these, however, commonly called fluor-spar, is very abundant; it is a compound of fluor and calcium, or a fluoride of calcium. Fluorine has also been detected in some varieties of bone, and in the enamel of the teeth.—Brande, Chemistry, p. 265.

Flurry, s.

1. Gust or storm of wind; hasty blast.

The boat was overtaken by a sudden flurry from the north.—Swift.

2. Hasty; confusion.

One is kept in perpetual alarm, and flurry of spirits, for the first or second time of assisting at this diversion [a bull-fight].—Swainburne, Travels through Spain, l. 40: 1770.

Flurry, v. a. Keep in agitation; alarm.

After so long a journey through the still wastes, and silent stupid towns of Spain, where every thing bears the mark of languor and indolence, we were at first quite flurried and confounded with the hurry in the garrison, the perpetual noise and confusion, and the reports of the soldiers going through their firing exercise.—Swainburne, Travels through Spain, l. 20: 1770.

Flush, v. n. [Dutch, flusen = flow.]

1. Flow with a rush.

The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly, and all at once, flush up and run over the vessel.—Ray.

FLUSH

It flushes violently out of the cork for about a quart, and then stops.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Come in haste.
Oh your crush'd nostrils stink your opilation,
And make your pent powers flush to wholesome arteries.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Nice Valour.

3. Glow in the skin; produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood.
Thus Eve with countenance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek daintier flushing glow'd.
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 830.

What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood, which flushes smily in your face?
Dryden, State of Innocence.

4. ? Flush.
A flake of fire that, flushing in his beryl,
Him all amaze'd.
Spenser.

Flush. v. a.
1. Colour; redden; (properly) redden suddenly.
The glowing dunes of Zama's royal court,
Have fiercer flush'd with more exalted colour.
Addison, Cato.

Some court, or secret corner seek,
Nor flush with shame the passing virgin's cheek.
Gay, Trivia.

2. Flute; elevate; give the appearance of sudden joy.
Such things as can only feed his pride, and flush his ambition.—South, Sermons, li. 105.
A prosperous people, flushed with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence.—Bishop Atterbury, Sermons.

3. In Sporting. Put up; spring.
If the place but affords
Any store of lucky birds,
As I make 'em to flush
Each owl out of his bush.
J. Johnson, Manque of Owls.
The titlark is flushed with the least noise, and shoots with a rapid flight.—Bewick, History of British Birds.

Flush. adj.
1. Fresh; full of vigour.
He took my father ground, full of broad,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save Heaven?
Shakespeare, Hamlet, lii. 3.

I love to wear clothes that are flush,
Not preening old rags with plash.
Clarendon.

2. Affluent; abounding. Colloquial or slang.
Lord Strut was not very flush in ready, either to go to law or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail.—A. Smith.
Ay, my dear fellow, I play, and pleasure, and—
What the devil, man, melancholy! Come to sport here at the races, eh? flush!—Why faith, lackland, as to cash, my affairs at present are little better than your own.—O'Keefe, Fontainebleau, i. 1.

3. Concited; elevated in opinion.
Content not yourselves with some part of it; that you read the Gospel, or New Testament, but neglect the Old, as is the practice of some flush notionalists.—Bishop Hopkins, Exposition of the Lord's Prayer, p. 297.

4. Even or level as to surface; with a continuous level surface.
A flush dock is one which stretches fore and aft upon one line without any falls or intervals.—Young, Nautical Dictionary.

Flush. s.
1. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow: (specially of blood; hence the redness (as of the cheeks) caused thereby).
It is some opinion, as well amongst the officers of the mint as the merchants, that neither the great flush of gold that is come into the mint since the proclamation, nor on the other side the great scarcity of silver, can continue in proportion as it now doth.—Bacon, Certificate of Mint, (Ord MS.).
Never had any man such a low, or a widower, in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife.—Sir E. L. Estrange.

The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the puls of the arteries themselves.—Ray.
Success may give him a present flush of joy; but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring.—Rogers, Sermons.

2. Bloom; growth; abundance.
No busy steps the grass-grown footway tread,
For all the bloomy flush of life is fled.
Goldsmith, Deserted Village.
A horse turned out in the spring to take the first flush of grass.—Stevens, Note on King Lear.
970

FLUT

3. Term for a number of ducks: (as a quoy is for partridges).
As when a fulton bath with nimble flight
Flows at a flush of ducks furby the brook,
The trembling fowl . . .
Do hide themselves from her astonying look Amongst the flags and covert round about.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, li. 5. 54.

Flush. adj. and alc. [Spanish, fluz.] All of a suit: ('flush hand,' 'flush suit,' and 'I am flush,' being phrases employed in the game of cribbage).

Flasher. s. [German, fleischer = butcher.] Common name of the lesser butcher-bird: (given by Bewick in the synonymy, though not in the text).

Flushing. verbal abs. Colour in the face by sudden afflux of blood.
Ere yet the salt of most unwholesome tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, l. 2.

To cover any pimples and lears, or to remove any obstructions, or to mitigate and quench excessive flushings.—Jeremy Taylor, Artificial Happiness, p. 62.
What can be more significant than the sudden flushing and confusion of a blush?—Collier, Essay on the Aspect.

Flushness. s. Attribute suggested by Flush; abundance.
Whose interest it is, like hornblows, to hide the magnanimity of their battles by the flushness of their feathers.—Bishop Gauden, Life of Hooker, p. 37: 1601.

Fluster. v. a.
1. Make hot with drinking; make half drunk.
Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night fluster'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too.
Shakespeare, Othello, li. 3.

2. Confound; hurry.
All endeavours must be therefore used either to divert, blind up, stupefy, fluster, and amuse the senses; or else to juggle them out of their stations.
Swift, Fragment.
Fluster. s. Sudden impulse; violent flow; hurry.
Let no present fluster of fortune, or flow of riches, either transport the man himself with confidence, or the souls about him with admiration.—South, Sermons, vi. 235.
But when Cucka adds to his natural impudence the fluster of a bottle, that which fools called fire when he was sober, all men abhor as outrage when he is drunk. The hint in the morning was only saucy, is in the evening immititious.—Tuttor, no. 232. (Ord MS.).

Flustered. part. adj. Tipsy.
Being pleased with two or three imaginary bumpers of different wines, equally delicious; and a little vexed with this fantastic treat; he pretended to grow flustered, and gave the Harmerd a good box on the ear.—Addison, Guardian, no. 162.

Flustering. part. adj. Bustling; flurrying; flurried.
The Apostle seems here most peculiarly to have directed this encomium of the gospel, as a defence to the philosophers of his time, the flustering, vainglorious Greeks.—South, Sermons, li. 215.

Flustering. verbal abs. Fluster.
It seldom happens that the sportsman and his dog can force the coat to spring from its retreat; for it will, in a manner, bury itself in the mud rather than take wing, and when it is very closely pursued and compelled to rise, it does it with much flustering and apparent difficulty.—Bewick, History of British Birds, The Coot.

Flute. s. [Fr.] Musical pipe; instrument so called.
Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, li. 2.

The soft complaining flute,
In dying notes discovers
The woe of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisp'rd by the warbling lute.
Dryden.

Flute. v. a. Cut columns into hollows.
Channelled, fluted, furrowed, streaked.—Colgrasse, in v. Canold, and Sherwood.

Fluting. s. See extract.
Flutings, or flutes, . . . are used in all the orders except the Tuscan; in the Doric they are twenty in number, and are separated by a sharp edge or arris; in the Ionic, Corinthian, and Composite, their number is twenty-four, and they are separated by a small fillet.—Glossary of Architecture.

Flutist. s. Performer on the flute.
The Scythian king Akus, when he heard that admirable flutist Anticleris, detained there by him as a prisoner of war, playing upon the flute as a compensation, swore he had rather hear his own horse neigh.—Translation of Plutarch's Morals, li. 173. (Ord MS.).

FLUV

Flutter. v. a.
1. Take short flights with great agitation of the wings.
As an eagle stretch up her nest, fluttereth over her young, and sprueth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him.—Isaiah, xxiii. 11.
Think you've an angel by the wings;
One that gladly will be nigh,
To wait upon each morning sigh;
To flutter in the balmy air
Of your well-perfumed pray'r.
They fool, and, flut'ring, by degrees withdrew.
Cresshaw, Dryden.

2. Be in agitation; move irregularly; be in a state of uncertainty.
The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and how long she flut'ed upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surprised.—Howell, Vocal Portrait.
Excess muddles the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high.—Ure.
It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or disagreement of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in sounds of doubtful signification.—Locke.

3. Act the clown, or frivolous character. Though flutterer, as applied to an oscillating, vacillating, undecided person, is a word which might easily give origin to the meaning of the term, in the following extract, it is more probable that the real derivation is from the proper name, Sir Fopling Flutter, a character of the kind suggested by his name, in a well-known and popular play by Sir G. Etherege.
No rag, no scrap of all the bean or wit,
That once so flut'ed, and that once so writ.
Pope, Dunciad.

Flutter. v. a.
1. Cause to flutter; drive in disorder like a flock of birds suddenly aroused.
Like an eagle in a dove-cote, I flut'ed your Volucres in Corioli.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 5.

2. Disorder the position of anything.
Then might ye see
Cows, hoods, and habits, with their wearers, toss'd
And flut'ed into rage.
Milton, Paradise Lost, lii. 499.

Flutter. s. Vibration; undulation; oscillation; quick and irregular motion.
An infinite variety of motions are to be made use of in the flutter of a fan: there is the angry flutter, the modest flutter, and the timorous flutter.—Addison, Spectator.

Fluttering. part. adj. Having the character of that which flutters; oscillating; unsteady; inconstant.
Encom we these, my friends! event and chance,
Produc'd by atoms from their flut'ring dance.
Prior.
His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering, and cannot be fixed attentively to a few ideas successively.—Watts.

Fluttering. verbal abs. Agitation: (often of mind).
In sweet confusion lost,
And dubious flutterings, he a while remain'd.
Thomson, Seasons, Summer.
I watch'd the little flutterings,
The doubt my mother would not see;
She spoke at large of many things,
And at the last she spoke of me;
And turning look'd upon your face,
As near this door you sat apart,
And rose, and, with a silent grace
Approaching, press'd your heart to heart.
Trueman, The Miller's Daughter.

Fluviatile. adj. [Lat. fluvialis; fluvius = river.] Belonging or related to, or connected with, a river.
The valley of the Ouse, between Newhaven and Lewes, is one of the several estuaries from which the sea has retired within the last seven or eight centuries; and here, as appears from the researches of Dr. Mantell, strata thirty feet and upwards in thickness have accumulated. At the top . . . is a bed of peat. . . . Next below is a stratum of blue clay, containing freshwater shells of about nine species, such as now inhabit the district. . . . Lower down, the layers of blue clay contain, with the above-mentioned freshwater shells, several marine species well known on our coasts. In the lowest bed, often at the depth of thirty-six feet, these marine testacea occur without the slightest mixture of fluviatile species, and amongst them the skull of the narval or sea-unicorn has been detected. Underneath all these deposits is a bed of pipe-clay derived from the subjacent chalk.—Sir C. Lyell, Principles of Geology, ch. xlix.

Flux. s. [Lat. fluxus, either pret. part. of fluo (= flowed), or (with the second syllable long) a substantive from the same root = flowing.]

1. Act of flowing; passage.

The simple and primary motion of fire is a flux, in a direct line from the centre of the fuel to its circumference.—Sir K. Digby.

By the perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body.—Arbuthnot.

2. State of passing away and giving place to others.

Whether the heat of the sun in animals whose parts are successive, and in a continual flux, can produce a deep and perfect gloss of blackness.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

What the stated rate of interest should be, in the constant change of affairs, and flux of money, is hard to determine.—Locke.

In the constituent matter of our body, turning naturally to another like body, the stock or fund can never be exhausted, nor the flux and alteration sensible.—Hutcheson.

Languages, like our bodies, are in a perpetual flux, and stand in need of recruits to supply those words that are continually falling.—Fellous, On the Classics.

He assented to the opinion of Heraclitus, that all sensible objects are in a constant state of flux.—Whewell, Philosophy of Discovery.

3. In Medicine. Any evacuation; flow or issue of fluid matter; purging; looseness; dysentery; bloody flux.

Quinines stop fluxes of blood.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Rat eastern spice, secure From burning fluxes and hot calenture.—Larz Matifex.

4. Defluxion; excretion.

Givet is the very mucous flux of a cat.—Shakespeare, As you like it, iii. 2.

5. Concourse; confluence.

Left and abundant of his velvet friends: The right, quoth he: thus misery doth part The flux of company.—Shakespeare, As you like it, ii. 1.

6. In Metallurgy. Substance added in the fusion of metals to promote reduction.

White flux is the residuum of the deflagration, in a red-hot crucible, of a mixture of two parts nitre and one of cream of tartar. . . . Black flux is obtained when equal parts of nitre and tartar are deflagrated. . . . Limestone, fluor-spar, borax, and several earthy or metallic oxides are employed as fluxes in metallurgy.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Flux. adj. Inconstant; not durable; maintained by a constant succession of parts.

A corporation, which is likewise a flux body, may be punished for the faults, and liable to the debts, of their predecessors.—Arbuthnot and Pope, Martinus Scriblerus, ch. xlii.

Our argument for such a translation is the flux nature of living languages.—Archbishop Newcome, Historical View of the English Biblical Translations, p. 233.

Flux. v. a. Rare.

1. Melt; waste as by melting.

He maketh his cure more dilatory, and at the same time fluxes his body and his purse.—Moral State of England, p. 34: 1670.

2. Cause a flux or evacuation.

A liquor which, being injected into one dog's veins, made him die presently apoplectic, and poured down another dog's throat, fluxed him.—Minutes of Royal Society, iv. 440. (Ord MS.)

3. Pass off as liquid; send gliding or flowing; slip off. Rare.

He might fashionably and genteelly. . . have been duelled or fluxed into another world.—South, Sermons, ii. 216.

Fluxation. s. State of passing away and giving place to others.

They [the Siamois] believe a continual fluxation and transmigration of souls from eternity.—Leclerc, Short Method with the Deists.

Fluxible. adj. Not durable; changing. Rare.

Though it be questionable, whether I wear the same flesh which is fluxible, I am sure my hair is not the same; for I went fluxen-haired out of England, but you shall find me returned with a very dark brown.—Howell, Familiar Letters, l. 1, 31.

Fluxidity. s. Easiness of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction. Rare.

Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed aversion of nature to a vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least fluxility of the bodies here below.—Boyle.

Fluxion. s.

1. Act of flowing.

A running, flowing or floating of waters.—Cal-grace.

2. Mutter that flows.

The fluxion increased, and abscesses were rais'd.—Wierman.

3. In Mathematics. See extract: (Differential Calculus now the commoner term).

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life.—Watts.

Foreigners usually define the method of fluxions as the arithmetical, or analysis, of infinitely, or rather indefinitely, small variable quantities. . . . Sir I. Newton, and, after him, the English authors, call these infinitely small quantities moments, considering them as the momentary increments or decrements of variable quantities; e.g. of a line considered as generated by the flux of a point, or of a surface generated by the flux of a line. Accordingly, the variable quantities are called fluent or flowing quantities; and the method of finding either the fluxion, or the flux, the method of fluxions. M. Leibnitz considers the same indefinitely small quantities as the differences, or differentials, of two quantities; and calls the method of finding these differences the differential calculus. . . . Flowing quantities, i.e. such as, in the genesis of figures by local motion, are continually increasing and diminishing, are certainly very properly denominated fluxes; and as all figures may be conceived as so generated, the infinitely small increments or decrements of such quantities are very naturally denominated fluxions. Besides this difference in the name, there is another in the notation. . . . Setting aside these circumstances, the methods are the same.—Dr. Cyclopaedia.

Fluxionary. adj. Relating to (mathematical) fluxions.

You may apply the rules of the fluxionary method.—Bishop Berkeley, Analyst.

Fluxional. adj. Same as Fluxionary.

In algebraic and fluxional calculations, we should find a like variety of particular truths, included in general theorems.—Hutcheson, Inquiry into the Ideas of Beauty and Virtue, 31. (Ord MS.)

Fluxionist. s. One skilled in the doctrine of fluxions.

Whether an algebraist, fluxional, geometrical, or demonstrator of any kind can expect indulgence for obscure principles or incorrect reasonings.—Bishop Berkeley, Analyst.

Fluxive. adj. Rare.

1. Flowing with tears.

These often bath'd she in her fluxive eyes, And often bleed, and often 'gan to tear.—Shakespeare, Lear's Complaint.

2. Wanting solidity; loose; flux.

Their arguments are as fluxive as liquor spilt upon a table.—B. Johnson, Discourse.

Fluxure. s. Rare.

1. Act or power of flowing.

Humour, we thus deduce it, To be a quality of air, or water, And in itself holds these two properties, Moisture and fluxure.—B. Johnson, Every Man out of his Humour.

2. Fluid matter.

The swollen fluxure of the clouds.—Dryden, Baron's Wars, ii. 16.

Fly. v. n. pret. flew; past part. flown. [A.S. fleogan.]

1. Move through the air with wings.

Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven.—Guicciard, l. 20.

These men's hastiness the wiser sort of you do not commend: ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so unadvisedly abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

2. Pass through the air.

Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward.—Job, v. 7.

3. Pass away, with the idea of swiftness or escape; move with rapidity.

An strappings whip the top for sport, On the smooth pavement of an empty court. The wooden engine flies and whirls about.—Dryden.
Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme, Help thee to pass the tedious time, Which else would on thy hand remain; Though flown, it ne'er looks back again.—Prior.

4. Part with violence; break; shiver; burst asunder with a sudden explosion.

Glad to catch this good occasion, Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff And corn shall fly asunder.—Shakespeare, Henry VIII, v. 1.

How oft desir'd to fly from Lear's throat, And live in shades with her and love alone.—Prior, Solomon.

I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove, Forsake mankind, and all the world but love.—Pope.

With at. Spring with violence upon; fall on suddenly.

Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth and bark and fly at him.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an injured conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat.—South, Sermons.

This is an art that flies at all learning, and enquires especially into flutes.—Id.

With off. Revolt.

The traitor Rhyllax Flew off at once with his Numidian horse.—Addison, Cato.

With out.

a. Burst into a passion.

How easy is a noble spirit discern'd, From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out in contumelies, makes a noise and stinks.—B. Johnson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

Pammon is apt to rattle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect.—Collier, Essay on Friendship.

b. Break out into license.

You use me like a coarse spur and rein'd: If I fly out, my florences you round.—Dryden.
Epiphany, when unopposed fly out into all the paganism of worship; but when they are hard pressed by arguments, the close intrenched behind the council of Trent.—Id.

c. Start violently from any direction.

All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained.—Beutley, Sermons.

Fly in the face. Act in defiance.

Fly in nature's face. But how, if nature fly in my face first?—Then nature's the aggressor.—Dryden, Spanish Friar.

This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face, and he must expect only danger to himself.—Swift, Drapier's Letters.

Fly low. Keep quiet, so as to escape observation; comport one's self unostentatiously and unambitiously: (as the second element in a compound, highflyer, highflying, the word conveys the opposite meaning).

Young General Egalité, it would seem, should have among the bravest on this occasion. Doubtless a brave Egalité,--whom however does not Demosthenes rather talk of often than need were? The mother-society has her own thoughts. As for the elder Egalité he flies low at this time; appears in the Convention for some half-hour daily, with mildness, preoccupied or impassive quasi-contemptuous countenance; and then takes himself away.—Carlyle, French Revolution, pt. iii. b. ii. ch. iv.

Let fly. Discharge.

The noby cavalier, o'ercharg'd, lets fly, And bursts, unaiming, in the rending sky.—Granville.

Fly and flee are, as far as origin goes, the same words; and the former, when taken generally, and with the wing as an instrument or organ of flight kept out of view, may be used, as has been seen, for the latter. In flight, the convertibility of the two notions is clearer still. It may mean flying as a bird, or running away as a routed regiment, indifferently. With the verb, however, there are two points of difference. (1) Flee cannot be used for fly (with wings) to the same extent that fly can be used for flee. (2) The preterites and past participles of the two verbs are different, fled being proper to flee, and flew and flown to fly; and these forms are not interchangeable. The confusion between flown from flow, and flown from fly, as when we say, 'the meadow was overflown (overflowed) with water,' is wholly inaccurate. The fact, however, of its being occasionally used shows that a tendency to confusion has begun.

Fly. v. a.

1. Shun; avoid; decline.

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues.
Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.
O Jove, I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved.
Id., Cymbeline, iii. 6.

If you fly physic in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it.
Id., As you like it, iv. 1.
O whether shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so happy accident?
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1511.

2. Refuse association with.

Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares oppressed,
And his toss'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade.
Dryden, Juvenal's Satires.

3. Quit by flight.

Declines, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed plumes bore,
The first who sail'd in air.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

4. Attack by a bird of prey.

If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly
Other ravelling fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth.
Id., As you like it, iv. 1.
Fly every thing you see to the mark, and censure it freely.
Id., As you like it, iv. 1.

Fly. s. [A.S. fleog.]

1. Winged insect of many species.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 1.
My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their shirt, or the tar in their corn.
Locke, Essay, ii. 2.
To prevent the fly, some propose to sow ashes with the seed.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Part of a machine which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalizes the motion of the rest.

If we suppose a man tied in the place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground.
Bishop Wilkins, Discourse of a New Invention, 1601.

3. Parasite. Latinism.

Courtiers have flies,
That buzz all news unto them.
Mortimer, Virgin Martyr.

4. Light carriage so called.

A blue-hunter with Power, Retrenchment, and Reform worked on it would serve every purpose, and express besides the real political opinions of the country. And if so, the queen and the lord mayor may be brought in time to see the wastefulness of state coaches, in an age when a private carriage would answer all requirements, and when an American president finds it possible to discharge all his state duties by means of two post-horses and a fly.
Saturday Review, February 10, 1866.

5. In Mechanics. See extract.

Fly, in mechanics, is an apparatus employed to equalize and regulate the velocity and power of many machines which require such regulation from the inequality either of the moving power, or of the resistance it has to overcome. A fly acts upon the principle that any body being put in motion with a certain velocity at a certain expense of power, will continue to move until its motion is stopped by a resistance equal to its momentum or sum of the power and velocity which first caused its motion. This principle is carried into effect by various forms of the apparatus; the mass being generally made to revolve upon a centre, and the parts on the opposite sides of the centre being balanced. Two, four, or any number of equal weights, placed on the opposite ends of the arms or radii which are affixed to an axis, constitute a fly. If the weights be supposed to touch each other, or to loop or ring of one piece be substituted, its form will be much improved; and it is now termed a fly-wheel, and is the manner in which the fly is most generally used.
Rees, Cyclopaedia.

Flybitten. adj. Stained by the bites of flies.

The German hunting in water-work is worth a thousand of these bed-baignings, and these flybitten tapestries.
Shakespeare, King Henry IV. Part II. ii. 1.

Flyblow. s. Egg of a fly.

As fast, and thick as fly-blows.—Deansmont and Fletcher, Custom of the Country.

Flyblow. v. a. Taint with, or as with, flies; fill with maggots.

I am unwilling to believe that he designs to play tricks, and to flyblow my words, to make others distrust them.
Bishop Hillingford.

Flyblow. v. n. Lay eggs as a fly in meat.

So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and flyblow in the setting sun.
Pope.

Flyblown. part. adj. Tainted by flies.

a. By the egg.

Like a flyblown cake of tallow;
Or, on parchment, ink turn'd yellow.
Swift.

b. By the excitement; less properly, unless the sense be purely figurative, for stale.

She writes out a little card in her neatest hand, and after long thought and labour of composition; in which the public is informed that 'A Lady who has some time at her disposal, wishes to undertake the education of some little girls, whom she would instruct in English, in French, in Geography, in History, and in Music—address A. O., at Mr. Brown's; and she confides the card to the gentleman of the Fine Art Repository, who consents to allow it to lie upon the counter, where it grows dirty and flyblown.'
Thackeray, Vanity Fair.

Flyboat. s. Kind of light fast-sailing vessel; canal boat.

With three neat fly-boats, which with them do take Six ships of Sandwich, up the fleet to make.
Dryden, Agincourt.

Flycap. s. Light (morning, as opposed to night) cap so called, used as a kind of half dress, as opposed to a wig, or elaborate headress in the way of curls and powder; the ordinary modern morning cap as it began to be in use.

You frighten me—let me put on my fly-cap—I would not be seen in this flure for the world.
Edman and Garrick, The Claudine Marriage, v. 2.

Flycatcher. s.

1. Catcher or hunter of flies; contemptuous name for an entomologist.

The swallow was a flycatcher as well as the spider.
Sir R. L. Estlin.
There was more need of Brutus in Domitian's days, to mend, than of Horace, to laugh at a flycatcher.
Dryden.

2. Native bird (of passage) so called, of the genus Muscivora.

Mr. White observes that the flycatcher, of all our summer birds, is the most mute and the most familiar. It visits this island in the spring, and disappears in September; it builds in a vine or sweet-brier, against the wall of a house, or on the end of a beam, and sometimes close to the post of a door, where people are going in and out all day long; it returns to the same place year after year; the female lays four or five eggs, marked with small rusty spots; the nest is carefully made, and consists chiefly of moss, frequently mixed with wool and strong fibres, 'so heavy,' says Buffon, 'that it appears surprising how so small an artificer could make use of such solid materials.' This bird feeds on insects, which it catches on the wing; it sometimes watches for its prey, sitting on a branch or post, and, with a sudden spring, takes it as it flies, and immediately returns to its station to wait for more; it is likewise fond of cherries. Mr. Latham says it is known in Kent by the name of the cherry-sucker. It has no song, but only a sort of inward wailing note, when it perceives any danger to itself or young. It breeds only once, and retires early. When its young are able to fly, it retires with them to the woods, where it sports with them among the higher branches, sinking and rising often perpendicularly among the flies which hum below.
Bewick, History of British Birds, i. 106.

3. Model (often of a bird) in wax, or something of the same sort, that attracted flies from furniture; diversion.

The pretty man do for fly-catchers; they keep the men off us.
Bilas Marnor, ch. ii.

Flyer. s.

1. One who, or that which, flies or runs away.

Enforced flight is no disgrace; such flyers fight again.
Warner, Albion's England, iii. 14.
They hit one another with darts, as the others do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the fier.—Id., Naufrag, Tracts.
He grieves so many Britons should be lost; Taking more pains, when he beheld them yield, To save the fliers than to win the field.
Waller.

2. One who, or that which, flies as with wings: (often the second element in a compound, as Highflyer. In the following extract the elements are separated).

You, Philander, are too high a flier for me; you are so much in the altitude, &c.
Goodman, Winter Evening Conference, pt. iii.

3. In Mechanics. See Fly.

Flyfishing. s. Angling with a fly, natural or artificial.

I shall next give you some other directions for fly-fishing.—J. Walton, Complete Angler.

Flynap. s. Fan or flapper to keep flies off.

Your order appointing certain denizens with fly-naps to drive away flies, when the pope celebrated, were very superfluous.—Sheldon, Miracles of Anti-christ, p. 81: 1616.
How fly-naps of church-censure houses rid Of insects, which at curse of friar died.
Olden, Satires upon the Jesuits.
Then 'mongst the rout he flew as swift As weapon made by Cyclops,
And bravely quill'd sedition a buzz
By dint of mussy fly-naps.
Song of St. George for England.

Flying. verbal abs. Act of that which flies.

New men, that in the flying of a wheel
Cry down the past,
Temngun, Godden.

With off.

Doubt to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all the night I mean fetches;
The images of revolt and flying off.
Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 4.

Flying. part. adj. Having, or supposed to have, the speed of that which flies: (as, the 'Flying Post,' 'flying artillery').

Flying-fish. s. Fish so called, of the genus Exocoetus.

The greatest recreation we had, was to view such large schools of flying-fishes, as, by their interposed multitude, for some time darkened the sun; a fish beautiful in its eye; the body, though no larger than a small herring, yet big enough for those cumbersome fish, which, so long as moderns were as wily as fly 200 years or more, and 40 feet high.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years' Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 53.

Several instances being on record of a species of flying fish having been either captured or seen at different parts of our coast, the subject requires to be noticed here; although the exact species, or even whether more than one species may not have occurred, has not as yet been positively decided. Pennant states that in June 1735, one was caught at a small distance below Carmarthen, in the river Towy, being brought up by the tide, which flows as far as the town.—Furvell, British Fishes.

Flyleaf. s. In Bookbinding. Blank leaf at either the beginning or end of a book.

(For example see Frontispiece.)

Flypowder. s. Oxide of arsenic, used for killing flies.

Flypowder [is] the black-coloured powder obtained by the spontaneous oxidation of metallic arsenic in the air.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Flywheel. s. See Fly in Mechanics.

Foal. s. [A.S. fol;] the same word as the Latin pullus (equinus).] Young horse, colt, or filly.

Also flew his steed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind,
As he had been a foal of Peguana's kind.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.
Twenty also-asses and ten foals.—Genesis, xxxii. 15.

Foal. v. a. Bring forth a foal.

Give my horse to Timon: if he find me straight
Ten able horses.
Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, ii. 1.
Such colts as are
Of generous race, straight, when they first are Walk proudly.
Id., Translation of Virgil's Georgicks.

Foal. v. n. Be disburdened of a foal.

About September take your mares into the house, where keep them till they foal.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Foam. s. [A.S. fem.] White substance which agitation or fermentation gathers on the top of liquors; froth.

The foam upon the water.—Isaiah, x. 7.
They have dashed themselves in pieces, and are forced to retire back again in empty passion and swim.—Scott, Works, ii. 31.

Foam. v. a. Cast out froth; throw forth as foam: (with out).

Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame.—James, ii. 15.

Foam. v. n.

1. Froth; gather foam.
Caesar fell down at the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless.—Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, i. 2.
2. Be in a rage; be violently agitated.
His foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth.—Mark, ix. 18.
Foamy. adj. Covered with, or having the nature of, foam.

More white than Neptune's foamy face,
When struggling rocks he would embrace.
Sir P. Sidney.
Behold how high the foamy billows ride!
The winds and waves are on the jester's side.
Dryden.

Fob. s. [provincial German, suppe.] Small pocket.

Who pick'd a fob at holding forth.
Hunter, Hudibras.
When were the dice with more profusion thrown?
The well-fill'd fob, not empty'd now alone.
Dryden, Juvenal's Satires.
He put his hand into his fob, and presented me
In his name with a tobacco-stopper.—Addison, Epitaph.

Two pockets he called his fobs; they were two Large silks squeezed close by the pressure of his belly.
Swift.

Orphans around his bed the lawyer wees,
And takes the plaintiff's and defendant's fees;
His fellow pick-purses, watching for a job,
Fancies his fingers in the cull's fob.
Id.
Your gentleman brother sets my mouth a-watering after liberty. Oh that I were kicked out of Lendinall with every mark of indignity, and a compulsion in my fob! The birds of the air would not be so free as I should.—Lamb, Letter to Burton.

Fob. v. a. [German, foppen—banter, make a fool of.] Cheat; trick; defraud.

Shall there be a gallows standing in England when thou art king, and resolution thus fob'd as it is with the rusty curb of old father antick the law?
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 2.

He goes pressing forward, till he was fobbed again with another story.—Sir R. L. Estlin.
"Ay, sir," says he, "you're laquy who are near
His grace, and have the favour of his ear;
But let me tell you, if you'll recommend
This person here, your point will soon be gained.
And, sir, I'll die, if my own sword wit
Don't fob his minims, and displace 'em quite,
And make yourself his only favorite."
Oldham, Imitation of Horace.

You, that know not how to submit to a father, presume to have a sufficient stock of duty to undergo a wife? I should have been finely fobbed, indeed, very finely fobbed.—Congreve, Love for Love.

With off. Shift off; put aside with an artifice; delude by a trick.

You must not think to fob off our disgrace with a tale.—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 1.
For they, poor knives, were glad to cheat,
To get their wives and children meat;
But these will not be fob'd off so.
They must have wealth and power too.
Hunter, Hudibras.

By a Rurina vintner once betray'd,
So much for wine and water mix'd I paid;
But when I thought the purchased liquor mine,
The rascal fob'd me off with only wine.
Addison.
Being a great lover of country sports, I absolutely determined not to be a minister of state, nor to be fob'd off with a partner.—Id., Freckler.
And all this to show off the little lord, thinks I,
All this in honour of a stupid little characterised count of dragons, who can barely write his own name, while an eminent and profound moralist like—somebody—is fob'd off with cold mutton and relays of pic.—Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. 22.

Focal. adj. Relating to, consisting in, a focus.
Schellhammer demands whether the convexity or concavity of the drum collects rays into a focal point, or scatters them. Darwin, Physico-Theology.

Focus. s. [Lat. = hearth.] Small space where straight lines of any kind from different directions, after converging, meet, and after meeting diverge. The lines to the meeting of which it generally applies are chiefly rays, i.e. mathematical radii, or rays of either light or heat. The latter gives the meaning nearest to its original import, i.e. a point whereon fire is concentrated, as in burning-glasses.

1. In Optics.

The point from which rays diverge, or to which they converge, may be called their focus.—*Sir I.
Newton, Opticks.*

The focus of a glass is the point of convergence or concurrence, where the rays meet and cross the axis after their refraction by the glass.—Harris.

2. In Geometry. See Hyperbola and Pa-rahola.

3. It often means the distance between the point of convergence and meeting, rather than the point of meeting itself; this use being common where the machinery for obtaining a focus is imperfect, and the focus itself only approximate. Here, a wrong focus, a bad focus, means a wrong distance or adjustment.

The proximate cause [of nearsightedness] is the adunation of the rays of light in a focus before the retina.—Hopper, Medical Dictionary, Myopia.

Fódder, also Fóther and Fádder. s. [A.S. fóðer—kind of carriage or cart so called;
load.] See extract.

Fódder is the name of a weight by which lead and some other metals are sold in this country. It varies in its amount in different parts of the kingdom; being, in Northumberland, estimated at 21 cwt., and in other counties 22, 23, and even more cwt.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Miners.

Fódder. s. [A.S. fóðer.] Dry food stored up for cattle against winter; food generally for cattle.

Their cattle, starving for want of fódder, corrupted
the air.—Knutla, History of the Turks.
Being not to be raised without wintering, they will help to force men into improvement of land by a necessity of fódder.—Sir W. Temple.
(Of grass and fódder thou dearest the dams,
And of their mother's dugs the starving lambs,
Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

Fódder. v. a. Supply with fodder; give a meal to any domestic animal; feed.

Natural earth is taken from just under the turf of the best pasture ground, in a place that has been well fúdder'd in.—Encyc. Cæsarum hortense.
Fódder winter horse.

Well fúdder'd in the stalls, thy tender sheep.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

A farm of fifty pound hath commonly three barns, with an many cowyards to fúdder cattle in.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Straw will do well enough to fúdder with.—Id.

Foe. s. [A.S. fih.] Enemy; persecutor; opponent: (the old plural, foens, spell foen).

Ere he had established his throne,
He fought great battles with his savage foes,
In which he them defeated ever more.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Among the daughters of the Philistines
I chose a wife, which angered me no fur.
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1102.

Make use of ev'ry friend, and ev'ry foe.
Pope.

Foe. v. a. Treat as an enemy. Rare.
In his power also was to foe or friend.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, vi. 11. 6.

Fóehold. s. Enmity. Rare.
Have you forgotten S. Hierome's and Rufinus's deadly fóehold, which was rung over the world?
*Bishop Hall, Copies of certain Letters, ch. ii.
p. 325. 1620.*

Composals of these inbred fóeholds.—Dr. Jackson, Works, ii. 522.

Fóelike. adj. In the character of an enemy.
Id.

Fóelike hath bent his bow; his hostile hand
Advanc'd, and slain the beauty of the land.
G. Sandys, Lament, p. 4.

Fóelman. s. Enemy; antagonist.
When by report of subjects I did hearo
How foemen were arrived on my shore,
I gathered all my soldiers void of fear.
Mirour for Magistrates, p. 17.

Here haunts that fiend, and does his daily spoil;
Therefore henceforth be at your keeping well,
And ever ready for your foeman fall.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Art not running shall not lack,
To preserve thee, still to keep,
What thy envious foemen seek.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Woman pleased.

On they sweep. Oh glorious city!
Must thou be a theme for jilts?
Fight, like your first sire, each Roman!
Alaric was a gentle foeman
Match'd with Bourbois's black hindtill
Rouse then, thou Eternal City!
*Byron, The Deformed Transformed, pt. ii.
sc. i. Chorus, st. 5.*

Though the son who slew his mother
Shed Rome's blood, he was your brother.
Twas the Roman curbed the Roman;
Breunus was a baffled foeman. Ibid, st. 8.

Fog. s. [Lat. fogugium.] Aftergrass; grass which grows in autumn after the hay is mown.

The thick and well-grown fog doth mat my smoother blades. Drayton, Polyolbion, xii.

Fog. s. [Norse, fog, fok.] Thick mist;
moist dense vapour near the surface of the land or water.

Lower mists and fogs than those which covered Greeno with so long darkness, present great alterations in the sun and moon.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

Fog. v. a. Render misty, dark, or obscure.
Rare.

Fog not thy glory with so foul eclipses.
Tragedy of Solomon and Perach. (Ord MS.)

Fog. v. a. [see Fogger.] Make shift.
We'll not for us, then send, quoth he,
Where wouldst thou fog to get a fee? Dryden.

Fogger. s. [As a current word in the present English, this exists only in the compound pettifogger. That it is possibly a word of direct Norse origin, is suggested by the word foged, in import nearly equivalent to bullie in Scotland, and in origin
a transformation of the Latin advocatus.
On the other hand, Wedgwood, from whom the notice of fog is taken, connects it with fudge [judge], and the German fügen— suit; in the extract, however, it may be merely a derivative of fog.] Pettifogger.

I shall be exclaim'd upon to be a beaverly fogger, greedily hunting after heritage.—Trevelin in English: 1814. (Nares by H. & W.)

Fogginess. s. Attribute suggested by foggy; cloudiness; mistiness.

Your poverty shall exceed the boy's dulness and useless fogginess of many of them amidst their plenty.—Bishop Gualo, His expositio, p. 201. 1053.

Foggy. adj. Having the character of a fogger.

The foggy protraction of money.—Milton, Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

Fogging. s. Art of a fogger.
He gives himself up wholly to scrape a livelihood from curing diseases, or fogging in regular cases.—
Bishop Hacket, Life of Archbishop Williams, p. 24.

Foggy. adj.
1. Misty; chuddy; dunk; full of moist vapours.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
Of our self-love, so passions do deceive,
We think they hurt when most they do us ease.
Sir P. Sidney.

Let not the air be subject to any foggy incense-ness, from fogs or mists near adjoining. *Sir H.
Wotton, Elements of Architecture.*

About Michelmont, the weather fair, and by no means foggy, retire your rarest plants.—*Encyc.
Cæsarum hortense.*

2. Cloudy in understanding; dull.

I will pass over your course foggy, drowsy concept, that there are few or none simple monarchies in the world.—Sir J. Hayward, Answer to Locke-man, p. 35. 1693.

3. Stuffy; puffy.

A great number of goodly horses died there, which being foggy-fat, and delicately brought up in cold stables, could not endure the vehemence of the heat.
—Knutla, History of the Turks, iii. 34. (Ord MS.)

The sun, dust, and drought, without employment of any weapon against them, doth do their foggy bodies and limbs that earnest courage. Time's Storehouse, p. 20. (Ord MS.)

She was not dwarf-like statur'd, nor too tall,
Nor foggy fat, nor set compass'd lean.
*Id. second, Trivia Britannica, p. 1000.
(Nares by H. & W.)*

Travelling on the way, the weather being extremely hot, and the horse no less fat and foggy with over much former use, it fell thence and died. Copley, Wits, Fits, and Fancies: 1614. (Nares by H. & W.)

Fogram. s. Fugy.

Never mind, old fogram: run away with me.—
O'Keefe, Fontainebleau, ii. 3.

Fogy. s. [Danish, fjog.] Imbecile old man.
Old Livermore, old Ray, old Chutney, the East India director, old Cutler the surgeon, &c., that so-riety of old fogies, in fine, who give each of their dinners round and round, and dine for the mere purpose of gutting—these, again, are dinner-giving snobs.—
Thackeray, Book of Snobs.

Fob. interj. Word denoting abhorrence.

Not to affect many proposed matches
Of her own choice, complexion and degree,
Whereas we see in all things nature tends,
Fob! one may smell in such a will most rank,
Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural.
Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 3.

Foible. adj. [Fr. foible.—now used perhaps only as a substantive, signifying defect, a weak side. Foible, with fences, is the weakest part of a blade, in contradistinction to fort the strongest.] Weak.

The fencing-masters, when they present a foyle or seuret to their scholars, tell him it hath two parts;

one of which he calleth the fort or strong, and the other the foible or weak.—Lord Herbert of Chertbury, Memoirs, p. 40.

Foible. s. Weak side; failing.

He knew the foibles of human nature.—Friend, History of Physics.

The witty men sometimes have sense enough to know their own foible, and therefore they easily shun the attacks of argument.—Watts, Logic.

Foil. v. a. [from Fr. foir.] Put to the worst; defeat, though from a complete victory.

Stranger that your fingers should the pencil foil.

Without the help of colours or of oil! Faller.

But I, the comfort of the thunderer,

Have wad'd a long and unsuccessful war;

With various arts and arms in vain have toil'd,

And by a mortal man at length am foil'd.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid, b. 1.

Foil. v. a. [Fr. foir—trample.]1. Defeat; puzzle: (as a hound in hunting).

Whilst I am following one character, I am cross'd in my way by another, and put up such a variety of old creatures in both sexes, that they foil the scent of one another, and puzzle the chase.—Johnson.

2. Trample; insult.

King Richard, commonly called Richard Cœur de Lion, not brooking so proud an indignity, caused the emblems of Leopold to be put'd down, and foiled under foot.—Kudlin, History of the Turks, w. F.

Foil. s. [Fr. refouir—turn the edge or point; blunt.]1. Blunt sword used in fencing.

He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me; the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target.—Shakespeare, Hamlet, ii. 2.

2. Defeat; mischance; advantage gained without a complete conquest: (perhaps connected with the verb. Wedgwood suggests affouir—make a fool of anyone, as a third original, the imports of which have confused or been confounded).

We of thy cunning had no diffidence;
One sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. iii. 2.

Whosoever overthroweth his unto in such sort, as that either his back, or the one shoulder, and contrary he do touch the ground, shall be accounted to give the foil; if he be endangered, and make a narrow escape, it is called a foil.—Curren, Survey of Curriers.

No after many a foil the temper proud,
Renewing fresh assaults, amidst his pride,
Fell whence he stood to see his victor fall.

Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 500.

When we shall level me to impotence,
And sweating pleasure leave me on the foil.

Southern.

Foil. s. [from Fr. feuille; Lat. folium— leaf.] (in its undoubted sense, except as a technical word, commoner as the second element in a compound, tin-foil, &c.)

1. Leaf; gilding.

A stately palace, built of squared brick,
Which cunningly was without mortar laid,
Whose walls were high, but not like strong nor thick,
And golden foil all over them display'd.

Spenser, Perie Queen.

Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glittering foil

Set off to th' world, nor in broad rumour lies.

Milton, Lycidas, 78.

2. Unless connected with the strong as opposed to the weak side (and the two meanings run into one another), something of another colour near which jewels are set to raise their lustre.

As she a black silk cap on him begun
To set off for foil of his milk-white to sorrow.

Sir P. Sidney.

Like bright metal on a sallow ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 2.

'Tis the property of all true diamonds to write the foil closely to itself, and thereby better augment its lustre: the foil is a mixture of mastic and burnt ivory.—Greve, Museum.

No diamonds owe a lustre to their foil,
And to a Bentley 'tis we owe a Boyle.

Pope.

3. Reflector of light set behind a transparent medium.

Foil, among looking-glass-grinders, is a sheet of tin with quicksilver, or the like, laid on the back-side of a looking-glass, to make it reflect.—Chambers.

Foin. v. a. [Fr. foigner—make a feint.]

Push (generally, but not necessarily, after a feint) in fencing.

He hew'd, and lash'd, and foin'd, and thunder'd blows.

And every way did seek into his life;

No plate, no mail, could wail so mightily throws,

But yielded passage to his cruel knife.

Spenser, Perie Queen.

He cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out: he will foin like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. ii. 1.

He was fain to defend himself from the bear a great while, the bear continually foining at him with his great tusks.—Carroll, Life of Volney.

Then both, no moment lost, at once advance

Against each other, arm'd with sword and lance;

They lash, they foin, they pass, they strive to bore

Their corsets, and the thinnest parts explore.

Dryden.

Foin. s. Thrust; push.

At hand strokes they use not swords, but pollaxes, which be mortal as well in sharpness as in weight, both for foines and down-strokes.—Robinson, Translation of More's Utopia, ch. x. 1551.

Come, no matter for your foins.—Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 4.

I had my words, and foins, and quarter-blows.—

Wine Woman of Hagadah, 1634.

Foin. s. [N.Fr. foison, from Lat. fusio,

-onis—pouring out, abundance.] Plenty;

abundance.

Pay justly the tithe, whatsoever they be,

That God may in blessing send foins to thee.

Tasso, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Be wifful to kill, and mofkfull to store,

And look for no foins, I tell thee before.

Ibid.

Nature should bring forth,

Of its own kind, all foins, all abundance,

To feed my innocent people.

Shakespeare, Troilus, ii. 1.

As these that feed grow full, as blossoming time

That from the seedness the bare fallow brings

To teeming foins; so her plenteous womb

Expresseth his full till and husbandry.

Id., Measure for Measure, i. 5.

Foin. v. a. Push or shove in illegitimately.

Least negligence or partiality might admit of foins in abuses and corruption, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings.—Curren, Survey of Curriers.

Force law, and foin it into some by-lane.

Of some old rotten roll. Dryden, Jan Sebastianus.

Foin. s. [see Fusty.] Thing illegitimately intruded.

This plank, this painted foin, this cockle-hoat.

Deamond and Fletcher, Tamer Tamed.

Foin. s. One who foins; falsifier; insinuator.

Flows able are at needs to stand and keeps the state,

When fleeing foins, fit for Tiburno fraies,

Are food-sick, faint, or, heart-sick, run their waken.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 453.

Foin. s. Attribute suggested by Foisty; fustiness; mouldiness.

Dress mustard, and lay it in cellar up sweet,

Least foins make it for table meet.

Tasso, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Foin. s. Mouldy; fusty.

The old madhatter, London legend; and the foin and renewed festival.—Flower, Antiquities of the City of London, p. 1619.

Foin. s. [from A.S. fold.]1. Ground in which sheep are confined.

His eyes be open'd, and he beheld a field

Part arable and tith; whereon were shaves

New reap'd; this other part, sheep-walks and foins.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 420.

In thy book record their groans,

Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient foins

Shain. Id., Sonnets On the late Massacre in Piedmont.

2. Place where sheep are housed.

Build ye cities for your little ones, and foins for your sheep.—Namers, xxii. 24.

Time drives the flocks from field to foin,

When rivers rage, and rocks grow cold;

And Phœbe becometh dumb,

And all complain of cares to come. Sir W. Raleigh.

3. Flock of sheep.

And this you see I scarcely drag along,

Who yearning on the rocks has left her young,

The hope and promise of my falling foin.

Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

4. Limit; boundary.

Secure from meeting, they're distinctly roll'd;

Nor leave their seats, and pass the dreadful foin.

Creech.

Fold. s. [from Saxon fold.] Double; complication; involution; one part added to another; one part doubled upon another.

She in this trice of time
Commits a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folde of favour.

Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 1.

The ancient Egyptian mummies were shrouded in a number of folde of linen, besmeared with gums.

—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Let the draperies be nobly spread upon the body, and let the folde be large; the parts should be often traversed by the flowing of the folde.—Dryden, Translation of the French Art of Painting.

The inward coat of a lion's stomach has stranger folde than a human, but in other things not much different.—Arbuthnot.

As the second element in composition.

But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit; some an hundred fold; some sixty fold; some thirty fold.—St. Matthew, xiii. 8.

Fold. v. a.1. Shut sheep in the fold.

The star that bids the shepherd fold,

Now the top of heav'n doth hold.

Milton, Comus, 53.

She in pens his flocks will fold.

And then produce her dairy store,

With wine to drive away the cold,

And unbought dainties of the poor.

Dryden, Translation from Horace.

2. Double; complicate.

As a vesture shut them fold them up.—Hebrews, i. 12.

They be folded together as thorns.—Nahum, i. 10.

3. Enclose; include; shut.

We will descend and fold him in our arms.

Shakespeare, Richard II. i. 3.

Fold. v. v. Close over another of the same kind; join with another of the same kind.

The two leaves of the one door were folded, and the two leaves of the other door were folded.—1 Kings, vi. 34.

Folding. verbal abs. Act of one who folds.

Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep.

Proverbs, vi. 10.

We see that the folding of sheep helps around, as well by their warmth as by their compact.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Foliateous. adj. Consisting of laminae or leaves.

A piece of paper, consisting of an outer crust, of a rudely tawky spar, and a blue talky foliateous spar.

—Wandsworth, On Fossils.

Foliate. s. Leaves; tufts of leaves; apparel of leaves to a plant.

The great columns are finely encrusted with fruits and foliage, that run twisting about them from the very top to the bottom.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

When swelling buds their old rinds shed,

And gently burst into fruit, the wise

Spare not the little offspring, if they grow

Rebustant. Philips.

Foliate. v. a. Work so as to represent foliage. Rare.Foliated. part. adj. Worked as foliage.

There is in this place one very great square, in the middle of which appears an huge composite foliated column.—A. Drummond, Travels through Germany, Italy, and Greece, p. 54.

Behold his chair, whose fractur'd seat inflame

An aged russion hides! rep't to with dust

The foliage of velvet, pleasing to the eye,

Of great Eliza's reign, but now the square

Of every guest, that on the spectrum bed

Sits down culling. Shenstone, Economy, pt. iii.

Foliate. v. a. Beut into plates or leaves.

Gold foliated, or any metal foliated, cleaveth.—

—Bacon.

If gold be foliated, and held between your eyes and the light, the light looks of a greenish blue.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

Foliation. s. Lending; (which it translates).1. In Architecture. See extract.

Feathering, or foliation, ... an arrangement of small areas or foils separated by projecting cusps, ... may be otherwise explained to consist in placing a foil-arch within a plain arch that will fit it, which is then said to be foliated.—Ulmsey of Architecture.

2. In Mineralogy. See extract.

After studying the crystalline rocks of South America, Mr. Darwin proposed the term foliation for the laminae or plates into which gneiss, mica-schist, and other crystalline rocks are divided. Cleavage, in minerals, may be applied in three divisional places which render a rock flexible although it may appear to the eye to be nearly homogeneous.

Foliation may be applied to those alternating layers or plates of different mineralogical nature of which gneiss and other metamorphic schists are composed.

—Sir C. Lyell, Principles of Geology, ch. xxvi.

Foliate. s. Leafage; (the two words translating one another). Rare.

They wreathed together a foliate of the fir-tree.

—Shakespeare, Creation and Fall of Man, p. 203.

Fóller. s. Goldsmith's foil. Rare.

Concerning the preparing these foliers, it is to be observed, how and out of what substance they are prepared.—History of the Royal Society, ii. 489.

Fólio. s. [Lat., ablative case of folium = leaf.] Book, of which the pages are formed by a sheet of paper once doubled.

I am for whole volumes in folio.—Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, i. 2.
Plumblins and plumes made less program in knowledge, though they had read over more folios.—Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

At this moment Glastonbury, who was standing at the other end of the room examining a large folio, and who had evidently been very uneasy during the whole conversation, attempted to quit the room.—Diarracti the younger, Henrietta Temple, b. i. ch. v.

Fóliomort. adj. Older form of Filemort, of which it is an Italian equivalent: (folio = leaf; morte = dead).

A flinty pebble was of a dark green colour, and the exterior cortex of a foliomort colour.—Woodward, On Fossils.

Fóliot. s. [Italian, foletto.] A common, rather than a proper, name for Puck or Robin Goodfellow.

Terrestrial devils are wood-nymphs, foliots, fairies, robins, goodfellowes, &c.—Barlow, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 47.

Another sort of these [demons] are, which frequent forlorn houses; which the Italians call foliots, most part innocuous.—Ibid.

Fólious. adj. Having the character of a leaf; thin and unsubstantial as a leaf.

Folious appearance, and not the central and vital interiors of truth.—Sir T. Browne, Christian Morals, ii. 3.

Folk. s. [A.S. folc.]1. People.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather listening to his dolor dolorous discourses of their own and other folks misfortune.—Sir P. Sidney.

Dorinda having married his sister, had his marriage in short time blessed, for so are folks wont to say, how unhappy never the children after grow, with a woman.—Ibid.

When with greatest art he spoke,
You'd think he talk'd like other folks;
For all a rhetorician's rules
Teach nothing but to name his tools.

Butler, Hudibras.

As the word is essentially collective, the use of it in the plural is excusably considered as vulgar. Its use, however, as applied to two collections, is legitimate. Peoples is getting used in this way.

Let the peoples spin for ever down the ringing grooves of time. (Tennyson, Locksley Hall.)

Peoples, however, as populations, is likely to become a current plural before folks, from a more essentially collective word. It may mean, for instance, nationalities, or popular bodies, which folks is not likely to do.

Old good man Dobson of the green
Remembers he the trees has seen,
And goes with folks to show the sight.

Swift, Baulis and Philémon.

Never tell me what people say, whilst I am happy in the arms of him I love. Some folks rail against other folks, because other folks have what none folks would be glad of.—Felding, The Adventures of Joseph Andrews.

2. Nations; mankind.

Thou shalt judge the folks righteously, and govern the nations upon earth.—Psalm, lvi. 4.

3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.

The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between;
And the old folks, time's doting chroniclers,
Say it was so a little time before.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 3.

Anger is a kind of lunacy: as it appears well in the weakness of children, women, old folks, and sick folks.—Bacon.

Fólkland. s. Copyhold land, in contradistinction to bookland (bockland) or charterland.

They held their small portions of land as an inheritance . . . not by charter, but by a sort of prescription: this was called folklend.—Burke, Abridgement of English History, ii. 7.

Fólklore. s. [whether formed out of the English elements folk and lore, or taken direct from the German volkslore, this is a word of recent origin, coinage, or introduction. Sometimes it is spelt as two words, sometimes as folklore. How the first element is pronounced is another question; generally, perhaps, with the / in folk sounded, rather than as fook. It is oftener used as the heading of a notice than in the context of influential writers.] System of popular legends, traditions, or superstitions.

That all the peculiar and popular observances of our ancestors and our peasantry, which are now (1852) classed under the Teutonic appellation of folklore (volkslore) should have been originally brought from the countries of these Teutons . . . appears so natural that few will object and fewer still deny.—Dr. W. Ellis, Shakespeare's Puck and his Folklore.

As English folk lore possesses an interest for the readers of 'Notes and Queries,' I venture to suppose that the proverbial and proverbial phrases of the French language also will not be devoid of attraction.—Notes and Queries, (second series), vol. xii. p. 382. Some of the most remarkable incidents of Greek mythology are to be found in the folk-lore of English counties.—Use, Tales of Thebes and Argos, introd. note.

Fólkmete. s. Meeting of people.

Those hills were appointed for two special uses, and built by two several nations: the one is that which you call folkmete, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxon a meeting of folk.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

To which folkmete they all, with one consent, Agreed to travel. Spenser, Faerie Queen, iv. 6. Piers held a court every fortnight, which they called the folkmete or levee, and there became religiously bound to each other, and to the public, for their own peaceable behaviour, and that of their families and dependants.—Burke, Abridgement of English History, ii. 7.

Fólkmeester. s. Upholder of folkmetes; demagogue. Rhetorical.

These matters are not for pragmatics and folk-mesters to babble in.—Milton, Coleridge. (Ord. M.)

Fólkright. s. Popular right.

When any new chapters, hence called capitula, had been added to the ancient law or folkright, special messengers (missi) were dispatched into the provinces to obtain the assent and signature of the free men, and the chapters thus ratified became henceforth the law of the land.—Kemble, The Saxons in England, b. ii. ch. vi.

Fóllite. s. [Lat. folliculus, diminutive of folliculus = bellows.]1. In Anatomy. Cavity in any body with strong coats.

Although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Three forms of these glands [of the mucous membrane of the small intestines] have been distinguished: 1. The follicles of Lieberkuhn—forming or depressions so small as not to be visible without the aid of a glass; 2. Linnæus's glands, follicles visible to the naked eye; 3. The glands of Peyer.—Baly, Translation of Müller's Elements of Special Physiology, b. ii. sec. iv. ch. ii.

2. In Botany. Seed vessel with one valve.

A follicle has one cell, and bursts lengthwise.—Hooper, Medical Dictionary.

Fóllular. adj. Connected with a follicle or follicles: (in the extract anatomical ones).

Thus, having typhus fever to deal with, we seek for follicular ulceration of the intestines, and often find it.—Dr. P. M. Latham, Lectures on Subjects connected with Clinical Medicine, lect. xvi.

Fóllul. adj. Full of folly.

The common people call wit, mirth, and fancy, folly: a foolish and folllul they use indiscriminately.—Shenstone.

Fóllow. v. a. [A.S. fulgum.]1. Go after (not before, or side by side); pursue; chase.

I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 2.

Where ranks full thickest was indeed the place To seek Sebastian, through a track of death I follow'd him by groins of dying foes. Dryden.

2. Accompany; not forsake.

Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain God is as here, and will be found alike Present, and of his presence many a sign

Still following thee, still compassing thee round With goodness and paternal love, his face Express, and of his steps the track divine.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 349.

3. Attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle.—1 Samuel, xvii. 13.
Let not the muse then flatter lawless way,
Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

4. Succeed in order of time.

Such follow him as shall be registered,
Part good, part bad, of bad the longer scroll.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 335.
Signs following signs, lead on the mighty year. Pope.

5. Be consequential in argument: (as effects to causes).

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And venture, if that fall them, shrink and fear
What yet they know must follow to endure
Exile, or ignominy, or bonds or pain.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 294.

6. Imitate; copy as a pupil; be of an opinion or party.

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancienter and better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse, we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
All patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules.—Locke, Thoughts on Education.

7. Obey; observe as a guide or direction.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no Christians.—Archbishop Tillotson.
Fair virtue, should I follow thee,
I should be naked and alone,
For thou art not in company,
And scarce art to be found in one. Evelyn.

8. Pursue as an object of desire.

Follow peace with all men.—Hebrews, xii. 14.
Follow not that which is evil.—3 John, 11.

9. Confirm by new endeavours; keep up indefatigably: (often with up, as 'he follows up his first attempts').

They bound themselves to his laws and obedience; and in case it had been followed up on them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

10. Attend to; be busied with.

He that undertaketh and followeth other men's business for gain, shall fall into snare.—Ecclesiasticks, xxi. 9.

Fóllow. v. n.1. Come after another, either in time or place.

The faunus shall follow close after you.—Jeremiah, xlii. 16.
Welcome all that lead or follow
To the oracle of Apollo. B. Jonson.
Attend servilely.

Such smiling rages as these soothe every passion,
That in the nature of their lords rebels:
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.
Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 2.

3. Be consequential.a. As effect to cause.

If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness misled him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election.—Locke.

To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow.—Id.

b. As inference to premises.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country.—Sir W. Temple.

Dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power.—Locke.

4. Continue endeavours; persevere: (often with up; the use of on, as in the extract, rare).

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord.—Hosea, vi. 3.

Fóllower. s. One who follows.1. One who comes after another: (not before him, or side by side).

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader; whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels?—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 4.
No sleep, no stay, but clouds of mand'ring,
Spur'd and cast backward on the followers' eyes. Dryden.

2. One who observes a guide or leader.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind family of the will, is blind itself; and as brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. — South, Sermons.

3. Attendant or dependant.

No follower, but a friend.

Pope

4. Associate; companion.

Grief is an impudent guest,
A follower every where.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Queen of Corinth.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave into the Irish chiefs too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. — Spencer, View of the State of Ireland.
And sure'd Anna, when his ships were lost,
To leave his followers on a foreign coast.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

6. Scholar; imitator; copier.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. — 1 Corinthians, xl. 1.

The true profession of Christianity involuntarily engages all its followers to do good to all men. — Bishop Sprat, Sermons.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have. — Locke.

The church of Smyrna professed their worthy loved the martyrs, as the disciples and followers of our Lord; and because of their exceeding great affection to their King and their Master. — Nelson.

The studious hand of a man of mind,
Follower of God, or friend of human kind,
Part of patriot, rose but to restore
The faith and moral nature gave before.

Pope, Essay.

7. Acknowledged lover or sweetheart of a maid-servant, who has, or would have, access to her in her place of service; young man who keeps company with her. 'No followers allowed' may be seen in advertisements.

To tell Mrs. Jones who yesterday censured her cook Betty for fourteen pound a year, having lent her down from fourteen guineas by a companion about the beer; and who, after various squabbles, finally turned out pretty Susan, the housemaid, into the glisty Vanity Fair of London, for gossiping on area steps with divers followers — or the Honourable Mrs. Browne Browne, who keeps Victrola sitting up till daylight just to rub her mistress's gown, and last week threatened, though she did not dare, to dismiss the fine upper nurse, because during the brief minute or two after dessert, when master had appeared, mamma, who rarely sees him at any other time, and never meddles with his education, physical or moral, was shocked to hear from his rosy lips a 'mumchance' word — to say to these ladies that the 'women' they employ are of the same feminine flesh and blood, would of course need minimal account. — A Woman's Thoughts about Women, by the Author of John Halifax Gentleman.

Following, part. only. Subsequent.

Loving encreased design'd
For death, the following day, in bloody fight.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 277.

Following, verbal abs.

1. Retinue; body of followers.

Fortunately the expounder of this doctrine had but a small following. — Buckle, History of Civilization in England, vol. I. ch. v.

2. Vocation; calling; business.

In every age men in general attend more to their own immediate pursuits and followings than to the claims of disinterested patriotism. — S. Turner, History of England during the middle Ages, v. vii. ch. v.

Folly. s. [N.Fr. folle, from fol.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

This is folly, childhood's guide,
This is childhood's her side.

Hawthorne.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

She hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house. — Isaiah, xlii. 21.
They have committed lewdness and folly in Israel.
— Judges, xx. 6.

To plunness honour's bound

When majesty to folly falls.

Shakespeare, King Lear, I. 1.

She turn'd to folly, and she was a whore.

Id., Othello, v. 2.

3. Act of levity or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom: (plural).

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see his thus transformed to a boy.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 6.

Thy hum'rous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot.
Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please.

Prior.

Pope, Imitations of Horace.

Foment. r. a. [Fr. fomentier; Lat. fomento, from fuco = cherish.]

1. Cherish with heat.

Every kind that lives,

Fomented by his virtuous power, and warm'd.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 337.

2. Bathe with warm lotions.

He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. — Arbuthnot.

3. Encourage; support; cherish.

They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children. — Sir H. Wallon.
Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,
Since nature gave, and thou fomentedst my fire.

Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. — Locke.

Foment. s. Encouragement.

What is this but to invite new desolations, which God in kindness must send to take away the opportunities and foment of our ruining sins? — Alcott, Sermons. (Oral MS.)

Fomentation. s.

1. In Medicine. See extract.

Fomentation callets forth the humours by vapours; but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultice, draweth gently the humours out; for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath within a mixture of some stupefactive. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the labours or fomentations by the nurses. — Arbuthnot.

Fomentation is partial bathing, called also stupping, which is applying hot fluids to any part, dipped in undiluted decoctions, whereby the streams breathe into the parts, and diseases obstructed humours. — Quincy.

2. Encouragement.

This gentleman loveth Italy in present tranquillity, though not without a little fear of some alteration on the side of Savoy; which prince seems to have great and unequal thoughts; and I fear, they will lack an executioner from abroad. — Sir H. Wallon, Reliques of Voltaire, p. 276.

And dive in silence for distinguished names,
Dishevelled fomentation of your pride!

Young, Night Thoughts, v.

Foment. s. One who foments; encourager; supporter.

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politic at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up. — Howell.

The kindler, fomenting, and advance of the whole German war. — Beaumont, The Peace of Germany, p. 113. 1635.

A perpetual foment and nourisher of sin. — Hale, Sermons, Golden Remains, p. 25.

Fond. adj. [?] This is not only the oldest, but principally the commonest, use of the word.

1. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent; injudicious.

That the Grecians or Gentiles ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

He was wonten out of all love of learning by a fond schoolmaster. — Ascham.

Tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to live in wretched strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 1.

Grant I may never prove so fond
To trust man on his oath or bond.

Id., Timon of Athens, I. 2, grace.

I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance.

Id., Troilus and Cressida, I. 1.

Fond thoughts n' 'll into some idle brain;
But one belief of us, is ever wise.

Sir J. Denham, On the Immortality of the Soul.

How subtly to detain three I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I write;

Fond! were it not in hope of thy reply.
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 206.

So fond are mortal men,
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves 't invite.

Id., Sermon Against the Devil, 1682.

'Twas not revenge for griev'd Agello's wrong
Those men's ears on Mida's temple hung;
But fond repentance of his happy wish.

Waller.

But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infidels.

This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself.
— Archbishop Tillotson.

2. Trifling; valued by folly.

Not with fond shekels of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rate are either rich or poor
As fancy values them.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 2.

3. Foolishly tender; injudiciously indulgent.

I'm a foolish fond wife. — Addison.

Like Venus I'll shune,

Be fond and be fine.

Id.

4. Pleased in too great a degree; foolishly delighted; doting.

Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. — Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

With of.

Fame is in itself a real good, if we may believe Cicero, who was perhaps too fond of it. — Dryden.

I, fond of my well-chosen seat,

My pictures, medals, books complete.

Prior.

Fond. v. a. Treat with great indulgence; caress; cocker.

Howe'er unjust your jealousy appear,

It does my pity, not my anger move;

I'll fond it as the forward child of love.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

When amidst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrant hugs, and fondles thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
Thou may'st infuse the venom in her veins.

Id., Translation of the Æneid.

Fond. r. a. Be fond of; be in love with; dote on.

How will this fudge? My master loves her dearly;
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 2.

Fondle. r. a. Treat endearingly.

Fondled and flattered by his foolish relatives, he knew nothing of the wholesome discipline of opposition. — M. Turner, History of England during the middle Ages, h. v. ch. 1.

Fondling, part. only. Endearing.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. — Swift.

Fondling. s.

1. Person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.

Quote you well in feld and town,

And of all the fondlings make a deliverance.

Mystery of Constance, Day 1512.

Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky; for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least cockered make the best and wisest men. — Sir R. L. Estlin.

The best of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may show it to be a fondling of our own. — Locke.

Any body would have guessed Miss to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. — Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

Bred a fondling and an heirless,

Dressed like any lady my'ress,

Cocker'd like the servants' round,

Was too good to touch the ground.

Swift.

2. Fool.

We have many such fondlings, that are their wives' packhorses and slaves. — Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 603.

Fondly. adv. In a fond manner.

1. Foolishly; weakly; imprudently; injudiciously.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,

Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 2.

Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantic man.

Id., Richard II. iii. 3.

Felicitous fondly mischiev'd, for the prolongation of life, that a vein be opened in the arm of some wholesome young man, and the blood be sucked. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The military mould
For their proud foes, that fondly brav'd their fate.

A. Philips.

Some valuing those of their own side or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind;
Fondly we think we merit honour then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men.

Pope.

Under those sacred laws secure
From cannon lightning of the skies,
He fondly thought he might endure

The flashes of Arctotis's eyes.

Swift.

Fondness. s. Attribute suggested by Fond.

1. Foolishness; weakness; want of sense; want of judgement.

Fondness it were for any, being free,
To cover fetters, though they golden be.

So many absurd and indeed ridiculous consequences do follow the fondness of this argument.—
Jeremy Taylor, Artificial Laudableness, p. 55.

2. Foolish tenderness.

My heart had still some foolish fondness for thee;
But hence! 'tis gone: I give it to the winds.

Addison, Cato.

Whose fondness could conjure her mortal offspring
To those which fair Latona bore to Jove.

Prior.

3. Tender passion.

Your jealousy perverts my meaning still;
My very hate is construed into fondness.

A. Phillips, Distrest Mother.

Corinna, with that youthful air,
Is thirty and a hit I spare:
Her fondness for a certain earl Began when I was but a girl.

Swift.

4. Unreasonable liking.

They err that either through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing that is less than a sincere resolution of new obedience, attended with faithful endeavour, and most fruits of this change.—
Hammond, On Fundamentalism.

Not that he had any fondness to the number itself.—Norris, Discourses on the Beatitudes, p. 245.

Font. s. [Fr. font; Lat. fontis, fontis; A.S. font and font.] Stone vessel in which the water for holy baptism is contained in the church.

The presenting of infants at the holy font is by their godfathers.—Hosker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I have no name, no title;

No, not that name was given me at the font.
Shakespeare, Richard II. iv. 1.

Font. s. [Fr. font, from fontaine = cast.] In Printing. Assortment of letters and accents. See also Font.

I caused a font of Irish letters to be cast.—Boyle, Letter in Birch's Life of R. Boyle, p. 417.

Fontanel. s. [Fr. fontanelle.]

1. Issue; discharge opened in the body.

I see some full bodies, that can enjoy no health without strong evacuations, blood-lettings, fonta-nels.—Bishop Hall, Select Thoughts, § 21.

Artificial issues, made in any part of the body,
are by physicians called fonticuli, or little fountains.
—Hammann, Periphrasis and Annotations on the New Testament, St. Mark, iv. 23.

2. See extract.

The parietal bones and the frontal do not coalesce until the third year after birth, so that, before this period, there is an obvious interspace, commonly called fontanel, and scientifically the anterior fontanel.
There is also a lesser space, occasionally, between the occipital and parietal bones, termed the posterior fontanel.—Hopner, Medical Dictionary.

Fontange. s. Knot of ribbons on the top of the headress. Rare; obsolete if ever naturalized.

These old-fashioned fontanges rose an ell above the head: they were pointed like stoupes, and had long loose pieces of craps, which were fringed, and hung down their backs.—Addison.

Food. s. [A.S. foða.]

1. Victuals; provision for the month.

On my knees I beg,
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food.
Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 4.

Much food is in the tillage of the poor.—Proverbs, xiii. 23.

They give us food, which may with nectar vie,
And was that does the about us supply. Waller.

2. Anything that nourishes.

Give me some music: music, moody food
Of us that trade in love.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 3.

O dear son Edgar,

The food of thy abused father's wrath,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say, I had eyes again. Id., King Lear, iv. 1.

Food. r. a. Food. Obsolete.

He was fooded forth in vain with long talk.—Barret, Alceste, 1280.

Foodst. adj. Fit for food. Rare.

I see not how in those round blazing beams
One should imagine any food-st limit.
Nylander, Translation of De Bartsa,
(Nares by H. & W.)

Foodful. adj. Fruitful; full of food; plenteous.

Vol. I.

Where wert thou when I made
The foodful earth, and her foundation laid?
G. Sandys, Paraphrase of the Book of Job, p. 55.
There Thyson was to see, who took his birth
From heav'n, his nursing from the foodful earth.

Dryden.

An analogy most fruitful, and more foodful than the old Egyptian statue with three tier of breasts.
—Burke, Thoughts on a Regicide Peace.

Fooding. s. Food for livelihood. Rare.

As soon her fooding house, some good, some bad,
Will's Recreation: 1654. (Nares by H. & W.)

Foodless. adj. Not affording food; barren.
The dry and foodless wilderness. — G. Sandys, Psalms lxxiv.

The foodless wilds
Pour forth their brown inhabitants.

Thomson, Seasons, Winter.

Foody. adj. Rare.

1. Eatable; fit for food.

To vetches, v. the she drew;
And into well sew'd socks pour'd foody meal.

Chapman.

2. Abounding in a supply of food.

Who brought them to the stable feed from Ida's foody stream. Chapman, Translation of the Iliad, xi. 105. (Nares by H. & W.)

Food. s. [Fr. ful, fool.]

1. One to whom nature has denied reason; natural; idiot.

Does then call me food, boy? — All thy other titles thou hast given away; that thou wast born with.
—Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 1.

It may be asked whether the eldest son, being a food, shall inherit paternal power before the younger,
a wise man. — Locke.

He thinks his stars he was not born a food. Pope.
The food hath said in his heart there is no God.—
Psalm, xiv. 1.

2. Term of indignity and reproach.

To be thought knowing, you must first put the food upon all mankind. — Dryden, Preface to Translation of Juvenal.

3. One who counterfeits folly; buffoon;
jester.

Where's my knife, my food? Go you, and call my food hither. — Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 4.
I sworn, although their drudge, to be their food or jester. Milton.

Used adjectively.

If this disguise sit not naturally on so grave a person, yet it may become him better than that food's coat. — Sir J. Ingham.

Play the fool. Act like one void of common understanding; play pranks like a hired jester; jest; make sport.

I returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool. — Sir P. Sidney.

I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly. — Shakespeare, As You Like It, 21.

Well, thus we play the fools with the time, and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds and mock us.
—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. ii. 2.

In it worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to play the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self? Locke.

Fool's errand.

While he was pleasing himself with thoughts so agreeable to his temper, he learned that he had been deceived, and had been used as an instrument for deceiving the nation. His mission to Hungerford had been a fool's errand. The king had never meant to abide by the terms which he had instructed his commissioners to propose. — *Macaulay,
History of England*, ch. 25.

Make a fool of. Disappoint; defeat.

"Twere as fool as dead as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him. —
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 3.

Fool. r. n. Trifle; toy; play; idle; sport.

Fool not; for all may have,
If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave, G. Herbert.
If you have the luck to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not. — Sir J. Ingham.

It must be an industrious youth that provides against age; and he that fools away the one, must either beg or starve in the other. Sir R. L'Estrange.

But my Lord Poynington's married, and one would not fool with him for his lady's sake; it may make her mense. — Cibber, The Careless Husband.

Fool. v. a.

1. Treat with contempt; disappoint; frustrate; defeat.

And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, deceived, and shook off?
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 3.

G I

Him ever-weening
To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting,
Food and envenom'd. — Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 878.
If men be not to be deceived and fool'd about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that, which can be known only from their own heart. —
South, Sermons.

I am tir'd with waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old.

Dryden.

I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fool'd and imposed upon. — Addison, Freeholder.

2. Infatuate; make foolish.

If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts,
Against their father, fool me not so much,
To bear it tamely. — Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 4.

When I am read, thou feign'st a weak applause,
As if thou wert my friend, but lack'st a cause;
This but thy judgment fools; the other way
Would both thy folly and thy spite betray.

R. Jonson.

It were an handsome plot,
But full of difficulties, and uncertain;
And he's so fool'd with downright honesty,
He'll never believe it. — Sir J. Ingham, Sophy.

A long and eternal adieu to all unwise pleasures;
I will no longer be fool'd or imposed upon by them.
— Calamy, Sermons.

A base of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty. — Sir W. Temple.

3. Cheat; (as, 'to fool one of his money').

Fool. s. [?] Viand made of gooseberries scalded and pounded, and of cream.

Thou fish dill of fool.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, v. 1.
Fall to your chessmen, curds, and cloutie
cream.

Your fool, your lawns. R. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

To make out the dinner full certain I am
That fool is anchovy, and Regulus is hush;
That Hickey's a rapier, and, by the same rule,
Magnanimous Goldsmith a gooseberry fool.

Goldsmith, Retaliation.

Foolbold. adj. Foolishly bold; foolhardy.

Rare.

Some in corners have been foolbold. — Conclusion of Leland's Journey, enlarged by Bale, l. 3. h.

Foolborn. adj. Begotten by a fool.

Reply not to me with a foolborn jest.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. v. 5.

Foolery. r.

1. Habitual folly.

Foolery, sir, they walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where: I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as soft with your master as with my mistress. — Shakespeare, Twelfth Night,
iii. 1.

He keeps the house of pride and foolery.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Spanish Curate.

2. Act of folly; trifling practice.

Talk not much with a fool, and go not to him that hath no understanding. Beware of him, lest thou have trouble; and thou shalt never be deceived with his foolery. — Revelations, xii. 13.

I shall do that that's fit, and
And fit to cross your foolery.

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Pilgrim.
It is mere foolery in multiply distinct particulars in trading of things, where the difference lies only in words. Boileau.

3. Object of folly.

That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected. — *Sir
W. Raleigh, History of the World.*

We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understood, we should despise. Sir R. L'Estrange.

Foolhappy. adj. Lucky without contrivance or judgment.

As when a ship, that flies fair under sail,
An hidden rock escaped unawares,
That lay in wait her wreck for to befall;
The mariner, yet half amazed, stares
At perils past, and yet in doubt he dares
To joy at his foolhappy oversight.

Swifter, Purse Queen.

Foolhardiness. s. Attribute suggested by Foolhardy; mad rashness; courage without sense.

There is a difference betwixt daring and foolhardiness; Lucan and Milton often ventured them too far, our Virgil never. — Dryden, Translation of Du Roissey's Art of Printing.

A false pleasing parasite would . . . call his fool-hardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly. — South, Sermons, ii. 347.

But will you therefore be so much a fool
To write at random, and neglect a rule?
Or, while your faults are set to general view,
Hope all men should be blind, or pardon you?

977

Who would not such foolhardiness condemn,
Where, though perdition you may escape from blame,
Yet (since you never can expect, or claim?)
Oldham, Horace's Art of Poetry
imitated in English.

Foolhardiness. s. Foolhardiness; adventu-riveness without judgement. Obsolete.

More large in strength than wise he was,
And reason with foolhardiness over-ran;
Stern melancholy did his courage pass,
And was, for terror more, all arm'd in shining brass. Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Foolhardy. adj. Daring without judgement;
madly adventurous; foolishly bold.

One mother, when as her foolhardy child
Did come too near, and with his talous play,
Half dead through fear, her little babe rev'd.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Some would be so foolhardy as to presume to be more of the caldred-cottell of God Almighty than the angels Heavenly.

Wary ye, I beseech foolhardy,
To expose themselves to vain security;
If they come wounded off, and lame,
No honour's got by such a main. Butler, Hudibras.

At a later period, when he had paid dearly for his foolhardy contempt of public opinion, it was the fashion at Saint Germain's to excuse him by throwing the blame on others.—Maccarty, History of England, ch. viii.

Foolish. v. a. Make a fool of anyone.

Right servile fear, with errors foolish'd.
Aylmer, The Barrow. (Ord MS.)

Fooling. verb. al. Making a fool of anyone; playing the fool.

I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still.—Shakspeare, Twelfth, li. 1.

He must be happy that knows the true measures of fooling.—Sir R. L. Estcourt.
Is this a time for fooling? Dryden, Spanish Friar.

Foolish. adj.

1. Void of understanding; weak of intellect.

Pray do not mock me
I am a very foolish fond old man;
Purseless and upwards, not an hour more nor less;
And to deal plainly,
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakspeare, King Lear, iv. 7.

He, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.—Id.,
Merchant of Venice, l. 2.

2. Imprudent; indiscreet.

Like Romans; neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire. Shakspeare, Coriolanus, l. 6.

3. Ridiculous; contemptible.

It is a foolish thing to make a long prologue and to be short in the story itself.—2 Macbeth, li. 32.

What could the head perform alone,
If all their friendly aids were gone?
A foolish figure he must make;
He nothing else but sleep and ake. Prior, Alma.

He allows himself in foolish hatreds and resentments against particular persons, without considering that he is to love every body as himself.—Law.

Foolishly. adv. Weakly; without understanding; (in Scripture) wickedly.

Although we best fair winter sun looks bright,
And foolishly are glad to see it at its height;
Yet so much sooner comes the long and gloomy night. Swift.

Foolishness. s. Attribute suggested by Foolish; folly; want of understanding; foolish practice; actual deviation from the right.

Foolishness being properly a man's deviation from right reason, in point of practice, must needs consist in his pitching upon such an end as is unsuitable to his condition, or pitching upon means unsuitable to the compassing of his end.—South, Sermons.

Charin'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,
And shape my foolishness to their desire. Prior.

Foolscap. s. Term denoting the size of the sheet of paper: (as pot, foolscap, &c., pot being the smallest, and foolscap
the second in the ascending scale to atlas- paper).

'Action, my dear friend,' said Daly, 'action is the thing—you may sigh and swear away four sides of foolscap—most appropriate paper—and what then?
You have done nothing but record sentiments which the circumstances of a few years may entirely alter, and pledged yourself to a constancy which events may try, and even overthrow.'—Thursdell Book, Gil- bert Gurney, vol. l. ch. vi.

Used adjectively.

He looked on with the same grave, attentive stolidity, occasionally nodding his head, as he was wont of yore when he received a deputation on sugar duties or joint-stock banks, and when he under, as was his custom when particularly perplexed, an occasional note on a sheet of foolscap paper.—Disraeli the younger, Contingent.

Foolship. s. Rink or condition of a fool:
(in the extract a contumacious parody of cor- ship, lordship, and other titles of honour).

The law will allow her honorable alimony out of your foolship's fortune.—Cowley, Cutter of Coleman Street.

Fool's-stones. s. Tubers, like testicles, of the native plant Orchis Maro (Gr. μυρὸς = foolish, foolish person, fool).

Long purples
That liberal shepherds give a grosser name,
(Hamlet, iv. 7.)

The grosser name is the word under notice.

These kinds of Fool's stones do grow naturally to their best liking in pastures or fields that seldom or never are dug or manured. They flower in May and June. Their stones are to be gathered for medicine in September, as are those of the Dog's stones.—Gerard, Herbal, p. 209: 1633.

Fooltrap. Sure to catch fools in: (as a flytrap).

Let's, at first, were fooltraps, where the wise,
Like spiders, lay in ambush for the flies. Dryden.

Foot. s. plural feet. [A.S. fōt, plural fēt.]

1. Part upon which we stand.

The queen that bore thee,
Off her upon her knees than on her feet,
Died ere'st thou did'st live. Shakspeare, Twelfth, li. 3.
His affection to the church was so moderate, that he never deserted it till both it and he were overrun and trod under feet.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Great Rebellion.

2. That by which anything is supported in the nature of a foot: (as, 'The foot of a table').

3. Lower part; base.

You'll towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet. Shakspeare, Troilus and Cressida, iv. 3.

Fretting, by little and little, wades away and eats out both the tops, and sides, and feet of mountains.
—Hakewill, Apology.

4. End; lower part.

What dismal cries are those?—
Nothing; a trifling sum of misery,
New added to the foot of thy account.
Thy wife is seiz'd by force, and borne away. Dryden, Cleomenes.

5. Act of walking.

Antiochus departed, winking in his pride to make the land navigable, and the sea passable by foot.—2
Macbeth, v. 21.

6. On foot (written sometimes o'foot, whence afoot)

a. Walking; without carriage.

Israel journeyed about six hundred thousand on foot.—Exodus, xli.

b. In motion.

The centurions and their charges billeted already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.—Shakspeare, Coriolanus, iv. 3.

7. Infantry; footmen in arms: (in this sense it has no plural).

Laudas gathered three score thousand choice men of foot, and five thousand horsemen.—1 Macbeth, iv.
24.

Himself with all his foot entered the town, his horse being quartered about it.—Lord Clarendon,
History of the Great Rebellion.

Thrice horse and foot about the fire are led,
And thrice with loud laments they wail the dead. Dryden.

8. Footing.

See on what foot we stand; a scanty shore,
The sea behind, our enemies before. Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

In specifying the word Ireland, it would seem to imply that we are not upon the same foot with our fellow subjects in England.—Swift, The Drap- per's Letters.

There is no well wisher to his country without a little hope, that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot.—Swift.

I ask whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late King James, a king of England may be deposed?—Id.

What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, the negroes, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant fine upon the man who murders them?

—Addison.

9. Level; square; par. Obsolete.

Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undolug, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot.—Bacon, Essays.

10. Certain number of syllables constituting a distinct part of a verse.

Feet, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints, be sure signs that the verse is either born deformed, unnatural, or lame.—Archam, School- master.

Didst thou hear these verses?—O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some o' them had in them more feet than the verses would bear.—Shake- speare, As you like it, li. 2.

And Sydney's verse halts ill on Roman feet. Pope.

11. Motion; action.

While other poets are something rank on foot,
Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with slender to marry. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iv. 6.

In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their coarctivity in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable.—Ure.

12. Step.

This man's son would, every foot and anon, be taking some of his companions into the orchard.—Sir R. L. Estcourt.

13. Measure containing twelve inches, supposed to be the length of a man's foot:
(when it signifies measure, it retains its singular form even when the numeral is two or more than two; the import being collective rather than truly plural).

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrap'd in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four feet deep within the earth, came forth no ways mouldy or rotten.—Bacon.

Set on foot. Originate; bring into existence or activity.

If such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated.—Archbishop Tillotson.

Foot. v. n.

1. Dance; tread wantonly; trip.

Lowly the vale and full of horror stood,
Brown with the shade of a delicious wood;
The moon was up and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That fleetly footing seem'd to skim the ground. Dryden.

2. Go on foot.

By this the dreadful beast drew nigh to land,
Half flying and half footing in his haste. Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 1.

With it. In the following instances (as in go it, &c.) apparently active.

The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed it himself.—Sir R. L. Estcourt.

Unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem, or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such pretended saint.—South, Sermons.

Foot. v. a.

1. Spurn; kick.

You that did void your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger car over your threshold.—Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice, l. 3.

For there the pride of all her heart will bow,
When you shall foot her from you, not she you.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit at several Weapons.

2. Settle; begin to fix.

What confid'ancy have you with the traitors
Late footed in the kingdom? Shakspeare, King Lear, iii. 7.

3. Tread.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold;
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Hid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thus, witch, aroynt thee right. Shakspeare, King Lear, iii. 4, song.

There haply by the ruddy daniel men,
Or shepherd boy, they foot the green. Tickell.

4. Hold with the foot.

The holy eagle
Scoop'd, as to foot us. Shakspeare, Cymbeline, v. 4.

We are the earth, and they,
Like moles within us, leave and cast about;
And till they find and clutch their prey,
They never cool, much less give out. G. Herbert.

5. Supply with feet: (in the extract it means the part for the feet).

New spur-leathers, or stockings by this time fused. — Bishop Hall, Characteristics, The Vain-glorians.

Football. s.

1. Ball commonly made of a blown bladder, cased with leather, driven by the foot.

Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spin me thus?
Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, II. 1.

One rolls along a football in his fury,
One with a broken trinebeon deals his blows.
Dryden.

2. Sport or practice of kicking the football.

Such a winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of winter; as foot-balls, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice. — Pemham.

As when a sort of lucky shepherds try
Their force at football, care of victory
Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seems too rough for jest.
Waller.

It was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise. — Arbuthnot and Pope, Martinus Scribblers.

Footbands. s. Soldiers that march and fight on foot.

To whom valiant Audley, in their faint recoyle,
With his foot-bands alone did give the foyle.
Mitron for Magistrate, p. 305.

Footboy. s. Low menial; attendant in livery.

Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy
At chamber-door? Shakespeare, Henry VIII. v. 2.
Whenever he imagines advantages will redound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it. — Swift.

Footbreadth. s. Space which a foot might cover.

I will not give you of their land, no not so much as a footbreadth [in the margin, the treading of the sole of the foot]. — Deuteronomy, II. 5.

Footbridge. s. Bridge on which passengers walk; narrow bridge.

Falmouth's shepherd, fearing the footbridge was not strong enough, hauled it so long, till he broke that which would have borne a bigger burden. — *Sir
P. Sidney.*

Footcloth. s. Sumpter cloth: (thence applied to a horse with housings).

How should he worship'd be, and reverenc'd,
Ride with his furs and footcloths?
B. Jonson, Talpore.

Milan, and many other cities in Italy, danced at this music, made a footcloth of their master's livery, and from this time dated themselves free states. — Feller, Italy War, p. 105.

I still will be a justice in the war
And ride upon my footcloth.
Beaumont and Fletcher, The Prophetess.

Footed. adj. Shaped in the foot.

Muzzled and tailed like a bear, and footed like a goat. — Grew.

Footfall. s. Setting down of the foot.

For every trifle are they set upon me;
Sometime like awakes, that men and chatelats me,
And, after, like me; then like hedge-hogs, which in tumbling in my barefoot way, and mount,
Their prick at my footfall.
Shakespeare, Tempest, II. 2.

Footfight. s. Fight on foot: (in opposition to that on horseback).

So began our footfight in such wret, that we were well entered to blood of both sides. — Sir P. Sidney.

Footgear. s. Apparel for the foot; shoes or boots.

Four gentlemanlike, handsome, well-dressed French soldiers waded for a time beside our carriages; wonderfully clean and neat; and had such art of picking their steps, that their foot-gear told us higher than the ankle to the muddy pibrochings these good people found themselves engaged in. — *Carlyle, French Revolution, pt. III. b. I.
ch. vii.*

Footguards. s. pl. Footsoldiers belonging to those regiments called, by way of distinction, the guards.

The army was scarcely less ill-served than the clergy or the gentry. The garrison of the Tower had drunk the health of the imprisoned bishop.
The footguards stationed at Lambeth had, with every mark of reverence, welcomed the primates back to his palace. Nowhere had the news of the acquittal been received with more clamorous dellida than at Hounslow Heath. — Morley, History of England, ch. ix.

Foothold. s. Space to hold the foot; space on which one may tread surely.

Getting more universal foothold in other persons,
by disabbling her deformed enemy. — Dr. H. More, Conjectura Cabalistica, p. 212.

As to properly producing empire, it is required that it should have some certain root or foothold, which except in land it cannot have, being otherwise, as it were, upon the wing. — Harrington, Oceano, p. 28.

All fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it no little foothold, that the first least laid it flat upon the ground. — Sir R. J. Estrange.

He's at the top; he has nothing above him to transpire to, nor any foothold left him to come down by. — Id.

Footing. s.

1. Ground for the foot.

I'll read you nether deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and adventure as a night
As to overwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 3.

As Noah's place, which return'd no more,
Did show thee footing found, for all the flood.
Sir J. Davies, On the Immortality of the Soul.

2. Support; root.

Set cloven stakes; and wondrous to behold,
Their sharpness ends in earth their footing place,
And the dry poles produce a living race.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

3. Basis; foundation.

All these sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here: the mind stirs not one jot beyond these ideas which sense or reflection have offered. —
Locke.
The reasoning faculties of the soul would not know how to move, for want of a foundation and footing in most men, who cannot trace truth to its foundation and original. — Id.

4. Place; possession.

Whether they mention exhalations are,
Fir'd by the sun, or sent up from above;
Or each some more remote and slippery star,
Which loses footing when to mortals shew.
Dryden.

5. Tread; walk.

As he forward mov'd his footing old,
So backward still was turned his wrinkled fier.
Spenser.

I would outlive you did not hold,
But hark, I hear the footing of a man.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

Break off, break off! I feel the different sound
Of some elastic footing near about this ground.
Milton, Comus, 145.

6. Dance.

Make holiday: your eye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one In country footing. Shakespeare, Tempest, IV. 1.

7. Steps; road; track.

He grew strong among the Irish: and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his said name. Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Like running weeds, that have no certain root; or like footings up and down, impossible to be traced.
— Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

8. Entrance; beginning; establishment; equality: (the notion being founded on that of level ground, whereon two person stand with equal advantages).

Ever since our nation had my footing in the land, the state of England did desire to perfect the tranquillity. — Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

The defeat of coherent Bellasis gave them their first footing in Yorkshire. — Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

No useful arts have yet found footing here:
But all untaught and savage does appear.
Dryden, Indian Emperor.

9. State; condition; settlement: (common with same).

(Gaul was on the same footing with Egypt, as to taxes. — Arbuthnot.

Many weeks had not passed after this interview, before Horatio and Zenobia were what they call on a good footing together. All ceremonies except the last were now over: the writings were now drawn,
and every thing was in the utmost forwardness, preparative to the putting Horatio in possession of all his wishes. — Fiddling, Adventures of Joseph Andrews.

10. In Architecture. See extract.

Footing of a wall [is] courses of stone at the base, which project beyond its face, and thus give it greater stability. — Glossary of Architecture.

Footlicker. s. Slave; humble fawner; one who licks the foot.

Do that good mischief which may make this island
Thine own for ever; and I, thy Culliban,
For ay thy footlicker. Shakespeare, Tempest, IV. 1.

Footman. s.

1. Soldier who marches and fights on foot.

The numbers loved by her lieutenant did consist of footmen three millions, of horsemen one million.
— Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

2. Servant in livery.

He was carried in a rich clurid, litter-wise, with two horses at either end, and two footmen on each side. — Bacon.

What am I doing? How do I suffer this passion to creep imperceptibly upon me! How many days are past since I could have submitted to ask myself the question? — Mary a footman! Distraction! Can I afterwards bear the eyes of my acquaintance?

But I can retire from them; retire with one in whom I propose more impudence than the world without him can give me! . . . He! and do I doubt thou on a footman! I despise, I detest my passion.
— Fiddling, Adventures of Joseph Andrews.

Footmanship. s. Art or faculty of a runner.

The Irish archers saying this, suddenly broke up, and committed the safety of their lives to their nimble footmanship. — Sir J. Haywood.

Yet, says the fox, I have killed more of them with my wiles and shifts than ever you did with your footmanship. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

Footpace. s. [? foot pace] Dais; landing.

Stairs, a mat, a footpace of velvet. — Newcastle.

A footpace [is] a part of a pair of stairs, whereon, after four or five steps, you arrive to a broad place, where you make two or three paces before you ascend another step, thereby to ease the legs in ascending the rest of the stairs. — Morson.

Footpad. s. Highwayman who robs on foot: (not on horseback).

He was waylaid by two footpads. — Goldsmith, Kenny.

Footpath. s. Narrow way which will not admit horses or carriages.

Know'st thou the way to Dorset? —
Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath.
Shakespeare, King Lear, IV. 1.

Footpost. s. Post or messenger who travels on foot.

For carrying such letters, every thoroughfare weekly appointeth a footpost, whose dispatch is well near as speedy as the horses. — Curce, Survey of Cornwall.

Foots. s. See Molasses.

Footsore. part. adj. Sore and worn at the feet.

The heat of the ground made me footsore. — *De
For, Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.*

Footstep. s.

1. Trace; track; impression left by the foot.

Clear-sighted Reason wisdom's judgement lends,
And Sense, her vassal, in her footsteps trends.
Sir J. Denham.

A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in,
if he thinks that he is in the right way, wherever he has the footsteps of others to follow. — Locke.

2. Token; mark; notice given.

Let us turn our thoughts to the frame of our system, if there we may trace any visible footstep of Divine Wisdom and Beneficence. — Headly, Sermons.

Footstool. s. Stool on which he who sits places his feet.

Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security.
Shakespeare, King Henry VI. Part III. v. 7.

They whose secret wills lie to bring
Kings to obey their God, and men their king,
By these mysterious links to fix and tie
Men to the footstool of the Deity.
Sir J. Denham, Sophy.

Let echoing anthems make his praises known
On earth, his footstool, as in heav'n his throne.
Lord Bacon.

By the phrase of worshipping his footstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his foot-stool. — Bishop Stillingfleet.

Foot. s. Coxcomb; man of small understanding and much ostentation; pretender;

one fond of show, dress, and bluster; impertinent.

A whole tribe of fops,
Got 'twixt asleep and waking.
Shakespeare, King Lear, I. 2.

When such a positive abandon'd fop,
Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I first to see them in such company.
Lord Bacon.

The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat. — Sir R. L'E-strange.

In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow;
When a small levee obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but cluff, and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with every wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws
Fools, fops, and rakes, for cluff and straws. Swift.
If a girl can but rally merrily upon the sober admonition of a parent, she concludes she is the siller person, takes herself for a wit and the other for a fop, (a high word, devised only to fright all seriousness and sobriety out of the world,) and learns not only to disobey, but to contemn.—Dr. H. More, Lady's Calling, bk. ii. l. 17. (Orel MS.)

Fopdoodle. s. Fop.

Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,
And lundled you like a fopdoodle. Butler, Hudibras.

Fopling. s. Petty fop; underate Coxcomb.

Thy works in Chloë's toilet gain a part,
And, with his tailor, share the fopling's heart. Tickell.

I hate the lewd rake, the dressed fopling despoil,
Lusty M. W. Montague.

Intrusion with a fopling's face,
Ignorant of time and place. Granger, Ode on Solitude.

Foppery. s.

1. Folly; impertinence.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and got the multitudes of my mind,
The sudden surprise of my powers, drove the cross-ness of the foppery into a received belief, in the spirit of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor,
v. 3.

This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters
the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains on necessity. Id., King Lear, l. 2.

2. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in.—Bishop Stillingfleet.
But though we fetch from Italy and France,
Our fopperies of time, and mode of dance,
Our sturdily Britons worn to borrow name. Granville.

I wish I could say quail fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects.—Swift.

3. Article of foppish dress; part of a fop's toilet or wardrobe.

And as my satire bursts again,
See fatter'd foppery strew the plain. Shenstone.
Cambrics, laces, velvets, and many other prohibited fopperies.—Guthrie.

Foppish. adj. Having the character of, or relating to, a fop.

Fools we're but less grace in a year;
For wise men are grown foppish,
And know not how their wits to wear,
Their manners are no apish. Shakespeare, King Lear, l. 4, song.

With him the present still some virtue have;
The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave;
The stolid negligent, the foppish neat;
The dull are airy, and the sly discreet. Garth.

The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish; so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women.—Arbuthnot.

Foppishness. s. Attribute suggested by Foppish.

I have seen parts of dress, in themselves extremely beautiful, which at the same time subject the wearer to the character of foppishness and affectation.—Shenstone.

Foppity. s. Trifler.

Why does this little foppit laugh always.
Cowley, Cather of Coleman Street: 1633.
(Nares by H. & W.)

Fop. prep. Word for word, this is the Latin pro, the letter-change between words beginning with p in Latin and f in English giving us one of the most generally recognized rules in English philology; fish = piscia, fell = pellis, &c., being similar examples of it. In meaning there is a similar correspondence. Thirdly, the relations between for and fore are, to a great extent, parallel with those between pro and pra; the latter meaning before, especially in composition.
Hence, the two forms may, up to a certain point, be conveniently considered together.

For further remarks, see Former and Further. It is difficult to say in what particular action the practice of treating an object that stood before another as an equivalent to it originated; and this is because the actions that might suggest it are numerous. To choose, as an illustration, only one of them—the man that in a contest steps forward in front of one of his fellows is likely to both give and take blows, glory, death, or any other of the fruits of fighting, in his stead; and where, by so doing, he serves the purpose intended equally well, he is not only a substitute but an equivalent. This view, perhaps, gives us the best key to the numerous details connected with its use. In considering, however, the several shades of meaning deducible from this notion of fore-ness, we must, as with most other particles, be careful to attribute the impart of the combination to the right part of it. The following extracts, for instance, are arranged, in the previous editions, under a separate heading, i.e. Notwithstanding.

This for anything we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philopseus ex-presseth. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
God's desertion shall, for ought he knows, the next minute supervene.—Dr. H. More, Decay of Christianity.
Predictability supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing yet certainly determined on either side. South, Sermons.

For anything that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us.—Swift, The Dropper's Letters.

If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system. Hentley.

It is clear, however, that taken by itself
the word for has only its ordinary import;
the equivalent to notwithstanding lying in the words which follow, the form of which, even when it does not contain the words to the contrary, always suggests them. In short, it suggests an objection;
one, however, which is pronounced insufficient; or one to which the counter-statement is, at least, deemed an equivalent.

1. In exchange, in recompense, in return for, in place, instead, in supply, or in the character, of anything.

We take a falling meteor for a star. Cowley.
He made considerable progress in the study of this law, before he quitted that profession for this of poetry.—Dryden.

To make him copious is to alter his character;
and to translate him line for line is impossible.—Id.

Most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet for their model, adore him, and imitate him, as they think, without knowing wherein he is defective.—Id.

Now for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the public wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Cæsar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Id., Translation of Persius.

First the wily wizard must be caught;
For unconstrain'd him, he nothing tells for nought.

We can only give them that liberty now for securthing, which they have so many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us.—Swift.

2. From the notions connected with equality the derivative meanings are numerous; that of cause (viewed in respect to its adequacy in relation to its effect) being one of them. And, as this is the case with the so-called final as well as the efficient causes, the word for finds a place in propositions which convey the notion of aims or intentions, of things aimed at, or of results intended.

a. Cause efficient. Because or on account of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that (had for the worthiness of his son would notwithstanding you-hast to grant.
—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The governor, sailing out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them.—Knutson, History of the Turks.

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low that the inward nerves lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them.—Ray, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

b. Cause final.

How quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when goal becomes her object:
For this the foolish, over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care.
Their bones with industry: for thus, engross'd
The cask'd lumps of strong delicious gold:
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their souls with arts and martial exercises.

The kingdom of God was first rent by ill counsel;
upon which counsel there are set, for our instruction, two marks.—Bacon.

Whether some hero's fate,
In words worth dying for, he celebrates. Cowley.
For he writes not for money, nor for praise,
Nor to be call'd a wit, nor to wear bays. Sir J. Denham.

There we shall see a night worthy dying for,
that blessed Saviour, who so highly deserves of us.—Boyle.

It is not disposed to be a fool, and to be miserable for company.—Archbishop Tillotson.
Let them, who truly would appear my friends,
Employ their words like mine, for noble ends. Dryden.

Some pray for riches; riches they obtain;
But watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain. Id.

For this, 'tis needful to prevent her art,
And fire with love the proud Phœnician's heart. Id., Translation of the Æneid.

3. a. In the character of, with a likeness to, considered as, anything: (the word which follows being often an adjective, as dead for dead person, certain or sure for certainty, and the like).

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth.
The gentle York is up. Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. i. 1.

Now, now for sure, deliverance is at hand,
The kingdom shall to lance be restor'd. Hilton, Paradise Regained, ii. 35.

Our present lot appears
For happy, though but ill for ill, not worst,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe. Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 223.

The council-table and star-chamber held for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which prolited.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

The martling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
And, bounding, o'er the pavement cast his knight:
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead. Dryden.

If a man can be fully assured of anything for a truth, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth?—Locke.

She thinks you favour'd:
But let her go, for an ungrateful woman. A. Philips.

Say, is it fitting in this very field,
This field, where from my youth I've been a carter,
I, in this field, should the form desert? Gay.

b. With respect, regard, or reference to, or in the way or matter of, anything.

It was young counsel for the person, and violent counsel for the matter.—Bacon, Essays.
Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps, youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the political.—Id.

Comments are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comment for magnitude or colour, produces what kind of effects.—Id.

As he could see clear for those times, through superstition; as he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy.—Id., History of the Reign of Henry VII.

He hath these honours couched in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; there being no other laws in China but the king's command.—Sir W. Temple.

Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the sense in general; but for particulars and circumstances, he continually lops them.—Pope, Preface to the Iliad.

Lo, some are vellum, and the rest are good,
For all his birdship knows, but they are wood.
Id., Moral Essays, iv.

Preceded by as.

As for Maramaldin the general, they had no just cause to dislike him, being an old captain of great experience.—Kneller, History of the Turks.

c. In advantage of, for the sake of, in behalf of, or conducive or beneficial to, anything.

An ant is a wise creature for itself; but it is a shrewd thing in an orchard.—Bacon.
Shall I think the world was made for one,
And men are born for kings, as beasts for men,
Not for protection, but to be devour'd?

Dryden, Spanish Friar.
It can never be for the interest of a believer to do me a mischief, because he is sure, upon the balance of accounts, to find himself a loser by it.—Addison, Spectator.

d. In favour of; on the part of; on the side of.

To suppose the laws for which ye strive are found in Scripture; but those not against which we strive.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity, pref.

It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have no often drawn it for a good one.—Jirgelen.

Love was for Venus, but he fear'd his wife. Id.
There is a natural immutability, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice.—Archbishop Tillotson.

They must be void of all zeal, for God's honour, who do not with vigils and tears intercede with him.—Bishop Sandridge.

Arcturion is for poetical justice.—Tennis.
They are all for rank and foul feeding.—Felton.

For all. Notwithstanding.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I desire you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more fully than to prove myself a man in this enterprise.—Sir P. Sidney.

For all the carabulades of the Christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up.—Kneller, History of the Turks.

But as Noah's picture, which return'd no more,
Did show she had long lived for all the flood.

Sir J. Innes, Immortality of the Soul.
They resolve, for all this, do proceed Unto that judgment. Daniel.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

She might have passed over such business; but my rabble is not to be mumbled up in silence, for all her pertness.—Dryden.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition.—South, Sermons.

For all the world. Wholly; exactly.

A pretty ring
That she did give, whose proxy was,
For all the world, like ruler's poetry
Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

For as much (often spelt as one word, and generally, if not always, followed by as).

In regard that; in consideration of.
For as much as in public prayer we are not only to consider what is useful in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest overquick dispatch should give occasion to sleep, that the thing itself be not little accounted of.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

For as much as he hath pleased Almighty God of his goodness to give you safe deliverance, and hath preserved you in the great danger of childbirth, you shall therefore give hearty thanks unto God.—Book of Common Prayer, Churching of Women.

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any further protection, make war upon Christians for the propagation of their law; so the Christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the precaution.—Bacon, Considerations on War with Spain.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spa water.—Arbuthnot, On Diet.

For my heart. However much I may strive.
I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my heart.

Shakespeare, Twelfth of the Shrew, i. 2.
I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers passed upon the walls.—Addison, Spectator.

For my life. If my life depended on it.

For that. Because; since. Obsolete.

I would go forward in this course of seeking hard places and phrases in authors, but for that I have now much other business that nearer concerns me.—Minsheu, Spanish Grammar, p. 12.

I don't not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Many excesses of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or felled; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

That omitted.
Jealousy would not be answer'd so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous.

Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 4.
Heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business want.
For she is with me. Id., i. 3.

Nor would I have breast with unsmooth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame.

Fairfax.
Solyman had three hundred field-pieces: for why,
Solyman, purposing to draw the emperor into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him.—Kneller, History of the Turks.

Placed before the to of the Infinitive Mood, when intention is signified. Obsolete.

Who shall let me now
On this vile body for to wreak my wrong?
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

A large posterity
Up to your happy palace may mount,
Of blessed souls for to increase the count. Id.
Those things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain.—Bacon.

For conj. Word by which the reason is introduced of something advanced before, generally suggesting and anticipating an objection.

Heav'n doth with us as we with torches steal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, i. 1.
Old husbandmen I do maintain know,
Who for another year die, plough, and sow:
For never any man was yet so old,
But he'd his life one winter more would hold.

Sir J. Denham.
Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from himself, and falls into the hands of the living God.—Archbishop Tillotson.

For. Particle in composition. See Forjudge and Forswear.

Forage. v. n. [Fr. fourrager.]

1. Rove; range; scour a country in search of spoil, generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night
Wolves, urged by their raging appetite, Forage for prey. Sir J. Denham.

There was a brood of young larks in the corn, and the dam went abroad to forage for them.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Nor dare they stray
When rain is promise'd for a stormy day;
But near the city walls their warlike take,
Nor forage far, but about expeditions make.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

2. Rove generally. Rare.

Forage and run
To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him ere he come so nigh.
Shakespeare, King John, v. 1.

3. Ravage. Rare.

His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp
Forage in blood of French nobility.
Shakespeare, Henry V. i. 2.

Forage. v. a. Plunder; strip; spoil.

They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

The victorious Philistines were worried by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army.—South, Sermons.

Forage. s.

1. Search by foraging.

One way a hand select from forage drives
A herd of bevers, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow around; or fleecy flock,
Fews and their bleating lambs, over the plains
Their booty. Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 616.

2. Provisions so sought or obtained.

Some of the public magazines provide,
And some are sent now forage to provide.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics.

3. Provisions in general.
Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd.
Dryden, Fables.

Forager. s.

1. One who forages.

When that the general is not like the hive,
To whom the foragers shall all repair,
What honey is expected?
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, i. 3.

This forager on others' wisdom.
Young, Night Thoughts, v.

2. Applied to beasts consuming or seeking fodder.

Down so smooth a slope,
The fleecy forager will gladly browse.
Mason, English Garden.

Foraging. verbal abs. Act of one who forages; predatory inroad; roving in search of provisions.

A Libyan tiger drawn from his wilder foraging.—Jersey Taylor, & rime, p. 216: 1831.
I chose to observe some kind of military advantages to await him at his foraging, his waterings, &c.—Milton, Apology for Smectymnium.

Foraging-cap. s. Easy fitting light cap, worn by, or fit for, soldiers on a foraging party.

He had a flat foraging cap on his head, which was as large as a buffalo's, and his person was clothed in blue pantaloons, as tight as the ankle, rapidly increasing in width as they ascended, until they diverged of the hips to an expanse which was something between the sublime and the ridiculous.—Murray, Snarkygone, vol. i. ch. iv.

Foramen. s. pl. foramina. [Lat.] Perforation; small or moderate-sized opening, made, or like one made, by a perforating instrument; (common in Anatomy); the foramina of the body being numerous, and, as such, distinguished by specific names; whence such combinations as foramen orale, rotundum, &c. From the frequency of its combination with a second word of which the Latin character is evident, foramen is but imperfectly naturalized. Hence, it is entered rather on the strength of its derivatives, some of which, however, are in the same predicament, rather than as a truly Anglicized word).

Foraminifera. s. [Lat. fero=bear, carry.]

In Zoology. Term, imperfectly naturalized, applied to a class of the most simply organized members of the animal kingdom, the majority of which have a shelly envelope provided with small perforations or foramina. They form a division of the larger class Rhizopoda, or Rhizopods, with which, when first applied, the term Foraminifera was co-extensive. Its import has since been limited. Foraminiferous, and foraminated, are adjectives applied to their organization.

This term [Rhizopoda], first proposed by M. Dujardin, has been adopted as much more appropriate than that of Polychaeta or Foraminifera, which are only applicable to part of the class. . . . We find a few minute perforations on the septa, on whose presence it has been proposed to distinguish the entire group as that of Foraminifera.—Carpenter, Principles of Physiology, § 283.

The shells of Foraminifera vary from dimensions perfectly microscopic to the diameter and proportions of a crown piece.—Anders, Geology, ii. 65.

Foraminous. adj. Full of foramina; perforated in many places; porous.

Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first erection of the wound, will denude it; but in the passage of the sound they will admit it better than harder bodies.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Foray. s. See Forray: (the spelling is now with one r; this being the preferable form).

Flew foot on the corral,
Sage counsel in lumber,
Red hand in the foray,
How sound is thy slumber!

Scott, Lady of the Lake, coronach, canto iii.

Forbath. v. a. Bathe; embrace. Rare.
With conquerors' hands forbath'd in their own blood.

Shakespeare, Induction to Measure for Measure.

Forbear. v. n. pret. forbore; past part. forborne. Abstain; pause; delay; intermit.

I pray you tarry; pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in choosing wrong,
I lose your company, therefore forbear awhile.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 2.

Forbear, my son, the hermit cries;
'Nay tempt the dangerous gloom;
For yonder faithless phantom flies
To lure thee to thy doom.'

Goldsmith, Edwin and Angelina.

Forbear. v. a.

1. Decline; avoid voluntarily.

Forbear his presence, until time hath qualified
The heat of his displeasure. — Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 2.

So angry boils the combat do forbear,
When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.

2. Abstain from, shun to do; or omit, anything.

There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. — South, Sermons.

3. Squire; treat with clemency.

With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love. — Ephesians, iv. 2.

4. Withhold.

Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. — 2 Chronicles, xxxv. 21.

In the following examples the government is that of a clause.

He forbore to go forth. — 1 Samuel, xxiii. 13.

The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
When they their prey in pieces tear,
To quarrel with themselves forbear. Sir J. Denham.

At this he started and forbore to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

Forbearance. s.

1. Care of avoiding or shunning anything;
negation of practice.

True nobleness would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong.

Shakespeare, Richard II. iv. 1.

This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. — South, Sermons.

Liberty is the power a man has to do, or forbear doing any particular action, according as his duty or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Command of temper.

Have a continual forbearance, till the speed of his race grow slower. — Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 2.

3. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness.

Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding;
but only to display the mildness and forbearance
made use of under the reign of his present majesty.
— Addison, Freholder.

He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

Forbearer. s. One who forbears.

The West as a father all goodness doth bring,
The East, a forbearer, an unnumber of things.
Tasso, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Forbearing. verbal abs. Forbearance.

By love forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Proverbs, xxi. 15.

Forbid. v. a. preterite forbade; past part.
forbidden and forbid. [A.S. forbendan.]

1. Prohibit; interdict anything.

A witch, a queen, an old cunning queen; have I not forbid her to my house? — Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iv. 2.

The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South, Sermons.

The climate and holy race
Are all forbidden this polluted place.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

2. Command to forbear anything.

She with no sweet a rigorous forbid him, that he durst not rebel. — Sir P. Sidney.

They have determined to consume all those things that God hath forbidden them to eat by his laws.
Judith, xi. 12.

3. Oppose; hinder.

The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilateth it.

— Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
Thy throne is darkness in the abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight! Dryden.

4. Accuse; blast. Obsolete.

He shall live a man forbid. Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 3.

Apparently neuter in phrases like 'God forbid,' where either it is understood or the government is that of a clause.

Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her son!

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iii. 1.

Forbiddance. s. Prohibition; edict against anything.

Commands do not so much what our desires as forbiddance. — Bishop Hall, Kinsman, p. 27.
How hast thou yielded to transgression
The strict forbiddance? how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidden!

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 903.

Forbidden. part. adj. Prohibited.

Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world, and our woe, . . .
Sing, heavenly muse. Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 1.

Forbiddenly. adv. In a forbidden manner.

With all confidence he swears, as he had went,
That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.

Forbiddenness. s. Attribute suggested by Forbidden; state of being forbidden.

The sinfulness of swearing does consist, not in the diversity of our oaths, but in their forbiddenness. —
Boyle, Against unbecoming Swearing, p. 37.

Forbider. s. One who, or that which, forbids; one who enacts a prohibition.

This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbider of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited.

— Sir T. Browne.

Other rare, periphrases,
May have diverted from continual watch
Our great Forbider. Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 813.

Forbidding. part. adj. Raising abhorrence;
repelling approach; causing aversion.

Tragically was made forbidding and horrible. — *A.
Holl.*

Forbidding. verbal abs. Hindrance; opposition.

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him;
He in the worst sense constrains their denial:
The doors, the wind, the glove that did delay him,
He takes for accidental things of trial.

Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.
Whom, and her race, only forbiddings drive.

Jonson, Progress of the Soul.

Force. s. Waterfall. See Force.

Force. v. a. [for force; Lat. farco.] Stuff.

He 's not yet through warm; force him with joints;
Pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2.

Wit harled with malice, and malice forced with
wit. — Ibid. v. 1.

Force. s. [Fr. force.]

1. Strength; vigour; might; active power.

He never could maintain his part but in the force of his will. — Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, i. 1.

A ship, which hath struck wall, doth run
By force of that force which before it won. Doune.

2. Violence; constraint.

Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown,
Which now they hold by force and not by right.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. ii. 2.

The shepherd Paris wore the Spartan leids
By force away, and then by force enjoy'd;
But I by free consent. Dryden.

3. Virtue; efficacy.

Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipped, hath, in regard of us, great virtue, force, and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to stir up devotion. — Hosker, Ecclesiastical Policy.

No definitions, no suppositions of any sort, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. — Locke.
Justinus repeats the complaints of the army against perpetratory influence. I love this army too well not to wish that such influence were less. Let Justinus point out the time when it has not prevailed.

It was of the least force in the time of that great man, the late duke of Cumberland, who, as a prince of the blood, was also as well as willing to stem a torrent which would have overcome any private subject. — Sir W. Draper, Letters of Junius, xc. iv.

With full.

To my great annoyance, we sat rather late,
For Bobby and I had a furious debate

About singing and cooking—Bobby, of course,
Standing up for the latter fine art in full force.
Moore, The Fudge Family in Paris.

4. Validness; power of law.

A testament is of force after men are dead. —
Hebrews, ix. 17. Not long in force this charter stood;
Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood.

Sir J. Denham.

5. Armament; warlike preparation: (often in the plural).

They that stood under the shadow of Hehbon, because of the force. — Jeremiah, xlviii. 45.
The secret of the power of Muslim consisteth in a victorious army, compounded of miscellaneous forces of all nations. — Bacon.

A greater force than that which here we find,
N'er press'd the ocean, nor employ'd the wind.

Walter.
Those victorious forces of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. — Dryden.

6. In Physics. Cause of change. See extrinsec.

It is . . . not difficult to lead any person of a speculative habit of thought to see that the retardation which constantly takes place in the motion of all bodies when left to themselves, is, in reality, the effect of extraneous forces which destroy the velocity. . . . Every change in the velocity of the moving body must have a cause; and if the change em, in any manner, be referred to the presence of other bodies, these are said to exert force upon the moving body; and the conception of force is thus evolved from the general idea of cause. Force is any cause which has motion, or change of motion, for its effect, and thus, all the change of velocity of a body which can be referred to extraneous bodies, — as the air which surrounds it, or the support on which it rests, — is considered as the effect of forces. . . . Gravity is a uniform accelerating force; such a uniform force having this for its character, that it makes the velocity increase in exact proportion to the time of motion. The relation which the spaces described by the body bear to the times in which they are described, is obtained by mathematical deduction from this definition of the force. . . . The clear definition of a uniform accelerating force, and the proposition that gravity is such a force, were co-ordinate and contemporary steps in this discovery. In defining accelerating force, reference to force, or forces, was necessarily made to the second of the general notions respecting causation, — that causes are measured by their effects. Force, in the cases now under our notice, is conceived to be, as we have already stated, any cause which, acting from without, changes the motion of a body. It must, therefore, in this acceptance, be measured by the magnitude of the changes which are produced. But in what manner the changes of motion are to be employed as the measures of force, is learnt from observation of the facts which we see taking place in the world.
... Force, motion, momentum, are terms which were employed, though in a loose manner, from the very outset of mechanical speculation. And so long as these words retained the vagueness of common language, it would have been a needless and barren trouble to say that 'the momentum is proportional to the force,' or that 'a body moves as much motion as it communicates to another.' But when 'momentum' and 'quantity of motion' are defined to mean the product of mass and velocity, these two propositions immediately become distinct statements of the third law of motion and its consequences. In like manner, the assertion that 'gravity is a uniform force' was asserted to, before it was settled what a uniform force was; but this assertion only became significant and useful when that point had been properly determined. — *Whewell,
History of Scientific Ideas, etc. vii.*

Speaking with reference to physical phenomena, it is difficult to separate the idea of causation from that of force; and these have been regarded as identical by some philosophers. . . . If, again, adopting the view which looks to causation as a force, we could say that water could be caused to flow only by gravitation, we might say abstractedly that gravitation was the cause of water flowing; but this we cannot say; and if we seek and examine any other example, we shall find that causation is only pre-dicable of it in the particular case, and cannot be supported as an abstract proposition; yet this is constantly attempted. — Graves, Correlation of Physical Forces, p. 16.

Force. v. a.

1. Compel; constrain.

Dangers are light, if they once seem light, and more dangers have deceived men than forced them. —
Bacon.

I have been forced to use the cant words of Whig and Tory. — Swift, Examiner.

The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea. — Brown, View of Epic Poetry.

2. Overpower by strength.

O that fortune
Had brought me to the field where thou art run'd
To have wrought such wonders with an man's jaw,
I should have forced thee soon with other arms.

Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1094.

9. Impel; press; draw or push by main strength.

Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them.—Deuteronomy, xl. 19.
 Slumping, the spear descended on his chine,
 Just where the bone distinguish'd either side;
 It struck so fast, so deeply lured lay,
 That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

4. Enforce; urge.

Three blustering nights, borne by the southern blast,
 I float'd, and discover'd land at last;
 I lech on a mounting wave my head I bore,
 Forcing my strength, and gathering to the shore.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

5. Drive by violence or power.

This way of flattering their benefactors out of part, contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions.—Dr. H. More, Discourse of Christian Piety.
 To free the ports, and open the Punick land
 To Trojan guests, host, lieutenant of fate,
 The queen might force them from her town and state.
Dryden.

6. Gain by violence or power.

My heart is yours; but, oh! you left it here
 Abandon'd to those tyrants' hope and fear:
 If they forc'd from me one kind look or word,
 Could you not that, nor that small part afford?
Dryden.

With out. Extort.

The heat of the dispute had forced out from Luther expressions that seem'd to make his doctrine run higher than really it did.—Bishop Atterbury.

7. Storm; take or enter by violence.

Try wail'd so high,
 Atrides might as well have forc'd the sky. Waller.
 Heav'n from all eyes wisely did provide
 This wealth, and for the bravest nation hide;
 Who with four hundred feet, and forty horse,
 Dare boldly go a new-found world to force.
Dryden, Indian Emperor.

8. Ravish; violate by force.

Force her.—I like it not. Dryden.

9. Man; strengthen by soldiers; garrison. Obsolete.

Here let them lie,
 Till famine and the axe cut them up;
 Were they not forc'd with those that should be ours,
 We might have met them starveling, heard to hear.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 5.
 If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Oronoque, and that the passages be already forc'd, then be well advised how you hand. Sir W. Raleigh, Apology.

10. In Horticulture. Accelerate growth by artificial means.

To force, in any country, the fruits which come to perfection in the open air in that country (as the apple, pear, cherry, gooseberry, &c. in Britain, and analogous climates on the continent), can only be considered as a luxurious waste of wealth.—Brande and Coxe, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art, Fencing.

Force. v. n.

1. Lay stress upon. Obsolete.

That morning that he was to join battle with Harold, his armour put on his backpiece before, and his breastplate behind; the which being espyed by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries; but if I have any skill in smithing, as in such I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change copy from a duke to a king.—Gower, Remains.

2. Endeavour.

Forcing with gifts to win his wanton heart.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, April.

3. Use violence.

And now he strength can add unto his will,
 Forcing to do that did him foul unknown.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, li. 8, 20.

Forced. part. adj. [for forc'd.] See Force-meant.

Forced. part. adj.

1. Constrained; enforced; obtained by compulsion; compulsory.

All the wretched shifts of a beggar'd exchequer were tried. Forced loans were raised, great quantities of goods were bought on huge credit and sold for ready money.—Mercator, Critical and Historical Remarks, Lord Nugent's Memorials of Hampden.

2. Unnatural.

With these forc'd thoughts, I prythee, darken not
 The mirth o' the feast.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

Our general taste in England is for epigram, turns of wit, and forced conceits.—Addison, Spectator.

3. In Horticulture. See Forcing.

4. Violent.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,
 I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
 And with forc'd fingers rub:
 Scatter your leaves before the mellowing year.
Milton, Lycidas, 2.

Forcedly. adv. In a forced manner; violently; constrainedly; unmutually.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forcedly to the present form of the earth and the waters.—T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Forcedness. s. Attribute suggested by Forced; distortion.

Against the forcedness and incongruity of this scene much might be said.—Worthington, On the Millennium, p. 2.

Forcful. adj. Violent; strong; driven with great might; impetuous.

Why, what need we
 Command you with you of this, but rather follow
 Our forcful instigation?
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, ii. 1.
 Against the steel he threw
 His forcful spear, which, hinging as it flew,
 Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.

Forcless. adj. Having little force; weak; feeble; impotent.

These forcless flowers like sturdy trees support me.
Shakespeare, Venus and Adonis.
 Love, only love, her forcless numbers mean.
Collier, Ode, iii.

Forclet. s. [for fortalice or fortlet.] Small fort; blockhouse.

By reason whereof the poor physicians, and rustical people payne almost without care, or suspicion of evil, were overcome or taken with the burlesome or the cold attain to any tosse or forclet.—Hall, Henry VI. an. 18. (Rich.)

Forcemeat. s. [forced + meat.] In Cookery. Forcing.

The coarse and unpalatable compounds so constantly met with under the denomination of forcemeat, even at tables otherwise tolerably well served, show with how little attention they are commonly prepared.—Miss Acton, Modern Cookery, p. 112.
 (For another example of forc'd meat, see Finckering.)

Forceps. s. [Lat.] In Midwifery. Large pair of pincers.

The forceps consist of two separate blades curved at the upper end to accommodate them to the shape of the head of the child, . . . where the handles commence . . . joined . . . so as to act as one instrument.—Bois, Otopedion.

Forcer. s. One who, or that which, forces; specially, the embolus of a pump working by pulsion, in contradistinction to a sucker, which acts by attraction.

The usual means for the ascent of water is either by suckers or forcers.—Wilkins, Deedalus.

Forcible. adj.

1. Strong; mighty; (opposed to weak).

That punishment, which hath been sometimes forcible to bridle sin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
 Who therefore can invent
 With what more forcible we may offend
 Our yet unwounded custom?
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 403.

2. Violent; impetuous.

A most eager and forcible tyrant [tyrant].—Martin, Marriage of Priests, sign. A. a. lii.: 153 b.
 Jersey, belov'd by all; for all must feel
 The influence of a form and mind,
 Where kindly grace and constant virtue dwell,
 Like mingled streams, more forcible when join'd:
 Jersey still at thy altars stand,
 Shall there receive the azure band. Prior.

3. Efficient; active; powerful.

Sweet smells are most forcible in dry substances, when broken; and so likewise in oranges, the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

4. Prevalent; of great influence.

How forcible are right words!—Job, vi. 25.
 God hath assured us, that there is no inclination or temptation so forcible which our humble prayers and desires may not frustrate and break sunder.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

5. Done by force; suffered by force.

He swifter far
 Me overtook, his mother all dismay'd,
 And in embraces forcible and foul
 Inguerd'ring with me. Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 791.

The abdication of king James, the advocate on that side look upon to have been forcible and unjust, and consequently void.—Nesbit.

Forcibly. adv. In a forcible manner.

1. Strongly; powerfully.

The Gospel offers such considerations as are fit to work very forcibly upon two of the most swaying and governing passions in the mind, our hopes and our fears. Archbishop Tillotson.

2. By violence; by force.

He himself with greedy great desire
 Into the castle enter'd forcibly. Spenser, Faerie Queene.

The taking and carrying away of women forcibly, and against their will, except female wars and bondwomen, was much capital.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

This doctrine brings us down to the level of horse and mule, whose mouths are forcibly bollen with bit and bridle.—Hudson.

Forcing. verbal abs.

1. Act of urging or enforcing.

The forcing of wrath bringeth forth strife.—Proverbs, xxx. 33.

2. Compulsion.

No doubt you may compel her;
 But what a mischievous, multiplying fortune
 May wait upon this will of yours, as commonly
 Such forcings over act in ladies and rich!
Beaumont and Fletcher, The Pilgrim.

3. In Horticulture. See extract.

Forcing . . . [is] the art of accelerating the growth of plants, so as to obtain fruits or flowers at seasons when they are not produced naturally in the open air. . . . The chief difficulty in accomplishing this is the want of light; and hence the earlier in the season that any forced crop is produced, the greater is its deficiency in colour and flavour.—Brande, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art, Fencing.

Forcival. adj. Having the character of a forcip.

Mechanics made use heretofore in forcival organs, and instruments of incision.—Sir T. Browne, Cygni's Garden, ch. ii. (Rich.)

Forcipated. adj. Formed like a pair of pincers to open and enclose.

The beards have antennae, or long horns before, with a long fibration or forcipated tail behind. Sir T. Browne.

When they have seized their prey, they will so tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters. Leitch, Phisico-Theory.

Forcipation. s. Act of nipping, squeezing, or tearing, with (sometimes hot) pincers: (formerly a mode of punishment).

A punishment of less torment far than either the wheel, or forcipation, yea, than simple burning.—Bacon, the relations of a Lark in 1525.

Forcloss. v. a. [see Forjodge.]

1. Shut up; preclude; prevent.

They are forclosed from the ministration.—Martin, Marriage of Priests, sign. C. i. li.: 153 b.
 But greenish waves, and hewle lowering skies,
 All comfort else forclosed our exil'd eyes.
Mirrors for Magistrates, p. 415.

The embargo with Spain forclosed this trade. Coxe.

2. Forclose a mortgage, is to cut off the power of redemption.

The mortgagee may call upon the mortgagor to redeem his estate presently, or in default thereof to be for ever forclosed from redeeming the same.—Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England.

Forclosure. s. Act of a mortgagee depriving the mortgagor of the right of redemption.

(For example see Mortgage.)

Ford. s. [A.S.]

1. Shallow part of a river where it may be passed without swimming.

Jacob passed over the ford Jabbok.—Genesis, xxxii. 22.

Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;
 They pass the stream, when she had found the ford. Fairfax.

2. River; stream.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
 The ford, and of itself the water flies
 All taste of living wight. Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 611.

Rise, wretched widow! rise; nor muleplod'd
 Permit my ghost to pass the Nigleman ford;
 But rise, prepar'd in black to mourn thy peris'd lord. Dryden.

Ford. v. a. Pass without swimming.

Adam's shin-bones must have contained a thousand sand fathom, and much more, if he had forded the ocean.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

Fording his current where thou find'st it low.

Sir J. Denham.

Fordable, adj. Capable of being forded; passable without swimming.

Many pleach the Scheldt upon the Euphrates, where the same beginning to be fordable.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

A countryman waded a river up and down, to try where it was most fordable; and where the water ran too smooth, he found it deep; and, on the contrary, shallowest where it made most noise.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Fordé, v. a.

1. Ruin; destroy.

Resolving him with prayer, and with praise, If either salves, or oils, or herbs, or charms, A fordé might from dore of death mote raise, He would at her request prolong her husband's days.—Spenser, Faerie Queene, l. 5, 41.

He hath commission from thy wife and me To leave Cordelia in the prison, and To lay the blame upon her own despair, That she fordé herself.

Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.

2. Weary; overcome.

The heavy ploughman fordé, All with weary task fordé.

Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, v. 2.

Fordáil, v. a. Make dull. Rare.

Fordálled, part. adj. Made dull. Rare.

What will of tears may serve To feed the draughts of my fordálled eyes?

Tasso and Glanville. (Sares by H. & W.)

Fore, adj. [See For.] Fore is far less common as a separate word than as an element in a compound; either as the second, as in be-fore; or as the first, as in the numerous words of the forthcoming entries. With some of these the accent varies, so that what one speaker pronounces as a compound another may utter as two words. In a few instances the meaning is equivalent; it being doubtful whether the element be fore or for. Thus in the 'Introduction to the Mirror for Magistrates,' we find the words 'foreward with wounds.' Taken by itself, this is much more likely to mean simply cut-up, cut-about, cut-to-pieces, than either cut in front, or cut beforehand. But the spelling favours fore. This, however, may be faulty. Yet the context favours the spelling being 'this face foreward with wounds.' Yet even here cut about or mangled is the better sense; the fact of the wounds having been received in front being sufficiently indicated by fore.

The compounds of fore fall into two natural and well-marked classes when it denotes an action, i.e. when the result is a verb, the meaning may almost always be got at by rendering fore by beforehand, and transposing the elements, as fore-see, see beforehand. Here the beforeness is priority in time. What applies, in this respect, to verbs, applies also to substantives derived from them, as foreboder, foreboding, &c. With substantives not derived from verbs, the beforeness is anteriority in space, and fore is adequately rendered by in front or fore part of. Upon this difference we may found a rule of considerable generality for the accent. When fore—in front, gives a substantive as its compound, it is accented; when it means beforehand and gives a verb, it is not.

Such is the rule. It is one, however, which very slight shades of meaning traverse. Though no one says anything but foreward and forebode, such a word as forecast in the sense of forethought is pronounced in two ways (forecast and forecást). This is because there are two conflicting rules. The substantive, as compared with the verb, should stand in the way of accent as 'a survey' does to 'I survey.' Such a substantive, however, is by no means one of the character of foreward or foreman. As compared with these it is wellnigh a verb.

Another meaning of fore is one which it takes when followed by a past participle, as in fore-cited, fore-said, where it = above as an element in similar compounds. They are chiefly used in reference to something contained in an earlier part of the work or speech in which they appear, and are connected with the notion of order or arrangement. They can, of course, be invested with the form of a verb by cutting off the final consonant, by which means fore-cited fore-quoted, &c. give fore-cite, fore-quote. The existence, however, of such verbs as these is only formal; where they exist at all they exist with a different meaning. A passage or statement referred to as one that has gone before, must necessarily be referred to by a past or preterite form. Words, then, like fore-cited, are participles with the word fore prefixed, and in many cases, perhaps in all, two words rather than a compound. Here, also, the accent is variable. So it is in another class of compounds, i.e. that wherein fore is simply antological, as in forefront. Finally, when the compound exceeds two syllables, there is unsteadiness. This, however, arises from the form of the word rather than its meaning; dissyllables being, as a general rule, held together as compounds more firmly than longer and more complex combinations. Upon the whole it is probable that most of the combinations in which fore is a prefix give two words rather than a compound; the only class of true and undoubted compounds being that of which foreward and foreman are examples—i.e. the class wherein fore relates to place, and the word which follows it is a substantive. And it may be remarked that herein further change is going on; the fore being in many words pronounced for, at the risk of creating confusion. See Forefather, Forswear, and the Preface.

Anterior; that which is before; not behind.

Though the eye is an orb or spherical area of the world, yet the eye strongest and go farthest in the fore line: from the first local impression.—Bacon.

2. Coming first in a progressive motion.

Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them.—Cheyne.

Fore, adv. Anteriorly; in the part which appears first to those who meet it.

Each of them will wear six diamond earrings and four neckers, needing no other addition than a slight spare deck fore and aft, which is a slight deck throughout.—Sir W. Raleigh, Raleigh.

Foreandmónish, v. a. Warn before, or in anticipation of, the event.

Foreandmónishing him of dangers future and invisible.—Bishop Hall, Select Thoughts, § 12.

Foreadvise, v. n. Warn before, or in anticipation of, the time of action or the event.

Thus to have said, As you were foreadvise'd, had touch'd his spirit, And tried his limitation.—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 3.

Forealléged, part. pref. Alleged before; Forecited.

Seneca, in the forealléged place, sets it peremptorily down as his resolute opinion, that the excellent wit that ever was, yet cannot get to excel in any more than one thing.—Fotherby, Athanasius, p. 102.

Good authors make it justly questionable whether these forealléged marriages should be discreetly clung with a slu.—Bishop Hall, Cases of Con-

Forearm, s. In Anatomy. Part of the arm between the elbow and wrist (sometimes it includes the hand); corresponding parts in the forefeet of quadrupeds.

In our water-vole the acromion of the scapula is low and bent downward; its inferior process is feebly developed. The deltoïd process of the humerus is prominent and well-defined, compressed, and bent downward. There is a minute perforation between the condyles, but none above the humerus.

The bones of the fore-arm are in contact and closely united, except at the narrow space near their proximal ends. The radius is represented by its metacarpal bone. The humerus has a third trochanter, with two patella in front of, and two subella behind, the condyles. I have found, also, a small ossification at the anterior end of each scapular cartilage. The fibula is ankylosed to the tibia at both its extremities.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates.

Forearm, v. a. Provide for attack or resistance before the time of need.

A man should fix and forearm his mind with this persuasion, that, during his passion, whatsoever is offered to his imagination tends only to deceive.—South, Sermons.

He forearms his care With rules to push his fortune, or to bear.—Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Forebode, v. n. Prognosticate; foretell; fore-know; be present of; feel a secret sense of something future.

Fate makes you deaf, while I in vain implore: My heart forebodes I never shall see you more.

My soul foreboded I should find the brow Of some fell monster, screen'd with barbarous power.—Dryden.

Foreboder, s. One who forebodes; prognosticator; soothsayer.

Your raven has a reputation in the world for a bird of omen, and a kind of small prophet; a crow that had observed the raven's manner and way of delivering his predictions, sets up for a foreboder.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Foreboding, part. adj. Presaging; ominous. An ancient seer, skill'd in future fate, With these foreboding words restrain'd their late.—Dryden.

Foreboding, verbal abs. Presage; perception beforehand.

The atheists can never wholly extinguish these horrible forebodings of conscience.—Bentley, Sermons, l.

The melancholy forebodings of inconceivable misery and ruin.—A. Smith, Theory of moral Sentiments, li. 2.

Forebond, s. External boundary. Rare.

And soon they three departed thence and rode forth as fast as ever they myght tyll they came to the forebond of that mount.—Morte d'Arthur, l. 153. (Sares by H. & W.)

Foreby, prep. [? from for.] Near; hard by; fast by.

Not far away he hence doth won Foreby a fountain, where I late him left.—Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Forecást, v. a.

1. Scheme; plan before execution.

He shall forecást his devices against the strong holds.—Daniel, xi. 24.

2. Adjust; contrive antecedently.

The feast was forecást; the time so well forecást, That just when the desert and fruits were plac'd, The fowl's alarm began.—Dryden, Theodora and Honoria.

3. Foresee; provide against.

It is wisdom to consider the end of things before we embark, and to forecást consequences.—Sir R. L'Estrange, Fables.

Forecást, v. n. Form schemes; contrive beforehand; calculate.

And whatso heavens in their secret doom Ordained have, how can frail fleshly sight Forecást, but it must needs to issue come?—Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Forecást, s. [for accent see remarks under Fore.] Contrivance beforehand; scheme; plan; antecedent policy.

Alas! that Warwick had no more forecást, But while he thought to steal the single ten, The king was silly finger'd from the deck!—Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part III, v. 1.

He makes this difference to arise from the forecást and predetermination of the gods.—Addison, Dialogues on the Usefulness of ancient Models.

The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man, Saw inspiration from whence their life began: Memory and forecást just returns engage; That pointed back to youth, this on to age.—Pope.

Forecastle. s. See second extract.

The commodify of the new cook-room the merchants have found to be so great, as that, in all their ships, the cook-rooms are built in their forecastles, contrary to that which had been anciently used.—Sir W. Raleigh, Remains.

Forecastle in a ship is that part where the foremast stands, and is divided from the rest of the floor by a bulk-head: that part of the forecastle which is aloft, and not in the hold, is called the prow.—Larrie.

Forecited. part. pref. Quoted before or above.

Graves in of opium, that the alteration mentioned in that forecited passage is continued.—Arbuthnot, Tables of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

Foreconceive. v. n. Preconceive. Rare.

Expecting or foreconceiving that Nemesis and retribution will take hold of the authors of our hurt.—Bacon.

Forecovert. s. Same as Forefence. Rare.

There were cunning mechanics also, that planted engines and pieces of ordnance, to batter the walls, such as well as they were discharged make a horrible and deadly noise. And verily of undermining and the fabricates fore-covert and defence, Nevitta and Darnalpinus had the charge; but the emperor himself gave direction for skirmish, as also for saving the frames and engines as well from fire as millic.—Holland, Ammianus Marcellinus: 1009. (Nares by H. & W.)

Foredated. part. pref. Dated before the true time.

An abortive and foredated discovery.—Milton, Remains of Church Government urged against Prelacy, h. ii.

Foredeck. s. Anterior part of the ship.

I to the foredeck went and thence did look For rocky Scylla.
Chapman, Translation of the Odyssey.

Foredesign. v. a. Design or plan beforehand.

All the steps of the growth and vegetation both of animals and plants, have been foredesigned by the wise Author of nature.—Chrysostom, Philosophical Principles.

Foredetermine. v. a. Determine or decree beforehand.

When we ascribe power unto God, 'Thine is the power,' we attribute unto him a power that is infinite, a power which can effect whatsoever his will hath foredetermined.—Bishop Hopkins, Exposition of the Lord's Prayer, p. 170.

Foredoom. v. a. Predestinate; determine beforehand.

Through various hazards and events we move To Lathum, and the ruin foredoomed by Jove.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.
Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoomed Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto iii.

Foredoom. s. Judgement.

And Jove's unmoved sentence and foredoom On Priam king, and on his town so bent, I could not fin but I must there lament.
Shakespeare, Induction to the Mirror for Magistrates.

Foreend. s. Anterior part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid More pious debts to heaven than in all The fore-end of my time.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, III. 3.
In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm.—Bacon, New Atlantis.

Forefather. s. Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

The accent as above given is probably the commonest at present. That it was not so a century ago is suggested by the following extracts.

Blest peer! his great forefathers' every grace Reflecting, and reflected in his race.
Each in his narrow cell for ever laid,
The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.
Gray, Elegy written in a Country Churchyard.

That the rule under Fore applies to dissyllables rather than to trissyllables has been already stated. It may be added that in the word under notice, fore, contrary to its general application with substantives, relates to time rather than place.

Forefeeling. s. Premonitory feeling; feeling in anticipation.

The signs that went afore, and the voyes that gave warning from heaven, and the opening of the temple of its own accord seemed to be forefeelings of God's wrath that was to light upon them.—Trenness of Christian Religion. (Ord. MS.)

Forefence. s. Defence of a front or frontage.

Rare.

Whiles part of the soldiers make the forefence abroad in the fields.—Holland, Translation of Ammianus Marcellinus. (Nares by H. & W.)

Forefind. v. a.

1. Prohibit; avert.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heav'n's forefind: I would not kill thy soul.
Shakespeare, Othello, v. 2.

Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefind,
May bring your youth to some untimely end.
Dryden.

2. Provide for; secure. Rare.

Down with the nose,
Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away
Of him, that his particular forefind,
Smells from the general wail.
Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iv. 3.

Forefinger. s. Finger next to the thumb; index: (accent in first extract on the middle syllable).

An antique stone
On the forefinger of an altar-stone.
Shakespeare, Hamlet and Juliet, l. 4.
Polydorus shall be drawn, as it were, acting her speech with her forefinger.—Shakespeare, On Drawing.
Some wear this on the middlefinger, as the ancient Gauls and Britons; and some upon the forefinger.—Sir T. Browne.

Forefoot. s. Anterior foot of a quadruped; slang for hand.

Give me thy fist, thy forefoot to me give.
Shakespeare, Henry V. II. 2.
He ran fiercely, and snout at Heliodorus with his forefoot.—2 Maccabees, iii. 25.
I continue my line from thence to the heel; then making the breast with the eminency thereof, bring out his forefoot, which I finish.—Shakespeare, On Drawing.

Forefront, or Fore front. s. Anterior part, or front, of anything.

Thou shalt put it on a blue lace, that it may be upon the mitre; upon a forefront of the mitre it shall be.—Exodus, xxviii. 37.
Set ye a pin in the forefront of the lodest battle.
2 Samuel, xi. 13.
The forefront of the house stood toward the east.
Exodus, xlviii. 1.
That temple had two parts; first, the forefront, the porch, the walk before it; and secondly, the temple itself.—Hals, Greek and Roman, p. 131.

Perhaps I shall most simply make myself intelligible by stating plainly and frankly a proposition which I wish to illustrate by various examples, as it has been exemplified in various ages and countries. The proposition is this: that every great advance in intellectual education has been the effect of some considerable scientific discovery, or group of discoveries. Every improvement of the mental discipline of those who stand in the forefront of humanity has followed some signal victory of their leaders; every addition to the means of intellectual harvest, some more than ordinary beauty of the intellectual soil, bestowed on the preceding years.—Whewell, Lecture on Intellectual Education.

Foregame. s. First plan; first game.

Since life is but as a game at tables, if the foregame be not to thy wish, neither wine nor curse; but raise thy ear to an aftergame.—H. hitcock, Present Manners of the English, p. 29.

Forego. v. a. Go before; be past.

It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone, and when his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

Foregoer. s.

1. Ancestor; progenitor.

Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we then derive
Than our foregoers.
Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, II. 3.

2. One who goes before another.

O Mercury, foregoer to the evening
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, b. ii.

Foregoing. part. adj. Preceding.

This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitation pleases.—Dryden, Translation of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations.—Addison.

Foreground. s.

1. Ground in front.

A gorgeous pavilion was erected, probably on a plain near the city, capable of containing not only the bridal party, but the guests whom the king had invited to the banquet. . . . In the fore-ground without, tables were spread for the rest of the immense multitude.—Bishop Thirlwall, History of Greece, ch. iv.

2. In Painting. Part of the field or expanse of the picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can stand on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed in an open field.—Dryden, Translation of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

Forehand. s.

1. Part of a horse which is before the rider.

God bless me, how long since I saw you!—good horse you're on;—you look thin;—admirable condition;—what have you been doing?—grand action;—a't we belaboured!—Shakespeare, fore-hand—revelled old Queensbury! but in the month; gone to the devil;—what are the odds? Lord Chester asked Tyrrel to go home with us. The invitation was readily accepted.—Sir E. B. Lytton, Pelham, ch. xlii.

2. Chief part. Obsolete.

The great Achilles whom opinion crowns,
The sinew and the fore-hand of our lust.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, I. 3.

Forehand. adj. Done sooner than is regular.

You'll say she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the forehand sin.
Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, iv. 1.

Forehanded. adj.

1. Early; timely.

If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forehanded care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercise of holy Living.

2. Formed in the foreparts.

He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely forehanded; mark but the cleanness of his shapes too.—Dryden.

Forehead. s.

1. Part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hercules,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending.
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, I. 3.

Some saved copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And moulded every feature from her face;
Each majesty show from her forehead rose,
Her cheeks such blushing east, such rays her eyes.
Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity.

Here, see the forehead of a Jesuit!—Bishop Hall, Honour of married Clergy, p. 61.

A man of confidence presseth forward upon every appearance of advantage; where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are unquarrelled in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions.—Cotton.

I would thus know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply.—Swift, Presbyterian Plea.

Forehear. v. n. Be informed before: (with of).

The Turks, whom they account for barbarous,
Having foreheard of Basilisk's worth,
A number underprop us with their shoulders.
Tragedy of Soliman and Perseda: 1599.

Forehend. v. a. See II. end.

Like as a fearful dove . . .
Having furrow'd copy'd a tassel cent,
Which after her his nimble wings doth strain,
Doubteth her haste for fear to be forehend,
And with her pinnas cleaves the liquid firmament.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, iii. 4. 39.

Forehorse. v. a. [see remarks under Fore.] Cut in front.

His face forehend'd with wounds.
Shakespeare, Induction to Mirror for Magistrates.

Forehorse. s. Foremost horse of the team.

As if
We were two carriers at two several ways,
And, as the fore-horse guides, cry God be with you.
De Witt and Plancher, Cæcilia.
The forehorse jingles on the road,
The waggoner lugs on his load.
Cotton.

Foreign. adj. [Fr. foreign; from Lat. foras = out of doors, abroad.]

1. Not of this country; not domestic.

Your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home.

Shakespeare, Richard III. iv. 4.
The learned correspondence you had in foreign parts.—Milton.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation: (with to).

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition.—Addison.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart.

Id., Cato.

With from.

This design is not foreign from some people's thoughts.—Swift.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not stick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still: which so griev'd him,
That he ran mad and died.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. ii. 2.

4. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold in their ill-natur'd land
Indure,

J. Phillips, Cyder.

Foreigner. s. One who comes from another country; not a native; stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know Ned how to entertain him. Sir J. Denham, Sophy.
To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong a friend, a kinsman, and a son.

Dryden, Translation of the Kuchel.
Water is the only native of England made use of in punch; but the lemon, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs, are all foreigners.—Addison, Freeholder.

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects.—Swift.

Foreignness. s. Attribute suggested by Foreign; remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right.—Locke.
Moreover he had a swarthy foreignness of complexion, which boded little honesty.—Silas Marner, ch. viii.

Forejudge. v. a. See Forjudge.

Forejudgement. s. Judgment formed beforehand.

But seldom seen, forejudgement proveth right.
Spenser, Maiorcan, 320.

Foreknow. v. a. Know beforehand; have prescience of; foresee.

We foreknow that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after winter the spring shall come; after the spring, summer and harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge
the cause of any of those.—Sir W. Raleigh.
Calends the sacred sever, who had in view Thine present and the just, and things to come foreknow.

Dryden, Translation of the first Book of the Illiad.

Foreknowable. adj. Possible to be known before the event.

It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances.—Dr. H. More, Divine Dialogues.

Foreknower. s. One who knows what is to happen.

He who make God the foreknower . . . of evil.—
Shakespeare, Fortress of the Faith, Act 4 b: 1503.

Foreknowingly. adv. As that which foreknows or is foreknown.

No interest can be so great as to be put in balance against a man's life and his soul; and he does very frequently serve his ends who seemingly and foreknowingly loses his life in the prosecution of them.—
Jeremy Taylor, Liberty of Prophecy, sect. 12, v. (Ord MS.)

Foreknowledge. s. Prescience; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge, seeth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world.—Hudson, Ecclesiastical Poetry.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my return for you, in the reason that you do not dislike my letters.—Pope.

Forel. s. [Lat. forellus, forulus; Fr. fourreau] Kind of parchment; sheepskin dressed on one side only, commonly used for covers of account-books.

No manner of persons shall sell this present book, unbound, above the price of two shillings and two-pence; and bound in forel for six. Id. and not above.—The Books of the Common Prayer, last leaf: fol. 1510.

Foreland. s. Promontory; headland; high land jutting into the sea; cape.

As when a ship, by skillful steersman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or fordland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft she steers, and shifts her sails.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 513.

Forelay. v. a.

1. Lay wait for; entrap by ambush.

Some secret detector hath forlaid thee by a whispering misintimation.—Scamondale Sermon,
p. 30: 1614.

A serpent shoots his sting at unawares;
An ambush'd thief forlaid a traveller:
The man lies number'd, while the thief and snake,
One gains the thicket, and one thrills the brake.

Dryden, Fables, Patience and Ariste.

2. Contrive antecedently; prevent.

That our serious humilitations may forelay his too well deserved judgements.—Bishop Hall, Remains,
p. 15.

3. Lay down beforehand.

These grounds being forelaid and understood, I affirm, first, that presbyters, &c.—Mede, Discourses,
p. 110: 1612.

Foreleader. s. One who leads others by his example.

Would God that we learned not, by the fore-leader before named, to charge and conjure each other into the pledge!—Guicciardine, Diet for Drunkards:
1570.

Forelend. v. a. Give beforehand. Obsolete.

As if that life to loss they had forelent.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, iv. 3, a.

Forelist. v. a. Raise aloft any anterior part.

No dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled brand;
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of new comen guest.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Forelock. s. Hair that grows from the fore part of the head.

Tell her the joys that time will not be staid,
Unless she do him by the forelock take. Spenser.
Hymenitum looks

Round from his parted forelock manly hung,
Clust'ring, but not beneath his shoulders broad,
As if that life to loss they had forelent.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 301.

Zeal and duty are not slow,
But on occasion's forelock watchful wait.

Id., Paradise Regained, iii. 172.

Time is painted with a lock before, and bald behind, signifying thereby that we must take time by the forelock; for, when it is once past, there is no receiving it.—Swift.

Forelook. v. a. Look, look out, beforehand.

Then did I forelook
And saw this day mark'd white in Clelia's cheek.
H. Jonson, King's Entertainment.

Foreman. s. First or chief person; head manager.

He is a very sensible man, shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury.—Addison, Spectator.

The blasting process is employed when the foremen of the workshop & man-chamber judge that a hole well-placed may separate enough of ore to pay the time, the repair of tools, and the gunpowder expended.—Cave, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Foremast. s. Lower mast in the forepart of a vessel.

At half-past three the foremast went in three pieces, and the bowsprit was found to be sprung in three places.—Southey, Life of Nelson, ch. iv.

Foremast man. s. One who furls the sails, and takes his course at the helm.

Kid soon threw off the character of a privateer, and became a pirate. . . . He began by robbing Mus-solinians, and speedily proceeded from Mussolinians to Armenians, and from Armenians to Portuguese.
The Adventure (Galley took such quantities of cotton and silk, sugar and coffee, cinnamon and pepper, that the very foremast was removed from a hundred to two hundred pounds weight, and that the captain's share of the spoil would have enabled him to live at home as an opulent gentleman.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xiv.

Foremean. v. a. Intend beforehand.

As being the place by destiny foremean.

H. Jonson, Masques.

Forementioned. part. pres. Mentioned or recited before.

Dacier, in the life of Aurelius, has not taken notice of the forementioned figure on the pillar.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Foremost. adj. [If we simply look to the words fore and most, there is nothing anomalous in foremost, thus spelt and thus divided. If, however, we also take cognizance of former, complications arise. There is no e in the first syllable of former. Without an e few spell foremost. Foremost, however, and formost are in origin different words. Occasionally, indeed, they are distinguished in speaking. In spelling, however, foremost has prevailed; nor is it the intention of the present editor to unsettle the existing orthography by a separate entry of formost; the difference of import between the two words being of the slightest. Still, the difference of origin is worth notice.

Foremost is simply what the first view suggests, fore + most.

Formost is the A.S. forma + st, the ordinary sign of the superlative degree.

It may be added that forma is by no means the only word of its class. The m (the m in the Latin primum) having the same power in the words innermost, utmost, aftermost, midmost, &c., in all of which we get the elements m and st in a separate form, and therewith evidence of the accidental character of their coincidence with the independent word most. Among which, note the forms like innermost, which give not only comparative, but in the way of a superaddition, a superlative inflexion as well. For further remarks see Former, and also Further, Fore, and For.

1. First in place.

All three were set among the foremost ranks of fame, for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt. Sir P. Sidney.
Our women in the foremost ranks appear;
March to the light, and meet your mistress there.

Dryden.

The bold Sempronius,
That still broke foremost through the crowd of pa-
trians,

As with a hurricane of zeal transported,
And virtuous even to madness. Addison, Cato.

It was later before Athens was permitted to do justice to the services of her great citizen (Demosthenes), who indeed had never had her esteem. The time at length came when his nephew Demetrius might safely propose a decree, by which the honours of the pythium, and of the foremost seat at public spectacles, were granted to his descendants, and a brazen statue was erected in the agora to himself.—
Bishop Thirlwall, History of Greece, ch. lvi.

2. First in dignity.

These ride foremost in the field.

As they the foremost rank of honour held. Dryden.

Foremostly. adv. Among the foremost.

Rare.

But when he saw his daughter dear
Casting on most foremost,
He wrung his hands, and tore his hair,
And cried out most piteously.
Old Ballad of Jephthah, Percy's Reliques of ancient Poetry, i. ii. 3.

Foremother. s. Female ancestor.

I would have you, my daughters, so to look to your feet, when you enter into the house of God, that your devotions through irreverent unceremoniousness prove not the sacrifice of fools. It was the modesty and humility of some of your foremothers not to seat themselves in the church, before they had performed a reverent respect to the minister then officiating.—Bishop Prideaux.

Forenamed. part. pres. Named before or above.

And such are more ones,
As Curius and the forenamed Lentulus.

H. Jonson, Cato's Conspiracy.

Foreness. s. Attribute suggested by Fore.

Rare.

Time is but a measure of moving, wherein there is both a foreness and an afterness.—Trouness of Christian Religion. (Ord MS.)

Forenoon. s. Time of day reckoned from the middle point, between the dawn and the meridian, to the meridian: (opposed to afternoon).

The manner was, that the forenoon they should run at tilt, the afternoon in a broad field in manner of a battle, till either the strangers or the country knights won the field.—Sir P. Sidney.

Curio, at the funeral of his father, built a temporary theatre, consisting of two parts turning on hinges, according to the position of the sun, for the convenience of forenoon's and afternoon's diversion.—Arbuthnot, Tables of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

Forenotice. s. Information of an event before it happens.

So strange a revolution never happens in poetry, but either heaven or earth gives some forenotice of it.—Rymer, On Tragedy.

Forensic. adj. [Lat. forensis.] Belonging to courts of judicature.

Person is a forensic term, appropriating actions and their merit; and so belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery. This personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness.—Locke.

The forum was a public place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judges in matters of property, or in criminal cases; thence all sorts of disputations in courts of justice, where several persons make their distinct speeches, may come under the name of forensic disputes.—Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

His manner in earlier life was remarked as excellent; and though it probably partook even then of that over-precision which, in his later years, sometimes bordered upon the ridiculous, it must certainly have been above the common order of forensic delivery to earn the reputation which has remained of it.—Lord Brougham, Historical Sketches of Statesmen of the Reign of George III. Lord Loughborough.

The legal learning of Mackenzie was not profound; but, as a scholar, a wit, and an orator, he stood high in the opinion of his countrymen; and his renown had spread even to the coffee-houses of London and to the cloisters of Oxford. The remains of his forensic speeches prove him to have been a man of parts, but are somewhat disfigured by what he doubtless considered as Ciceronian graces, interjections which show more art than passion, and elaborate amplifications, in which epithet rises above epithet in wholesome climax.—Macleay, History of England, ch. vi.

Foreordain. v. a. Predestinate; predetermine; preordain.

The church can discharge, in manner convenient, a work of an great importance, by foreordaining some short collect wherein briefly to mention thanks.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Policy.

Foreordination. s. Predetermination.

Whether this foreordination were in St. Jule's intent or meaning a foreordination from eternity.—Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 171.

Forepart. s.

1. Part first in time.

Had it been so raised, it would deprive us of the sun's light all the forepart of the day.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

2. Part anterior in place.

The ribs have no cavity in them, and towards the forepart of breast are broad and thin, to bend and give way without danger or fracture.—Rog. Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Forepast. part. pref. Bygone; previous.

None . . . with shrieks, sobs, sighs, and tears, Did tell the woes of their forepast years.
Sackville, Induction to Mirour for Magistrates.
Now cease, ye dainties, your delights forepast; Enough it is that all the day is years.

My forepast proofs, howe'er the matter fall, Shall tax my fears of little vanity, Having vainly fear'd too little.

Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, v. 3.
Such is the trend which he negotiates with us, an offer and tender of a reconciliation, an act of oblivion, of all forepast sins, and of a new covenant.—Maimon, On Fundamentals.

Forepointer. s. Indicator. Rare.

Hopes above Fortune are the forepointers of deep falls.—Watts's Commonwealth, p. 331. (Ord. 318.)

Forepossession. adj.

1. Holding formerly in possession.

He must give place to such an owner, as that the same was never in him to be by the forepossession elders; and must be removed in one day out of the possessions, which his ancestors had continued in many score years.—Knight, Trial of Truth, fol. 11: 1580.

2. Preoccupied; prepossessed; preengaged.

The testimony either of the ancient fathers, or of other classical divines, may be clearly and abundantly answered, to the satisfaction of any rational man, not extremely forepossessioned with prejudice.—Bishop Sanderson.

So late it will stand, that to the reading of Scripture comes forepossession with some opinion.—Hobbs, Golden Remains, p. 4.

Forepromise. v. a. Promise beforehand.

Answer was returned, that it was forepromised to one of my fellow-chaplains.—Hobbes, Specimen in his Life.

Foreprise. v. a. Rate beforehand.

God hath foreprized thines of the greatest weight, and hath therein precisely defined as well that which every man must perform, as that which no man may attempt; leaving all sorts of men, in the rest, either to be guided by their good discretion, if they be from subjection to others; or else to be ordered by such commandments and laws, as proceed from those superiors under whom they live.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Policy, v. § 71.

Forerank. s. First rank; front.

Yet leave our cousin Catharine here with us; She is our capital demand, comprised Within the forerank of our articles.

Shakespeare, Henry T. v. 2.

Forerach. v. n. In Naavigation. Sail better than another ship; get before it: (as, 'one ship foreraches upon another').

Foreride. v. n. Signify by tokens.

With fruit full hope his aged breast he fed Of future good, which his young toward years Did barely promise; and to him foretold, That he in time should sure prove such an one, As should be worthy of his father's throne.

Spenser, Muirpoodman.

Foreriding. s. Previous perusal.

By reason of your fore-riding of Suetonius, you shall find yourself, for a good part of the story, furnished beforehand.—Hales, Golden Remains, p. 273.

Forerited. part. pref. Mentioned or enumerated before.

But him resassent The forecited practices, whereof We cannot feel too little, hear how much.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. i. 2.

Foreremembered. part. pref. Called to mind, or mentioned, before.

My words concerning St. Gregory, and his times, are these, after the foreremembered imitation.—Hobbes, Montaigne, Appeal to Caesar, p. 230.

Foreright. adv. Right forward; onward.

Can ye look? Is there a safety left yet But foreright?

Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of Malta.

Foreright. adj. Ready; forward; quick.

All soundly on the cushions slept, even till the night was worn; And when the Lady of the Light, the ray-fingered moon, Rose from the hills, all fresh arose, and to the ramp retired, While Phoebus with a foreright wind their swelling bark inspired.

Chapman, Translation of the Iliad, b. i.

A foreright gale of liberty.—Manning, Eccequid.

Forerun. v. a.

1. Come before as an earnest of something following; introduce as an harbinger.

Against ill chances men are ever merry; But heaviness forepays the good event.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 2.

Was wet, and twilight from the east came on, Foretelling night. Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 582.
She bids me hope; oh heavens, she jilts me! And pity still forewarns approaching love, As lightning does the thunder.

Drayton, Spanish Friar.

2. Precede; have the start of.

I heard it to be a maxim at Dublin to follow, if not for-run, all that is or will be practised in London.—Gravel.

Forerunner. s.

1. Harbinger; messenger sent before to give notice of the approach of those that follow.

The six strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a seventh, the prince of Morocco.—Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 2.

A creek was sacrificed as the forerunner of day and the sun, thereby acknowledging the light of life to be derived from the divine beauty, the daughter of providence.—Bishop Stillington.

My older brothers, my forerunners came, Rough draughts of nature, ill design'd, and lame; Blown off, like blossoms, never under to bear; Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care.

Dryden, Astrucos.

2. Ancestor; predecessor.

Arthur, the great forerunner of thy blood.

Shakespeare, King John, ii. 1.

3. Prognostic; sign foreshowing anything.

O Ere! more further change swells us with, Which woe's by those make signs in nature shows, Forerunners of his purpose.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 103.

Loss of sight is the woe of life, and usually the forerunner of death.—South, Sermons.

The keeping insensible perspiration up in due measure is the cause as well as sign of health, and the least deviation from that due quantity, the certain forerunner of a disease.—Arbuthnot.

Already opera prepares the way.

The sure forerunner of her gentle away.

Pope, Dunciad.

Forerid. part. adj. Described or spoken of before.

Those forerid lands.

So by his father bid.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 1.

Foreray. v. a. Predict; prophecy; foretell.

Let ordinance Come as the gods foreray it.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iv. 2.

Forerid. v. a. See beforehand; see what has not yet happened; have prescience; foreknow.

The first of them could things to come forerid; The next, could of things present best advise; The third, things past could keep in memory.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

If there be any thing forerid that is not usual, be asured for it by any hearty though a short prayer, and an earnest resolution beforehand, and then watch when it comes.—J. v. Taylor.

Forerid. v. n. Look out, or be on the watch, for anything: (with to, as in 'See to it').

Rare.

A king against a storm must forerid to a convenient stock of treasure.—Bacon.

Forerider. s. One who foresees things.

There are some such very great foreriders, that they grow into the vanity of pretending to see, where nothing is to be seen.—Lord Halifax.

Forerider. v. a. Grasp beforehand.

Proceed, illustrious, happy chief, proceed; Foreride the caravans for thy law observed.

Titus, Second Part of Aeschylus and Aeschylus.

Foreridow. v. a. Fore signify; typify.

That the great excellency and efficacy of our Saviour's death and passion might appear, it was by manifold types foreshowed and in diverse prophecies foretold. Burton, vol. ii. s. 27.

Forerid. s. Anterior part of the ship.

The shipmen would have cast anchors out of the forerid.—Acts, xxvii. 30.

Forerid. v. a. See Foreridening.

Forerid. part. adj. See Foreridening.

Foreridening. s. See second extract.

The greatest parts of the body ought to appear foremost; and he forbids the foreridening, because they make the parts appear little. Drayton, Translation of the Eccequid's Act of Painting.

Foreridening . . . is the art of conveying to the mind the impression of the entire length of an object when it is represented in an oblique and receding position; in which case the actual vision of it is shortened in a line on the eye line side; e.g. a stick held with the end towards the observer appears shortened to the view, and that in a degree according to the angle under which its lengthened side is seen. . . . Such a view is called a foreridened view; and the representation foreridening it.—Ross, Cyclopaedia.

Foreridow. v. a.

1. Discover before it happens; predict; prognosticate.

Christ had called him to be a witness of his death, and resurrection from the dead, according to that which the prophets and Moses had foreridow.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Policy.

The dreams that troubled them did foreridow this.—William, xviii. 17.

Oh, that same drawing in your nether lip there, Foreridow no goodness, lady.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Nice Valour.

Next, like Aurora, Spenser rose, Whose purple blush the day foreridow.

Sir J. Denham.

You chose to withdraw yourself from public business, when the breeze of heaven grew troubled, and the frequent shifting of the wind foreridow a storm.—Drayton.

2. Represent before it comes.

What elm is the law but the gospel foreridow? What other the gospel than the law fulfilled?—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Policy.

Foreshow. s. Sign; that by which anything is foreshown.

With vermeil drops at ev'n his tresses bleed,
Foreshowers of future heat.
Fairfax, Translation of Tasso, xiii. 84.

Foreshower. s. One who predicts a thing.
That they might be thought the effectors of what they were the foreshowers.—Spencer, On Prodiges, p. 261.

Fore-side. s. Superficial appearance; outside.

Now when these counterfits were thus uncaused
Out of the fore-side of their surgerie, . . .
All gau to jest and gibe full merrie.
Spencer, Faerie Queene, v. 3, 30.

Fore-sight. s.

1. Prescience; prognostication; foreknowledge.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep beneath: while thou to fore-sight wak'st;
As once thou slept'st, while she to life was form'd.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 367.

2. Prentice care of futurity.

He had a sharp fore-sight, and working wit,
That never idle was, no once could rest a whit.
Spencer, Faerie Queene, i. 1.
In matters of arms he was both skilful and industrious, and as well in fore-sight as resolution present and great.—Hayward.
Difficulties and temptations will more easily be borne or avoided, if with prudent fore-sight we arm ourselves against them.—Rogers.

Fore-sightful. adj. Prescient; provident.

Death gave him no such pang as the fore-sightful care he had of his silly successor.—Sir P. Sidney.

Fore-sighty. v. a. Betoken beforehand; foreshow; typify.

Discoveries of Christ already present, whose future coming the Pauls did but fore-sighty.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
Yet as being past times noxious, where they light
On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent,
They oft fore-sighty, and threaten ill.
Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 462.

Fore-shin. s. Prepace.

Their own hand
An hundred of the faithless he shall slay,
And for a dower their hundred fore-shin pay,
Be Michael thy reward.
Cowley, Davideida.

Fore-shirt. s. Pendulous or loose part of the coat before.

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect?
No other obligation?
That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his fore-shirt.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. ii. 3.

Fore-speak. v. n. Foresay; foreshow; foretell; predict.

My mother was half a witch; never any thing that she fore-speak, but came to pass.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Honest Man's Fortune.

Fore-speaking. s. Prediction.

Old Godfrey of Winchester thinketh no ominous fore-speaking to lie in names.—Camden, Remains.

Fore-sparrer. s. One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how early summer was at hand,
As this fore-sparrer comes before his lord.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 3.

Forest. s. [N.Fr. forest; Fr. forêt.]

1. Wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot choose but feed in continual danger of life.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champains, but prairie, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-lands, as in forests.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Forest [in] properly a wilderness, or uncultivated tract of country, but as such were commonly overgrown with trees, the word took the meaning of large wood. We have many forests in England without a stick of timber upon them.—Wegwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.

2. In Law.

The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to affect: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forre, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for perambulating the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verderers, the foresters, agisters, regarders, bailiffs, and bendles. The chief property of a forest is the awl-mote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pyepowders to a fair.—Cowell.

Forest. adj. [Italian, foresto.] Sylvan; rustic.

In a lodge, or forest house.—Sir G. Duck, History of King Richard III. p. 118.

Forestall. v. a.

1. Anticipate; take up beforehand.

If thou be under-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech: do not forestall
By lavishness thine own and others' wit,
As if thou mad'st thy will.
What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid?
Milton, Comus, 362.

2. Hinder by preoccupation or prevention; seize or gain possession of before another; buy before another in order to raise the price.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mischief forestall.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, i. 1.
I will not forestall your judgment of the rest.—Pope.

3. Deprive by something prior: (with of).

This night forestall him of the coming day!
Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iii. 5.

Forestaller. s. One who anticipates the market; one who purchases before others to raise the price.

Commodities, good or bad, the workman must take at his master's rate, or sit still and starve; whilst, by this means, this new sort of engrossers or forestallers having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen, at the price upon the poor landholder.—Locke.

Forested. adj. Invested with the character of a forest.

Whereby she [the Newforest] became first forested.
Drayton, Polyolbion, s. 1.

Forester. s.

1. Officer of the forest.

Forester, my friend, where is the hush,
That we may stand and play the murderer in?—
Here ly, upon the edge of yonder copse.
Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 1.

2. Inhabitant of the wild country.

Foresters and borderers are not generally so civil and reasonable, as might be wished.—Evelyn.

3. One who understands the nature and the laws of forests.

You are cried up, my lord, to be an excellent horseman, huntsman, forester.—Howell, Letter to Lord Lindsay, iv. 16.

The greatest forester, they say, that ever was in England, was King Canutus the Dane; and after him, St. Edward; at which time Liber Rufus, the Red-book for Forest-Laws, was made.—Ibid.

4. Forest-tree.

This nemes is more conspicuous in flowers, and the horiaceous offspring, than in foresters.—Evelyn.

Fore-taste. v. a. Taste by anticipation; have prescience of.

Fore-tasted. part. adj. Tasted by anticipation.

He repented him of his foretasted meal.—De Foe, Moll Flanders.

Fore-taste. s. Taste beforehand, real or imaginary, of anything.

A pleasure that a man may call as properly his own as his soul and his conscience, neither liable to accident, nor exposed to injury: it is the fore-taste of heaven, and the earnest of eternity.—South, Sermons.

Fore-tell. v. a. preterite and past part. fore-told. Predict; prophecy.

What art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. ii. 1.

Mercia's king,
Warn'd in a dream, his murder did foretell.
Dryden.
When great Glyse sought the Phrygian shores,
Deeds then undone my faithful tongue foretold;
Heaven seal'd my word, and you those deeds behold.
Pope.

Fore-tell. v. n. Act as a foreteller; prophecy.

All the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, have likewise foretold of these days.—Acts, iii. 24.

Fore-teller. s. One who foretells; predictor; foreshower.

Others are proposed, not that the foretold events should be known; but that the accomplishment that expounds them may evince, that the fore-teller of them was able to foresee them.—Boyle, Experiments and Considerations touching Colours.

By the close and scrutinising attention of minds the most persevering and careful, it was ascertained that even the distant stars were subject to this law; and, at last, to place as it were the seal of assurance to its never-failing truth, it became, in the minds of Leverrier and Adams, the fore-teller and the discoverer of an orb rolling in the depths of space, so large as to equal nearly sixty earths, yet so far away as to be invisible to the unassisted eye.—Paraday, Lecture on Mental Education.

Fore-telling. verbal abs. Declaration of something future.

These predictions are very rare fore-tellings, wimt to be lapped in obscure folds.—Felltham, Resolves, l. 82.

Fore-think. v. a.

1. Anticipate in the mind; have prescience of anything.

Adam could not be ignorant of the punishments due to neglect and disobedience; and felt, by the proof thereof, in himself another terror than he had fore-thought, or could imagine.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

Friday, the fatal day! when next it came,
Her soul fore-thought the flood would change his game.
Dryden.

2. Contrive antecedently.

Blessed be that God which hath given you an heart to fore-think this, and a will to honour him with his own.—Bishop Hall.

Fore-thinking. part. adj. Provident.

What's my frenzy will be call'd my crime:
What then is thine? Thou cool deliberate villain!
Thou wise, fore-thinking, weighing politician!
Smith.

Fore-thought. s.

1. Consideration of future events and contingencies.

Devices by last will and testament are always more favoured in construction, than formal deeds, which are presumed to be made with great caution, fore-thought, and advice.—Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England.

2. In Law. As an approximate translation of the N.Fr. pre-pense (=thought beforehand; penser=think), it means previous planning; preparatory contrivance; intention; being usually combined with malice, or some equivalent term. Hence, its character is often, in appearance, adjectival: e.g.

The second is, where a man is slain upon fore-thought malice, which the law terms murder.—Bacon, Charge at the Sessions of the Virgo.

Only, however, in appearance; the true form being malice en fore-thought (malice pre-pense), changed into a fore-thought, and, less correctly, into of-fore-thought.

He that is undone, is equally undone, whether it be by uprightness of fore-thought, or by the folly of oversight, or evil counsel.—Sir E. R. Rieu.

In the extract from Bacon the preposition is dropped, and the substantives transposed.

Fore-token. s. Preventive sign; prognostic.

It may prove some ominous fore-token of misfortune.—Sir P. Sidney.

They mistook nothing more in king Edward the Confessor, than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a fore-token of bringing in of foreign powers, which indeed happened.—Camden, Remains.

Fore-token. v. a. Foreshow; prognosticate as a sign.

The king from Ireland hastes; but did no good;
Whilst strange prodigious signs fore-taken blood.
Daniel.

Fore-tooth. s. Tooth in the anterior part of the mouth; incisor.

The fore-tooth should be formed broad, and with a thin sharp edge, like chisels.—Ray, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Fore-top. s.

1. Dressing of the front hair.

You must first have an especial care so to wear your hat, that it oppress not confusedly this your predominant or fore-top.—B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

Fair trees, those comely foretops of the field,
Are cut to maintain head-tires.

Turner, Rosenger's Tragedy.

So may your hats your foretops never press,
I touch'd your ribbons, sacred to your dress.

Dryden.

2. In Navigation. Platform at the head of the foremast.

Each after other came in statelike dance,
And nimble capping on the purple wave,
With little foretops did the welkin brave.

Two large pieces fell into the main and fore-tops of the Swifsure, without injuring any person.—
Southey, Life of Nelson, ch. iv.

Foretime. v. a. Time beforehand. This may, of course, apply to musical instruments generally. It is best known, however, as a special coinage in the way of a pun in Dryden's caricature of a verse attributed to Cicero:

'O, fortunatam natam me Consule Romam.'

Thus rendered:

Fortune foretold the dying notes of Rome,
Till I, thy Consul sole, consoled thy doom.

Translation of the Tenth Satire of Juvenal.

Foreward. s. [see Forward, adv.] Van; front.

They that marched in the foreward were all mighty men.—Macbeth, ix. 11.

Forewarn. v. a. Admonish; caution; give notice beforehand; inform previously of any event.

I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell.—Luke, xii. 8.

Young Chorusus, who by love was led
To win renown and fair Cassandra's bed,
Hath lately brought his troops to Priam's aid;
Forewarn'd in vain by the prophetic maid.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Forewarning. verbal adv. Admonition, caution, or warning, beforehand.

And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
Rejected my forewarning, and disdain'd
Not to be trusted.—Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 374.

Forewind. v. a. Go before. Rare.

And now they be to heaven forewent.

Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, July.

Forewind. s. Favourable wind; wind that blows a vessel right forward in its course.

Long sail'd I on smooth seas, by forewinds borne.
Sandys, Paraphrase of the Book of Job, p. 25.

Forewish. v. a. Wish or desire beforehand. Rare.

The wiser sort ceased not to do what in them lay, to procure that the good commonly forewish might in time come to effect.—Kueller, History of the Turks.

Forewoman. s. Female manager; female president.

Her forewoman was a professed Platonist, that had spent much of her time in exhorting the sex to set a just value upon their persons, and to make the men know themselves.—Taylor, no. 253. (Oral MS.)

The jury, however, found him guilty, and represented by their forewoman that such discoveries were apt to smother the imagination; and that by a concentration of ideas, the word linen implied many things that were not proper to be stirred up in the mind of a woman who was of the prosecutor's quality, and therefore gave it as their verdict that the linendraper should lose his tongue.—Ibid., no. 259.
(Oral MS.)

Forfalt. v. a. [from Fault, and hence a different word from Forfeit.] Fine. Rare
(For example see next entry.)

Forfalsure. s. Fine.

In the same Parliament Sir William Crockett was also forfalsured for divers causes. . . This for-falsure was concluded. &c.—Holme's.

Forfeit. s. [N.F. forfuit, pass. part. of forsuaire; Lat. forfacio and forisfacio.]

1. Fine; mulct; penalty; escheat.

Thy slanders I forgive, and therewithal
Remit thy other forfaits.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, v. 1

The execution leaves to high disposal,
And let another hand, not thine, exact
Thy penal forfeit from thyself.

Milton, Samson Agonistes, 506.

2. Person liable to punishment or penalty

Obsolete.

Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 2.

3. (In plural). Something deposited, and to be redeemed by a jocular fine, whence the game of forfeits.

None, happily, cards adopt;
Or if to forfeits they thus sport confine,
The happy folk, adjacent to the fire,
Their stations take; excepting one alone
(Sometimes the social mistress of the house)
Who sits within the centre of the room,
To cry the pawns.

E. J. Thorne, Christmas, v. 280: 1795.

4. (In plural). Table of penalties.

Laws for all faults,
But laws so countenanced that the strong statutes
Stand like the forfeits of a barber's shop,
As much in mock as mark.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, v. 1.
Kenrick . . . produced the following as a specimen of such rules, professing to have copied them near Northallerton, in Yorkshire:—

Rules for acutely Behaviour.
First come, first serve—then come not late,
And when arrived keep your state;
For he who from three rules shall swerve,
Must pay the forfeits—no observe.

Who enters here with boots and spurs
Must keep his nook; for if he stir,
And gives with armed lust a kick,
A pint he pays for every prick.

Who rudely takes another's turn
A forfeit may may manners learn.

And he who can or will not pay,
Shall hence be sent half-trimmed away,
For, will he, will he, if in fault
He forfeit must in meal or malt;
But mark, who is already in drink,
The canikin must never clink.

(Nares by H. and W.)

Forfeit. v. a. Lose anything as forfeit.

If then a man, on light conditions, gain
A great estate to him and his for ever;
If willfully he forfeit it again,
Who doth become his heir, or blame the giver?

Sir J. Davies, On the Immortality of the Soul.
Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness.—Boyle.

A father cannot alien the power he has over his child: he may perjure to some degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer it.—Locke.

Forfeit. adj. Forfeited.

All the souls that are were forfeit once;
And he that might the vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 2.
Straight all his hopes exhaust'd in empty sunde,
And his long toils were forfeit for a look.

Dryden, Translation of Virgil.
Methought with wondrous ease he swallow'd down
His forfeit honour to betray the town.

Id., Indian Emperor.

Forfeitable. adj. Capable of being, or liable to be, forfeited.

To the trackless deep they trust
Their forfeitable cargo.—Crowe, Lewin's Hill.

Forfeiter. s. One who forfeits anything.

And men in dangerous bonds pray not alike;
Though forfeiter you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, iii. 2.

Forfeiture. s.

1. Act of forfeiting.

His father's care,
That for the want of issue took him home, (Though with the forfeiture of his own fame,
Will look upon his safety.

Benjamin and Fletcher, Spanish Curate.
The Court is as well a Chancery to save and debar forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if imperial forfeitures should go for good titles.—Bacon, Considerations touching a War with Spain.

2. Thing forfeited.

Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercise of Holy Living.

The next branch of the king's ordinary revenue consists in forfeitures of lands and goods for offences; bona confidentia, as they are called by the civilians, because they belong to the fiscus or imperial treasury; or, as our lawyers term them, forfeitures; that is such wherein the property is gone away or departed from the owner.—*Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, b. 1.
ch. vill. 10.*

It was easy to demand impossible things, to assume the breach of the stipulations on which the count had received absolution, and to claim the forfeiture.—*Nilman, History of Latin Christianity,
b. ix. ch. viii.*

Forge. v. n. [Provincial German, futscher—shove on.] In Navigation. See extract: (with on or over).

To forge over is to force a ship violently over a shoal, by the effort of a great quantity of sail.—Faiconer, Marine Dictionary. (Hurley).

Forge. s. [Fr. forger; Italian, forgia; L. Lat.
forgia and forqua.]

1. In Metallurgy. See third extract.

In other part stood one who at the forge
Labouring, two massy chods of iron and brass
Hud mottled.—Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 665.
The over-labour'd Cyclop from his task retires,
The Eolian forge exhausted of its fires.

Pope, Translation of the First Book of the Thebaid of Statius.

Forge is the name either of the furnace where wrought iron is hammered and fashioned with the aid of heat, or the great workshop where iron is made malleable. The former is called a smith's forge, the latter a shingling-mill.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

2. Place, generally, where anything is made or shaped.

From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Forging.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and acquiescent and obedient to the stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, and moulded.—Bacon.

Forge. v. a.

1. Form by the hammer; work into shape.

The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg'd of gold,
Must needs have golden furniture.

Chapman, Translation of the Iliad.
These are still but sparks of odium and worm,
which fly from the vulgar anvils and hammers;
which commonly both overheat, and overblow;
what they undertake to forge or reform.—*Jerome
Taylor, Artificial Handicrafts, p. 102.*

If the substantial subject be well forged out, we need not examine the marks which irregularly fly from it.—Sir T. Browne, Christian Morals, li. 2.

2. Make in general; contrive; turn out.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name 't' th' fire
Of burning Rome.—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 1.

His heart's his mouth;
What his breast forgets, that his tongue must vent

Those names that the schools forgot, and put into the mouths of scholars, could not admitance into common use, or within the reach of public approbation.—Locke.

3. Falsely attribute.

We I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
For my more having would be lost as sin;
To make me huger more, that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1.

Forger. s. One who forges.

1. As a maker in general.

Tough holly and smooth birch must altogether
burn;
What should the builder serve supplies the forger's turn.—Drayton, Polyolbion, song 17.

2. As a falsifier.

As in stealing, if there were no revolvers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer forgers of libels.—Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.

Forgery. s.

1. Crime of falsification.

A forger, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but less inflicted on adequate penalty for doing the same thing in paint, though books sold under a false name are so many forgeries.—Swift.

Forgery, or the crime of falsification, is an offence which was punished by the civil law with deprivation or banishment, and sometimes with death. It may, with us, be defined (at common law) to be 'the fraudulent making or alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's right; for which the offender may suffer fine, imprisonment, and pillory.
And also by a variety of statutes, a more severe punishment is inflicted on the offender in many particular cases, which are so multiplied of late as almost to become general.—Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, b. iv. ch. xvii. 5.

2. Smith's work.

[He] ran on embattled armies clad in iron:
And, weaponless himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery

Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybeate super'd steel, and fruck of mail
Admirable proof. Milton, Samson Agonistes, 129.

Forget. r. a. preterite forgot; past part. forgotten, or forgot.

1. Lose memory of anything; let go from the remembrance.

When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iii. 2.
Forget not thy friend in thy relics.—Becketianus, xxvii. d.

No sooner was our deliverance completed, but we forgot our danger and our duty.—Bishop Atterbury.

A fox their passion, but their prize a not,
Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot.

Pope, Moral Essays, ii.

2. Not attend to anything; neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may forget: yet will I not forget thee.—Isaiah,
lix. 4.

If we might forget ourselves, or forget God; if we might disregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in anything, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing, at every time, and every place.—Locke.

Forget-me-not. s. Native plant so called,
Myosotis palustris.

[The extract from Dr. A. Prior, which, lengthy as it is, gives only a part of his criticism, should be read first. Except so far as he cautions the reader against interpreting too liberally the words, 'all other botanical authors,' the editor takes no important exceptions to the doctrine laid down in it. That no botanical author, till within the last forty years, applies the name Forget-me-not to the Myosotis palustris, is only correct in respect to English authors, and in respect to the word itself in the English form. In the edition of Neumich, of 1773, to go no further, the German Vergissmeinnicht, the Danish forglemmig, and the Russian nezabudnyy (all with the same meaning as the English combination) are to be found, and in each case it is the Myosotis to which they are attached. On the other hand, the term is given nowhere else. The English for the Myosotis of Neumich is the old term, Monse-eur scorpion-grass; and the English for both the Ajuga Chamæpitys and the Veronica Chamædrys is not Forget-me-not. In other words, the combination is ignored altogether as an English name. Nor does this arise from carelessness. Over and above the ordinary entries, Neumich adds a note upon the beauty of the plant and the popularity of the name. He evidently thinks it so truly and decidedly the proper appellation for the Myosotis, as not to recognize it with any other sense; for he certainly knew how Gerard named the Ajuga, even if he were ignorant of what certain other English herbalists called the Veronica. Hence, if the true application of the word be to this last-named flower, the Danish, German, and Russian synonyms are exceptional. As exceptions, however, they are important. Neither do they seem to be of recent origin. Add to this that the sentimental element appears in some of its other synonyms: 'Je länger je lieber' (the longer the dearer) in German; Jonsfrids-følge and Stolig Henrik in Norse. The same languages also illustrate the unsteadiness of import, viz. to the Euphrasia (Eye-bright), and the Anagallis aquatica (Veronica Anagallis).

Upon the whole, however, the main facts, over and above priority of application, point towards the Veronica. A flower with proper name, and that a female one, lends itself to sentiment better than a flower with a common one. Flowers, too, that characterize the month of May do the same. Thirdly, the different applications are most easily deduced by taking the Veronica as the starting point—the Veronica Chamædrys. As the latter, it might extend to the Tenacium—Tenacium Chamædrys, and Tenacium Scordonia—Germander: as the former, to the Veronica Anagallis and (see below) Beccabunga. See Germander, Veronica.

The editor, who knew the Forget-me-not some forty-five years back, knew it only as a Veronica, and thinks such is the case with his contemporaries in general. The story to the effect that a young lady wanted a plant growing on the edge of an island, that her lover swam for it, and that he sunk just as, giving her the flowers, he uttered the sentiment, is given by Mills in his 'History of Chivalry'; not, however, in the main text, but in a note, and as a communication from Dr. A. Thompson, but without any special evidence that the flower thus immortalized was the Myosotis. The Brooklime (suggested by the Anagallis aquatica, and a Veronica) may have been the flower. At any rate, the English application of the word to the Myosotis is both recent in origin, and doubtful in respect to propriety.]

Forget-me-not (is) a name that for about forty years has been assigned to a well-known blue flower, a Myosotis, but which for more than two hundred years, had in this country, France, and the Netherlands, been given to a very different plant, the ground-pine, Ajuga Chamæpitys, on account, as was said, of the nauseous taste that it leaves in the mouth. It is to this plant exclusively that we find it assigned by Lyte, Lobel, Gerard, Parkinson, and all our herbalists from the middle of the fifteenth century; and by all other botanical authors who mention the plant, inclusive of Gray in his 'Natural Arrangement,' published in 1821, until it was transferred, with the pretty story of a dissolute lover, to that which now bears it. This had always been called in English Monse-eur scorpion-grass, in German, Fuchel, . . . gives the name Veronica to the Veronica Chamædrys. . . In Denmark, a corresponding name, Forgetmig is given to the Veronica Chamædrys. At the same time, it would seem that in some parts of Germany the Myosotis palustris was known as the Echium amicum, and Veronica nemus, as at the present day. This latter seems to be the plant to which the name rightfully belongs, and to which it was given in reference to the blossoms falling off and flying away. —Speedwell, from its blossoms falling off and flying away as soon as gathered: 'Speedwell' being equivalent to 'Forwell?' 'Good-bye?' a common form of valediction in old time, and synonymous with 'Forget-me-not,' a name that appears to have been first given to this plant. Dr. J. Prior.

The Veronica is probably meant in the following extract.

And now these vivid hours are gone,
Like mine own life to me thou art,
Where Past and Present, wound in one
Do make a garland for the heart:
So sing that other song I made,
Half-sung of with my happy lot,
The day, when in the chestnut shade
I found the blue forget-me-not.

Tennyson, The Miller's Daughter.

Forgetful. adj.

1. Not retaining anything in the memory.

But did'st thou tell me so?
I am forgetful.—Benjamin and Fletcher, Philaster.

2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

Let such belink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,
That in our proper motion we were
Up to our native seat. Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 73.
But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their punishments and penance last,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood,
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours, and their irksome years.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers.—Hebrews,

Have you not been enough to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,
Makes me forgetful?

Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, iv. 3.

1. In fact, a real interest have,
Which to my own advantage I would save;
And with the usual courtier's trick, intend
To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

Forgetfulness. s. Attribute suggested by Forgetful.

1. Oblivion; cessation of remembrance; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frightened thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness?

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iii. 1.

All birds and beasts he hush'd; sleep steals away
Thy wild desires of men and toils of day;
And hushes, descending through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care.

Pope, Translation of the First Book of the Thebaid of Statius.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with forgetfulness of her duty.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Forgetive. adj. Inventive. Rare.

Good sherris sack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish, dull vapours, makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble dumps, which, delivered to the voice, becomes excellent wit.
—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 3.

Forgetter. s. One who forgets.

I think her

A strange forgetter of herself.
—Benjamin and Fletcher, The Captain.

Forgetting. verbal abs. Inattention; forgetfulness.

I am not willing to discover the forgettings of reverend men.—Milton, Doctrine and Discipline of Theology.

Forgettingly. adv. In a forgetful manner.

I fear I have (forgettingly) transgress'd against the dignity of the court.—B. Jonson, Volpone.

Forging. verbal abs. Manufacture at a forgo.

In England there are employed for the forging and drawing out of the iron, cast-iron hammers of great weight, and cylinders of different dimensions, for beating out the balls or extending the iron into bars, as also powerful saws. See, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines, Iron.

Forgive. v. a.

1. Pardon a person; not punish.

I do beseech you grant for clarity;
If ever any notice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.—
Sir Thomas Love, I beseech you forgive you,
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. ii. 1.

Shoely provok't, she easily forgets. Prior.

2. Pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity.—Isaiah, xxxiii. 24.

Could alter high deers, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be harder heard,
That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty and influence not forgive,
To me committed, and by me exposed.

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 922.

3. Remit; not exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and for-gave him the debt. —Mt- thews, xviii. 27.

Forgiveness. s.

1. Act of forgiving.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and for-giveness. —Daniel, ix. 9.

2. Pardon of an offender.

Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee.—Apostolical
Prayer of Manasse.
Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's death come not upon thee—
Nor time on me. —Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 2.
Forgiveness to the injured does belong;
But they never pardon who commit the wrong.

Joyden.

3. Pardon of an offence.

God has certainly promised forgiveness of sin to every one who repents.—South, Sermons.

4. Tenderness; willingness to pardon.

Here are introduced more heroic principles of meekness, forgiveness, bounty, and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent.
—Bishop Sprat.
Mercy above did hourly plead
For her resemblance here below;
And mild forgiveness intercede
To stop the coming blow.

Dryden.

Forgiving. part. adj. Having the character of one who readily forgives; placable.

Parable and forgiving, he was, nevertheless, cold and unympathizing. — Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Sir W. Temple.

Forgo. v. a. Quit; give up; resign.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remained so still, he having already neither forgiven nor forgone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. — Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to pre-fer one good thing before another: to leave one for another's sake, to forgo manner for the attainment of higher degrees. — Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved painful or unseasonable at another; and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should forgo a present enjoyment. — Locks.

Forismatic. adj. Foreign; alien. Rare.

Salutating ourselves principally to forismatic potentates and powers. — Bishop Barret, History of the Reformation: Narrative of the Monks of the Benedictines, 30 Hen. VIII.

Fork. v. n. Become tired. Rare.

For too hasty forking of his reigns, Sleeping in bed this wretched wretch hath slain. — Mirror for Magistrates (Rich.).

Forisfamiliar. v. a. Put a son in possession of land in the lifetime of a father.

Preached the eldest son had not received a provision in lands from his father, as the royal law would roll it, had not been forisfamiliar in his lifetime. — Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England.

Forjudge. v. a. This is the true spelling of what is spelt forejudge, the French being forjurer. So far as it means forjudge, it does so in a secondary sense. See Judge.

Fork. s. [Lat. furca.]

1. Instrument divided at the end into two (less properly into more than two) points or prongs.

a. Larger, used in husbandry.

At midsummer down with the hrombles and hromks.

And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes. — Tusser, Hundred Points of good Husbandry. They had a file for the forks, and for the coulter, and for the forks. — 1 Samw'l, xiii. 21.

b. Smaller, used at table.

Upon my projects of the forks. — Fucka! what be they? — The laudable use of forks, brought into custom here as they are in Italy.

H. Jonson, Decit is an Ass.

Then you must learn the use And handling of your silver fork at meals; The metal of your glass; these are main matters With your Italian. — Id., Volpone, iv. 1.

I observed a custom in all those Italian cities and towns through the whole I passed, that is not used in any other country that I saw in my travels. . . . The Italian, and also most strangers that are contentant in Italy, do always at their meals use a little fork when they eat their meats. For while with their knife, which they hold in one hand, they cut their meat out of the dish, they fasten their fork, which they hold in the other hand, upon the same dish, so that whosoever be he that, sitting in the company of any others at meal, should inadvertently touch the dish of meat with his fingers from which all at the table do eat, he will give occasion of offence unto the company, as having transgressed the laws of good manners, in so much that, for his error, he shall be at the least brow-beaten if not reproached in words. . . . I myself thought good to imitate the Italian fashion by this forked cutting of meat, not only while I was in Italy, but also in Germany, and sometimes in England since I came home; being once quipped for that frequent use of my fork, by a certain learned gentleman, a familiar friend of mine, Mr. Laurence Whitaker, who in his merry humour doubted not to call me at table forkester only for using a fork at table, but for no other cause. — Cornwall, Cradition.

I dine with forks that have but two prongs. — Swift.

2. Barb of an arrow.

The bow is bent and drawn: make from the shaft. — Let it fall rather, though the fork invade The region of my heart. — Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 1.

3. Point.

Several are amazed at the wisdom of the ancients that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, burning, and melting. — Addison, Dialogues on the Usefulness of ancient Medals.

4. Divarication in general, i.e. of a road or a river: (in the extract applied to the branches of a tree).

The true squirrels, unlike those of the sub-genus Tamias, live almost entirely in trees, and build their nests on a fork of the branches. — Seebohm, Natural History and Classification of Quadrupeds.

5. Gibelet. Obsolete, Lutinism.

They had run through all punishments, and just 'scaped the fork. — Butler, Remains, li. 165.

6. Dilemma; alternatives; choice between two evils.

Archbishop Marston is famous for the dilemma which he proposed to parliament and others whom he solicited to contribute. He told those who lived handsomely that their civility was manifest by their rate of expensiveness. These, again, whose course of living was less sumptuous, must have grown rich by their economy. Either class could well afford assistance to their sovereign. This piece of logic, unanswerable in the mouth of a privy councillor, acquired the name of Marston's fork. Henry doubtless rejected great profit from these ineffectual exactions, mis-called benevolences. — Hallam, History of England, vol. i. ch. i.

Fork. v. n. Shout into blades, as corn does out of the ground.

The corn beginneth to fork. — Mortimer, Householdry.

Fork. v. a. Slang.

1. Steal.

2. Hand; deliver: (as, 'Fork out the money').

Forked. adj.

1. Opening, or splitting, like a fork, into two or more parts.

Sailed he, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife. — Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, iii. 2.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish, A forked mountain, or high promontory.

Id., Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 12.

Come, shall we go and kill our venison? And yet it looks me the poor dappled fools Should in their confines, with forked heads, Have their round hanches par'd.

Id., As you like it, ii. 1.

He would have spoke: But hies for hies return'd with forked tongue

To forked tongue. — Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 517.

Ye dragons, whose contagious breath Peaches the dark retreats of death,

Change your fierce hissing into joyful song, And praise your Maker with your forked tongue. — Roscommon.

2. Zigzag: (as 'forked lightning').

3. Having two or more meanings.

I oft have heard him say, how he admird Men of your larger profession, that could speak To every cause, and things were contraries, Till they were horse again, yet all be law; That with most quick agility, could turn, And re-turn a make knots and undo them: Give forked count. — H. Jonson, Volpone.

Forkhead. s. Point of an arrow.

It soizeth, no way enter might: But back rebounding, left the forked keen. Knows it fled away, and might no where be seen. — Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Forky. adj. Forked; furcated; opening into two parts.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take The crooked tadpole and speckled snake; Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey, And with their forky tongue and pointless sting shall play. — Pope, Maccab.

Forl. v. n. [? Forlino.] Overlie.

Knit with a golden baidrick, which forl Alward her snowy breast, and did divide Her dainty paps, which like young fruit in May, New little can to swell; and being tuck Through her thin weed their paps only signifi'd. — Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Forlone. See Farlorn.

Such as Diana by the sandy shore Of swift Ruracos, or on Cythus's gulf Where all the nymphs have her forlone.

That wretched world be 'mad for to labour, And mortal life 'gan kild, as thing forlone. — Ibid.

Thus fell the trees, with noise the desert roar; The branks their ravens, the birds their nests forlone.

Id., King Lear.

Forlorn. adj. [A.S. forloren, pass. part. of forleasan; geceoren = chosen, and geforren = frozen, illustrate a similar change. The forlone of the preceding extracts, except where used as a verb, has arisen out of a confusion with this form.]

1. Deserted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for that they want to learn; Of fortune and of hope at once forlorn.

Spenser, Midder Hobbes's Tale.

Tell me, good Robinol, what pangs they greet? What! hath some wolf thy tender limbs yorn? Or is thy language broke that sounds so sweet? Or art thou of thy loved lady forlorn?

Id., Shepherds' Calendar.

In every place we heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing showed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as if another lost and forlorn. — Kudlos, History of the Turks.

Their way Lies through the perple'd paths of this drear wood: The madding horror of whose shady bowers Threats the forlorn and wandering passenger.

Milton, Comus, 30.

My only strength and stay! forlorn of thee, Whether shall I betake me, where shall I?

Id., Paradise Lost, x. 921.

The good old man, forlorn of human aid, For vengeance to his heavenly patron pray'd.

Dryden, Translation of the First Book of the Iliad.

2. Taken away.

What is become of great Aemites' son? Or where hath he laid up his mortal blade, That hath so many lonely conquests won? Shall his force forlorn, and all his glory gone?

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

3. Small; despicable. Lutrinism.

He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible. — Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, iii. 2.

Used substantively.

Henry

Is of a king become a banish'd man, And forc'd to live in Scotland forlorn.

Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part III, iii. 1.

Advice, whether I shall, or ought to be, premitt'd upon by the imperfections of my own sex, to give way to the importunities of yours. I assure you I am surrounded with both, though at present I forlorn. — Teller, no 210.

Forlorn hope. Soldiers who are sent, first to the attack, and are therefore doomed or expected to perish. See Hope.

Forlornness. s. Attribute suggested by Forlorn.

Men abashed God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they conquered the forlornness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. — Bayle.

Our natives without a foreign decree, without an importation of sin, could never have been guilty to such a forlornness, as could never have designed such contradictions to religion and nature. — Manasseh, Diavolus, x. 154.

Form. s. [Lat. forma; forma = I form; formatus = formed; formatio, -onis.]

1. External appearance of anything; representation; shape.

It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. — Job, iv. 16.

2. In Physics, as opposed to Matter.

Matter, as wise philosophers say,

Cannot without a form subsist;

And form, say I as well as they,

Must fail, if matter brings no gist. — Swift.

The antithesis has been at different times presented by means of various images. One of the most ancient of these, and one which is still very instructive, is that which speaks of sensations as the matter, and ideas as the form, of our knowledge; just as ivory is the matter, and a cube the form, of a die. . . . Matter and form cannot by any means be detached from each other. All matter must have some form; all form must be the form of some material thing. If the ivory be not a cube, it must have spherical or some other form. And the cube, in order to be a cube, must be of some material; — if not of ivory, of wood, or stone, for instance. A figure without matter is merely a geometrical conception; — a modification of the idea of space. Matter without figure is a mere abstract term; — a supposed union of certain sensible qualities which, so insulated from others, cannot exist. Yet the distinction of matter and form is real; and, as a subject of contemplation, clear and plain. Nor is the distinction by any means useless. The speculations which treat of the two subjects, matter and figure, are very different. Matter is the subject of the sciences of mechanics and chemistry; figure, of geometry. These two classes of sciences have quite different sets of principles. If we refuse to consider the matter and the form of bodies separately, because we cannot exhibit matter and form separately, we shut the door to all philosophy on such subjects. . . . The word figure, according to its Latin etymology, at first implied this process by which matter is invested with form. Thus Virgil speaks of the thunderbolt as informis; by the hands of Brontea, and Scropea, and Pyramon. And Dryden introduces the word in another place: — Let others better mould the running mass Of metals, or inform the breathing brass.

Even in this use of the word, the form is something superior to the brute manner, and gives it a new significance and purpose. And hence the term is again used to denote the effect produced by an intelligent principle of a still higher kind:—

'He informed

This ill-shaped body with a daring soul.
And finally even the soul itself, in its original condition, is formed upon as matter, when viewed with reference to education and knowledge, by which it is afterwards moulded; and hence these are, in our language, termed information. If we confine ourselves to the first of these three uses of the term, we may correct the erroneous opinion of which we have just been speaking, and retain the metaphor by which it is expressed, by saying that ideas are not transformed, but informed sensations.—W. Russell.

3. Formula.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms.—Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions on the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship.—Addison.

4. ? Shape; ? beauty: (in which latter case it is a Latinism from formu = beauty, a secondary meaning).

He hath no form nor comeliness.—Isaiah, liii. 2.

5. Regularity; method; order.

What he spoke, though it look'd form a little, Was not like madness.—Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 1.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show. (as opposed to matter or substance).

Then those whom form of laws Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause.—Dryden.

Hence 'for form'—nominally as opposed to really.

7. Ceremony; external rites.

A long table, and a square table, or seat about the walls were things of form, but were things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors' opinions that sit lower.—Bacon, Essays.

How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?

Is it a compliment of form, or love?

A. Philips, Disinterested Mother.

8. Stated method; established practice; ritual and prescribed mode.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout all the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

9. Long suit.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park.—Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, I. 1.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back.—Watts, Logic.

10. As applied to horses. See extract.

But what is the recognised form of the racehorse? I must here explain to the tyro that the word form is used with two very different significations by racing men. . . . In the common interpretation it is synonymous with shape, and merely denotes the mechanical development of the individual. But, in the language of the turf, when we say that a horse is in form, we intend to convey to our hearers that he is in high condition and fit to run. Again, the word is used in still another sense, for we speak of a horse's form when we wish to allude to his powers on the turf, as compared with other well-known animals. Thus, if it be supposed that two three-year-olds, carrying the same weight, would run a mile and a half, and come in abreast, it is said that the form of the one is equal to that of the other.—Watts, The Horse, ch. vi.

11. Class; rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form.—Dryden, Translation of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

12. Lair of a hare.

Geyfe a gentyl name wyl have anny game,
And fynd me the forme where I lyte,
For drede of losynge of his name,
I wot wele he wyle not use hyte,
For an acurid bred he wyle me se,
Or he wyl let his hounde rene.—Complaint of the Hare: Poem of the Fifteenth Century.

Now for a clod like hare in form thy peer;
Now bolt and ender squirrels leap do move;
Now the ambitious lack, with mirror clear,
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love.—Sir P. Sidney.

Have you observ'd a sitting hare,

Listening and fearful of the storm

Of horns and hoards, clap back her ear,

Afraid to keep or leave her form?

Prior.

13. Idea; essence; and thence (with confusion between causes and conditions, matters of time on one side and space on the other) force. Nevertheless, this is Bacon's use of the word.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of arguments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form doth adjoin itself.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, It had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The expectation of arriving at ultimate causes or essences continued long after the speculation of the ancients had been abandoned, and continued even to the present day to be a very general notion of the objects to be ultimately attained by physical science. Francis Bacon, the great remodeler of science, entertained this notion, and thought that, by experimentally testing natural phenomena, we should be enabled to trace them to certain primary causes or causes whence the various phenomena flow. These he speaks of under the scholastic name of formae—a term derived from the ancient philosophy, but differently applied. He appears to have understood by form the essence of quality; that in which, abstracting everything extraneous, a given quality consists, or that which, superimposed on any body, would give it its peculiar quality; thus the form of transparency is that which constitutes transparency, or that by which, when discovered, transparency could be produced or superinduced. To take a specific example of what I may term the synthetic application of his philosophy:—In gold there meet together yellowness, gravity, malleability, fixedness in the fire, a determinate way of solution, which are the simple natures in gold; for he who understands form and the manner of superinducing this yellowness, gravity, ductility, fixedness, tenacity of fusion, solution, &c., with their particular degrees and proportions, will consider how to join them together in some body, so that a transmutation into gold shall follow.—Groves, Correlation of Physical Forces, p. 7.

As it is the form which proximately and obviously makes the thing what it is (although there can be no form without matter), the word form came to be interchanged with essence and nature. . . . It is . . . a law or an idea, which are the same thing seen from opposite points. . . . Lava, heated metal, boiling water, the rays of the sun, all rank under one common form (that is law) of heat; namely, by which is meant that they, all and each, contain whatever is essential to heat. . . . The second meaning of the word form (but that part of any object of which which it ranks under a given law. Every new object presented to the mind is referred to different laws, called forms, by virtue of various qualities in itself, each of which is termed metonymically, and with respect to the law under which it is the means of evoking the representation, its form. . . . Writers of this school give yet a third sense to the word form; as it denotes the law, so by an easy transition it stands for the class of cases brought together and united by the law. Thus, to speak of the form of an animal, might mean, first, the law or definition of animal in general; second, the part of any given animal by which it comes under the law and what it is; and last, the class of animals brought together under the law.—Archbishop Thompson, An Outline of the necessary Laws of Thought, §§ 11—14.

14. In Philosophy. See Formal. 8.

Natural philosophy is speculative or practical; the former divided into physics and metaphysics. . . . Metaphysics. . . . had for its proper object the investigation of formae. . . . The word form itself, being borrowed from the old philosophy, is not immediately intelligible to every reader. . . . Form (Natura Naturans, as it was barbarously called) is the general law or condition of existence, in any substance or quality (Natura Naturata), which is wherever its form is. The conditions of a mathematical figure, prescribed in its definition, might in this sense be called its form, if it did not seem to be Lord Bacon's intention to confine the word to the laws of particular sensible existences. In modern philosophy, it might be defined to be that particular combination of forces which impresses a certain modification of matter subjected to their influence. To a knowledge of such forms or laws of essence and existence, at least in a certain degree, it might be possible, in Bacon's sanguine estimation of his own logic, for man to attain.—Hallam, Introduction to the Literature of Europe in the Fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth Centuries, pt. iii. ch. iii. § 80.

Form. v. a.

1. Make out of materials.
God formed man of the dust of the ground.—Genesis, ii. 7.

2. Model to a particular shape or state.

Creature in whom excell'd
Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet.—Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 387.

3. Modify; scheme; plan.

Lucretius taught him not to form his hero, to give him pety or valour for his manners.—Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Dedication to the Æneid.

4. In Strategics. Arrange troops.

When the guns move to the front for action, other troops should not be formed behind them.—Macdonnell, Modern Warfare as influenced by modern Artillery, ch. vi.

5. Settle; adjust.

Our differences with Romanists are thus formed into an interest, and become the design, not of single persons, but of corporations and successions.—Dr. H. More, Essay of Christian Piety.

6. Model by education or institution.

Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not:
Thus form'd for speed he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Æthian arrow far behind.—Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

7. Place; fix in (a hare's) form.

Where the hearth was warm'd with winter's fasting fires,
The melancholy hare is form'd in brakes and briars.—Drayton, Polygraphon, song 2.

Form. v. n. In Strategics. Arrange itself.

When guns are posted in front of a line of infantry, the infantry companies which extend behind them should form in column on the other companies of the battalion to the rear of the right and left flanks of the guns.—Macdonnell, Modern Warfare as influenced by modern Artillery, ch. vi.

Formal. adj.

1. Cereemonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectionation.

The Justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part.—Shakespeare, As you like it, ii. 7.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if occasion serve.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And he that on their changes looks,
Would think them govern'd by our books.—Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most.—Dryden, Aurengzeib.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains.—Pope.

6. Having the power of making anything what it is; constitutive; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice: the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is distinguished.—Hobbes, Elements of Speech.

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but while he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it; whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence, and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God.—Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristic; regular; proper.

Thou shouldst come like a fury cover'd with makes,
Not like a formal man.—Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 5.

I will not let him stir,
Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again.—Id., Comedy of Errors, v. 1.

2. In Philosophy. Connected with conditions rather than causes. Not deduced from Form 12.

Space, time, and number, may be conceived as forms by which the knowledge derived from our sensations is moulded, and which are independent of the differences in the matter of our knowledge, arising from the sensations themselves. Hence the sciences which have these forms for their subject may be termed formal sciences. In this point of view, they are distinguished from sciences in which, besides these mere formal laws by which appearances are corrected, we endeavour to apply to the phenomena the idea of cause, or some of the other ideas which penetrate further into the principles of nature. We have thus, in the history, distinguished formal astronomy and formal optics from physical astronomy and physical optics.—Whewell.

Formalism. v. a. Character of formality; recognition and adoption of formalisms.

They have in the exchequer brought rigor and formalism to their ultimate perfection.—Barke, Works, li. 225. (Ord MS.)

So they poroate and speculate; and roll on the friends of law, when the question is not law or no-law, but life or no-life. Pedants of the revolution, if not demits of it! Their formalism is great; great also is their egoism.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. III. li. ch. iv.

Formalist. s.

1. One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not; stickler for forms or formalism.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a martyr to persons of judgement, to see what shifts formalists have, and what perspectives to make superfluous to seem a body that hath dyeth and bulk.—Bacon.

A grave, staunch, skillfully unimpaired face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a dy formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety.—South, Sermons.

2. Advocate for form in disputations.

It may be objected by certain formalists, that we can prove nothing truly without proving it in form.—Lord Shaftesbury.

The English and Dutch loudly applauded William's prudence and decision. He had cut the knot which the Congress had untied and tangled. He had done in a month what all the formalists and pedants assembled at the Hague would not have done in ten years.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xxi.

Formality. s.

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Without consulting your minister, call together your whole council. Let it appear to the public that you can determine and act for yourself. Come forward to your people. Lay aside the wretched formalities of a king, and speak to your subjects with the spirit of a man, and in the language of a gentleman. Tell them you have been fatally deceived.—Letters of Junius, p. 51.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.

If men forswear the threads and bonds they draw, Though sign'd with all formality of law; And though the signing and the seal proclaim The barefaced perjury, and fix the shame.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all set down in their formality, as the Gauls did the Roman senators.—Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity.—Glanville, Serpents Scientific.

4. Essence; quality by which anything is what it is.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pound to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

Formalise. v. a. Model; modify.

The same spirit which animated the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, dith so formalise, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body.—Hooker.

Formalise. v. n. Affect formality; be fond of ceremony.

Our gallants can formalise in other words.—Miles Golden Remains, p. 84.

They turned their poor cottages into stately palaces, their true fasting into formalizing and partial abstinence.—Miles, Golden Remains, p. 111.

He formalized so long upon this, that Ireland remained still unsupplied.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Great Rebellion, li. vi.

There were many particulars in it, which the officers on the king's side, who had no mind to a cessation, formalized much upon.—Id., Life, i. 118.

Formally. adv. In a formal manner.

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies, or rites.

Formally, according to our law.

Depose him. Shakespeare, Richard II. li. 1. 3. The Church of Rome, which formally prohibits the reading of all heretical books, places the writings of the Reformers in the 'Index Librorum Prohibitorum.' Every Roman Catholic who reads a book included in this list, incurs the penalty of excommunication 'in toto sententia.' The Protestant churches, in like manner, discourage the reading of heterodox and erroneous writings; but they have never gone the length of publishing an index of condemned books.—Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, ch. ix.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of honours.—Collier, Essay on Pride.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorised guides of the church, and the rest of the people.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it.—South, Sermons.

The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows.—Bishop Smeadridge.

Formation. s.

1. Act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of volcanoes, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors.—Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus.—Aristotle.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them.—Watts, On the Mind.

With this view, as much meaning as possible should be thrown into the formation of the word itself; the aids of derivation and analogy being made available to keep alive a consciousness of all that is signified by it. In this respect those languages have an immense advantage which form their compounds and derivatives from native roots, like the German, and not from those of a foreign or a dead language, as is so much the case with English, French, and Italian; and the best are those which form them according to fixed analogies, corresponding to the relations between the ideas to be expressed. All languages do this more or less, but especially among modern European languages, the German; while even that is inferior to the Greek, in which the relation between the meaning of a derivative word and that of its primitive, is in general clearly marked by its mode of formation; except in the case of words compounded with prepositions, which it must be acknowledged, are often, in both those languages, extremely anomalous.—J. S. Mill, System of Logic.

2. In Geology. See extract.

If we drain a lake which has been fed by a small stream, we frequently find at the bottom a series of deposits disposed with considerable regularity, one above the other. . . . Now if a second pit be dug in the same continuous line, the formation, at some distance from the first, nearly the same series of beds is commonly met with, yet with some variations. . . . The term formation, which I have used in the above explanation, expresses in geology any assemblage of rocks which have some character in common whether of origin, age, or composition. Thus we speak of stratified and unstratified, freshwater and marine, aqueous and volcanic, ancient and modern, metalliferous and non-metalliferous formations.—Sir C. Lyell, Manual of Elementary Geology, ch. i.

Formative. adj. Having the power of giving form; plastic.

As we have established our assertion of the seminal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the nearest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil.—Beattie, Sermons.

There is not merely a juxtaposition of materials, by which the new proportion contains all that its component parts contained; but also a formative act exerted by the understanding, so that these materials are contained in a new shape. We must remember, therefore, that our inductive tables, although they represent the elements and the order of these inductive steps, do not fully represent the whole simplification of the process in each case.—Whewell, Novum Organum Scientiarum.

The shell [of birds' eggs] consists in great part of carbonate of lime, with a little carbonate of magnesia and phosphate of lime and magnesia. The appearance to the unaided eye of pores on the surface of the shell is due to the impressions of the villi of the formative membrane; the permeability of the shell by the atmosphere depends on a more minutely porous texture.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates.

Former. s. One who, or that which, forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the making of several parts for several uses.—Ray, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Former. adj. [As a Comparative of fore, this word is irregular; the m being intrusive, and, when that is accounted for, the -er being catachrestic. There is no true Comparative of fore, or rather there is no real Positive. This is because the notion of beforeness itself involves a comparison, and fore, even in its simplest form, is, in the matter of degree, a natural Comparative; at any rate, a Comparative rather than a Positive term. The A.S. Comparative was fyrra; the A.S. Superlative, forma. Out of this the present word, a Comparative formed on a Superlative, has originated. Such, at least, is the case where the r is sounded. Where it is not, it may be argued that the irregularity is limited to the use of a Superlative instead of a Comparative, and that former is merely forma badly spelt. For a similar refinement see remarks on the -le in could. For the import of the -m see Foremost. The true Superlative of fyrra is First. In respect to its meaning, Johnson remarks that foremost is generally applied to rank, place, and degree, and former only to time; in objection to which Todd refers to the two extracts from Spenser. In the main, however, the remark of Johnson is correct.

Another question applies to its import as a Comparative; i.e. how far it is limited to the expression of the beforeness of one object out of two, or the beforeness of one object out of many. No one says that Alpha is the former letter of the Hebrew alphabet. To say, however, that 'out of the two Greek words from which Alpha-bet is derived, viz. Alpha and Beta, the former coincides with the Hebrew Alpha, and the latter with the Hebrew Beth,' is better than to say 'the first—the last.' The converse, however, is common.

Lastly, let it be noted that former is a Pronoun rather than an Adjective; being, in many respects, a Numerical. Its construction with the, without a substantive, is the commonest.]

1. Preceding.

a. In order of sequence.

Thy air,
Thou other gold-bean'd larv, is like the first:
A third is like the former.—Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1.

b. In order of notice.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic; a man may be the former runner through the misfortune of an ill judgement; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper.—Pope.

2. In time.

The present point of time is all thou hast,
The future doubtful, and the former past. Harle.
The radical meaning in both [for and fore] is front. When we speak of one event as before or after another, our own progress in time is transferred to the events of the world, which are typified as a succession of animal beings moving on in the opposite direction, and taking place in time at the moment when they are brought face to face with the witness. Thus the event of the present moment is before or in front of the train of futurity, and those which have already passed by the instant of actual experience are in front of the present event, by which they are succeeded. The events then which have passed into the region of memory, although in reference to our own progress in life considered as left behind us, yet in the order of their own succession are more to the front than the present, and are therefore spoken of as belonging to for-mer or more fore times.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.

3. In place. Anterior, fore, or front.

Echidna is a monster direfull dreid,
Whom gods doe hate, and heavens alihorr to see;
So hideous is her shape, so huge her bed,
That even the hellish fiends alighted bee.
At sight thereof, and from her presence flee;
Yet did her den and form parts profess
A faire young mayden, full of comely rise;
But all her hinder parts did plaine expresse
A monstrous dragon full of fearful upbresse.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, vi. 4, 10.

4. First.

Amongst the which there fortun'd to bee
The noble Briton prince with his brave peers;
Who, when he none of all these knights did see,
Hastily bent that enterprise to leave.
Nor undertake the same for coward heart's fear,
He stepped forth with courage bold and great,
Admired of all the rest in presence there,
And humbly gan that mightie queen entreat
To graunt him that adventure for his former feat.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, v. 10, 15.

Formerly. adv.

1. In times past.

Two places were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their summer.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

2. At first. Obsolete.

Her fair locks, which formerly were bound up in one knot,
She now adown did loose.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, ii. 12, 67.

Formal. adj. Ready to create forms; imaginative.

As fleets the vision o'er the formal brain,
This moment hurrying wild the impassion'd soul,
The next in nothing lost.
Thomson, Seasons, Summer.

Formication. s. [Lat. formica = ant.] Sensation like that of the creeping or stinging of ants.

One of the most considerable signs of the disorder [syphilis] is a sense of formication.—Dr. James, Medical Dictionary.

Formidable. adj. [Lat. formidabilis; formido = dread, terror; Fr. formidable.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

Such an accident that afflicts him is an evil, and such an object formidable.—Jeremy Taylor, Liberty of Prophecy, § 13.

I swell my presence into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see no many figures behind.—Dryden, Translation of Virgil, Dedication of the Æneid.

Formidableness. s. Attribute suggested by formidable; formidable character.

They rather chuse to be showed the formidableness of their danger, than, by a blind embracing it, to perish.—Dr. H. More, Discourse of Christian Piety.

Formidably. adv. In a formidable manner.

Behold! o'en to remoter shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread;
The British cannon formidably roar.
Dryden.

Formless. adj. Destitute of form; shapeless.

All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love.
Shakespeare, King John, iii. 1.

Of formless cures, projects unmade-up,
Abuses yet unfashion'd.
Dunne, Poems, p. 96.

Formula. s. [Latin.] Prescribed form.

There are certain formulas of prayer to be used before they make the inspection, which they term a call.—Aubrey, Miscellanies, p. 130.

In his own reign the wish, 'Mayest thou be the visior of sultan Selim,' had become a common formula of cursing among the Ottomans.—Sir R. Crane, History of the Ottoman Turks, ch. viii.

This huge insurrectionary movement, which we liken to a breaking out of Tophet and the abyss, has swept away royalty, aristocracy, and a king's life. The question is, What will it next do; how will it bend down shape itself? Settle down into a reign of law and liberty; according as the habits, passions and endeavours of the educated, monied, respectable class prescribe? That is to say: the volcanic lava-flood, bursting up in the manner described, will explode and flow according to Girardin's formula and pre-established rule of philosophy? . . . Which something, we may further conjecture, will not be a formula, with philosophical propositions and forensic eloquence; but a reality, probably with a sword in its hand! As for the Girardin formula, of a respectable republic for the middle classes, all manner of aristocratic being now sufficiently demolished, there seems little reason to expect that the business will stop there.—Carlyle, History of the French Revolution, pt. iii, h. iii, ch. i.

If any one, having processed himself of the laws of phenomena as recorded in words, whether delivered to him originally by others or even found out by himself, is content from thenceforth to live among these formulas, to think exclusively of them, and of applying them to cases as they arise, without keeping up his acquaintance with the realities from which these laws were collected, not only will he continually fail in his practical efforts, because he will apply his formulas without duly considering whether, in this case and in that, other laws of nature do not modify or supersede them; but the formulas themselves will progressively lose their meaning to him, and he will cease at last even to be capable of recognizing with certainty whether a case falls within the contemplation of his formula or not.—J. R. Mill, System of Logic.

In the Cape antelope the vertebral formula is:—7 cervical, 13 dorsal, 3 lumbar, 6 sacral, and 25 caudal.—Queen, Anatomy of Vertebrata.

Hence, our formulas as further amended reads thus:—Life is a definite combination of heterogeneous changes, both simultaneous and successive.—Herbert Spencer, Data of Biology.

Formularize. v. a. Reduce to a formula.

It is, therefore, to be regretted that the common-sense of a body have not formularized an opinion on a subject that was within their jurisdiction, and which was examined by them at great length and with evident care.—Saturday Review, February 10, 1900.

Formulary. s.

1. Book of forms and formulae.

By way of innovating still further on our established formulary, he versified the decalogue.—T. Warton, History of English Poetry, iii. 108.

2. Same as Formula.

In the practice of all law, the formularies have been few, and certain; and not varied according to every particular case.—Bacon, On a Libert in 1582.

These poems abound with modern words, and modern formularies of expression.—T. Warton, Bouley Enquiry, p. 23.

Formulate. v. a. Reduce to formula.

Irrespective of their degrees of composition, plants may, and do, become changed in their general forms. Are their changes capable of being formulated? The inquiry which meets us at the outset is—does a plant's shape admit of being expressed in any universal terms?—terms that remain the same for all genera, orders, and classes.—Herbert Spencer, Principles of Biology, § 213.

Fornicate. v. n. Act as a fornicator.

Those travelled youths, whom tender mothers wean
And send abroad to see or to be seen,
With whom, lest they should fornicate or worse,
A tutor's sent by way of a dry nurse.
Churchill, The Farwell. (Rich.)

Fornicated. adj. Polluted by fornication.

She gives up her body to a mercenary whoredom under those fornicated arches.—Milton, Reason of Church Government, b. ii.

Fornicating. part. adj. Acting as, or practising the habits of, a fornicator.

The heroic spirit of Luther . . . chose rather to be an honest husband than a fornicating friar.—Bishop Hall, Honour of married Clergy, p. 42.

Fornication. s. [Lat. fornicatio, -onis, from fornix = arch.] The word still retains this sense in old masonry. As the arched places in Rome, connected as they were with the architecture of those parts of the city which, from either the fact of building going on in them, or their connexion with sewers and the like, were the resort of prostitutes, the word took its present sense, which is old. Juvenal uses fornix = brothel. In the extract from Milton under Fornicated, we have something between a Latinism and a pun.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Blow me! what a try of fornication is at the door.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. v. 3.
The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of straw at last.—Granat.

2. Figuratively, in Scripture. Idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by.—Ezekiel, xvi. 18.

Fornicator. s. One who has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercise of Holy Living.

Fornicatress. s. Woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

Are you the fornicatress he remov'd;
Let her have needful but not lavish means.
Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 2.

Fornice. v. n. Go by; pass unnoticed.

Nerve can a bishoprick fornice them by,
But that it must be felt in privacy.
Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Fornice. v. a. Waste away.

Through long anguish, and self-murdering thought,
He was so wasted and fornish'd night,
That all his substance was consum'd to nought.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, iii. 10, 57.

Forry. v. a. Old spelling of Foray.

They themselves were evil grooms, they said,
Unwont with herds to watch, or pasture sheep,
But to forry the land, or scour the deep.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, vi. 11, 40.

They that morn had forry'd all the land.
Spenser, Translation of Tasso, iii. 14.

Forry. s. Foray.

At length when they occasion fittest found,
In dead of night, when all the thieves did rest,
After a late forry, and slept full sound,
Sir Calidore him smit.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, vi. 11, 42.

Forsake. v. a. preterite forsook; past part. forsaken. [A.S. forsacan.]

1. Leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Paul God forsook,
God Saul; the room in's heart wild jealous took.
Cowley, David's.

Orestes comes in time
To save your honour; Pyrrhus coals apace;
I prevent his falsehood, and forsake him first:
I know you hate him.
A. Phillips, Distracted Mother.

2. Leave; go away from; depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state,
Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

3. Desert; fail.

When ev'n the flying mills were seen no more,
Forsaken of all sight she left the shore,
Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,
Languish and droop, seem empty and forsaken,
And draw the wond'ring gazer's eyes no more.
Rouse.

Forsake. v. n. Refuse; decline. Obsolete.

St. Peter, with the rest of the company, hearing the mad disposition of the fellows, departed, leaving behind him myself, Velvet Breeches, and this bricklayer, who forsake to go into Heaven because his wife was there.—R. Greene, News both from Heaven and Hell, 1608. (Nares by H. & W.)

Forsaker. s. Deserter; one who forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forsakers of God.—Apocrypha, Song of the Three Children, v. 9.

Forsaking. verbal abs. Dereliction.

Until there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land.—Isaiah, vi. 12.

Forsay. v. a.

1. Renounce.

But shepherd must walke another way,
Like worldly sovereign he must forsay.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, May.

2. Forbid.

And withens shepherds been forsay'd
From places of delight.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, July.

Forse. s. Waterfall; cataract. (Provincial, rather than generally current; noted, however, chiefly for the sake of correcting the ordinary spelling, which is with c (force). It occurs, in Great Britain, chiefly to the north of the Humber, and, on the continent, in Scandinavia. Hence, it passes for a Danish word. If it is comparatively rare in Germany and southern England, it should be remembered that waterfalls are also rare, comparatively. It is generally met with in composition, and as a geographical term, i.e. as a proper, rather than a common, name. It has passed into several personal names, e.g. Wilher-force, the spelling being with the incorrect e. As a philological curiosity, a much used passage in the Greek of Constantinople gives it in the form φωρς, as applied to the catenacts of a river so distant from Scandinavia as the Dnieper, indicative of (or supposed to be so) the Swedish conquest of Russia in the ninth century. So much for its confusion with force. It has also been spelt foas, pointing to the Latin fossum = ditch.)

Oct. 9, 1798.—After dinner I went along the Milthorpe turnpike four miles to see the falls or force of the river Kent.—Gray, Letter to Dr. Wharton. (Rich.)

Foralack, v. a. Neglect, through remissness, delay, slowness, or slackness; miss. Rare.

Ne rooted he himself . . .

For dread of damage not to be redrest,
If he for slouch foralack so famous quest.

It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion foralacked, that might have been the eternal good of the land.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Foralaw, v. a.

1. Delay; hinder; impede; obstruct. Rare.
No stream, no wood, no mountain could foralaw
Their lusty pace. Fairfax.

Now the illustrious nymph return'd again,
Brings every grace triumphant in her train:
The wondrous Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,

Foralaw her passage to behold her form. Dryden.
If they be any time foralawed and trashed by either outward or inward restraints.—Hammond, Works, iv. 505.

2. Neglect.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted (the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foralawing, but wisdom in choosing his time, resolved with speed to assault them.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

Our good purposes foralawed are become our tormentors upon our death-bed.—Bishop Hall.
Chronicle, how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats, and use their nets aright;
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foralaw?
None such have been: but, ah! by tempests' spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moun,
That few were such; and now these few are none.
P. Fletcher, Piscatory Eclogues, iv. 12.

Foralaw, v. a. Be dilatory; loiter. Obsolete.

This may plant courage in their qualling breasts;
For yet in hope of life and victory:
Foralaw no longer, make we hence again.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. ii. 3.
Forsooth, adv. [sooth = truth.] In truth; certainly; very well. Used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore dith Lyander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me forsooth, affection!

Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, iii. 2.
Who struck this heat up after I was gone?—
He will forsooth have all my prisoners.

A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate.—Sir J. Haywards.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, rows herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord.
—Addison, Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown.—Agathang, History of John Bull.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French medium.—Guaridin.
It is supposed to have been once a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an infor-rior, being called, shewed his attention by answering in the word yo, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakespeare to have been used likewise to man.—Todd.

Construction verbal, the meaning being 'use the word forsooth.'

The sport was how she had intended to have kept herself unknown; and how the captain (whom she had sent for) of the Charles had forsoothed her, though he knew her well enough and she him.—
Peppes, Diary, January, 1601. (Nares by H. & W.)

Forsooth, v. n.

1. Forbid.

Thou hast forsook my being in these wars,
And say't it is not fit.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 7.

2. Bewitch.

Urging
That my bad tongue, by their bad usage made so,
Forsook their cattle, both bewitch their corn.
Kelcy, Drerker, and Fort, Wile of Edmonton.
Or to forsook whole flocks as they did feed.
Drayton, Epistle from Rhesus Cobham to Duke Humphrey.

Forsooth, adj.

1. Forpassed; past.

Is not enough thy evil life forsook?
Spenser, Faerie Queen.
You shall find his vanities forsook
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly.
Shakespeare, Henry V. ii. 4.

2. Wasted; tired; spent.

After him came quurring hard
A gentleman, almost forsook with speed,
That stopped by me to breathe his bloodied horse . . .
He told me that rebellion had had luck.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. i. 2.

Forster, s. Fore-ster. A further alteration, or rather corruption, gives Foster. The well-known proper names have each this origin.

Forwat, adj. Overwearied; spent with heat.

Albe forworn and forwent I am.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, April.
Also and Mopsa, like a couple of forworn mowers were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments.—Sir P. Sidney.

Forwear, v. a. proterite forwore; past part. forworn. [There are two *for*s that come under this category:

1. A German for.
2. A French for.

The German for = Murgothic für;
whereas fore = für in the same language.
In composition = German fer-, as in er-loren = forlorn. How it passes into the significations of fore, may be understood by considering the connection between wholly, hopelessly, passed by, passing in front of, and the like. Yet the distinction is older than the history of the Germanic languages.

The French for, unless we look at it as German also, has its connections with foras, foris, fura (= door), and hors, as in hors de combat—out of the (field of) combat; and the fact of the Old French giving the words forjurer (see Forjidge) and forclure (see Forelose) is the reason why the ordinary spellings of these words has been changed.

The fundamental connection between the German for and fore is a matter of no difficulty. They are both connected with the fr- in from, and the Latin pro and
præ. But the French for points to Gr.
φωρ, English door.

Practically, then, the two *for*s are separate words, both in respect to one another, and in respect to fore; though more so in the former case than in the latter.]

1. Renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow
Never to woe her more; but do forwear her,
As one unworthy all the former favours
That I have fondly flattered her withal.
Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iv. 2.

2. Deny upon oath.

Observe the wretch who bath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
Like innocence, and as warmly bold
As truth, how loudly he forswears thy gold!
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

3. Be perjured; swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, ah! I be forsworn?
To leave fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn?
To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsworn?
And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury.

Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, ii. 4.
One says, he never should endure the sight
Of that forsworn, that wrongs both land and laws.
Daniel.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Thebes;
And yet am false, forsworn: the hollow'd shrine,
That heard me swear, is witness to my falsehood.
Smith.

Forswear, v. n. Swear falsely; commit perjury.

Take heed; for He holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.—
And that same vengeance doth He hurl on thee,
For false forswearing, and for murder too.
Shakespeare, Richard III. i. 4.

Forsworn, s. Overlaboured. Obsolete.

Albe forsworn and forwent I am.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, April.

Fort, s. [Fr.] Fortified house; castle.

They crested a fort, which they called the fort de Por; and from thence they basted like beasts of the forest.—Bacon.
Now to their fort they are about to send
For the loud engines which their life defend.
Waller.

He that views a fort to take it,
Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part.
Sir J. Denham, Sophy.
My fury does, like jealous fortis, pursue
With death ev'n strangers who but came to view.
Dryden.

Fort, s. [Fr. fort; Ital. forte.] Strong point; pursuit in which a person excels.
I won't describe; description is my forte.
But every fool describes in these bright days
His wondrous journey to some foreign court,
And spurns his quarto and demands your praise.
Byron, Don Juan, v. 52.

It was in description and meditation that Byron excelled. 'Description,' as he said in Don Juan,
'was his forte.' His manner is indeed peculiar, and is almost unequalled; rapid, sketchy, full of vigour;
the selection happy, the strokes few and bold.—
Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Moore's Life of Lord Byron.

Fort, adv. [A.S. forð.]

1. Forward in place or order.

Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner.—
Archbishop of Upsala.

2. Forward; onward in time.

From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
From that day forth I cast in careful mind
To seek her out.—Spenser, Faerie Queen.
It came to pass from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work.—Nicholas, iv. 16.

3. Abroad; out of doors; (without come).

Attend you here the door of our stern chamber?
Will she not forth? Shakespeare, Cymbeline, ii. 3.

4. Beyond the boundary of any place.

They will privily relieve their friends that are forth; they will send the enemy secret advert and they will not also stick to draw the enemy privily upon them.—Spenser.

5. Thoroughly; from beginning to end.

You, cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best.
Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, v. 1.

6. Used interjectionally. Away; be gone; go forth.

Artists, . . . forth, and levy
Our worthless instruments.
Bonamant and Fletcher, Two Noble Kinsmen.

7. In the following it strengthens the preposition, but is scarcely prepositional.

And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pompeii.
Shakespeare, King John, iv. 2.

Some forth their cabins peep,
And trembling ask what news, and do hear no
As jealous husbands, what they would not know.
Dante.

Forthcoming, adj. Coming forward; ready to appear; at hand if wanted.

But why do they lodge there?—
That they may in safe and forth-coming.
Bonamant and Fletcher, Martial Maid.

Forthink, v. a. Repent of, be sorry for, anything. Rare.

Of it be not too bold,
Lest thou forthink it when thou art too old.
Youth, An old Interlude.

FORT

Then can he think, perform with sword and targe
Her forth to fetch, and Ptoerus to constrain;
But soon he gain such folly to forth again.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, iv. 12, 14.

Forthright. adv. Straight forward; direct.
He ever going so just with the horse, either forth- right or turning, that it seemed as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind.—Sir P.
Sidney.

The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their spring, or that the river had a delight to play with itself.—Id.
Arrived there, they passed in forthright;
For still to all the gate stood open wide.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Used substantively.
Here's a man trod, indeed,
Through forthrights and meanders.
Shakespeare, Tempest, iii. 3.

Forthward. adv. Forward. Rare.
He promyseth to them that goe forthward and profyte in it [penance] joye.—Bishop Fisher,
Psalms xzv.

Forthwith. adv. Immediately; without delay; at once; straight.
Forthwith he runs, with belagued faithful haste,
T'nto his guest; who, after troublous nights
And dreames, gain now to take more sound repose.
Spenser.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct they should forthwith utterly become frustrate.—Hooker, Eccle- siastical Polity.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
The notes of wrath, the music brought from hell,
The rattling drums. Daniel, Civil Wars.

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived.—South, Sermons.

Forthy. adv. [The thy here is the the in such expressions as 'the more the merrier,' where it represents the Anglo-Saxon thy, the instrumental case of the root th, as in that and this. See The Why (in for why) is in a like relation to who. See For and Why.] Therefore. Obsolete.

Thomalin, have no care forthy;
Myself will have a double eye,
Ylike to my flocke and thine.

Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, March.
Fairer lady, through foule sorrow ill bedight,
Great pity is to see you thus dismay'd,
And marre the blossom of your beauty bright;
Forthy appease your grief and heavy plicht,
And tell the cause of your conceived payne.
Id., Faerie Queen, ii. 1, 14.

Fortieth. adj. [see Eight.] Ordinal of Forty; fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

Fortification. s.
1. Science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, mounds, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary.—Harris.
The Phœnicians, though an unwarlike nation, yet understood the art of fortification.—Broom, On the History.

2. Place built for defence.

The houses were uncoupled, and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging.—Sir P.
Sidney.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgements, might dispense some advantage.—Id.

3. Addition of strength. Rare.

To strengthen the infested parts, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote.—Dr.
H. More, Government of the Tongue.

Fortifier. s. One who fortifies.

1. By erecting works for defence.
The fortifier of Penultima made his advantage of the commoditie afforded by the ground.—Cæsar, Survey of Cornwall.

By supporting, upholding, or strengthening anything generally.

He was led forth by many armed men, who often had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution.—Sir P. Sidney.

FORT

Fortify. v. a.

1. Strengthen against attacks by walls or works.

He took care of the temple, that it should not fall, and fortified the city against besieging.—Eccle- siastica, i. 4.

2. Confirm; encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. —Sir P. Sidney.
To fortify the former opinions Tostatus adds, that those which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned.—Sir
W. Raleigh.

3. Fix; establish in resolution.

But unborn worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul;
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face.
Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to severe his virtues.—Locke.

Fortilage. s. Little fort; block-house.

Yet was the fence thereof but weak and thin,
Nought fear'd their force that fortilage to win.
Spenser.

In all straits and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which should keep and command the straight. —Id., View
of the State of Ireland.

Fortitude. s. [Lat. fortitudo.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have to relish of them. —Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 3.

The better fortitude
Of patience, and heroic martyrdom
Ensuing. —Wilton, Paradise Lost, ix. 31.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady in his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man.—Locke.

They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs; partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and for- titude, and partly that virtue, even in this world, might not lose its reward.—Nelson.

2. Strength; force. Obsolete.

He wrongs his fame,
Despising of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell!
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. ii. 1.

Fortnight. s. Space of fourteen nights, i.e.
two sevendights or semidights, i.e. weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late,
that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight.—Sir P. Sidney.

Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnight's space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick.—Bacon,
Natural and Experimental History.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad.—Dryden.

He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, till about a fortnight before.—Swift.

Fortress. s. Strong hold; fortified place.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he overran
all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses.—
Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.
The tramp of death sounds in their hearing shrill;
Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave.

Well, let them practise and converse with spirits;
God is our fortress, in whose conquering name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. ii. 1.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undelined words; which yet make these retreats worse like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors.
—Locke.

Fortress. v. a. Guard; fortify. Rare.

Honour and bravery, in the owner's arms,
Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harms.
Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

Fortuitous. adj. [Lat. fortuitus.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.

A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concours of atoms.—Key.

If casual concours did the world enspouse,
And things and atoms did the world enspouse,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring?
Sir E. Blackmore.

FORT

Fortuitously. adv. In a fortuitous manner; accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diffused into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements.—Bogey.

Fortuity. s. Chance; accident.

The only question which the adversaries to Providence have to answer is, How they can be sure, that those deverted Judgements were the effect of mere fortuity, without the least intervention on the part of the Lord of the universe?—Forbes, On Incre- ditability, p. 79.

Fortunate. adj. [Lat. fortunatus.] Lucky;
happy; successful; not subject to miscarriage: (used of persons or actions).

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.—Shakespeare,
Comedians iv. 3.

He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, as fortunate before.
Dryden, Knight's Tale.

No, there is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:
True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,
But right before there is no precipice;
Fear makes men look aside, and so their footing miss.
Dryden.

Fortunately. adv. In a fortunate manner;
happily; successfully; by good luck.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And boldly wise, and fortunately great. —Prior.

Fortunateness. s. Attribute suggested by Fortunate; happiness; good luck; success; luck.

Oh me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfor-tunateness.—Sir P. Sidney.

Fortune. s. [Lat. fortuna.]

1. Heathen goddess so called; personification of chance: (hence, in the first instance, a proper rather than a common name).

Fortune, that arrogant whore,
Never turns the key to th' poor.

Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 3.
Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.

Id., Henry VI. Part III. iv. 3.

It has never, we believe, been remarked, that two of the most striking lines in the description of Ahthopolis are borrowed from a most obscure quarter.
In Kuehler's History of the Turks, printed more than sixty years before the appearance of Aladdin and Althopolis, are the following verses, under a portrait of the Sultan Mustapha the First:—

'Greatness on goodness loves to slide, not stand,
And leaves for Fortune's ice Virtue's firm land.'
Dryden's words are—

'But wild Ambition loves to slide, not stand,
And Fortune's ice prefers to Virtue's land.'

The circumstance is the more remarkable, because Dryden has really no emblem which would seem to a good critic more intently Drydenian, both in thought and expression, than this, of which the whole thought, and almost the whole expression, are stolen.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays,
—Sir W. Temple.

2. Good or ill that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day;
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Among so brave a people you are they
Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize.
Dryden.

The adequate meaning of chance as distinguished from fortune is, that the latter is understood to be fully rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies.—Deistly.

For her sake, and probably likewise with an eye to the need he might have of Athenian protection in a reverse of fortune, he sent a large present of corn to the Athenians, who required it with their franchise.
—Thirlwall, History of Greece, ch. iv.

3. Chance of life; means of living.

His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune.—Swift.

4. Success, good or bad; event.

This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators.—Sir W.
Temple.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;
Our equal crimes shall equal fortune give.
Dryden, State of Innocence.

5. Estate; possessions.

If thou dost
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To noble fortune. —Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.
The fate which governs poets, though it fit
He should not raise his fortune by his wit.
Dryden.

He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune.—Swift.
He [Wilkes] had received a good education—was a fair classical scholar—possessed the agreeable manners of polished society—married an heiress half as old again as himself... continued to associate with gentlemen of fortune far above his own—passed part of his life as a militia colonel—and fell into the unvarnished circumstances which, naturally resulting from such habits, led in their turn to the violent political courses pursued by him in order to relieve his wants.—Lord Brougham, Historical Sketches of Statesmen during the Reign of George III., John Wilkes.

6. Property that a woman possesses: (sometimes the person possessing).

I am thought some heiress rich in lands,
Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing.

When miss delights in her sylvan seat,
A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

7. Future luck in life.

You who men's fortunes in their faces read,
To find out mine, look not, alas, on me:
But mark her face, and all the features heed;
For only there is writ my destiny.

Cowley, Mistress.

Make a fortune.

Those 'Every-day' and 'Table' books will be a treasure a hundred years hence, but they have failed to make Home's fortune.—Lamb, Letter to Dyer.

There are besides, whom powerful friends advance,
Whom fashion favours, person, patron, chance;
So merit suffers, while a fortune's made
By daring rashness or by dull parade.

Crabbe, The Borough.

Fortune. v. n. Befall; fall out; happen; come casually to pass; light upon. Obsolete.

It fortuned, as fair it then befell,
Bold and his luck, unwitting, where he stood,
Of ancient time there was a surling well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

It fortuned the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning.—Knutley, History of the Turks.
Here fortune'd Curll to slide. Pope, Dunciad.

Fortunebook. s. Book consulted to know fortune, or future events.

Thou know'st a face, in whose each look Beauty lays ope Love's fortunebook;
On whose fair revolutions wait
The omnequous motions of love's fate. Crashaw.

Fortunehunter. s. One whose employment is to inquire after women with great portions to enrich himself by marrying them.

The fortunehunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view.—Spectator.

We must, however, distinguish between fortunehunters and fortunekeepers.—Ibid.

The tranquillity and correspondence of the company begins to be interrupted by the arrival of Sir Taffety Trippet, a fortunehunter, whose follies are too gross to give diversion, and whose vanity is too stupid to let him be sensible that he is a public officer.—Tatler, no 47.

Fortuneless. adj.

1. Luckless.

All hard mishaps and fortuneless misfame.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, iv. 8, 27.

2. Without an estate; without a portion.
I am fatherless; I am fortuneless.—High Life.

Fortuneteller. s. One who tells fortunes.

A Wolofman being at a seadown-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judeus were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die.—Bacon, Apophthegms.

Had thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot?—Dugdale, Rules for Devotion.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other, to the willing up of a fortuneteller.—Sir E. L'Estrange.

Long ago a fortuneteller
Exactly said what now befell her. Swift.

Fortunetelling. s. Act or practice of a fortuneteller.

We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iv. 2.

The scymles were to divide the money got by stealing linen, or by fortunetelling.—J. Walton, Complaint Angler.

Fortunetelling. part. pref. Acting as, or having the character of, a fortuneteller.

Here, while his cutting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystick flurms of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dices
On all her fortunetelling lines. Cleaveland.

Fortunize. v. a. Regulate the fortune of.

Rare.

Wisdom is most riches: fools therefore
They are, which fortunes do by vana device;
With each unto himself his life may fortunize.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, vi. 9, 30.

Forty. adj. Four times ten. In Notation, 40. See Eight: (in the following extracts used for any considerable, but indefinite, number).

The three brothers had acquired forty qualifications of the like stamp, too tedious to recount, and by consequence were justly reckoned the most accomplished persons in the town.—Swift, Tale of a Tub, sec. 2. (Ord MS.).

Our three brethren soon discovered their want by sad experience, meeting in their walks with forty mortifications and indignities. Ibid. (Ord MS.).

Forum. s. [Lat. = market-place.]

1. Any public place.

The forum was a public place in Rome, where lawyers and orators before their speeches before their proper judges in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend.—Watts, On the Mind.

Come to the bay great Neptune's fine adfolds,
And near a forum shank'd with marble shines,
Where the bold youth, the numerous deeds to store,
Shape the broad sail, or smooth the taper ear. Pope.

2. The Law Courts as opposed to the Houses of Parliament: (of common use in the biography of lawyers, in speaking of the two chief scenes for the display of their ability).

I have spoken of Lord Camden's judicial conduct in the Courts of Westminster Hall, and in the House of Lords. He was, however, fully more eminent in the senate than in the forum. He brought into parliament a high professional reputation; and beside the reputation which this and his great office gave him, his talents were peculiarly suited to shine in debate.—Lord Brougham, Historical Sketches of Statesmen during the Reign of George III., Earl Camden.

It is to the forum, and not the senate, that we must hasten, if we would witness the 'economus multiplex, judicium erectum, crebris associationibus, multis admirationibus, plura cum veli, cum veli fletum—in Secus Rosetum?' in fine, if we would see this great man in his element and in his glory.—Ibid., Mr. Erskine.

Forwänder. v. n. Wander wildly and wearily. Rare.

The better part now of the flustering day
They travelled had, when as they far exp'd
A wary wight forwänder ring by the way. Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Forwändered. adj. Lost; bewildered.

And being thus alone, and all forsaken,
And the thrice *forwänder*ed in despair,
As one dunn'd. Mirror for Magistrates, p. 447.

Forward. adv. [spelt for, though from fore; the sound being also that of for; in the substantive the e is preserved, the form being fore.] Towards a part or place before; onward.

When fervent sorrow slaked was,
She up arose, resolving him to find
Alive or dead, and forward forth cloth pass.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
He that is used to go forward, and findeth a stop,
Sitteth off his own favour, and is not the thing he was.—Bacon, Essays.

Forward. adj. [see adv.]

1. Warm; earnest; not backward.

They would that we should remember the poor,
which I also was forward to do.—Galatians, ii. 10.

2. Ardent; eager; hot; violent.

You'll still be too forward.
Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, ii. 1.
Unkind'll'd to dart the pointed spear,
Or lead the forward youth to noble war. Prior.

3. Ready; confident; presumptuous.

Old Buter's form he took, Anchises' squire,
Now left to rule Aeneas by his sire;
And thus salutes the boy, too forward for his years.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

4. Not reserved; not over modest.

'Tis a perious boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe.
Shakespeare, Richard III., iii. 1.

5. Premature; early ripe.

Short summer lightly has a forward spring.
Shakespeare, Richard III., iii. 1.

6. Quick; ready; hasty.

The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them.—Locke.

Had they, who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which these propositions are made, they would not perhaps have been so forward to believe they were innate.—Ibid.

7. Antecedent; anterior: (opposed to posterior).

Let us take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'nd decrees
Th' inaudible and mischance hook of time
Steals, ere we can effect them.

Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, v. 3.

8. Not behindhand; not inferior.

My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
She is 't the rear of our birth.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

Forward. v. a. [see adv.] Hasten; quicken; accelerate in growth or improvement; advance; promote.

As we have lost country plants, as lemons, to save them, as we may lose our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Whenever I shine,
I forward the grass and I ripen the vine. Swift.

Forwardly. adv. [see adv.]

1. In a forward manner; in front. Rare.

If the horse have this situation, and be forwardly affixed, as is described, it will not be easily conceived how the unicorn can feed from the ground.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, p. 230. (Ord MS.).

2. Eagerly; hastily; quickly.

The sudden and surprising turns we ourselves have felt, should not suffer us too forwardly to admit presumption.—Bishop Atterbury.

Forwardness. s. [see adv.] Attribute suggested by Forward.

1. Eagerness; ardour; readiness to act.

Absolutely we cannot disapprove, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die.—Hobbes, Ecclesiastical Polity.

2. Quickness; readiness; earliness; precociousness.

He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness: that his brothers, who were under the same training, might hold pace with him.—Sir H. Wotton.

3. Confidence; assurance; want of modesty.

In France it is usual to bring their children into company, and to cherish in them, from their infancy, a kind of forwardness and assurance.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Forwards. adv. [see Forward, adv.] Progressively; straight before; not backward.

The Rhodian ship passed through the whole Roman fleet, backwards and forwards several times, carrying intelligence to Drapanum.—Arbuthnot, Tales of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

Forwaste. v. a. Desolate; destroy. Rare.

That infernal fiend with foul uprore
Forwasted all their land. Spenser, Faerie Queen.
Vexatious, with great spoil and rage,
Forwasted all. Ibid.

Forwary. v. a. Dispirit with labour.

By your toil,
And labour long, through which my lighter came,
Ye both forwaryed us; therefore a while
I rede you rest, and to your bowmen revolve.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
Whose labour'd spirits,
Forwaryed in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls.

Shakespeare, King John, ii. 1.

Forwent. v. a. [went + for.] It is thus entered because the present form forwent has not been found, and probably has no existence; the present compound having originated after the apparent separation of went from wend (= turn), and its apparent connection with go. Its import is exactly that of the preterite of forgo; but as this is not good, but (the archaic) ymic, the exact origin of the word is doubtful. Still it was probably in reference to go that it was formed. Etymologically, however, its connection, and its only connection, is with Wend. See also Go.] Forfeited; lost.

Thou shouldst not have known thyself to be any more beholden to him, than to the fire for heating thee, or to the sunne for giving thee light; because they should no more live either fire or sunne, if they forewent that nature.—Treasure of Christian Religion, 124. (Ord. M.)

Forworn. adj. Worn out; faded.

Neither the light was enough to read the words, and the ink was already forworn, and in many places blotted.—Sir P. Sidney.

Foss. s. [Lat. fossa.] Ditch; mont.

Let Titius
Command the company that Pontius lost,
And are the fosses deeper.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Valentine and
In the same cartulary, many boundaries, ways, and fosses, are specified in the neighbourhood of Wilton.—T. Warton, History of the Parish of Kid- dington, p. 62.

Fossil. s. [Lat. fossilis = dug-up; fossum, pass. part. of fodio = dig.] How far the early import of this word corresponded with its derivation may be seen in the extracts from Hill and Locke. At present it belongs to Geology or Paleontology, rather than to Minerology; though, for a scientific term, it is perhaps more generally current than any term of science. The typical fossil is either an animal or a vegetable (whole or part) embedded in some definite stratum (of the age of which it is a criterion), of which the organic matter has been wholly superseded by mineral; roughly speaking, a shell, bone, or plant, converted into stone. Nevertheless, in the newer formations the conversion is only incipient or imperfect. Again, of late, specimens of human workmanship, the material of which was originally of stone (flint), have been discovered in the same relations to the surface of the soil as recognized fossils, a fact which has to some extent carried back the term towards its earlier and more general meanings. These are, perhaps, fix-sil (fossil-like) remains rather than true fossils. A collector of them may be called a fossilist. Nevertheless, with the words Fossilize and Fossilization, which refer mainly, if not wholly, to the change of structure from animal or vegetable to mineral, it is convenient to restrict the term, at least as a substantive, to specimens which have undergone a change of structure, total, considerable, or slight, as the case may be.

By the word fossil, used as a denomination of one of three general divisions of natural productions, we understand bodies formed usually within the earth, sometimes on its surface, and sometimes in waters;
of a plain and simple structure, in which there is no visible difference of parts, no distinction of vessels and their contents, but every portion of which is similar to and perfect as the whole.—Sir J. Hill, Mi- neral Met'

In this globe are many other bodies, which, because we discover them by digging into the bowels of the earth, are called by one common name fossils;
under which are comprehended metals and minerals.
—Locke.

Used adjectively.

Learned men long conceived it a bituminous and fusile body.—Sir T. Browne, Miscellaneous, p. 10.

Fossiliferous. adj. [Lat. fero = bear.] Yielding fossils.

It has been truly observed, that when we arrange the fossiliferous formations in a chronological order, they constitute a broken and defective series of monuments.—Sir C. Lyell, Principles of Geology, ch. xiii.

Fossilist. s. One who studies the nature of,
one who collects, fossils.

It is well shaded by tall ash-trees, of a species, as Mr. James the fossilist informed me, uncommonly valuable.—Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland.

Fossilization. s. Conversion into a fossil.
Fossilization of human bodies in the bed of the sea.—Sir C. Lyell, Principles of Geology, ch. xlviii.

Fossilize. v. a. Convert into, invest with the character of, a fossil.

There are no reasons for supposing that more than a small number of plants now flourishing on the globe will be fossilized.—Sir C. Lyell, Principles of Geology, ch. xlviii.

Fossilized. part. adj. Converted into, or invested with the character of, a fossil.

I love that quarter!—if ever I go to Paris again I shall reside there. It is a different world from the streets usually known to, and tenanted by the English—there, indeed, you are among the French, the fossilized remains of the old régime.—Sir K. B. Lytton, Pelham, ch. xxi.

Fossorial. adj. Adapted to, formed for, or addicted to, digging; i.e. rooting up, or burrowing in, the ground: (the term being chiefly used in Zoology).

These are the principal muscles of the fore extremity which require notice. Their modifications, in respect of number and strength, relate to the act of digging up the soil. . . . It is for this purpose that the three middle digits of the hand are developed at the expense of the other two, which are rudimentary;
the whole power of the deep and superficial flexors is concentrated upon the fossorial and well-armed fingers; and, by the single common tendon in which the fleshy fibres of these muscles terminate, they move them collectively and simultaneously. . . . In no Marsupial is the hand so crumpled as in the Peromyscus, excepting in the Chiroptera, where the functional and fossorial flexors are reduced from three to two. It is in relation to this condition, doubtless, that the clavicles are wanting in these genera, while all other Marsupials possess them.—
Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates.

The Ischiodonta closely resemble the Marsupialia in their muscular system; with like modifications according to the absence or presence of clavicles, and to the gradatory, saltatory, fossorial, and fossorial movements of the species respectively.—Ibid.

Foster. s. An incorrect form of Forster, from Forester.

Foster. v. a. [A.S. fostrian.]

1. Nurse; feed; support; train up.

For that our kingdom's earth should not be soild
With that dear blood, which it hath fostr'd;
And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect
Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbours' swords. . . .

Therefore we banish you our territories,
Shakespeare, Richard II. l. 3.

Bred but on slugs, and fostr'd with cold dishes,
With scraps of 'th' court.

No more let Ireland bring her harmless nation
fostr'd to venem, since that Scots plantation.

Clarendon.

The son of Malherbe,
Found in the fire, and fostr'd in the plains,
A shepherd and a kins at once he reigns.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

2. Pamper; encourage.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostr'd up in blood by his naughty father. Sir P. Sidney.

Fosterage. s. Charge of nursing; nurture.
Some one adjoining to this lake had the charge and fosterage of this child.—Sir W. Raleigh, His- tory of the World.

The natural, not the civil, family was the basis of the state, and the tie of blood was supplemented by the relation of fosterage.—C. H. Pearson, The early and middle Ages of England, ch. xxi.

Fosterbrother. s. One brought up by the same foster-parent as another.

I am tame and bred up with my wrongs,
Which are my fosterbrothers.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Maid's Tragedy.

Fosterchild. s. One brought up by a foster-parent.

The fosterchildren do love and are beloved of their fosterfathers.—Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

The goddess thus beguill'd,
With pleasant stories, her false fosterchild.

Achilles, Translation from Ovid.

Fosterdam. s. Foster-mother.

There, by the wolf were laid the martial twins;
Introyd on her swelling dugs they hung;
The fosterdam loll'd at her sawing tongue.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Fosterer. s. One who fosters.

1. Nurse; one who gives food in the place of a parent.

In Ireland they put their children to fosterers;
the rich men selling, the meaner sort buying the alterage of their children: in the opinion of the Irish, fosterage has always been a stronger alliance than blood.—Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

2. Encourager; forwarder.

The fosterer of shooting is labour.—Aeschylus, Tro- phæus.

The fosterers and cherishers of truth.—Barrow.

Fosterfather. s. One who gives food in the place of the father; fostermother's husband.

In Ireland fosterchildren do love and are beloved by their fosterfathers, and their love, more than of their own natural parents and kindred.—Sir J. Dav- ies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

He said this time from King Henry.—Bacon
of the Reign of Henry VII.

Tyrreus, the fosterfather of the beast,
then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Fostering. part. adj. Nursing; encouraging growth; favourable; kindly.

Even the foreign slave-trade, and the traffic which his war policy had trebled by the capture of the enemy's colonies, he suffered to grow and prosper under the fostering influence of British capital; and after letting years and years glide away, and hundreds of thousands be torn from their own country, and carried to perpetual misery in ours, while one stroke of his pen could, at any moment, have stopped it for ever, he only could be brought to issue, a few months before his death, the order in council, which at length destroyed the posthumous.
This is by far the gravest charge to which Mr. Pitt's memory is exposed.—Lord Brougham, Historical Sketches of Statesmen of the Reign of George III.
Mr. Pitt.

Fostering. verbal abs. Act of one who fosters; condition of one who is fostered; system of having recourse to fosterparents.

Fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood.—Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

Fosterling. s. Foster-child; nurse-child.

'I'll none of your light-heart fosterlings, no inmates.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

Fostermother. s. This, though a secondary formation, best illustrates the meaning of the elementary term. A fostermother is one to whom the child of another person is made over not only to nurse by suckling, but to take into her house, and bring up as one of her own; adopt it (in short) for a time. Always an adopter, and generally a wetnurse as well, she was the true foster-parent. The fosterfather, who might be bringer-up as well, was generally only the foster-mother's husband. In Ireland, in Anglo-Saxon England, and at present in Iceland, the system was and is widely spread; the bond between the half-adopted child and the child whose suckling he either shared or monopolized being a close one. Foster-sister and foster-paunt are two words rather than compounds.

That child that roaveth nutriment from his fostermother, will go near to sympathize with her in condition.—Sir M. Sandys, Essay, p. 127: 1681.

Fosternurse. s. Foster-mother.

Our fosternurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks. Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 4.

Fosterson. s. One to whom a fosterparent has taken, in the matter of rearing, the place of the natural parent.

Mature in years, to ready honours move;
O of celestial seed! O fosterson of Jove!

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Fostress. s. Foster-mother; nurse.

Glory of knights, and hope of all the earth,
Come forth, your fostress bids; who from your birth
Hath bred you to this hour.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

Fother. s. See extract.

[Fother.—Properly a carriage load, but now only used for a certain weight of lead.

With him there was a plowman was his brother,
That had ylid of dong full many a fother.]

(Chaucer.)

Platt Deutsch futer, fur; Dutch, voeder, voeder, over; German fuder, fuder, a wagon-load; whence respectively foren, forren, fieren, to drive, convey, carry.—Webster, Dictionary of English Etymo- logy.]

Fotive. adj. [Lat. fotivus; fotus, pass. part.
of foveo = cherish.] Having a tendency to cherish or nurture. Rare.

If I not cherish them
With my distilling dew, and fotive heat,
They know no vegetation.

T. Carew, Chalcid Britannicum, c. 4: 1663.

(Nares by H. & W.)

FOUL

Foul adj. [A.S. fūl.]

1. Impure; polluted; filthy.

With foul mouth,
And in the witness of his proper ear,
To call him villain.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, v. 1.

Intemperance and unmanly debauch men's minds,
Clog their spirits, and make them gross, foul, flat-tem, and unactive.—Archbishop Tillotson.

2. Wicked; detestable; abominable.

Jesus rebuked the foul spirit.—St. Mark, ix. 23.
Satire has always shone among the rest,
And in the boldest way, if not the best,
To tell men truly of their foulest faults,
To laugh at their vain deeds, and vain thoughts.

Dryden.

3. Disfigured; deformed; made unsightly: (opposed to fair).

My face is foul with weeping.—Job, xvi. 16.

4. Hateful; ugly; loathsome.

Th' other half did woman a shape retain,
Most loathsome, filthy, foul, and full of vile disdain.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Foul sights do rather displease, in that they excite the memory of foul things than in the immediate objects; and therefore, in pictures, those foul sights do not much offend.—Bacon.

All things that seem so foul and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively.—Dr. H. More.

5. Disgraceful; shameful.

Too well I we and run the dire event,
That with sad overthrow and foul defeat
Hath lost us heaven. Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 134.

6. Coarse; gross.

You pervert the body of our kingdom,
How fast it is; what rank diseases grow,
And with what danger near the heart of it.

Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, iii. 1.

You will have no notion of delicacies, if you table with them; they are all for rank and foul feeding, and spoil the best provisions in cooking.—Fellows, Dissertation on reading the Classics.

7. Not bright; not serene.

It will be foul weather to-day; for the sky is red and lowering.—St. Matthew, xvi. 3.
Be fair or foul, or rain or shine,
The joy I have profess'd, in spite of fate are mine.

Dryden.

8. Entangled: (as, 'a rope is foul of the anchor').

9. Unfavourable; contrary to the course of the ship: (as, 'a foul wind').

10. Dangerous: (as, 'the foul ground of a road, sea-coast, or bay,' i.e. abounding with shallows, or rocky, or in any respect dangerous).

Fall foul. Dash with rough force, or with unseasonable violence.

So in this throng bright Sacerdotees far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strive to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral.

Waller.

In his mules their men might fall foul of each other.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

The great art of the devil, and the principal deceit of the heart, is to keep fair with God himself, while men fall foul upon his laws.—South, Sermons.

Foul play. Unlawful, dishonest, means.

My foul play, as thou sayst, were we heav'd thence,
But blessedly help'd hither.

Shakespeare, Tempest, l. 2.

Foul v. a.

1. Daub; bemire; make filthy; dirty.

Sweep your walks from autumnal leaves, lest the worms draw them into their holes, and foul your gardens.— Evelyn.

While Traulus all his ordure scatters,
To foul the man he chiefly flatters.

Swift.

She fouls a smock more in one hour than the kitchen-maid doth in a week.—Id., Advice to Servants.

2. In Navigation. Run foul of.

Admiral Storey had his ship, the Staton-General, almost disabled by the issue of his attempt to foul the Venerable when breaking the Dutch line as already related; nevertheless he maintained a vigorous conflict for some time against a succession of antagonists, during which he lost above three hundred men killed and wounded, till at last he was driven out of the line and compelled to strike.—Yonge, Naval History of Great Britain, ch. xxi.

Foul-feeding adj. [two words.] Gross; of coarse food.

There is an appetitus carnis, that passing by wholesome viands, falls upon unmeet and foul-feeding morcels.—Bishop Hall, Fashions of the World.

FOUN

Foulder v. n. [Fr. fouddroyer = to cast or dart thunderbolts.] Emit great heat.Fouddering part. adj. Burning.

Loud thunder with amazement great Did rend the rattling sky with flames of fouddring
heat.

Spenser, Faerie Queen, li. 2, 20.

Foufessed adj. Having an ugly or hateful visage.

If hisek scandal, or foul-faced reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blot and stains thereof.

Shakespeare, Richard III, iii. 7.

Foufly adv. In a foul manner.

1. Filthily; nastily; odiously; hatefully; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully.

We in the world's wide mouth
Live scandals'd, and foufly spoken of.

Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part I, l. 1, 3.

The letter to the protector was guided over with many smooth words; but the other two did fully and foufly set forth his obstinacy, avarice, and ambition.—Sir J. Hayward.

O brother, brother! Filbert still is true;
I foufly wrong'd him: do forgive me, do.

Gay.

2. With play. Not lawfully; not fairly.

Thou plays't most foufly for't.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 1.

Foulmouthed adj. Scurrilous; habituated to the use of opprobrious terms and epithets.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foulmouth'd man as he is, and said he would eudge you.

Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part I, iii. 3.

It was allowed by every body, that no foulmouth'd witness never appeared in any cause.—
Addison.

My reputation is too well established in the world to receive any hurt from such a foulmouthed scoundrel as he.—Arbuthnot.

Now singing shrill, and scolding off between,
Scolds answer foulmouth'd scolds; bad neighbourhood I ween.

Pope, Epitaphs, Spenser.

Through all changes, however, he was surrounded by a small knot of hucksters and foulmouthed agitators, who, called themselves Whigs, and thought themselves injured because they were not rewarded for scurrility and slander with the best places under the crown.—Macaulay, History of England, ch.
xviii.

Foulness s. Attribute suggested by Foul.

1. Quality of being foul; filthiness; nasti-ness.

The ancients were wont to make garments that were not destroyed by fire; and washed as the spots or foulness of other cloths; and were out, in these they were usually burnt away.—Wilkins, Mathematical Magic.

2. Pollution; impurity.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour.

Shakespeare, King Lear, l. 1.

There is not so chaste a nation as this, nor so free from all pollution or foulness: it is the virgin of the world.—Bacon.

3. Hatred; atrociousness.

Consul, you are too mild:
The foulness of some facts takes thence all mercy.

J. Junius, Catiline's Conspiracy.

It is the wickedness of a whole life, discharging all its filth and foulness into this one quality, as into a great sink or common shore.—South, Sermons.

4. Ugliness; deformity.

He by an affection sprung up from excessive beauty, should not delight in horrible foulness.—*Sir
P. Sidney*.

The fury laid aside
Her looks and limbs, and with new methods tried
The foulness of the infernal form to hide.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

5. Dishonesty; want of candour.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity and all falshood or foulness of intentions; especially to that perverted devotion, under which any kind of impurity is wont to be disguised.—Hammond, On Fundamentals.

Foumart s. [foul mart, or martin.] Pole- cat.

Foxes and foumarts, with all other vermine.—
Ascham, Turphilius.

Found v. a. [Fr. fonder; Lat. fundo, pass. part. fundatus; fundatio, -onis; *funda-*mentum.]

1. Lay the basis of any building.

It fell not; for it was founded upon a rock.—*St.
Matthew*, vii. 23.

He hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods.—Psalms, xlv. 2.

2. Build; raise; establish.

These tunes of reason are Amphion's lyre.
Wherewith he did the Theban city found.

Sir J. Innes, On the Immortality of the Soul.

This also shall they gain by their delay
In the wide wilderness; there they shall found
Their government, and their great senate choose.
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 223.

He founding a library, gathered together the acts of the kings and prophets.—2 Maccabees, li. 13.

They Asian walls, and strong Filene rear,
Mountains, hills with Pomeis found,
And raise Colatan towers on rocky ground.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

3. Give birth or origin to: (as, 'he founded an art,' 'he founded a family').

4. Raise upon, as on a principle or basis.

Though some have made use of the opinion of some schoolmen, that dominion is founded in grace; were it admitted as the most certain truth, it could never warrant any such sanguinary method.—*Dr.
H. More, Works of Christian Philosophy*.

A right to the use of the creature is founded originally in the right a man has to himself.

Locke.

Power, founded on contract, can descend only to him who has right by that contract.—Id.

The reputation of the liad they find upon the ignorance of his times.—Pope, Preface to the Translation of the liad.

A thousand parents may educate their children, though baptiz'd, without founding their education on their baptism, and one only may educate his children upon the basis of that sacrament.—Glaustone, The State in its Relations with the Church
ch. vii.

5. Fix firm.

Finances is escap'd.—
Then comes my fit again: I had also been perfect,
Whole as the marble, founded as the rock.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 4.

Found v. a. [Fr. fondre; Lat. fundo, pass. part. fundus. See Fusible.] Form by melt- ing and pouring into moulds; cast.

A second multitude
With wonderful art founded the masonry ore,
Severing each kind, and securing'd the bullion dross.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 702.

Foundation s.

1. Basis or lower parts of an edifice.

The stateliness of houses, the goodness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye; but that foundation which beareth up the one, that root which ministereth unto the other nourishment, is in the bosom of the earth concealed.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I draw a line along the shore;
I lay the deep foundation of a wall,
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

2. Act of fixing the basis.

Never to these chambers where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation, came a nobler guest.

Tickell.

3. Principles or ground on which any notion is rais'd.

If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future disquiet; but if we resist and conquer them, we lay the foundation of perpetual peace in our minds.—
Archbishop Tillotson.

That she should be subject to her husband, the laws of mankind and customs of nations have or-der'd it so; and there is a foundation in nature for it.—Locke.

4. Original; rise.

Throughout the world, even from the first foundation thereof, all men have either been taken as lords or lawful kings in their own houses.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

5. Revenue settled and established for any purpose, particularly charity.

He had an opportunity of going to school on a foundation.—Swift.

Foundation v. a. Found; settle. Rare.

He that foundations not himself with the arts, will hardly be fit to go out doctor either to himself or others.—Felltham, Resolves. (Ord. 118.)

Foundationless adj. Without foundation.

A flattering, fallacious, foundationless, because unconditional, hope; which the bigger it swells, the more dangerous it proves.—Hammond, Works,
iv. 506.

Founder s. One who founds.

1. Builder; one who raises an edifice; one who presides at the election of a city.

Of famous cities we the founders know;
But rivers, old as we to which they go,
Are nature's bounty: 'tis of more renown
To make a river than to build a town. Waller.
Nor was Prometheus a founder waiting there,
Whom fable reports the son of Melicber. Dryden.
2. One who establishes a revenue for any purpose.

The wanting orphans saw with wat'ry eyes
Their founders' charity in the dust laid low. Dryden.

This hath been experimentally proved by the honourable founder of this lecture in his treatise of the air.—Bentley.

3. One from whom anything has its original or beginning.

And the rude notions of pedantic schools
Blaspheme the sacred founder of our rubric. Lord Bacon.

When Jove, who saw from high, with just disdain,
The dead inspir'd with vital breath again,
Struck to the centre with his flaming dart
Th' unhappy founder of the godlike art. Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

King James I. the founder of the Stuart race, had he not confined all his views to the pence of his own reign, his son had not been involved in such fatal troubles.—Addison, Freeholder.

Nor can the skillful herald trace
The founder of thy ancient race. Swift.

Founder. s. [from Fr. fondeur.] One who founds; one who forms figures by casting melted matter into moulds; caster.

Founders add a little autonomy to their bell-metal, to make it more sonorous; and so pewterers to their pewter, to make it sound more clear like silver.—Grew, Museum.

Founder. v. a. [Fr. fondre.] Cause such a soreness and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set it to the ground.

I have foundered nine score and odd posts; and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Colville of the Inn, a most furious knight; but what of that? he saw me and yielded. —Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iv. 3.

If you find a gentleman foul of your horse, persuade your master to sell him, because he is vicious, and foundered into the bargain.—Swift, Advice to Servants, Directions to the Groom.

Founder. v. n.

1. Sink to the bottom.

New ships, built at those rates, have been ready to founder in the sea with every extraordinary storm. —Sir W. Raleigh, Essays.

But, the worst was not come yet; the storm continued with such fury, that the women themselves acknowledged they had never known a worse. We had a good ship, but she was deeply laden, and wallowed in the sea, that the sea-men every now and then cried out she would founder. It was my advantage in one respect that I did not know what they meant by founder, till I inquired.—DeFoe, Robinson Crusoe.

2. Fail; miscarry.

In this point
All his tricks founder; and he brings his physick
After his patient's death. Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iii. 2.

3. Trip; fall; (applied to a horse).

It chanced sir Satyrane his steed at last,
Whether through foundering, or through sodein
To stumble, that his rider nigh he cast. Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Foundersous. adj. In the extract, difficult to traverse; making a journey as bad as one in which the horse founders.

I have travelled through the precipitation, and a sad foundersous road it is.—Burke, Thoughts on a Regicide Peace, let. iii.

Foundling. s. Child exposed to chance; child found without any parent or owner.

We, like bastards, are laid abroad, even as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow.—Sir P. Sidney.

I pass the foundling by, a race unknown,
At doors exposed, whom misters make their own,
And into mobb families advance
A nameless issue, the blind work of chance. Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

A piece of charity practised by most of the nations about us, is a provision for foundlings, or for those children who are exposed to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents.—Addison.

Foundress. s.

1. Female founder.

Forgetful of himselfe, his birth, his country,
Friends, and all.
And only minding (whom he mist) the foundress of his fall. Warner, Albion's England.

Pride . . . became the first precedent of God's lessening his family, and the foundress of hell.—Osborne, Advice to a Son, p. 28.

2. Woman that establishes any charitable revenue.

For of their order she was patroness,
Albe Charissa was their chiefest foundress. Spenser, Faerie Queene.

For zeal like hers, her servants were to show;
She was the first, where need requir'd to go;
Herself the foundress, and attendant too. Dryden.
The great foundress of the Pietists, Madame de Bourignon.—Teller, iii. 124.

In the days of Fuller, however, the college had 'waived the wearing of this cap, tying it up in her wardrobe,' and making the only of the arms ascended to them by their foundress, Margaret of Anjou.
—J. H. Jones, Memoirs of King Richard III. ch. vi.

Fount, or Fountain. s.

1. Well; spring; head, or source of river.

He set before him sprouts . . .
Ambrosial fruits fetch'd from the tree of life;
And from the fount of life ambrosial drink. Milton, Paradise Regain'd, iv. 587.

All actions of your grace are of a piece, as waters keep the tenour of their fountain; your compassion is general, and has the same effect as well on enemies as friends.—Dryden.

Can a man drink better from the fountain finely paved with marble, than when it swells over the green turf?—Jersey Taylor.
Narcissus on the emery verdure lies;
But whilst within the crystal fount he tries
To quench his heat, he feels new heat arise. Addison.

2. Jet; spout of water.

Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one that sprinketh or spouteth water; the other a fair receipt of water, without fish, or slime, or mud.—Bacon.

3. Original; first principle; first cause.

Almighty God, the fountain of all goodness,
Book of Common Prayer.

This one city may well be reckoned not only the seat of trade and commerce, not only the fountain of habits and fashions, and good breeding, but of morally good or bad manners to all England.—Bishop Sprat, Ser.

4. In Printing. Same as Fout; (Fount being the present pronunciation).

A small fount may consist of fifty or one hundred pounds weight, comprising the usual proportion of the various letters of the alphabet.—Brande, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Fountainhead. s. [two words.] Original;
first principle.

Above our atmosphere 's intestine war,
Rain's fountain-head, the magazine of hail. Young, Night Thoughts, ix.

Fountainless. adj. Having no fountain;
wanting a spring.

The prospect was, that here and there was room
For barren desert, fountainless and dry. Milton, Paradise Regain'd, iii. 262.

Fountainful. adj. Full of springs.

But when the fountainful lot's top they scal'd with almost hush;
All fell upon the high-hal'd caks. Chapman, Translation of Homer's Iliad.

Four. pr. [A.S. feower.] Numeral so called.

In Notation, 4. See Eight. Twice two.
Just as I wish'd, the lots were cast on four;
Myself the fifth. Pope, Translation of the Odyssey.

Fourfold. adj. Four times four. See Eight.

Fournage. s. See Funge.

Fourscore. pr. Four times twenty.

Fourteen. pr. Four + ten. In Notation, 14.

Fourteenth. adj. Ordinal of Fourteen.

Fourth. adj. Ordinal of Four.

Fourthly. adv. In the fourth place.

Foutra. s. [Fr. fontre.] Fig; scoff; word of contempt. Obsolete.

A foutra for the world, and worldlings base.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. v. 3.

Fowl. s. [A.S. fugol.] Bird: (often limited, especially in the language of Cookery and Husbandry, to the domestic gallinaceous birds; cocks and hens being fowls as compared with geese and ducks).

Jaculus entertained Pompey in a magnificent house: Pompey said, This is a marvellous house for the summer; but methinks very cold for winter.
Jaculus answered, Do you not think me as wise as divers fowls, to change my habitation in the winter season?—Bacon, Apophthegms.

Fowl. v. n. Hunt birds for food or game.

Such persons as may lawfully hunt, fish, or fowl, have only a qualified property in these animals.—Sir E. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England.

Fowler. s. One who fowls; sportsman;
one who pursues birds.

The fowler warn'd
By those good omens, with swift early steps Treads the crisp earth, ranging through fields and glades. J. Phillips, Cyder.

Offensive to the birds.
With slaught'ring guns th' unwary'd fowler
roves,
When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves. Pope.

Fowling. verbal abs. Act of catching birds with birdlime, nets, and other devices; employment of shooting birds; falconry or hawking; (as in 'fishing and fowling,' common as the first element of a compound).

Fowlingpiece. s. Gun for the shooting of birds.

'Tis necessary that the countryman be provided with a good fowlingpiece.—Mortimer.

Fox. v. [A.S.] Animal so called; Canis vulpes.

These retreats are more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors.—Lodge.

2. By way of reproach, applied to a knave or cunning fellow.

O how the old fox stunk, I warrant thee,
When the rank fit was on him. Olney, Venice Preserved.

3. Formerly a cant expression for a sword.

O signieur Dew, thou dost on point of fox!
He's hurt too, he cannot go far; I made my father's old fox fly about his ears.—De Witt and Fletcher, Philaster.

The wingard of the house of Shrewsbury is not like it, nor the twofolded fox of John Falstaff, which he used in number fourteen out of seven principal assailants!—Gayton, Notes on Don Quixote, p. 17.

4. British salt water fish so called; Callionymus dracunculius; in Cornwall, Sculpin.

The Sculpin Dracuncul, so called probably from the dingy hue of its colours as compared with those of its generic companion, is the most common species of the two on various parts of the coast, but generally occurs of small size. It is frequently taken at the mouth of the Thames, where, on account of its rebellious appearance, it is called the fox.—Yarrell, British Fishes.

Fox. v. a. [?] Stupify; make drunk.

The Dutch—by reason of their custom of immoderate bibbing, and so often being fox'd, were by the best nations of Europe pointed at as muzzling asses.
—Translation of Boccaccio, p. 51: 1620.

The drunkard that should ought to justify his heedlessness by affirming, that he never foxes himself, but with one sort of wine.—Doyle, Against the Custom of Necessitating, p. 34.

Foxcase. s. Fox's skin.

One had better be laugh'd at for taking a foxcase for a fox, than be derided by taking a live fox for a case.—Sir R. L. Estrange.

Foxglove. s. [A.S. foxes clife.] The import of each of the elements is uncertain, the name being peculiar to England.
In Germany it is fingerhut (= finger hat, or thimble); and, in the languages derived from the Latin, digitalis (digitus = finger).
The shape of the flower makes both these names intelligible. Anything pointing towards the fox is found only in the Norwegian, ræcebiolle, rebbiolle, robiolle, ræce-bielle, where ræce = fox. These are pre-vival, the Danish being, as the German, fingerhat. That the first element has nothing to do with the botanist Fuchs (see Fuchsia), as has been suggested, is shown by these Norwegian forms as well as by the
A.S. The latter element is probably connected with Clove.] Native plant so called, Digitalis purpurea.

In drier places, the handsome foxglove is beautifully contrasted with the golden yellow of the ragwort (Senecio Jacobina).—Ansted, The Channel Islands, p. 170.

Foxhound. s. Hound for chasing foxes.

Who lavishes his wealth,
On racer, fox-hound, hawk, or spaniel. Shenstone.

Foxhunter. s. Sportsman who hunts foxes.

The foxhunters went their way, and then out came the fox.—Sir E. E. Kildrange.

John Willm, foxhunter, broke his neck over a six-bar gate.—Speedwell.

Such absurdity must have shocked even the roughest and plainest foxhunter in the house.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xviii.

Foxhunting. part. pref. Having the tastes or habits of a foxhunter.

Collier had taxed him [Congreve] with profaneness for calling a clergyman Mr. Prie, and for introducing a coachman named Jehu, in allusion to the King of Israel, who was known at a distance by his furious driving. Had there been nothing worse in the Old Bachelor and Double Dealer, Congreve might pass for as pure a writer as Cowper himself, who, in poems reviled by so austere a censor as John Newton, calls a fox-hunting squire Nimrod, and gives to a chaplain the disrespectful name of Smug.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Comic Dramatists of the Restoration.

Foxing. s. See extract.

Foxing [is] a term employed by brewers to characterize the souring of beer, in the process of its fermentation or ripening.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Foxlike. adj. Resembling the cunning of a fox.

There is such foxlike craft, and such methods of deceit.—Goodman, Winter Evening's Conference, iii.

Foxly. adj. Having the qualities of a fox.

Their foxlike hearts, their traitorous foxly brain, Or prove them base, of racial race engendered, Or from hault lineage bastard-like descended.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 407.

Foxship. s. Character or qualities of a fox; cunning; mischievous art.

Hadst thou foxship To banish him that struck men blows for Rome, Than thou hast spoken words?

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 2.

Foxtail. s. Native grass so called of the genus Alopecurus (ἀλώπηξ = fox, οὐρά = tail).

Fox-tails hath many grasse leaves or blades, rough and hairy, like unto those of barley, but less and shorter. The stalk is likewise soft and hairy; whereupon doth grow a small spike or ear, soft and very downy, bristled with very small hairs, in shape like unto a fox-tail, whence it took its name, which dieth at the approach of winter, and recovereth itself the next year by falling of its seed. There is one or two varieties of this plant in the large-ness and smallness of the ear.—Gerarde, Herball, ed. 1633.

Foxy. adj.

1. Having the character of a fox.

Devilish hatred and malice, fox williness, foxlike raveling and devouring.—Archbishop Cranmer on the Sacrament, fol. 110.

2. In Painting. Unduly red, applied to those shades of brown wherein the redder and lighter pigments have been too freely used.

Foy. s. [Fr. foi.] Faith; allegiance. Obsolete.

He Easterland subdued, and Denmark won, And of them both did foy and tribute raise.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Foy. s. [?] Feast given by one who is about to leave a place. In Kent, according to Grose, a treat to friends 'either at going abroad or coming home.'

It is a passionate lover of morning-draughts, which he generally continues till dinner time; a rigid exactor of nun-grants, and collector general of foys and libations [beverages].—England's Jest, Character of a Bad Husband, 1687.

To Westminster with Captain Lambert, and there he did at the Dog give me and some other friends his foy, he being to set sail to-day toward the Straights.—Pope's Diary, 1681.

There is an inn at Ramsgate, still called the 'Foy Boat.'

Fract. v. a. Break; violate; infringe.

Fractured. part. adj. Broken; violated; infringed. (In the first of the following extracts, which are the only ones in which either Johnson or his successors have seen it, being put in the mouth of Pistol, it is scarcely to be considered as a word used seriously.)

Nym, thou hast spoke aright, His heart is fractured and corroborate.

Shakespeare, Henry V. II. 1.

His days and times are past, And my reliance on his fractured dates Has sent my credit.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, i. 2.

Fractio. s. [Lat. fractio, -onis; fractura; fractus, pass. part. of frango = break.]

1. Act of breaking; state of being broken.

The surface of the earth hath been broken, and the parts of it dislocated; several parcels of nature remain still the evident marks of fractio and ruin.—Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. Fragment; broken part of an integral.

The fractures of her faith, or of her love, The fragments, scraps, the bits and grayey reliques Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomedes.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, v. 2.

3. In Arithmetic. See second extract.

Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, consisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fractio and broken parts.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

A fractio is a part, or parts, of the unit, and written with two figures, with a line between them, as $\frac{1}{2}$, $\frac{3}{4}$, &c. The figure above the line is called the numerator, and the under one the denominator, which shows how many parts the unit is divided into; and the numerator shows how many of those parts are meant by the fractio.—Walkingame, Tutor's Assistant.

When I speak of expressing in the form of a fractio, the probability in favour of the truth of some proposition, it has been by some persons assumed, tacitly though not in express words—that the opposite fractio—the remaining chances, must express the probability of the proposition's being false. Thus, if certain witnesses depose to having seen A. B. in London at a certain time; and it is calculated that the result of their testimony goes to establish a probability equal to $\frac{1}{2}$, that he was there at that time, it is assumed, without the smallest grounds, that this amounts to a probability (equal to $\frac{1}{2}$) of his having not been in London, but elsewhere; whereas in truth there is no title of evidence to that effect. The $\frac{1}{2}$ only expresses the compatibility of his absence from London with the existence of the testimony of those witnesses.—Whately, Logic, postscript.

4. Schism: (itself from σχιζω = split). Rare.

To one of these heads most of the disputes of Christendom may be reduced; so that I believe the present fractio are from the same cause which St. Paul observed in the Corinthian schism.—Jeremy Taylor, Liberty of Prophecy, 423. (Ord M.S.)

Fractious. adj. Belonging to, comprising, or constituted by, a broken number.

We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractious numbers.—Cocker, Arithmetic.

Beginning with the ancient republics, we see that, even in those which admitted the numerical or democratic principle to the fullest extent, there was, in the first place, a total exclusion of the numerous class of slaves, and, secondly, an exclusion of all free women, and males under a certain age. By these deductions from the principle of an universal comprehension of individual interests, the body of citizens exercising political franchise was reduced to a fractious part of the entire population. For example, in the Athenian State, during its purely democratic period, the numbers would stand thus:—Adult male free citizens, exercising political franchise, 21,000; free women and children, 63,000; slaves, 100,000.—Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, ch. viii.

Fractious. adj. Cross; unmanageable.

Why should he trouble his lordship? I'm sure, if you propose anything in reason, you will not find him fractious.—Morton, School of Reform.

Fracture. s. Breach; separation of continuous parts.

That may do it without any great fracture of the more stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the laws thereof.—Sir M. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

In Surgery.

But thou wilt sin and grief destroy,

That no broken bones may joy,

And tune together in a well-set song,

Full of his praise,

Who dead men raise;

Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong.

Herbert.

Fractures of the skull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected.—Sharp, Surgery.

Fracture. v. a. In Surgery. Break, perhaps with the suggestion of a crack: (as, 'We break our arms and legs, but fracture our skulls'.)

The leg was dressed, and the fractured bones united together.—Wieman, Surgery.

6 M

Fractured. part. adj. Broken. Chiefly used as a term in Surgery; with a general import comparatively rare.

Behold his chair, whose fractured seat infirm An aged cushion hides. Shedden, Economy.

Fragile. adj. [Lat. fragilis, from frag, the root of frango. See Fractio.]

1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.

The stalk of ivy is tough, and not fragile.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
When subtle wits have spun their threads too fine, 'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line.

Sir J. Denham.

A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet, in the moist substance there is less rot than in what is drier and more fragile.—Gilwille.

2. Weak; uncertain; easily destroyed.

Much ostentation vain of fleshy arm And fragile arms, much instrument of war, Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought.

Milton, Paradise Regained, III. 387.

Fragility. s. Frigile character of anything.

1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.

To make an illustration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for two or three days.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Weakness; uncertainty; easiness to be destroyed.

Fear the uncertainty of man's fragility, the common chance of war, the violence of fortune.—Kneller, History of the Turks.

3. Frailty; lialleness to fault.

All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility.—Sir H. Wotton.

Fragment. s. [Lat. fragmentum = piece broken off; from the same root as Fractio.] Part broken from the whole; imperfect piece.

He who late a sceptre did command, Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand.

Dryden.

If a thin or plated body, which being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be split into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness, with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

Frage. s. [Condemned as 'not elegant nor in use' by Johnson. At present it is a word which few, except so far as they knew of Johnson's dictum, and deferred to it, would abstain from.] Composed of fragments.

She, she's gone; she's gone: when thou know'st this.

What fragments rubbish this world is, Thou know'st, and that it is not worth a thought; He knows it too too much that thinks it nought.

Donne.

Life is a journey in a dusty way; the furthest rest is death. In this some go more heavily burdened than others; swift and active pilgrims come to the end of it in the morning or at noon, which tortoise-paced wretches, plagued with the fragments rubbish of the world, scarce with great travel crawl into at midnight. Cyprian, Three, 122. (Ord M.S.)

Frage. s. [Lat.] Crash.

To earth's extent his winged lightning flies, Pursued by hideous frage; though before The flames descend, they in their branches rise.

J. Sandys, Paraphrase of the Book of Job, p. 54.

The clouds in storms of rain descend;

The air thy hideous frage rend.

Id., Poems, lxxvii.

Arms clashing, trumpets, from the rising sun

Horrible frage, heard by all.

Id., Christ's Passion, notes, p. 111.

Frage. s. Scrit. Derived from fragor, a hypothetical congener of fragrant, and deprived of the second r. As in the previous word, the examples are from one author.

Garkins here for grandeur and frage are such as no city in Asia outvies.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years' Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 163.

[The monk] by its frage is oft discovered by the careless passenger.—Id., p. 303.

Frage. s. Sweetness of smell; pleasing scent; grateful odour.

Ever separate he spies, Veil'd in a cloud of frage, where he stood Half-spy'd.

Milton, Paradise Lost, II. 421.

Frage. s. Same as Frage.

I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of colewrets and cabbage springing up in their full frage 1001 and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heat.—Addison, Spectator.

Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrant.—Garth.

Fragrant, adj. [Lat. fragens, -antis = sweet smelling.] Odorous; sweet of smell.

Fragrant the fertile earth
After soft showers; and sweet the coming on
Of grateful evening mild.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 648.
At morn the nymph vouchsaf'd to place
Upon her head the various wreath:
The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;
Their scent less fragrant than her breath.

Fragrant, adv. In a fragrant manner.
As the hope begin to change colour, and smell fragrant, you may conclude them ripe.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Frail, s. [N.Fr. frayel.] Basket made of rushes.

A frail of flags.—Barret, Alceste, 1580.
What would you now give for her's some five frail
Of rotten flags, good reason?
Boamont and Fletcher, Honest Man's Fortune.
Three fraile of sprats carried from mart.

Id., Queen of Corinth.
Frail, adj. [Fr. frêle, from Lat. fragilis; from the root frag-. See Fraction.]

1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.

I know my body's of so frail a kind,
As force without, fivers within can kill.

Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.
When with care we have raised an imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand.—Rogers.

2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.

The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amies, then may these also speak amies; man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore any man fail in words.—Jeremy Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

Frailness, s. Attribute suggested by Frail; weakness; instability.

Such is the frailness of our nature.—Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 34.

There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so towering and unstable as the virtue of a coward.—Norris.

Frailty, s.

1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind; infirmity.

Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor,
ii. 1.

God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do.—Locke.

2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity: (in this sense it has a plural).

Love did his reason blind,
And love's the noblest frailty of the mind.

Dryden, Indian Emperor.
That Christians are now not only like other men in their frailties and infirmities, might be in some degree excusable; but the complaint is, they are like heathens in all the main and chief articles of their lives.—Law.

Frame, v. n. [A.S. fremman = go forward, proceed, get on, make progress, succeed in anything.] In the following extract contrive, manage. Rare.

And he said Sibbthol; for he could not frame to pronounce it aright.—Judges, xii. 6.

Frame, v. a.

1. Form or fabricate by orderly construction and union of various parts.

They rather cut down their timber to frame it, and to do necessaries to their convenient use, than to fight.—Abbot.

How timber, saw it, frame it, and set it together.
—Mortimer.

2. Make; compose; draw up.

These chasing out few words most horrible,
Thereof did verse frame. Spenser, Faerie Queen.
As wine mingled with water is pleasant, and delecteth
the taste; even so speech, finely framed, delecteth the ears of them that read the story.—Spenser, xv. 38.

His master, he wrote, had learnt with amazement that King William, Holland, and other powers,— for the ambassador, prudent even in his blustering, did not choose to name the King of France,—were engaged in framing a treaty, not only for settling the succession to the Spanish crown, but for the detestable purpose of dividing the Spanish monarchy.

—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xiv.

3. Regulate; adjust.

Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it.—Archbishop Tillotson.

4. Form to any rule or method by study or precept.

Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame
Thyself forsooth heretofore theirs.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iii. 2.
I have been a traitor to the law;
I never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the law unto my will.

Id., Henry VI. Part I. ii. 4.
5. Form and digest by thought.

The most abstract ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it find either from objects of sense, or from its own operations about them.—Locke.

Full of that flame his tender senses he warms,
And frames his goddess by your matchless charms.

Grausville.
How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years.—Wall.

6. Contrive; plan.

Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

7. Settle; scheme out.

Though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 3.
8. Invent; fabricate: (as, 'to frame a story,'
'to frame a lie').

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricities and epicycles.—Bacon.

Frame, s.

1. Fabric; anything constructed of various parts or members.

For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust.—Psalms, ciii. 14.

If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen.—Hooke, Reasonings of Polity.

Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence.—Bacon.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! thus thou this universal frame.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 153.
The gate was adamant; eternal frame,
Which heav'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came.

The labour of a god; and all along,
Tough from plates wroth'cleth'd, to make it strong.

Dryden.
Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame.

Id., Alexander's Feast.
We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author.—Archbishop Tillotson.

2. Anything made so as to enclose or admit something else.

Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mis-chance.—Boyle.

His picture scarcely would deserve a frame.
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shew where it rubs against the palm of one's hand.—*Sir
I. Newton, Opticks*.

3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.

A woman that is like a German clock,
Still a reminding, ever out of frame,
And never going aright.

Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, iii. 1.
Your steady soul preserves her frame:
In good and evil times the same.

4. Scheme; order.

Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church.
—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

5. Contrivance; projection.

John the Bastard,
Whose spirits toil in frame of villanies.
Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, iv. 1.

6. In Horticulture, construction either that of an arborescent, or the first element in a compound: (as, 'frame plants').

7. Shape; form; proportion.

A bear's a savage beast,
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame.

Butler, Hudibras.
Frameable, adj. Capable of being framed, or worked into shape; conformable; obedient.

If the people in their degree do yield themselves frameable to the truth, not like rough stone or flint, refusing to be smoothed and squared for the building.—Hooke, Sermon upon St. Jude. (Ord 118.)

Each of these five (regions) where they are frame-able to civility, and answer the writs of the prince's courts, are sainted into wives or countess.—Tim's Storehouse, 900. (Ord 118.)

Frainer, s. One who frames; maker;
former; contriver; schemer.

The forger of his own fate, the framer of his future, should be improper, if actions were predetermined.—Hammond.

There was want of accurateness in experiments in the first original framer of these medals. Archæol., Tables of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

Framework, s. Work done in a frame.

Doubtless a staunch and solid piece of framework
—Milton, A Song of Satan.

Frankpled, adj. [see Froward.] Feevish;
boisterous; rugged; crossgrained.

Her husband! Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him; she leads a very frankpled life with him.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.

The frankpled man could not be pacified.—Bishop Hacket, Life of Archbishop Williams.

In Poinsey grown so misapport, so frankpled!
Boamont and Fletcher, Wit at several Venues.

I pray thee, grow not frankpled now.
R. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

Like faithless wife, that by her frankpled guide,
Feevish demeanour, sullen and disdain,
Both duly deep the sprightly melancholia
Of her aggrieved husband.

Dr. H. More, Song of the Soul, i. 3, 40.
As if a child should govern the house, because he will be frankpled, and disquieted, otherwise!—Thornike, On Forbearance, &c., p. 83: 1670.

Franch, or Franchise, v. a. [? connected with the German fressen—eat.] Devour.

Rare.
I saw a river stop'd with storms of wind,
When through a swan, a bull, a bear did pass,
Franching the fish and fry with teeth of brass.

J. Bulstun, Mirror for Magistrates.
(Nares by H. & W.)

Franchise, s. [Fr. franchise.]

1. Exemption from any onerous duty; privilege; immunity; right granted.

They granted their markets, and other franchises,
and erected corporate towns among them.—*Sir J.
Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland*.

His gracious edict the same franchise yields
To all the wild increase of woods and fields.

Dryden.
The old English government was one of a class in monarchies which sprang in Western Europe during the middle of the 11th century.

Their polity naturally took the same form. . . . All had kings, and in all the kindly office became by degrees strictly hereditary. All had nobles bearing titles which had originally indicated military rank. The dignity of knighthood, the rules of heraldry, were common to all. All had richly endowed ecclesiastical establishments, municipal corporations enjoying large franchises, and counties whose consent was necessary to the validity of some public acts.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. i.

2. District; extent of jurisdiction.

There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

3. Freedom; free character; openness. Rare.

The mildness that is inwardly, and lodged up in a Frenchman's heart, makes plain outward shew and appearance in his countenance. In his forehead be carrieth a nature's franchise and freedom in life and civil conversation.—Tim's Storehouse, p. 100.
(Ord 118.)

4. Right, or power, of voting in elections for the House of Commons; principle according to which such power is enacted; amount of property constituting it.

The elections for Exeter appear to have been in that age governed by the nation with peculiar interest. For Exeter was not only one of the largest and most thriving cities in the kingdom, but was also the capital of the West of England, and was much frequented by the gentry of several counties.
The franchise was popular. Party spirit ran high;

and the contests were among the fiercest and the longest of which there is any record in our history.—Macclesley, History of England, ch. xiv.

Franchise. v. a.

1. Enfranchise: (this latter being the commoner word).

So I have no honour

In seeking to augment it; till will keep

My bowen franchise'd, and alligiance clear.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 1.

2. Possess a right or privilege.

To speak we franchise'd are,

Because we serv'd for peace.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 477.

Franchisement. s. Release; freedom.

To work Irona's franchisement,

And eke Grantorto's worthy punishment.

Spenser, Faerie Queen, v. 11, 34.

Francolin. s. [Italian, francolino.] Bird

so called akin to the partridges, of the genus or subgenus Francolinus.

Certain divisions adopted by our author in the genus Perdix, have been necessitated by the differences of conformation or habits observed in certain of its numerous species. The true partridge, as we have observed, never live in forests; they do not perch habitually, and never frequent humid or moist situations. All the francoline live in forests along the banks of rivers. They perch on trees during the day, and always at night they frequent marshy and humid places, where they find a different sort of aliment from that which the true partridges are habituated to seek in open plains and cultivated fields. There are marked differences of habits and manners; but dissimilarity of form is not so great. . . . The name francolina is the francolin of the Italians. This name is applied to different birds, but more especially to this species, on account of the exemption it enjoys from being shot at indiscriminately, on account of its rarity and the excellence of its flesh.—Translation of Cuvier's Règne Animal.

Fragible. adj. Fragile; brittle; easily broken.

Though it seem the softest wool, if wrought before it be well seasoned, it will show itself very fragile.—Boyle.

Franson. s. Paramour; boon companion.

First, by her side did sit the bold Sansloy,

Fit mate for such a musing minion,

Who in her bosom took exceeding joy;

Might not be found a franker franson,

Of her lewd parts to make conjunction.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

He's a frank franson, a merry companion,

Heavened, Reign of Edward IV. sign. c. 5; 1000.

Frank. adj. [from Fr. franc=free.]

1. Liberal; generous; not niggardly.

Your kind old father, whose frank heart gave all,—

O! that way madness lies; let me shun that.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 4.

The modest sorts of trees yield little more, for the reason of the frank putting up of the sap into the boughs.—Baron.

'Tis the ordinary practice of the world to be frank of civilities that cost them nothing.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

2. Open; ingenuous; sincere; not reserved.

I shall have reason

To show the love and duty that I bear you,

With franker spirit. Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 3.

3. Without conditions; without payment.

Thou hast it won; for it is of frank gift,

And he will care for all the rest to shift.

Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.

We will that all the Jews, that either before or since have been taken and led away, . . . shall be sent frank and free.—Donne, History of the Septuagint, p. 25.

5. [from Fr. franc=a place to feed hogs in.]

Fatted; in good condition: (this seems to be the primary sense).

When they were once franked and fat, they stoude up together proudly against the Lord and his words.—Bale, Dis course on the Revelations, pt. 1. sign. l. iii.

Frank. s. [from N.Fr. franc=sty.]

1. Place to feed hogs in; sty.

Where sups he? Both the old boar fed in the old frank?—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. ii. 2.

He feeds like a boar in a frank.—Rap, Proverbs.

2. Letter which pays no postage (from the third sense of the adjective).

You'll have immediately, by several franks, my epistle to lord Cobham.—Pope, Letter to Swift.

Frank. v. a.

1. Shut up in a frank or sty.

In the sty of this most bloody boar,

My son George Stanley in frank'd up in hold.

Shakespeare, Richard III. iv. 4.

2. Feed high; fat; cram.

The husbandmen and farmers never franked them (hogs) above three or four months.—Hollingshead, Description of Britain, bk. iii. p. 1000.

Our desire is rather to frank up ourselves with that which we should abhor.—Archbishop Seale, Sermons, fol. 155, b.

Frank. v. a. Exempt letters from postage.

My lord Orrey writes to you to-morrow; and you see I send this under his cover, or at least franked by him.—Swift.

Gazettes went gratis down, and frank'd,

For which thy patron's weekly thank'd.

Pope, Imitations, Swift.

They turn the letters over and over, and upside and down; arrange, confine, mistake, assort; pretend, like Chimæpoulton, to decipher illegible franks, and deliver with a slight remark, which is intended as a friendly admonition, the documents of the unlucky wight who encourages unpurloined correspondence. A letter was delivered to Miss Inver, she started, exclaimed, blushed, and low it upon, 'Only you, only you,' she said, extending her hand to the young Duke, 'only you were capable of this!' It was a letter from Arundel Dacre, not only written but franked by him.—Diary of the younger, The Young Duke, ch. vi.

It was on the 21st of December, 1819, that your humble servant received a post letter, franked by Mr. Tulwell, one of the county members for Berkshire, for my Lord Millicent was always too generous with his franks, and never had any to spare for himself.—Sala, Dutch Pictures, Wild Mr. Will.

Frankalmoine. s. See extract.

The same which we in Latin call libera ecclesiastica, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers by the name of a tenure in frank almoe, or frankalmoe, which, according to Brillon, is a tenure by ancient service.—Argliff, Glossary Juris Canonici. The church taking possession of the state tenure in frankalmoe, that is, by the service of religion—came first.—G. H. Parnon, The early and middle Ages of England, ch. xxiv.

Frankchase. s. Free chase; liberty of free chase.

A forest is of so princely a tenure, that, according to our laws, none but the king can have a forest: if he chance to pass one over to a subject, 'tis no more forest, but frank-chase.—Houelt, Letters, iv. 14.

Frankincense. s. See extract.

Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acrid, and resinous taste. It is very fusillanable. The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it continues to be in many parts. We are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and as to the tree which produces it.—Sir J. Hill, Materia Medica.

Black ebony only will in India grow,

And od'rous frankincense on the Sabaean branch.

Order and frankincense, an od'rous idly

Flann'd on the earth, and wide perfum'd the isle.

Pope.

Franklin. s. See extracts.

A spacious court they see,
Both plain and pleasant to be walked in,
Where then does meet a franklin fair and free.

Spenser, Faerie Q.

A franklin: his outside is an ancient gentleman of England; though his inside may give arms (with the best gentleman), and never see the herald.—S. T. Overbury, Character, sign. O. 6.

Thereupon joyfully in ancient time, when as this our kingdom was much oppress'd with servile state and condition, the word Franklin, for a man made free or enfranchised, was in use, except you had rather it to have been used for a freelance-man.—Time's Storehouse, 434. (Orl MS.)

There are many now grown into families, now called Franklins: who are men in the county of Middlesex, and other parts, 'magnis ditati possessionibus'.—Walsheane, Commentary on Portuense, p. 384.

She can start our franklin's daughters,
In their sleep, with shrieks and laughter.

B. Jonson, Entertainments.

Frankly. adv. In a frank manner.

1. Liberally; freely; kindly; readily; without reserve.

When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both.—Lucretius, vii. 42.

By the toughness of the earth the sap cannot get up to spread so frankly as it should do.—Baron, Natural and Experimental History.

I value my garden more for being full of black-birds than cherries, and very frankly give them fruit for their wages.—Spectator.

2. Without constraint.

The lords mounted their servants upon their own horses; and they, with the volunteers, who frankly listed themselves, amounted to a body of two hundred and fifty horse.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

6 M 2

Frankness. s. Attribute suggested by Frank; plainness of speech; openness; ingenuousness.

He delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, by word, what Anlander had told him touching the strange story.—Sir P. Sidney.
Much hurt hath grown to the church of God, though in false imagination, that fasting staunch men in no stead for any spiritual respect, but only to take down the frankness of nature, and to tame the wildness of flesh.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity. (Orl MS.)

Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship; his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner he intended to do afterwards.—Addison, Guardian.

Frankpledge. s. [Lat.] See extract.

For the ancient custom of England for the preservation of the publick peace was, that every free born man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights, and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the covenant thereof was called decessura, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs in every county did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they remained in due shape or order; this branch of the sheriffs' authority was called view frankpledge, view of frankpledge.—Curcell.
Perhaps the enforcement of the frankpledge system has been confounded with their establishment.—G. H. Parnon, The early and middle Ages of England, ch. 21.

Frantic. adj. [see Phrenetic, of which it is a modification.]

1. Outrageously and turbulently mad.

Far off, he wonders what makes him so glad;
Of Bacchus merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybele's frantic rites have made them mad.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

2. Transported by violence of passion; outrageous; turbulent.

Extending, in the frantic error of their minds, the greatest madness in the world to be wisest, and the highest wisdom foolishness.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

To such height their frantic passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy.

Dryden.

She tears her hair, and frantic in her griefs,
Calls out on Lucia.

Addison, Cato.

Frantically. adv. In a frantic manner; madly; distractedly; outrageously.

What wise men do think of them that so frantically on their acknowledgments do prattle, it is easy to conjecture.—Bale, Ireland's New Year's Gift.
Yet still would they his sacred laws transgress . . .
Against their Saviour frantically rebel.

Sundys, Poems, 78.

Frape. s. ? Mob. Rare.

'Tis strange this fiery rage, thought I,
Should thus for moderation cry.

Hudibras Redivivus, pt. 1. vol. 1.

Thus laws for want of execution
Spoil every nation's constitution;
Let loose the frappe to show the folly,
And spare at all that's good and holy.

Ibid.

And where our minister of an age
Was fond to show his ugly shape,
And to the blushing frappe dispense
The very cream and quintessence
Of envy, pride, and impudence.

Ibid., pt. v. vol. 1. (Nares by D. and W.)

Frappier. s. ? One of the mob. Rare.

I say to thee thou art rude, detached, impudent, coarse, unpolished, and a frappier and base.—B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, ll. 1. (Rich.)

Frapping. s. ? Quarrelling.

What double and indirect dealing is this (quoth the Sammites), what frapping is here to no purpose (quoth perplex agimus).—Holland, Translation of Livy, p. 257. (Rich.)

Idemeneus, in frapping prompt,
What mean'st thou thus to prate?
This babbling little thee becomes,
Such clattering men do hate.

Id., Translation of Plutarch, p. 32. (Rich.)

Frappet. s. ? Pet. Rare.

Why my little frappet you, I heard thy uncles talk of thy riches, that thou hadst hundreds a year.—Wilkins, The Inforced Marriage. (Rich.)

Fraternai. adj. [Fr. fraternel; Lat. fraternus.] Brotherly; pertaining to brothers; becoming brothers.

One shall rise
Of proud ambitious heart; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion underneath
O'er his brethren. Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 24.
The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow Christians, or of the governors of the church, then more public reprobations; and upon their unsuccessfulness, the censures of the church, until he reform and return.—Hammond.

Plead it to her,
With all the strength and heats of eloquence
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire.

Fraternity. s. [Fr. fraternité; Lat. fraternitas.]

1. Brotherhood; body of men united, or supposed to be united, as brethren; corporation; society; association.

"Is a necessary rule in alliances, societies, and fraternities, and all manner of civil contracts, to have a strict regard to the honour of those we have to do with."—Sir E. L'Escurgo.

2. Men of the same class or character.

With what terms of respect knaves and rascals will speak of their own fraternity.—South, Sermons.

3. See extract.

Fraternity is also a title . . . which kings and emperors gave each other. So also do bishops and monks.—Encyclopædia.

Fraternization. s. Brotherhood.

I hope that no French fraternization, which the relations of peace and unity with systematical regularity would assuredly, sooner or later, draw after them, even if it should overturn our happy constitution itself, could so change the hearts of Englishmen as to make them deluged in representations and professions, which have no other merit than that of degrading and insulting the name of royalty.—Burke, On a Regicide Prince.

Fraternize. v. n. (The characteristic extract from Todd stands as it was found, many similar ones being expanded, inasmuch as it shows both the antiquity of the word taken simply as a word, and the date when it took currency.) Enter into a state of fraternity.

This word has been supposed to have been introduced at the commencement of the French democratical revolution; when pretensions of universal brotherhood were made the cloak of universal villainy. But the word, both in French and English, is at least of two hundred years' age; for thus Chaucer renders the French fraterniser, 'to fraternize,' to concur with, to be near unto, to agree as brothers. In the cant of modern philosophy, the verb has been actively employed.—Foote.

Burns was the god of my idolatry, as Bowles of yours. I am jealous of your fraternizing with Bowles, when I think you relish him more than Burns, or my old favourite, Cowper.—Lamb, Letter to Coleridge.

Fraternize. v. a. Bring into a state of fraternity; (with accent on the second syllable, in the example).

Our Drawansir none shall escape;
Fleets and armies we'll fit out by dozens;
Expell the Mythenes from the Cape,
And fraternize our Hotentot cousins. Tommy Turey.

Fraternizer. s. One who fraternizes.

At one moment they were stifled in the embrace of French fraternizers; at another forced to crouch beneath the sword of violence.—Burke.

Fratricide. s. [from Lat. fratricidium = killing of a brother.] Murder of a brother.

In an hour and a half we came to a small village called Sindo, just by which is an ancient structure on the top of an high hill, supposed to be the tomb of Abel, and to have given the adjacent country in old times the name of Abilene. The fratricide also is said by some to have been committed in this place.—Mandrell, Journey to Aleppo, p. 134.

Fratricide. s. [from fratricida = killer of a brother.] One who kills a brother.

The infamous fratricide was presently thrown from his usurped greatness.—L. Addison, Description of Western Barbary, p. 16.

Fraud. s. [Lat. fraus, fraudis.]

1. Deceit; cheat; trick; artifice; subtlety; stratagem.

Our better part remains
To work in close design, by fraud or guile,
What force effected not.

Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 642.

For when success a lover's toil attends,
Few ask if force or fraud obtain'd his ends.

Pope, Epique of the Lock, canto ii.

(See also under Fraudulent.)

2. Misfortune; damage; prejudice. Latinism.

At least our curious foe hath said who thought
All like himself rebellious, by whose aid
This inaccessible high strength, the seat
Of Deity supreme, was dispos'd to fall
He trusted to have said'st, and into fraud
Drew many, whom their place knows here no more.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 130.

To all his angola he propos'd
To draw the proud king Ahab into fraud,
That he might fall in Ramoth.

Id., Paradise Regained, l. 371.

Fraudful. adj. Treacherous; artful; trickish; deceitful; subtle.

The witless of us all
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudful man.

Shakespeare, Henry VI, Part II, iii. 1.

His full of fraudful arts,
This well-invented tale for truth imports.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Fraudulence. s. Deceitfulness; trickishness; proneness to artifice.

We admire the providence of God, in the continuance of Scripture, notwithstanding the endeavours of infidels to abolish, and the fraudulence of heretics always to deprave the same.—Hosker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Fraudulency. s. Fraudulence.

The malice, wickedness, and fraudulency of those spirits.—Merle Cambray, Of Credulity and Incredulity in things natural, civil, and divine, p. 35.

Fraudulent. adj.

1. Full of artifice; trickish; subtle; deceitful.

He, with serpent tongue,
His fraudulent temptation thus began.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 530.

2. Performed by artifice; deceitful; treacherous.

Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam,
And frustrated the conquest fraudulent.

Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 607.

3. In Law.

By Stat. 29 Car. II. l. 3 (known more commonly by the name of the 'Statute of Frauds,' and by which various provisions are made as to contracts, wills, &c.) . . . all leases, estates of freehold, or term for years, or any uncertain interest in land, made by livery and seisin only, or by parol, and not put into writing and signed by the parties or their agents, shall have the form of leases at will only. . . . For further matter relating to frauds and fraudulent conveyances, and obtaining relief against them, and as to the operation of the 'Statute of Frauds,' and other statutes . . . see titles Agreement, &c.—Jacob, Law Dictionary.

Fraudulently. adv. In a fraudulent manner; by fraud; by deceit; by artifice; deceitfully.

He that by fact, word, or sign, either fraudulently or violently, does hurt to his neighbour, is bound to make restitution.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercise of Holy Living.

Fraudulous. adj. Fraudulent. Rare.

Many sets himself against the magic arts as fraudulous and deceitful.—Time's Storehouse, p. 61. (Ord 318.)

Fraught. part. [for its relations to its verb see Freight, v. a.] Laden; (as a vessel with its freight).

By this and Una, fraught with anguish sore,
Arriv'd where they in earth their blood had spilt.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

The Scripture in fraught even with laws of nature.—Hosker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
Whosoever hath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and understanding do clarify and break up in the communicating and discoursing with another.—Bacon.

In the narrow seas that part
The French and English, there unscarried
A vessel of our country, richly fraught.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 8.

Hell, their fit habitation, fraught with fire

Unquenchable, the house of woe and pain.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 876.

And now approach'd their fleet from India, fraught

With all the riches of the rising sun,

And precious sand from southern climates brought.

Dryden.

Abdallah and Belfora were so fraught with all kinds of knowledge, and possessed with so constant a passion for each other, that their solitude never lay heavy on them.—Addison.

Fraught. s. Freight.

Yield up, oh love, thy crown and parted throne
To tyrannous hate; swell, bosom, with thy fraught,
For 'tis of aspics' tongues.

Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 2.

The bark that all our blessings brought,
Char'd with thyself and James, a doubly royal fraught.

Fraught. v. a. [see Freight.] Load (as a vessel); burden. Obsolete.

Hence from my sight:
If after this command thou fraught the court
With thy unworthiness, thou dy'st.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline, i. 2.

Being fraught with sundry base notions, and cold amplifications.—Bacon, Observations on a Letter to Lord

Having now full fraught himself with wealth.—Fuller, Holy State, p. 126.

Which shameful libels were fraught only with odious and scurrilous calumnies.—Sir G. Paul, Life of Archbishop Whitgift, p. 52.

Fraughtage. s. Lading; cargo. Obsolete.

Our fraughtage, sir,
I have convey'd aboard.

Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, iv. 1.

On that persuasion am I returned, as to a famous and free port, myself also bound by more than a maritime law, to expose as freely what fraughtage I conceive to bring of no trifling.—Milton, Tetra-

Fray. v. a. [from Fr. effrayer.] Fright; terrify.

Fishes are thought to be frayed with the motion caused by noise upon the water.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

These vultures prey only on carcasses, on such stupid minds as have not life and vigour to fray them away.—Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.

Fray. s.

1. Battle; fight.

Time tells, that on that ever blessed day,
When Christian swords with Puritan blood were dy'd,

The furious prince Tancred from that fray

His coward foes chased through forests wide.

Fairfax, Translation of Tasso.

He left them to the fates in bloody fray

To toil and struggle through the well-fought day.

Byron.

2. Duel; combat.

Since, if we fall before th' appointed day,
Nature and death continue long their fray.

Sir J. Denham.

3. Broil; quarrel; riot; violence.

'I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a revell voice, and turn two mining steps
Into a manly stride, and speak of frays
Like a true bragging youth.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 4.

Fray. v. a. [from Fr. frayer.]

1. Rub; wear.

Six round-about aprons with pockets, and four striped muslin night-rails very little frayed.—Tatler,
no 245.

2. Rubbish, as a deer his head, by rubbing.

A deer is said to fray his head, when she rubs it against a tree.—Whalley, Notes on B. Jonson.

Fraying. verbal abs. Peeling of a deer's horn.

For by his slot, his entries, and his port,
His frayings, forewits, he doth promise sport.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

Frayn. v. a. [A.S. frinan.] Ask. Rare.

I musing frayn her meaning; she
Her meaning thus did tell.
That flaming region ever such (Quoth she) is Pluto's hell.

Warner, Albion's England, b. vii.

(Nars by H. & W.)

Freak. s. [?] Sudden fancy; humour;
whim; capricious prank.

O! but I fear the fickle freaks, quoth she,
Of fortune, and the odds of arms in field.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Meanwhile less joyous of his fame

Than jealous of his freaks,

Her wrong Queen Juno on the trails

Of Jupiter she rears.

Warner, Albion's England, b. iii.

When that freak had taken possession of a fantastical head, the distemper is incurable.—Sir E. L'Es-

She is restless and peevish, and sometimes in a freak will instantly change her habitation.—Spectator.

To vex me more, he took a freak

To slit my tongue, and make me speak.

Swift.

Where were these priests and prelates who had,
from ten thousand pulpits, proclaimed the duty of obeying the anointed delegate of God? Some of them had been imprisoned: some had been plundered: all had been placed under the iron rule of the High Commission, and were in hourly fear lest some new freak of tyranny should deprive them of their freedom and leave them without a morsel of bread.—Mason, History of England, ch. ix.

freck. v. a. [?] Variegated; chequer.
The white pink, and the paucy freck'd with jet.
Milton, Lycidas, 144.
There furry nations harbour:
Sables of glossy black, and dark embrown'd,
Or luscious, freck'd with many a mingled hue.
Thomson, Seasons, Winter.

freckish. adj. Capricious; humoursome.
Folly is freckish and humorous.—Barrow, vol. 1. serm. 1.

One grain of true sense and true wisdom, in real worth and use, doth outweigh loads of freckish wit.—Id., Sermon on Ephesians, v. 4.

It may be a question, whether the wife or the woman was the more freckish of the two; for she was still the same uneasy freckish.—Sir E. D. Strangely.

'What?' straight I'm taken up, 'an ant, a fly, A tiny mite, which we can hardly see Without a perspective, a silly one, Or freckish eye? There you affirm that these Have greater sense than man?' Ay, questionless; Doctor, I find you're shocked at this discourse.
Oldham, Eighth Satire of Boileau, imitated.

frecks. s. [? Fret.] See extracts.

Frecks be in a shaft as well as in a bow, and they be much like a canker, cresspunge and encrescence in those places in a bow, which be much weaker than the other.—Ascham, Tussophilus, p. 156. (Nares by H. & W.)

Frecks be first little pinches, the which when you proceed, pike the places about the pinches to make them somewhat weaker, and so the pinches shall dye and never encrease further into frecks.—Id. (Nares by H. & W.)

freckle. v. a. Mark with freckles, or spots like freckles.

freckle. s.

1. Spot in the skin caused by the sun.

Buddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue;
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whom dusk set off the whiteness of the skin.
Dryden.

2. Any small spot or discoloration.

The cowdipall tell her panderers to;
In their gold curls spots you see;
Those be rubies' fairy favours;
In those freckles live their favours.
Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, li. 1.
The far-well fronts and castery winds now spot your tulips; therefore cover such with mate, to prevent freckles.—Ecloga.

freckled. part. adj. Marked with freckles, either actual or approximate, i.e. spots that may be compared to them.

Sometimes we'll angle at the brook,
The freckled trout to take
With alken worms.
Now thy face charms every shepherd,
Spotted over like a leopard;
And thy freckled neck display'd,
Envy breeds in every maid.
Swift.

free. adj. [A.S. freoh.]

1. Being at liberty, as opposed to one in a state of vassalage, slavery, servitude, imprisonment, dependence, or constraint of any kind.

Their use of mens was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a public constitution for the ordering of the church.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any conditions of subjection.—Sir W. Temple.

Free, what, and fetter'd with so many chains?
Dryden.

How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will?—Locke.

This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
Time far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains.
Prior.

Set an unhappy wretch free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee.
Id.

2. Permitted; allowed; open.

Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free for me as for you?
Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, i. 2.

Defaming as impure what God declares Pure; and commands to some, leaves free to all.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 746.

3. Licentious; unrestrained.

O conspiracy!
Sham't thou to show thy dang'rous brow by night,
When evils are most free.
Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, li. 1.

Physicians are too free upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends.—Sir W. Temple.
I know there are to whose presumptuous thoughts Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem faulty.
Pope, Essay on Criticism.

4. Open; ingenuous; frank.

Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great laughter.—Hakewill, Apology.

Cassio, I have doubts within my heart;
Will you be free and candid to your friend?
Osway, The Orphan.

Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe.
Prior.

5. Liberal; not parsimonious: (with of).

Gloster too, a foe to citizens
Overcharging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part 1. iii. 3.

'Tis not to make me jealous;
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well.
Id., Othello, iii. 3.

Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works.—Pope.

No statute in his favour says,
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as others spare.
Id., Imitations of Horace.

6. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.

We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask.—Bacon, New Atlantis.

7. Clear from distress.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 6.

8. Guiltless; innocent.

Make mad the guilty, and appal the free,
Confound the ignorant, and baffle the free.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, ii. 2.
My hands are guilty, but my heart is free.
Dryden.

9. Exempt: (with of sometimes, more properly from).

These
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.

Let envy, then, these crimes within you see,
From which the happy never must be free.
Dryden.

Their steeds around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Id.
The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions.—Locke.

10. Invested with franchises; possessing anything without vassalage; admitted to the privileges of any body: (with of).

He therefore makes all birds of every sort
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
Their several kinds alike, and equally protect.
Dryden.

What dost thou make a shipboard? To what end
Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Start-staring mad, that thou shouldst tempt the sea?
Id.

11. Without expense; by charity: (as, 'a free school').

Countenance all loyal, allowed, free grammar-schools, by causing, as much as in you lies, the youth of the nation to be bred up there.—South, Sermons, v. 48.

12. Accomplished; genteel; charming.

Now were they liegemen to this lady free, [the fair Britonart].
Spenser, Faerie Queen, iii. 1. 44.

I meant to make her fair, and free, and wise,
Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great.
B. Jonson, On Lucy, Countess of Bedford.

13. Ready; eager. We still use the phrase, 'a free horse.'

Baunting the forest wide on courser free.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, i. 9. 12.

14. Not determined by necessity. See Free-will.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell:
Not free, what proof could they have giv'n sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
When only what they needs must do, appear'd;
Not what they would?
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 102.

It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent.—South.

Make free. Take liberties.

Free. v. a.

1. Set at liberty; rescue from slavery or captivity; loose; liberate.

'o recovered the temple, freed the city, and upheld the laws which were going down.—S. Macdonald, li. 22.

Canst thou no other master understand,
Than him that freed thee by the prior's wand?
Dryden.

Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.
2. Rid from; clear from anything ill; exempt: (with of or from).

For he that is dead is freed from sin.—Romans, vi. 7.
It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be freed of these inconveniences the passions of these meetings gave him, than to dissolve them.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Free'd Erymanthus from the framing bear.
Dryden.

3. Clear from impediments or obstructions.
The chaotic Silyia shall your deity convey
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.

This master key
*Free*s every lock, and leads us to his person. Id.

4. Banish; send away; rid. Obsolete.
We may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our fends and banquets bloody knives.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 2.

Never any salubrit of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.

5. Frank.

Memo to free this letter to Miss Lucy Porter in Lichfield.—Dr. Johnson to Mrs. Thrale, June, 1775.

Free and easy. Making one's self at home: (applied to clubs and convivial or other meetings characterized by the absence of formality, where it is often substantial).

Next is the club, where to their friends in town,
Our country neighbours once a month come down,
We term it free-and-easy, and yet we Find it no easy matter to be free:
Even in our small assembly, friends among,
Are minds perverse, there's something will be wrong;
Men are not equal; some will claim a right
To be the kings and heroes of the night;
Will their own favourite themes and notions start,
And you must bear, offend them, or depart.
Crabbe, The Borough.

Look at banks, insurance offices, dock companies, canal companies, . . . associations of medical pupils for procuring subjects, associations of country gentlemen for keeping fox-hounds, book societies, benefit societies, clubs of all ranks, from those which have lined Pall-Mall and St. James's Street with their palaces, down to the Free-and-easy which meets in the shabby parlour of a village inn.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Gladstone on Church and State.

Free-bench. s. [two words rather than a compound.] See extract.

Free-bench [is] that estate in copyhold lands which the wife hath on the death of her husband for her dower according to the custom of the manor; but it is said that the wife ought to be a virgin, and is to hold the land only so long as she lives sole and continent. Of this free-bench several manors have several customs; and Fitzherbert calls it a custom, whereby in certain cities the wife shall have the whole lands of the husband for her dower. In the manors of East and West Embsay in the county of Berks, and the manor of Torre in Devonshire, and other parts of the west of England, there is a custom that when the copyhold tenant dies, his widow shall have her free-bench in all his customary lands, 'dum sola et casta fuerit'; yet nevertheless, on her coming into the court of the manor, riding backwards on a black ram, and saying [certain] words, . . . the steward is bound by the custom to re-admit her to the free-bench.—Jacob, Law Dictionary.

Free-cost. s. Freedom from expense, charges, or cost.

We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing.—South, Sermons.

Free-denizen. s. Citizen.

Plato thought it meet, that in every city or commonwealth, as often as any good or harm did happen to any citizen or freedenizen thereof, it should not be counted that man's good or harm only, but the good or harm of the whole city.—Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 619.

The true verb formed from this is, perhaps, a compound.

No worldly respects can free-denizen a Christian here, and of 'perverius' make him 'civil'.—Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 202.

Freebooter. s. [see last extract.] Robber; plunderer; pillager; buccanier.

Perkin was not followed by any English of name, his forces consisted mostly of base people and free.
1005

booters, after to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom.—Macaulay, History of the Reign of Henry VII.
The curl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish pirates, or such freebooters as sailed under their commission, taken all the women.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Freebooter is one who, without the authority of national warfare, makes free to appropriate as booty whatever falls into his hand. The name was especially given to the buccanniers who infested the coast of America in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and was pronounced by the French libérateur, by the Spaniards libudor. From the latter has arisen, in the present age, liberator, a name given in America to adventurers making piratical expeditions against states of the Spanish race.—Widdowood, Dictionary of English Etymology.
[Our word is in French libérateur, or libérateur; sometimes it is written libérateur. And our old orthography is freebooter. See History State-Papers, vol. II. p. 78. Letter in 1897.—Todd.] Freebooting. s. Robbery; plunder; act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handsomely in his way; and when he hath abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and surest friend.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Freeborn. s. Born in a state of freedom, as a free man; not a slave; inheriting liberty.

The chief captain answered, With a great man obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free-born.—Acts, xii. 28.

This is true liberty, when freeborn men, Having to advise the publick, may speak free.
Milton, Translation from Euripides.
(1) business, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freeborn brethren of the world!

Dryden.
I shall speak my thoughts like a freeborn subject, such things perhaps as our Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst.—Id., Dedication to the Translation of the Æneid.

Freeman. s. Slave manumitted: (translation of the Latin libertus).

The freeman justice, and will be preferred;
First came, first served, he cries.

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.
He upbraided himself with having lived too long, and skulking into a tent desired his freeman Plaudus to give him the fatal blow.—Mervale, History of the Romans under the Empire, ch. xxi.

Freedom. s.

1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

(1) freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; not yet 't' inscribe
Their names in this or t'other Roman tribe;
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round.

Dryden, Translation of Persius.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.

By our holy oath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond;
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iv. 1.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest.—Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.

I also must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decrees
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom: they themselves ordain'd their fall.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 139.

In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act.—South, Sermons.

5. Unrestraint.

I will that all the fronds and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm.—1 Maccabees, x. 34.

6. State of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

The freedom of their state lays them under a greater necessity of always choosing and doing the best things.—Law.

7. Assumed familiarity: (a colloquial expression, in which sense the plural is used; as, 'He will not suffer any freedoms to be taken with him').

Freeholded. adj. Not restrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too freeholded.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, III. 3.

Freehearted. adj. Liberal; unrestrained.

A freehearted woman, and a chaste.—Homilies, Of the State of Matrimony.
Sir Roger Asdon, an Englishman born, but had his breeding wholly in Scotland, and had served the king many years as his barber: an honest and freehearted man.—Sir A. Weldon, Court of King James, p. 3.

Love must freehearted be, and voluntary;
And not inchanting, or by fate constrain'd.
Sir J. Davies.

Freehold. s. See extract.

That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life. Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either hockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or folkland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as nobles and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord.—Cowell.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it was made by matter of record.—Incumbent, Office of Alienation.

There is an insupportable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it.—Addison, Freeholder.

My friends here are very few, and fled to the freehold from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give consent.—Id.

Freeholder. s. One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion.—Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

By the ancient laws of Scotland freeholders were called Miltres; and freehold in this kingdom has been sometimes taken in opposition to villenage, it being lands in the hands of the gentry and both a sort of tenants by certain tenure, who were always freeholders, contrary to what was in the possession of the inferior people, held at the will of the lord.—Jacob, Law Dictionary.

Freely. adv. In a free manner.

1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependence or restraint; heartily; with full gust.

If any son were my husband, I would freely rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embraces of his bed, where he would shew most love.—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, I. 3.

The vilest persons breathing have passed their lives freely and joyfully, without the least misgiving or suspicion about their eternal concerns, who yet at length have met with a full payment of wrath and vengeance in the other world for all their confidence and jollity in this.—South, Sermons, ix. 30.

2. Plentifully; lavishly.

I please your grace; and if you knew what pains I have bestow'd to breed this present peace, You would drink freely.
Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, iv. 2.

3. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well.
Pope, Essay on Criticism.

4. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with wine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men.—Achens.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
Thyself may freely on thyself bestow.
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

5. Without necessity; without predetermination.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 102.

He leaves us to choose with the liberty of reasonable beings: they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it.—Burges.

6. Frankly; liberally; without cost.

By nature all things have an equally common use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bosom of the universe to all mankind.—South, Sermons.

Freeman. s.

1. Not a slave; not a vassal.

Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen?—Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar, III. 1.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from choosing or doing the worse, be liberty, true liberty, mad men and fools are the only freemen.—Locke.

In the distinction of a freeman from a vassal under the feudal policy, liber homo was commonly opposed to vassus or vassallus; the former denoting an allodial proprietor; the latter one who held of a superior.—Jacob, Law Dictionary.

2. One partaking of certain rights, privileges, or immunities, on becoming a member of some corporate town or body.

He made us freemen of the continent,
Whom nature did like captives treat before.
Dryden.

Freemartin. s. [?] See extract.

Freemartin [in] a name given by breeders to a twin cow calf born with a bull calf, which generally proves an hermaphrodite, and therefore barren; but in some cases there is not this mixture of the different sexes, or those of the female prevailing, she is capable of breeding.—C. W. Johnson, Farmer's Encyclopedia.

Freemason. s. Member of a certain secret or mysterious society, supposed to have been originally a guild of architects, builders, or masons.

This apparently simultaneous outburst, and the universal promulgation of the principles, rules, and practice of the Gothic architecture, has been accounted for by the existence of a vast secret guild of freemasons, or of architects. Of this guild, either connected with or latent in the monasteries and among the clergy, some of whom were men of profound architectural science, and held in their day and in their subservience all who were not ecclesiastics, it is said, the centre, the quickening, and governing power was in Rome. Certainly all developments of the papal influence and wisdom must be more extraordinary than this summing into being, this conception, this completion of these marvellous buildings in every part of Latin Christendom. But it is fatal to this theory that Rome is the city in which Gothic architecture, which some have strangely called the one absolute and exclusive Christian architecture, has never found its place; even in Italy it has not time been more than a half-naturalized stranger. . . . All the documentary evidence adduced by Mr. Hope amounts to a papal privilege to certain builders or masons, or a guild of builders, at Coma, published by Muratori (Coma was long celebrated for its skill and devotion to the art), and a charter to certain painters by our Henry VI. Belinzone examines and rejects the theory. He cites some few instances more of guilds, but local and municipal. The first guild of masons, which comprehended all Germany, was of the middle of the 13th century.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, h. xiv. ch. viii.

Freemasonry. s. System of the freemasons; (figuratively), understanding between different persons.

Some derive the mysticisms of freemasonry from those of the priests of Elphina.—Brande and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art, in voce.

Freeminded. adj. Unperplexed; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting.—Bacon.

Freeness. s. Attribute suggested by Free.

1. State or quality of being free.

Besides this largeness in the will of man
And winged freeness, now let's think upon
His understanding.
Dr. H. More, Song of the Soul.

2. Openness; unservedness; ingenuousness; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession.—Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the lady, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving.—Bishop Hurd.

Free-school. s. School in which learning is given without pay.

Two clerymen stood candidates for a small free-school; a gentleman who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar.—Swift.

Freespoken. adj. Accustomed to speak without reserve.

The emperor fell into discourse of the injunctive and tyranny of the former time, . . . and said, What should we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a freepoison man, said, Marry, they should sup with us.—Bacon.

FREE

Freestone. s. Kind of stone so called, generally one of the oolites used in building.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction.—Woodward.

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

You shall dig in myne engendered in marble, greato stone, and hard freestone, or such other.—Idem, Translation of Peter Martyr, St. (Ord MS.)

Freethinker. s. One who forms his opinions independently of the authority of others: (generally applied to latitudinarians in religion).

Atheist is an old-fashioned word: I'm a freethinker, child.—Addison.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependence on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabric must fall to the ground.—Swift, Argument against abolishing Christianity.

Although he numbered among his associates freethinkers and sceptics, he had a great dislike to any profane handling of sacred subjects, and always discouraged polemical discussion. One evening, when Irving and Coleridge were in company, and a young gentleman had spoken slightly of religion, Lamb remained silent; but when the party broke up, he said to the youth who had thus injured his guests, "Pray, did you come here in a lat, sir, or in a turlan?"—Talford, Memoirs of Lamb.

Freethinking. s. Practice or habit of freethinkers.

Are we not grown drunk and giddy with vice, and vanity, and presumption, and freethinking, and extravagances of every kind?—Bishop Berkeley, Sermons, February 14, 1731.

We see France and Italy overrun with the worst kind of deism. . . . It was brought home in a cargo of new fashions; and worn, for some time, with that levity by the importers, . . . as suited and was due to the aplomb of foreign manners; till a set of solemn blockheads, grown insolent by liberty, and malicious by unsuccessful attempts towards distinction, aimed the indulgence of a free government, in reducing those vague impieties into a system. And so it was, that licentious ignorance came to be distinguished with the name of freethinking.—Warburton, Sermon in 1746.

As two words, different in both accent and import, the contrast determining the former.

Freethinking signifies nothing, without freespoken and freewriting.—Swift, On Collins's Disgrace. (Ord MS.)

Why may not I be denied the liberty of freespoken as well as freethinking? Yet, nobody pretends that the first is unlawful, for a cat may look on a king; though you be near sighted, or have weak or sore eyes, or are blind, you may be a free seer.—Ibid.

Freeloaned. adj. Accustomed to speak freely and openly.

Where ministers depend upon voluntary benevolences, if they do but, upon some just reproof, call the conscience of a gully hearer; or preach some truth, which disrelates the palate of a prepossessed auditor, how he straight flies out! and not only withholds his own pay, but also withdraws the contributions of others; so as the freeloaned preacher must either live by air, or be forced to change his pasture.—Bishop Hall, Cases of Conscience, D. iii. C. 7.

Freewill. s. [two words, except where used adjectivally.]

1. Power of directing our own actions without constraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty! in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill.—Locke.

The question, whether the law of causality applies in the same strict sense to human actions as to other phenomena, is the celebrated controversy concerning the freedom of the will. . . . The metaphysical theory of free will, as held by philosophers, . . . was invented because the supposed alternative of admitting human actions to be necessary, was deemed inconsistent with every one's instinctive consciousness, as well as humiliating to the pride and even degrading to the moral nature of man. . . . That the free-will metaphysicians, being mostly of the school which rejects Hume's and Brown's analysis of Cause and Effect, should miss their way for want of the light which that analysis affords, cannot surprise us.—J. S. Mill, System of Logic, b. i. ch. iii.

FREN

2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with them.—Ezra, vii. 15.

Used adjectivally.

The basket of fruit of the juvenile Talford [did] not displease me; not that I have any thoughts of bartering or reciprocating these things. To send him anything in return, would be to reflect suspicion of mercenariness upon what I know he meant a freewill offering. Let him overcome me in bounty. In this strife a generous nature loves to be overcome.—Lamb, Letter to Wardlaw.

Freewoman. s. Woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away; of a freewoman she is become a bondslave.—1 Maccabees, ii. 11.

Freeze. v. n. preterite froze.

1. Be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water.—Ray, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun.—Locke.

2. Be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orydus with his late made trees
And the mountain tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iii. 1, song.

Heav'n froze above, the clouds congeal,
And through the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail.

Dryden.

Freeze. v. a. pret. froze; past part. frozen.

[A.S. frysan.]

1. Congel with cold; kill by cold.

My master and mistress are almost frozen to death.

Shakespeare, Twelfth of the Shrew, iv. 1.

2. Chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost froze up the heat of life.

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iv. 3.

Death came on a sudden,
And overbore below his iron reign;
Then upward to the seat of life he goes;
Some died before him, what he touch'd he froze.

Dryden.

Freight. v. a. preterite freighted; past part.

fraught. Load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation; load or fill generally.

Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas;
With no small interposing plank to save
From certain death, sail'd on by eye's wars.

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

From the participle, the barbarous words fraught as a verb, and fraught as a substantive, have been improperly formed; not to mention Fraughtage, which has been entered separately.

Freight. s. [German, frucht.]

1. Anything with which a ship is loaded.

Who counts the cars that on a crown do wait,
As well may number Autumn's fruitful freight.

Spenser, Translation of Du Bartas. (Ord MS.)

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight;
The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight.

Dryden, Translation of the Kurid.

2. Money due for transportation of goods.

(For example, see Goods.)

Freightage. s. Freight, in its second sense.

See Goods.

Freighter. s. One who freights a vessel.

The ship, the goods, the freighters, being all free.

Sir L. Jenkins, Life and Letters, vol. ii. p. 72.

Fremitious. s. [Lat. fremitus, -entis.]

pres. part. of fremitus (from fremit) = utter a low, threatening sound (fremitus) like that of an approaching storm.] Incipient noise suggestive of tumult. Rhetorical.

Bumour, therefore, shall arise; in the Palais Royal, and in broad France. Valence sits on every fier: confused tremor and fremitous; waxing into thunder-peals, of fury arising by four.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, p. 1. b. v. ch. iv.

Frénchify. v. a. Invest with the character of a Frenchman.

They mingled nothing more in king Edward the Confessor than that he was frénchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened.—Camden Remains.

FREQ

{FREQUENT FREQUENT

Has he familiarly
Dish'd your yellow starch, or said your doubt
Was not exactly frénchified?

Beaumont and Fletcher, Queen of Corinth.

Frénetic. adj. Phrenetic.

Sometimes he shuts up, as in frénetic or infectious diseases.—Milton, Reason of Church Government.

A frénetic, frénetic, and unlucky proud king.—Macmillan, Apology.

He himself impotent,
By means of his frénetic malady.

Daniel, Civil Wars.

Frénical. adj. Approaching to frenzy.

Rare.

The narrowness of her income, the coldness of her lover, the loss of her reputation, all contributed to make her miserable, and to encrease the frénical disposition of her mind.—Earl of Orrey, Remarks on the Life and Writings of Swift, p. 112.

Frénzy. s. [Lat. from Gr. φρηνος.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.

That knave, Poor, hath the fiercest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever frénzy.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 1.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
All else is frénzy and distraction.

Addison, Cato.

Why such a disposition of the body induces sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frénzy; this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties.—Bentley.

Spelt with ph.

Many never think on God, but in extremity of fear, and then perplexity not suffering them to be idle, they think and do as it were in a phénzy.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Demoniac phénzy, implying melancholy.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 465.

Would they only phrase themselves in the delusion, the phénzy were more innocent; but lunatics will needs be kings.—Dr. H. More, Decay of Christian Piety.

Phrensy or inflammation of the brain, profuse humours from the nose resolve, and capons bleeding in the temporal arteries.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Frénzy. v. a. Drive to frenzy.

In France, as is well known, the movement was extremely rapid; the old institutions, which were so corrupted as to be utterly unfit for use, were quickly destroyed; and the people, frénzy by centuries of oppression, practised the most revolting cruelties, accelerating the hour of their triumph by crimes that deserved the noble cause for which they struggled.—Huckle, History of Civilization in England, vol. i. ch. vii.

Fréquence. s.

1. Crowd; concourse; assembly. Rare.

I was encouraged with a sufficient fréquence of auditors.—Bishop Hall, Specialities of his Life, p. 11.

2. Repetition. Frequency communer.

I might here have done with the fréquence; but let me add this one consideration more, that often incubation of warning necessarily implies a danger.—Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 3.

Fréquence. s.

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done; repetition.

Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally entitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle: its force and influence would be lost by the fréquence of it.—Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 3.

2. Concourse; full assembly. Rare.

Thou canst ere while into the senate: who, of such a fréquence, so many friends
And kindred thou hast here, satiate thee?

B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

Fréquent. adj. [Lat. frequens, -entis.]

1. Often done; often seen; often occurring.

An ancient and imperial city falls;
The streets are fill'd with frequent funerals.

Dryden, Translation of the Récit.

Frequent herons shall besiege your gates. Pope.

2. Used often to practise anything.

Every man thinks he may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself hearty for the government.—Swift.

3. Full of concurrence. Latinism.

'Tis Caesar's will to have a frequent senate.

B. Jonson, Scjannus.

The purpose of this frequent senate
Is, first, to give thanks to the gods of Rome.

Mausinger, Roman Actor.

Frequent. v. a. Visit often; be much in any place; resort often to; haunt.

FREQ

FREQ There were synagogues for men to resort unto: our Saviour himself and the apostles frequented them.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted.—Dryden.

Frequentable. adj. Conversable; accessible. Rare.

While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour, not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable, and less dangerous.—Sir P. Sidney.

Frequenter. s. Resort; act of visiting. We are separated from other nations, to the end we be not polluted with sin by their frequentation and company.—Donne, History of the Septuagint, p. 100.
Those inhabitants were much more civilized than those of the inland country, by the commerce and frequentation of other nations.—Sir W. Temple, Introduction to the History of England, p. 7.

Frequentative. adj. Grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.
Verbs like volvo as compared with voce are frequentative.—R. G. Latham, Elements of Comparative Philology.

Frequenter. s. One who frequents, or often resorts to, any place.
Daily frequenters of publick prayers.—Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 60.
Persons under bad imputations are no great frequenters of churches.—Swift.

Frequently. adv. In a frequent manner; often; commonly; not rarely; not seldom; for a considerable number of times.
I could not, without much grief, observe how frequently both gentlemen and ladies are at a loss for questions and answers.—Swift.

Fresco. s. [Italian = fresh, cool; al fresco = in the open air.]
1. Coolness; shade; duskiness, like that of the evening or morning.
Hailish sprites
Love more the fresco of the nights. Prior.

2. Painting on fresh plaster, or on a wall laid with mortar not yet dry. (Being used for alcoves and other buildings in the open air, it obtained from the Italians this name of fresco).
The spaces that lie between are painted in fresco by the same hand that has enriched my ceiling.—Adler, 179.
Here thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye;
A fading fresco here demands a sigh. Pope.

Fresh. adj. [A.S. fersc.]
1. Cool; not vapid with heat.
I'll call the farthest mead for thy repast;
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring;
And draw thy water from the freshest spring. Prior, Henry and Emma.

2. Not salt, as applied to water.
They keep themselves unmixed with the salt water; so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land.—Abbot, Description of the World.

3. New; not had before.
No borrowed rays his temples did adorn,
But to our crown he did fresh jewels bring. Dryden.

4. New; not impaired by time.
The fame of a good knight would over live
Fresh on my memory.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of Malta.
We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh, like flowers in water. Sir J. Denham.

With such a care
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the hush they grew. Waller.
Think not, 'cause men flatter me,
I am as fresh as April, sweet as May,
Bright as is the morning star,
That you are so. Carew.

5. Recent; newly come.
Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are set upon the place;
Still in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they distend their tortured joints. Dryden.
Like a fresh tenant of Newport, when he has refused the payment of garnish.—Swift, Tale of a Tub.

6. As applied to articles of food, opposed to tainted, stinking, dried, salted, and other like terms, either indicative of overkeeping or artificial preservation.

1008

FRES

7. Repaired from any loss or diminution.
Nor less she long; but, as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

8. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; unfaded; unimpaired.
This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him:
take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore.—Bacon, Advertisement touching a Holy War.

Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair. Pope.
Two swains
Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair.

9. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.
Tell me,
Hast thou beheld a fresher gentlewoman,
Such war of white and red within her cheeks?
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iv. 2.

It is no rare observation in Kueind to see a fresh coloured lady young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him soon after attending her to the grave.—Harvey, Discourse on Consumption.
They represent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, innocent, fresh coloured young gentlemen.—Addison, Spectator.

10. Brisk; strong; vigorous.
As a fresh gale of wind fills the sails of a ship.—Holder.

11. Tipy; (as, 'I was rather fresh last night'). Colloquial euphemism.

12. Raw; unripe in practice.
How green you are, and fresh in this old world!
Shakespeare, King John, iii. 4.

Fresh. s.

1. Spring; freshet.
He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not allow him
Where the quick freshes are. Shakespeare, Tempest, iii. 2.

2. Flood.
This heavy rain will bring down the freshes.—Gruy.
They have cut new channels, and even whole rivers, with particular drains from one river to another, to carry off the great flux of waters when floods or freshes come down.—Cruikshank, Tour through Great Britain, Liverpoolshire.

Fresh. v. a. Refresh; freshen, this latter being the commoner term.
But quickly she it overtook, so soon
As she her face had wryt to fresh her blood.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, v. 5. 45.

Fresh-blown. adj. Newly blown.
Bells of violet blue
And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew.
Milton, L'Allegro, 21.

Freshen. v. a. Make fresh.
Prelude drops let all their moisture flow
In large effusion over the freshen'd world.
Thomson, Seasons, Spring.

Freshen. v. n. Become fresh: (as, 'the wind began to freshen').

Freshening. part. adj. Refreshing.
And I have loved thee, Ocean! and my joy
Of youthful sports was on thy breast to be Borne, like thy bubbles, onward: from a boy
I wanton'd with thy waves, when they to me
Were a delight; and if the freshening wave
Made them a terror—twas a pleasing fear.
Byron, Child Harold, c. iv. n. 184.

Freshet. s. [A.S. in respect to its first, French in respect to its second, element; hence a hybrid word.] Stream of fresh water.

Now love the freshet, and then love the sea.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii. 3: 1613.
All fish from sea or shore,
Freshet or purling brook, of shell or fin.
Milton, Paradise Regain'd, ii. 344.

They may be dashed over by a gathering torrent in what before was but a freshet; nay, they may be topped over, borne down, carried away, and clean dissolved.—Cardinal Wiseman, Recollections of the Last Four Popes, p. 68.

Freshforce. s. [L.Lat. frisca fortia.] In Law. See extract.

If a man be dispossessed of lands or tenements, within any city or borough; or dispossessed from them after the death of his ancestors to whom he is heir; or after the death of his tenant for life, or in tail; he may, within forty days after his title accrued, have his remedy by an assize, or bill of freshforce.—Concili and Chambers.
The space of forty days hath had with us divers applications, as in the assize of freshforce in cities and boroughs, &c.—Selden, On Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 17.

Freshman. s. Novice; one in the rudiments of any knowledge; newly entered member of any corporation or society: (especially applied to students at the universities, when their first term, first year, is 'freshman's term,' 'freshman's year.'

FRET

I would be a graduate, sir, no freshman.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Four Mist of the Inn.
See the dull freshman, just arriv'd from school,
A cumber ripening from a rustic fool!

High in the midst, surrounded by his peers,
Magnus his ample front sublime uprears;
Placed in his chair of state he seems a god,
While sophas and freshmen tremble at his nod.
Byron, Hours of Idleness.

Freshmanship. s. State of a freshman.

You have practis'd this Upon my freshmanship. H. Jonson, Volpone.
Instead of a post, this young fencer lath set himself up one of the dearest mysteries of our profession, to practice his freshmanship upon.—Miles, Golden Remains, p. 8.

Freshment. s. Refreshing influence. Rare.
To enjoy the freshment of the air and river.—Cartwright, Preacher's Travels, p. 19: 1611.

Freshness. s. Attribute suggested by Fresh.

1. Newness; vigour; spirit; the contrary to vapidness.

Most odorous small best broken or crushed; but flowers pressed or beaten, do lose the freshness and sweetness of their odour.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not stuleness.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind: for surely no man was ever weary of thinking that he had done well or virtuously.—South, Sermons.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.

The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men.—Sir J. Hayward, Life and Reign of King Edward VI.

4. Coolness.
There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of summer; but they be but penning of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them reverebrate in circles.—Bacon.
Say, if she please, she hither may repair,
And breathe the freshness of the open air.
Dryden, Aurengzebe.

5. Ruddiness; colour of health.
The secret venom, circling in her veins,
Works through her skin, and burst in bloating staim;
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face.
Graville.

6. Freedom from saltiness, as applied to water.

Freshwater. s. [When decidedly opposed to salt water, two words rather than a compound: often, however, a compound rather than two words: 1. as when a proper name, e.g. Freshwater, the name of a parish in the Isle of Wight; 2. when used, as it often is, adjectivally.]

1. Simply, relating to, connected with, constituted by fresh water.

If the salmon be . . . a species of fresh-water trout, that has contracted the habit of annually migrating to the sea, where it finds a food on which it thrives— . . . if the limit of growth in the trout tribe is very indefinite, as we know it to be; then we may reasonably infer, that the parr has nearly the adult form and size of this species of trout, before it acquires its migratory habit.—Herbert Spencer, Inductions of Biology, p. 231.

2. Figuratively. Applied to sailors whose navigation has been inland rather than on the open; and landsmen, when aboard sea-going ships; raw; unskilled; unfamiliar.

The noddity, as freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some slight skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks.—Kauler, History of the Turks.

Fret. s. [Lat. fretum.] Strait; creek.

An island parted from the firme land with a little fret of the sea.—Kauler, History of the Turks, 662. (Nares by II. and W.)
Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores.—Sir T. Browne.

In the Latin form.

The Egyptian Pharos, or light-house of old time, stood in an island a good distance from land, which is now joined to the continent, the interseant fretum having been filled up by the silt brought down by the river Nilus in the time of the flood subiding there.—Bay, On the Dissolution of the World, ch. v. sect. 1. (Ord MS.)

FRET

Fret. s. [Fr. fretlon = semiquaver; whence a division in music.] Division marked upon the fingerboard of a lute or guitar.

It requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note; and in the tops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The harp Had work, and rested not; the solemn pipe And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop, All sounds on fret by string or golden wire, Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice Choral or unison.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 584.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute.—Grew, Onomologia Sacra.

[Hence English fret, properly a note in music, then the stops on a stringed instrument by which the note was sounded. The monkish poet, in a Life of Bishop Ausadius, who as a boy had a wonderful gift of singing, uses fretillas in the sense of notes.

[Quis docuit puerum, qui senex quæso ausuit, Hebraice sonita ignotum profere fretillas.]

(Duvaugre, Henschel.)

—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.

Fret. s. [? Ital. ferrata, from Lat. ferrum = iron, iron bar, or grute.—see last extract.]

1. In heraldry. Bearing composed of bars crossed and interlaced, and called the heralds' true love's knot.

2. In Architecture.

The frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Some dainty chaplets twine . . .

The columbine amongst they sparingly do set The yellow kingcup, wrought in many a curious fret.

[Fret in heraldry and architecture is from a totally different root, signifying the interlacing of bars or fillets. Old French, fretier, crozier, entrelacez. (Roquefort.) Frets in heraldry are bars crossing each other in lozenge-shape, and interlacing; fretted, interlaced. A chevron fretted with a barriell is represented as a chevron or pair of united rafters riding on a horizontal bar, one arm of the chevron passing in front of the bar, the other behind. A fretted rod is one ornamented by bands or fillets crossing each other in different patterns.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Fret. s. Agitation of the mind; commotion of the temper; passion.

Calumnies is great advantage: he that lets Another chafe, may warm him at his fire, Mark all his wand'ring rings, and enjoy his frets. As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire, Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret; I never answer'd, I was not in debt.

Ezra, Epistle to Arbuthnot.

Fret. v. a.

1. Wear away by rubbing.

In the banks of rivers, with the washing of the water, there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold.—Abbot.

Before I round the object metal on the pith, I always ground the putty on it with the concave copper, till it had done making a noise; because, if the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pith, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

2. Hurt by attrition.

Antony Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts, His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear Of what he has and has not.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 10.

3. Corrode; eat away.

Like as it were a moth fretting a garment.—Psalms, Book of Common Prayer, xxxix. 12.

4. Agitate violently by external impulse or action.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines To wag their high tops, and to make a noise When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven!—Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iv. 1.

5. Make angry; vex.

Because thou hast fretted me in all these things, behold I will recompense thy way upon thine head.—Isaiah, xvi. 48.

6. Varygate; diversify.

You grey lines, That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.

Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, ii. 1.

FRIA

Fret. v. a. Form into Fretwork; form into raised work; work frets in gold and silver.

In a long purple-pall, whose skirt with gold Was fretted all about, she was array'd.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Fret. v. s.

1. Be worn away; be corroded.

Take a piece of gloves' leather that is very thin, and put your good thumb, with an ammoniac binding it close, and then hang it up; the sal ammoniac will fret away, and the gold remain behind.—Peacock, On Dressing.

That his curtesies might not unravel or fret out, he hath bound them with a strong border, and a rich fringe.—Fuller, Inauguration Sermon, p. 23: 1643.

2. Make way by attrition or corrosion.

These do but indeed scrape off the extuberances, or fret into the wood, and therefore they are very seldom used to soft wood.—Mason, Mechanical Exercises.

3. Be in commotion; be agitated.

He gazes now, and chafes, and frets like tinsel.

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Pilgrim.

No benefits whatsoever shall ever alter or alloy that dissoluble rancour, that frets and ferments in some hellish breast, but that it will foam out in slander and invective.—South, Sermons.

4. Be angry; be peevish; vex one's self.

His heart fretteth against the Lord.—Proverbs, xix. 3.

They trouble themselves with fretting at the ignorance of such as withstand them in their opinion.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

What may it boot

To fret for anger, or for grief to moan?

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Participle fret.

It is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without.—Leritico, xlii. 52.

Fretful. adj. Irritable.

Thy knotty and combined locks to part, And each particular hair to stand on end, Like quills upon the fretful porcupine.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 5.

Fretlike. v. a. Ornament with fretwork.

Fretlike. part. adj. Ornamented with fretwork.

Again, if it be a great hall, then (beholding) of the fair embowed or vaulted roofs, or of the fretlike ceilings curiously wrought and sumptuously set forth.—North, Translation of Plutarch, p. 38. (Rich.)

Fretted. part. adj. Done in fretwork.

Nor did there want Cornice or frieze with busy sculpture grav'd. The roof was fretted gold.

Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 715.

Fretter. s. That which, one who, frets.

A hot day, a hot day, vengeance-hot day, boys; Give me some drink; this fire's a plucky fretter.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Blended Brother.

Fretting. part. adj. Fretful.

We are in a fretting mind at the church of Rome, and with angry disposition enter into cogitation.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Fretting. verbal abs. Agitation; commotion.

Such as are accustomed to dymke in these vessels (the shell of the onion-nut) and have hymn trowbled with the dymme called the fretting of the guttes, saye that they have by experience founde it a marvelous remede agaynst that dymme.—Kid, Translation of P. Martyr, 194. (Ord MS.)

Fretwork. s. In Architecture. Fret.

The first glance at the building, its striking situation, its beautiful form, its brilliant colour, its great extent, its gathering as it seemed of galleries, halls, and chapels, millioned windows, portals of clustered columns, and groups of airy pinnacles and fretwork spires, called forth a general cry of wonder and praise.—Dierckx the younger, Chingisid, h. iii. ch. iv.

Friability. s. Capacity of being easily reduced to powder.

Hardness, friability, and power to draw iron, are qualities to be found in a loadstone.—Locke.

Friable. adj. Easily crumbled; easily reduced to powder.

A spongy excrecence groweth upon the roots of the laser-tree, and sometimes on cedar, very white, light, and friable, which we call agarick.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Friar. s. [Fr. frère = brother.] Member of a friary; monk.

He's but a friar, but he's big enough to be a pope.

—Dryden.

Many jesuits and friars went about, in the disguise of Presbyterians and independent ministers, to preach up rebellion.—Clay.

6 N

FRIC

FRIC

Friarbird. s. Australian bird so called (Tropidorchynchus corniculatus).

(For example see Leatherhead.)

Friarhood. s. Association of friars.

By the canon-law even abbots and priors may excommunicate their monks . . . if they become incorrigible, they may be expelled and turned out of the society upon the friarhood.—Ayliffe, Paragon Juris Canonici. (Ord MS.)

Friarlike. adj. Monastic; unskilled in the world.

Their friarlike general would the next day make one holiday in the Christian calendar, in remembrance of thirty thousand Hungarian martyrs slain of the Turks.—Knutler, History of the Turks.

Friary. adj. Like a friar, or man untaught in life.

M. Latimer, hearing this friary sermon of doctor Buckenham, cometh again (in) the afternoon, to answer the friar.—Eur, History of the Acts and Monuments of the Church, Bishop Latimer.

Beek not proud riches, but such as thou mayest get justly, use soberly, distribute cheerfully, and leave contentedly; yet have no abstract nor friarly contempt of them.—Harcot, Essays.

Friary. s. Monastery or convent of friars.

As to the friaries, which were mendicants, and had nothing but their houses of habitation, I did endeavour, when I had the perusal of the Tower records, to find out the times of their foundations.—Letters, (Dedicate to A. Wood), vol. i. p. 8.

If he now took under his protection muses, processions, graven images, friaries, monasteries, and worst of all, Jesuit pulpits, Jesuit confessionalis, and Jesuit colleges, what could he expect but that England and Scotland would join in one cry of reprobation?—Murray, History of England, ch. xix.

Friary. adj. [for friarly.] Like a friar.

Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow when he had sweetly invented to signify his name, St. Francis, with a friary cowl in a corn field.—Cumden, Remains.

Fribble. adj. [Fr. frivole.] Trifling; silly; frivolous.

The superficial, trivial, and frigid manner, in which that fribble minister treated this important branch of administration.—British Critic, January, 1798.

Fribble. s. Frivolous person.

A company of fribbles, enough to discredit any honest house in the world.—The Cheats: 1662. (Nares by H. & W.)

That fribble the leader of such men as Fox and Burke.—Thackeray, The Four Georges, George IV.

Fribble. v. a.

1. Trifle.

Though cheats, yet more intelligible Than those that with the stars do fribble.

Bulker, Hudibras.

2. Tottle, like a weak person.

Wretched Nocturnal, her fiddle keeper; how the poor creature fribbles in his suit!—Tuller, no. 46.

Fribbler. s. Trifler.

A fribbler is one who professes rapture for the woman, and drains her content.—Spectator.

Fricance. [Fr.]

1. Meat sliced, and dressed, with strong sauce.

Hotter than all the roasted cooks you met To draw the fricance of your alphabet.

Loeuvre, Lucasta Posthuma, p. 60.

2. Unguent, prepared by frying several materials together.

Some out there they pour'd into his ears, Some in his nostrils, and recover'd him: Applying but the fricance.

B. Jonson, Volpone.

A knight that has the bone-ache, or a squire That hath both these, you make 'em smooth and sound With a bare fricance of your medicine.

Id., Alchemist.

Fricandeau. s. [Fr.] Dish (of veal) so called.

Some English cooks have a very ordinary way of preparing it: they merely lard and boil the veal till they can cut it with a spoon, then glaze it, and serve it with brown gravy in the dish. This may be very tolerable eating, but it will bear small resemblance to the French fricandeau.—K. Aiton, Modern Cookery, ch. ix.

Fricassée. s. [Fr.] Dish made by cutting delicate meats into pieces, and frying them with strong sauce.

From his rich volder every day I'm fed With bones of fowls, and crusts of finest bread; With fricassées, ragouts, and whatso'er Of costly kitchenware now in fashion are, And more variety of boiled and roast, Than a lord mayor's waiter e'er could boast.

Oldham, A Satire addressed to a Friend.

Oh, how would Homer praise their dancing dogs,
Their stinking cheese, and fricary of frogs!
He'd raise no fishes, sing no flaccant lye,
Of boys with custard choak'd at Newberry.

King, Art of Cookery.
Soups, and oiles, fricassee, and ragouts.—Swift,
Tale of a Tub, § 7.

FRICASSEE. v. a. Dress in fricassee.

Common sense and truth will not down with them, unless it be hashed and fricassee.—Richard,
Observations, p. 63: 1804.

Niriolins and rumps of beef offend my eyes,
I'm sick with frogs fricassee.—Bramston.

Kh! dinner! true. Told old Moll Casey to knock her whole house into one room, and to roast, boil, bake, and fricassee, as if she hadn't an hour to live.
We're a roaring, screeching party.—O'Keefe, Fun- taineless, II. 1.

FRICITION. s. Act of rubbing one thing against another.

Gentle frication draweth forth the nourishment, by making the parts a little hungry, and heating them: this frication I wish to be done in the morning.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Resinous or unctuous bodies, and such as will flame, attract vigorously, and most thereof without frication, as good hard wax, which will convert the needle almost as actively as the loadstone.—Sir T.
Browne, Vulgar Errors.

FRICION. s. [Lat. frico = rub.]

1. Act of rubbing two bodies together; resistance caused by the motion of one body upon another.

Do not all bodies which abound with terrestrial parts, and especially with sulphurous ones, emit light as often as those parts are sufficiently heated, whether the agitation be made by heat, friction, percussion, putrefaction, or by any vital motion?—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

2. Medical rubbing with the fleshbrush or cloths.

Fricions make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see both in men and in the carrying of horses; for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits to the parts.—Bacon.

FRICIONAL. adj. Relating to, or produced by, friction.

[Those] which result from fricitional electricity [are] movements reproduced by the intermediate medium of fire which have themselves been originated by motion.—Grove, The Correlation of Phys- ical Forces.

FRIDAY. s. [A.S. Frige-dæge.] Sixth day of the week, so named of Frey, a Saxon deity.

For Venus, like her day, will change her cheer,
And seldom shall we see a Friday clear.—Dryden.

FRIDGE. v. n. Move quickly.

The little motes or atoms that fridge and play in the beams of the sun.—Hallivell, Metamorphosis,
p. 3: 1881.

FRIND. s. [A.S. freond, plur. frynd; frean = love; Fiend, from fian, standing in the same grammatical relation to fian = hate.]

1. One joined to another in mutual benevolence and intimacy: (as opposed to foe or enemy).

Some man is a friend for his own occasion, and will not abide in the day of thy trouble.—Eccelesi- asticus, vi. 5.

2. One without hostile intentions.

Who comes so fast in silence of the night?—A friend.—What friend? your name?
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

3. Attendant, or companion.

The king ordains their entrance, and ascends
His regal seat, surrounded by his friends.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

4. Favourer.

Aurora riding upon Pegasus, sheweth her swiftness, and how she is a friend to poetry and all ingenious inventions.—Peacocks.

5. Familiar companion.

Friend, how camest thou in hither?—St. Matthew
xii. 12.

What supports me, don't thou ask?
The conscience, friend, I have lost mine eyes o'er-play'd.
In liberty's defence.—Milton, Sonnet xii.

6. Paramour of either sex. Euphemistic.

Lady, will you walk about with your friend?—Shakespeare, Much Ado about Nothing, II. 1.

Friend in (af) court, more rarely the court.
One who is supposed to possess sufficient interest to serve another.

A friend if the court is better than a penny in purse.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II., v. 1.
I tell thee, parson, if I set her, reckon
Thou hast a friend in court; and shall command
A thousand pound, &c.

Th. Jonson, Magnetic Lady.

De frienda. Be reconciled to another: (as, A is friends with B, being equivalent to A and B are friends).

He's friends with Caesar.
In state of health thou say'st, and thou say'st free.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, II. 5.

I am friends with all the world, but thy base malic.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Wife for a Month.

Friend. v. a. Befriend. Rare.

So Fortune friends the bold.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, IV. 2. 7.

I know that we shall have him well to friend.
Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, III. 1.

If ever fortune friend us with a banquet,
Largely supply us with all provision.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Sea Voyage.

Friendless. adj. Wanting friends; wanting support; without countenance; destitute; forlorn.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII., III. 1.

Woe to him that is alone, is verified upon none
so much as upon the friendless person.—South, Ser- mons.

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,
Oh friendless and forsaken virtue fly.
Dryden, Aurengzebe.

To what new clime, what distant sky,
Forsaken, friendless, will ye fly?
Pope.

Friendlily. adv. (fully formed, i.e. by the addition of a second -ly.) In a friendly manner.

It was a sudden thought since we parted; and tell me if it is not better to be suppressed, freely and friendlily.—Pope to Warburton. (Orr 38.)

Friendlike. adj. Having the disposition of a friend.

But soon my soul had gathered up her powers,
Which in this sweet night, friendlike, gave her aid.
Dryden, Legend of Matilda.

Friendliness. s. Attribute suggested by Friendly.

1. Disposition to friendship.

Such a liking and friendliness as hath brought forth the effects.—Sir P. Sidney.

They love discretely,
And place their friendliness upon desert.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Nice Valour.

2. Exertion of benevolence.

Let all the intervals be employed in prayers charity, friendliness and neighbourliness, and means of spiritual and corporal health.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercises of Holy Living.

Friendly. adj.

1. Having the temper and disposition of a friend; kind; favourable; benevolent.

They gave them thanks, desiring them to be friendly still unto them.—2 Maccabees, xii. 31.

2. Disposed to union; amicable.

Like friendly colours found our hearts unite,
And each from each contract new strength and light.
Pope.

3. Salutary; homogeneal.

Not that Neptune, which the wife of Thone
In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,
Is of such power to stir up joy as this,
To life so friendly, or so cool to thirst.
Milton, Comus, 675.

4. Favourable; convenient.

At the approach of night,
On the first friendly bank he throws him down,
Or rests his head upon a rock till morn.
Addison, Cato.

Friendly. adv.

1. In the manner of friends; with appearance of kindness; amicably.

Thou hast spoken friendly unto thine handmaid.
—Ruth, II. 13.

Here between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace;
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home
Of our restored love and amity.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II., IV. 2.

I urg'd him gently,
Friendly, and privately, to grant a partage
Of this estate to her who owns it all.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Fair Maid of the Inn.

2. Concurrently; in union.

A lady,
In whom all graces that can perfect beauty,
Are friendly met.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Custom of the Country.

Friendship. s.

1. State of minds united by mutual benevolence; amity.

There is little friendship in the world, and least of all between equals, which was wont to be unquestioned: that that is, is between superior and inferior, whose fortunes may comprehend the one the other.
—Bacon.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence than any friendship with the favourites.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

2. Highest degree of intimacy.

My sons, let your unseemly discord cease,
If not in friendship, live at least in peace.
Dryden, Indian Emperor.

3. Favour; personal kindness.

Raw captains are usually sent, only preferred by friendship, and not chosen by sufficiency.—Spenser,
Time of the State of Ireland.

His friendship, still to few confin'd,
Were always of the middling kind.
Swift.

4. Assistance; help.

Gracious, my lord, hard by here is a hotel;
Some friendship will lend it you 'gainst the tempest;
Repose you there.
Shakespeare, King Lear, III. 2.

5. Conformity; affinity; correspondence; aptness to unite.

We know those colours which have a friendship,
with each other, and those which are compatible, in mixing together those colours of which we would make trial.—Dryden, Translation of Du Fresnoy's
Art of Painting.

FRIZE. s. Kind of cloth so called; see last extract under next entry.

If all the world
Should in a pot of temperance feed on pulse, Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frize,
The All-giver would be unthank'd.
Milton, Comus, 720.

The captive Germans of gigantic size,
Are rank'd in order, and are clad in frize.
Dryden, Translation of Persius.

He could no more live without his frize coat than without his skin.—Addison, Guardian.

We have the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frize;
As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses.
Swift.

FRIZE. s. [see last extract.] In Architecture.

Large flat member which separates the architrave from the cornice.

No jutting frize,
Buttress, nor cornice of vaunting, but this bird
Hath made his pendant-bell, and procreant cradle.
Shakespeare, Macbeth, I. 6.

Polydore designed admirably well, as to the practical part, having a particular genius for frize.—Dryden, Translation of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

[On the same principle the name of frize is given to coarse, slivery cloth, by false etymology supposed to have come from Frisian, in the same way that a frizzled hen is called a Frisland hen, or a kind of duck with musky colour, a Muscovy duck. . . .
It is remarkable that the conversion of frize into Frisian cloth is only a repetition of the same etymological blunder which in ancient times seems to have given the name of Phrygian work to wrickled or frizzled work, embroidery or tissue ornamented or roughened with needlework, showing that the Italian, frigio is of ancient standing in the Latin language. Pictus vestes acn facere Phryges invu- erunt, Idemque Phrygibus appellata sunt. (Pliny.)
Phygium and phrygium were used for a border of embroidery.—Walpole, Dictionary of English Etym- ology.]

FRIGATE. s. [Fr. frégate.]

1. Small ship of war: (ships mounting from thirty-two to fifty guns are generally termed frigates).

The treasure they sought for was, in their view, embosomed in curtain frigate.—Sir W. Raleigh, Apology.

2. Any small vessel on the water.

Behold the water work and play
About her little frigate, therein making way.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.

FRIGATEBIRD. s. Natatorial bird so called (Tachypetes aquila).

(For example see Græbe.)

FRIGHT. v. a. Frighten.

Cherubick watch, and of a sword the flame
Wile-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passages to the tree of life.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 120.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross, and at a distance: things thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty.
—Locke.

Fright. s.

1. Sudden terror.

You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
May think I broke all hospital laws,
To hear you from your palace-yard by night,
And put your noble person in a fright. Dryden.

2. Frightful object: (generally with a, as 'What a fright!')

Frighten. v. a. Terrify; shock with dread.
The rugged bear, or spotted lynx's brood,
Frighten the valleys and infect the wood. Prior.

Frightful. adj.

1. Terrible; dreadful; full of terror.

Totally and wayward was thy infancy,
Thy school-days frightful, desperate, wild, and furious. Shakespeare, Richard III. iv. 4
Without aid you durst not undertake
This frightful passage o'er the Stygian lake.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

2. Terrified. Rare.

The wild and frightful herds,
Not hearing other noise but this of chattering birds,
Fed fairly on the lawn.
Drayton, Polythion, song 13. (Trench.)

Frightfully. adv. In a frightful manner.

1. Dreadfully; horribly.

This will make a prodigious mass of water, and looks frightfully to the imagination; 'tis huge and great. Burns.

2. Disagreeably; not beautifully: (generally conveying an exaggeration).

Then to her glass; and Betty, pray,
Don't I look frightfully to-day. Swift.

Frightfulness. s. Attribute suggested by Frightful; power of impressing terror.

All this serveth chiefly to cover the frightfulness of mortality. Nelson, Life of Bishop Hall, p. 5.

Frigid. adj.

1. Cold.

In the torrid zone the heat would have been intolerable, and in the frigid zones the cold would have destroyed both animals and vegetables. Chyren, Philosophical Principles.

2. Dull; without fire of fancy, or warmth of feeling.

If one considers with how great affectation they utter their frigid conceits, commiseration immediately changes itself into contempt. Tatler, no. 194.
If justice Phillip's costume lend
Some frigid rhymes disburse,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.

Frigidity. s. Coldness; want of warmth, bodily, intellectually, or morally.

Driving at these as at the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit. Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Of the two extremes, one would sooner pardon pleasantry than frigidity. Pope.

Frigidly. adv. In a frigid manner; coldly;
dully; without affection.

The life of Erasmus which deserves the first pen, has been wretchedly and frigidly written by Knight; although, indeed, the materials he has collected are curious and useful. J. Walton, Essay on the Writings and Genius of Pope.

Frigiditive. adj. Cooling; refrigerating; making cold.

We will no longer delay to say something of this matter, namely, in what line or, if you please, toward what part, the frigidative virtue of cold water does operate the furthest, and most strongly. Boyle, vol. ii. p. 228. (Rich.)

Frigiferous. adj. [Lat. fero = bear.] Bringing cold. Rare.

Exposed to the sulphurous exhalations or frigi-ferous winds. Evelyn. (Ord. M.)

Frigorific. adj. Causing cold.

Frigorific atoms or particles when those nitrous atoms which float in the air in cold weather, and occasion freezing. Quincy.

The hand of death is upon me; a frigorific torpor encroaches upon my veins. Johnson, Rambler, no. 130.

The fatal influence of frigorific wisdom. Ibid., no. 129.

Frigorifying. part. adj. Cooling.

We have now to enquire how the temperature [of the human system] is prevented from rising too high; in other words, what frigorifying means there is to counterbalance the influence of causes which in excess would otherwise be fatal by raising the heat of the body to an undue degree. Dr. Carpenter, Principles of human Physiology, § 423.

Frill. s. In Dress. Sort of ruffle generally worn on the neck or breast.

If I should go to one of the tea-parties in a dressing-gown and slippers, and not in the neighbourhood of a gentleman - viz. punjab, a gold waistcoat, a crush hat, a sham frill, and a white choker - I should be insulting society. Thackeray, Book of Snobs, ch. 1.

Frill. v. a.

1. Provide with a frill.

2. Furl.

It was agreed that the Bason should suffer them with bag and baggage in safety to depart whither they would, with their engines frilled up, and fire in the matches, leaving behind them their great ordnance. Knollys, History of the Turks. (Ord. M.)

Frize. adj. [A.S. fram = forward.] Forward; vigorous. Obsolete.

My phœbean bowen strew'd
With all abundant sweets; my frize and lusty flank
Her bravery then displays, with meadows hugely rank. Drayton, Polythion, song 13.

Fringe. s. [Fr. frange.] Ornamental border of hanging threads or plaited work in dress or furniture; ornamental appendage generally; edge; border.

These offices and dignities were but the fringes or fringes of his greatness. Sir H. Wotton.

The fringe or confines of hell. Bishop Montagu, Appeal to Caesar, p. 27.

The sun . . . gilds the fringes of a cloud. Jersey Taylor, Rule and Exercise of Holy Dying, § 33. ch. 1.

The golden fringe o'er set the ground on flame,
And drew a precious trail. Dryden, Fables, Flower and Leaf.

The shadows of all bodies, in this light, were bordered with three parallel fringes, or bands of coloured light, whereof that which was contiguous to the shadow was broadest and most luminous; and that which was remotest from it was narrowest, and so faint as not easily to be visible. Sir I. Newton, Optick.

Fringe. v. a. Adorn with fringes; decorate with ornamental appendages.

Either side of the bank, fringed with most beautiful trees, resisted the sun's dart. Sir P. Sidney.
Of silver wings he took a shining pair,
Fringed with gold. Poëfear.

Fringy. adj. Having much fringe or fringe-like edging. Rare.

Lord of my time, my devious path I bend
Through fringy woodland, or smooth-shaven lawn.
Shenstone, Elegies, xxi.

Friper. s. Fripper. Rare.

They smell of the friper's lavender half a year
after. Greene, Arcadia. (Sares by H. & W.)

Fripper. s. [Fr. frippier.] Dealer in worn clothes, especially articles of faded finery.

This little island of England, notwithstanding the continual waste and havoc that hath been made,
since the days of king Henry the eighth, by glories, bookbinders, frippers, and calvers; or the continual perishing and conveying of old books beyond the sea; hath at this day remaining, if they were all brought together, more Latin manuscripts than any country else that is of a far greater extent. Junius, On the Corruption of Scripture Concilia, de. p. 520; 1688.

Frippery. s.1. Place where old clothes are sold. Obsolete.

We know what belongs to a frillery. Shakespear, Tempest, iv. 1.

Laurina is a frillery of bankrupts, who fly thither from Brutus to play their after-games. Marcell, Vi-call Forrest.

2. Faded finery; old clothes; cast dresses.

Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,
Whose works are o'en the frillery of wit,
From brocade is become so bold a thief,
As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it. R. Johnson.

The fighting-place now women's rage supply,
And all the tackling is a frillery. Donne, Poems, p. 131.

Ragfair is a place near the Tower of London,
where old clothes and frillery are sold. Pope.

3. Trumpery; trifles.

You will gather more advantage by listening to them, than from all the nonsense and frillery of your own sex. Swift.

They tell me it [the Philosophick Dictionary] is frillery, and blasphemous, and wit. Gray, Letter to Mason.

Used adjectively.

My master's loo-sweep with me,
With his sly popping in and out again,
Argued a cause, a frillery cause.

That city, though the capital of a duchy, made so frillery an appearance, that instead of spending some days there, as had been intended, we only dined, and went on to Parma. Gray, Letter to his Mother.

Frisk. v. a. Gambol; skip; leap, in frolic or gaiety.

But water into a glass, and wet your finger, and draw it round about the lip of the glass, pressing it now and then; and after drawing it some few times about, it will make the water frisk and sprinkle up in a fine dew. Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Whether every one hath experienced this troublesome intrusion of some frisking ideas, which thus importune the unprepared, and hinder it from being better employed, I know not. Locke.

We are as twinn'd lambs, that did frisk in the sun,
And bleat the one at the other: what we chang'd,
Was ignorance for ignorance; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, l. 2.

About their frisking play'd
All beasts of the earth. Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 330.

A wanton heifer frisked up and down in a meadow, at ease and pleasure. Sir R. A. Estlin.

So Bacchus through the frisking ladies' rails,
And boasts in gambols frisk'd before their hottest gods. Bryant.

For hints at the sound of an organ, and yet will dance and frisk at the voice of a bagpipe. Archibnot, History of John Bull.

My hunters thus, in Borneo's isle,
To catch a monkey by a wife,
The mimic animal mimic;
They place before him gloves and shoes;
Which when the brute puts awkward on,
All his agility is gone:
In vain to frisk or climb he tries;
The huntsmen seize the grinning prize. Swift.

Used as in go it, i.e. that of a neuter rather than an active verb, though followed by a case.

Those merry blades
That frisk it under Phœbus shades. Prior.

Frisk. adj. Lively; jolly; blithe.

Pain would she seem all frisk and frolic still. Bishop Hall, Satires, vi. 6.

Frisk. s. Frolic; fit of wanton gaiety.

Tomboy-like frisks and notions. Florio, Translation of Montaigne, p. 228; 1613.

The frisks and levities of our dancing blood.
William, Roscius, l. 13.

Born in a climate softer far than ours,
Not form'd like us, with such Herculean powers,
The Frenchman, easy, debauching, and brisk,
Gives him his lass, his dish, and his frisk,
Is always happy, roben whenever any,
And laughs the sense of misery far away. Copey, Table Talk, 27-28.

Friskal. s. Leap; caper: (construction, perhaps generally with fetch, to fetch a friskal, being to cut a caper); both expressions being alliterative. Obsolete.

She frisked a friskal, when she was dawning, in a tavern. Kestrel in Folke's Answer to P. Francise, p. 12; 1610.

Isabel, . . . turned dancer, does nothing but cut caperols, frisk friskals, and leads levities with the ladies. R. Johnson, Mucius.

Frisker. s. One who frisks.

Now I will wear this, and now I will wear that;
Now I will wear I cannot tell what;
All new fashions be pleasant to me;
Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but set rock on the hoop? Camden.

Frisket. s. Part of a printing-press so called.

The frisket, thy preventing grace,
Keeps us from many a sullied face.
Poem at the end of Watson's History of Printing.

Friskful. adj. Frisky. Rare.

His sportive lamb,
This way and that convolv'd, in friskful glee
Their frolics play. Thomson, Seasons, Spring.

Friskiness. s. Attribute suggested by Frisk.

O ye immortal gods! nothing so difficult as to begin a chapter, and therefore have we flown to you. In literature, as in life, it is the first step - you know the rest. After a paragraph or so, our blood is up, and even our jaded hackneys send along, and war-up into friskiness. Disraeli the young, The Young Duke, v. iv. ch. 12.

Frisking. verbal abs. Frolicsome dancing;
wild gaiety.

Other objects, that are Inserted 'twixt her mind and eye, become the pranks
And friskings of her madness.

Beaumont and Fletcher. Two Noble Kinsmen. 2.
The fish tell a frisking in the net. Sir R. L'Estrange.

As if religion were nothing else but a dancing up and down upon the same piece of ground, and 1 making several motions and friskings on it.—Culworth, Sermons, p. 68.

Frisky. adj. Gaily or sportively frolicsome. (Called by Johnson 'a low word.' Few would use so condemnatory a phrase now.)

As that Countess of Desmond, of whom I've been told,
That she lived to as much as a hundred and ten,
And was killed by a fall from a cherry-tree then.
What a frisky old girl!

Moore, The Judge Family in Paris.

Frit. v. a. Fritter.

But then, as in Aram, the feelings must be fresh as well as matured; they must not have been fritted away by previous indulgence.—Sir E. B. Lytton, Eugene Aram, b. l. ch. vii.

Frit. s. [P.] In Pottery. Mass for making the paste.

There are two kinds of porcelain... the one is called hard, the other tender... Hard porcelain is essentially composed... of a natural clay containing some silica, infusible, and preserving its whiteness in heat... Tender porcelain, styled also vitreous porcelain... always consists of a vitreous frit, rendered opaque and less fusible by the addition of a calcareous or marly clay... Tender porcelain, or soft china-ware, is made with a vitreous frit, rendered less fusible and opaque by an addition of white marl or bone-ash. The frit is, therefore, first prepared. This, at Sevres, is a composition, made with some nitre, a little sea salt, Allicant barilla, alum, gypsum, and much siliceous sand or ground flints. This mixture is subjected to an incipient paste fusion in a furnace, where it is stirred about to blend the materials well; and thus a very white spongy frit is obtained. It is pulverised, and to every three parts of it one of the white marl of Argenteuil is added; and when the whole are well ground, and intimately mixed, the paste of tender porcelain is formed.—Encyclopædia of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Firth. s. [Norse]. From its prevalence and import in Scotland, where it is chiefly used as a geographical term, and oftenest as a proper rather than a common name, probably Norwegian rather than Danish.

Firth is at least an equally common term. In both Denmark and Norway—in the latter country more especially, from the character of its seaboard, fjörd means an arm of the sea. In the Firth of Forth, we have the same word with different meanings; the river in general being first called the Forth, and its outlet the Firth. Similarly, a part of the Trent is sometimes called the Humber; the latter word properly applying to the salt part of the river only. The Irish fords, when parts of the sea, as Wexford, Waterford, Carlingford, Strangford, give the same word. So do Haarford and Milford, in Wales. When applied to a marine inlet, so as to correspond in meaning with the Latin fretum rather than with the Latin radum (the equivalent of which is the ford in the English sense, i.e. a passage by wading across an inland water), it is the sign of Norse occupancy; Danish or Norwegian, as the case may be. Its relation to fretum is uncertain. The fact of its beginning with f indicates a derivative, rather than a concurrent, origin; i.e. a relation like that of fiscal to fiscus. But its use in a country so little acted on by Latin influences as Norway, is against this. On the other, if it be a concurrent form, the Latin form should begin with p, as piscis, pater, &c. in comparison with fish; father, &c. With portus it agrees in respect to the letter-change; but the relation of portus = harbour to porta = gate, and other congeners, invalidate this view. That the Latin fretum was borrowed by the Latins from the Germans, is difficult to maintain. Meanwhile the doctrine that the likeness is accidental is the last one which should be resorted to.] Strait of the sea.

What desperate madman then would venture o'er
The firth, or haul his cables from the shore.

Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

Frit. s. [This word, as distinguished from the preceding, applies to land rather than water. Johnson explains it 'a field taken out of a common.' Halliwell as 'unused pasture land, a field taken from a wood, young underwood, brushwood.' The combinations 'frit and fell,' 'forest and frythes,' either connect it with, or oppose it to, hills and woodlands. The word is used both in Wales and Ireland. Wedgwood, after noting this, connects it (not overlooking the Garlic frit) with the French friche, in bois en friche = wood newly lopped and left stand till it be grown again; terre en friche = land untilled or neglected, whereby it becomes overgrown with shrubs and weeds. It seems, indeed, to be of Norman origin, and to belong to the management of forests, denoting the underwood left after a felling or cutting. Like firth as applied to water, it has become a geographical rather than a common term.]

Over halt and health, as thorough frit and fell.

Drayton, Polydoron, song 11.

The Sylvans that about the neighbouring woods
did dwell,

Both in the tufty frit and in the mossy fell.

Ibid., song 17.

There is a market town in Derbyshire, called Chapel in the Frit, which is situated in a valley amongst such enclosures.—Wynne, History of the Gredir Family, p. 131.

Frit. s. [P.] Net so called.

The Wear is a frit, reaching through the One,
from the land to low water mark, and having in it a hant or ead with an eye-hook; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are stopt from bawling out again.—Circus.

Frithestool. s. [A.S. frit = peace.] Seat near the altar serving as a sanctuary.

Frithestool still exist in the church at Hexham and Beverley Minster.—Glossary of Architecture.

Fritzy. adj. Woody.

Thus wode I in the fritzy forest of Gallura.

Skelton, Poems, p. 9.

Fritillary. s.

1. Garden plant, native or naturalized, so called (Fritillaria Meleagris). Its marking is that of a small table for games such as chess, backgammon (fritillus = dicebox): its colour and marking taken together something like that of a guinea-fowl (Meleagris), whence the name.

They are among the gayest of our garden flowers, as tulips, fritillaries, and dog's tooth violet testify.
—Lindley, Vegetable Kingdom, Liliaceæ.

2. Division of native butterflies so called from their markings.

Fritinancy. s. [Lat. fritinnio.] Scream of an insect, as the cricket or cicada.

The note or fritinancy thereof is far more shrill than that of the locust, and its life short.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Fritter. s. [from French friture; frire, frit = fry, fried.] Small piece cut to be fried.

Maida, fritters and pancakes ynow we ye make;
Let Slut have one pancake for company make.

Tasso, Hundred Points of Good Husbandry.

There is no difficulty in making good omelets, pancakes, or fritters, and, as they may be expeditiously prepared and served, they are often a very convenient resource when, on short notice, an addition is required to a dinner. The eggs for all of them should be well and lightly whisked; the lard for frying better should be extremely pure in flavour, and quite hot when the fritters are dropped in; the latter itself should be as smooth as cream, and it should be briskly beaten the instant before it is used. All fried pastes should be perfectly drained from the fat before they are served, and sent to table promptly when they are ready.—M. Acton, Modern Cookery, ch. xix.

Fritter. s. Frugment; small piece.

Scots and putter! have I lived to stand in the taunt of one that makes fritters of English.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 5.

If you strike a solid body that is brittle, as glass or sugar, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shivers and fritters; the motion, upon the pressure, searching all ways, and breaking where it findeth the body weakest.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The ancient errand knights
Won all their ladies' hearts in fights;
And cut whole giants into fritters.
To put them into amorous twitters.

Butler, Hudibras.

Fritter. v. a.

1. Cut meat into small pieces to be fried; break into small particles or fragments.

Joy to great chaos! let division reign!
My racks and tortures soon shall drive them hence,
Break all their nerves, and fritter all their sense.

Pope, Dunciad.

2. Break up into frivolities: (with away).

Here was one who never related any temptation;
never had a desire but he coddled it and pampered it;
if ever he had any nerve frittered it away
among rooks and tailors, and barbers, and furnum mongers, and opera dancers. What muscle would not grow flaccid in such a life—a life that was never strung up to any action—an endless Caput without any campaign; all fiddling, and flowers, and feasting, and folly, and flattery.—Thackeray, The Four Georges, George 17.

Frivellty. s. Triflingness.

The admiral was no stranger to the frivolity, as well as falsehood, of what he urged in his defence.—Robertson.

Frivolous. adj. [Fr. frivole.] Slight; trifling; of no moment.

It is frivolous to say we ought not to use bad ceremonies of the church of Rome, and presume all such bad as it placeth themselves to dilate.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

All the impechments in Greece and Rome agreed in a notion of being concerned, in point of honour, to condemn whatever person they impeach'd, however frivolous the articles, or however weak the proof.—Swift.

Frivolously. adv. In a frivolous manner; triflingly; without weight.

You employ your important moments, methinks, too frivolously, when you consider so often little circumstances of dress and behaviour.—Guardian,
no. 128.

Frivolousness. s. Attribute suggested by Frivolous: (Frivolity commoner) want of importance; triflingness.

The idleness, frivolousness, or profaneness of the spirits of men.—Dr. H. More, Antidote against Idolatry, preface.

The impertinency and frivolousness of the end and occasion.—J. Spencer, Discourse concerning Prudicia, p. 231.

Who is it that here appeals to the frivolousness and irrationality of our dreams, to show that the soul owes the perfection of rational thinking to the body?—Baxter, Enquiry into the Nature of the human Soul, ii. 187.

Frizado. s. Cloth of frieze.

Our cottons, penistons, frizades, bair.
Taylor (the Water-Poet): 16th.
(Narra by H. and W.)

Frizel. s. Same as Frizzle.

Now under the shadow of the eyebrows, then amidst the frizels of a fair hair.—Passenger of Benevento: 1612. (Narra by H. and W.)

Frize. v. a. [Fr. frier.] Curl; crisp.

The servants in the family were employed to frieze out a tyo-privig.—Smollett.

Frizzle. v. a.

1. Curl in short curls like nap of frieze.

Who can excuse this boldered and frizzled hair!
Harmar, Translation of Beza's Sermons,
p. 172: 1687.

Therefore the maids, and Roman matrons all,
A shadowing veil before their face did wear;
Their heavenly brow did throw no man to thrall;
They were content with plain and decent hair,
They huff it not with painted frizzled hair.

Milford for Magistrate, p. 216.

The humble shrub

And bush, with frizzled hair implicit.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 322.

I doff'd my show, and saw
Theroin I spy'd this yellow frizzled hair.

Gay, Pastoral.

2. In Cookery. See Grill.

Frizzle. s.

1. Curl; lock of hair crisped.

To rattle her lace, her frizzles, and her bobbins.—Milton, Antichristian upon a Defence of the Humble Remonstrance.

2. Bend; curve.

Imitating the frizzles and curls of the water in canals.—Bishop Patrick, Annotations on the Canticles, vii. 5.

Fro. adv. [see From.] In the way of a return from some point to or towards which motion is made: (to and fro = there and back, backwards and forwards).

The Carthaginians having spoiled all Spain, rooted out all that were affected to the Romans; and the Romans, having recovered that country, did cut off all that favoured the Carthaginians: so betwixt them both, to and fro, there was scarce a native Spaniard left.—Spenser.

He had, indeed, been a traitor to every party in the State; but his treasons had hitherto prospered. Whether it were accident or sagacity, he had timed his desertions in such a manner that fortune seemed to go to and fro with him from side to side.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Sir W. Temple.

Frock. s. [Fr. froc.] Garment so called.

That monster, custom, is angel yet in this, That to the use of actions fair and good, He likewise gives a frock or livery, That aptly is put on. Shakespeare, Hamlet, III. 4.
Chilybean tamped steel, and frock of mail Adamantine proof. Milton, Ramon Agnates, 139.
I strip my body of my shepherd's frock. Dryden.
I remember some time afterwards I wrote the journal of one day, which would serve, I believe, as well as for any other, during the whole time; I will endeavour to repeat it to you. In the morning I arose, took my great stick, and walked out in my green frock, with my hair in papers (a gown from Adams), and munter'd about till ten.—Fielking, Adventures of Joseph Andrews.

Frock-coat. s. [two words.] Coat of which the tails or flaps, meet in front; being cut straight, instead of sloping back over the hips.

This may be said, that in all London there was no more loyal heart than Becky's after this interview. The name of her king was always on her lips, and he was proclaimed by her to be the most charming of men. He went to Colnaghi's and ordered the finest portrait of him that art had produced, and credit would supply. He chose that famous one in which the best of monarchs is represented in a frock-coat with a fur collar, and breeches and silk stockings, smothering on a sofa from under his curly brown wig.—Thackeray, Vanity Fair.

Frog. s. [A.S. frogga.]

1. Common amphibious animal so called of the genus Rana.

And I saw three unclean spirits lyke froggis, came out of the mouth of ye dragon.—Bible, Revelations, ch. xvi.: 1551.

2. Same as Frush.

Frog. s. [from Portuguese froco.] Tug; tassel; loop in dress.

Tall caps, laces, frogs, cockades, &c.—Berkeley, Literary Relations, p. 290.

I had on a broad belt of goat's skin dried, which I drew together with two thongs of the same, instead of buckles; and in a kind of a frog on either side of this, instead of a sword or dagger, hung a little saw and a hatchet; one on one side, and one on the other.—De Foo, Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.

I gave him a knife, which he was wonderfully delighted with; and I made him a belt, with a frog hanging to it, such as in England we wear hangers in; and in the frog, instead of a hanger, I gave him a hatchet, which was not only as good a weapon in some cases, but much more useful on other occasions.—Ibid.

Frogbitt. s. Native aquatic plant so called, Hydrocharis morsus-ranae.

There floteth or swimmeth upon the upper parts of the water, a small plant which we usually call Frogbitt, having little round leaves, thick, and full of juice, very like to the leaves of a wall pennywort; the flowers grow upon long stems among the leaves of a white colour, with a certain yellow thrum in the middle, consisting of three leaves: instead of roots it has slender strings, which grow out of a short and small head, as it were, from whence the leaves spring in the bottom of the water; from which head also come forth sloopwise certain strings, by which growing forth it multiplieth its self.—Gerard, Her. Gall, p. 318: 1633.

Frogsh. s. British fish so called, Lophius piscatorius; sea-devil; fishing-frog; angler; in Scotland, wide-gab.

This fish, which is not uncommon in all the seas of Europe, and was in consequence called 'Lophius Europeanus' by Shaw, has also been called frog and frogsh from the earliest time, from its resemblance to a frog in the tadpole state. Its habits appeared to the fishermen of former days so exact a representation of the art they themselves practised, that they by common consent called it the 'fisher.' Aristotle calls it a sort of frog, which he says is also called a Fisher; and he adds, that this fish owes its name to the tact and industry it exercises to procure food.—Yarrell, British Fishes.

Frogged. adj. Ornamented by frogs (in the way of dress).

There was, indeed, a motley congregation; country ensuirs; extracts from the universities; half-pay officers; city clerks in frogged coats and mus-tachins; two or three of a better-looking description, but in reality half-swindlers, half-gentlemen; all, in short, fit specimens of that wandering tribe, which spread over the continent the renown and the ridicule of good old England.—Sir R. B. Lytton, Pelham, ch. xii.

Froghopper. s. Native hemipterous insect so called; chiefly of the genus Aphrophora, common in May, as a little green insect, enveloped in a mass of matter like saliva. Under this (which is common both on trees and plants) is to be found a small green larva.

The other division [of the Hemiptera] feed on vegetable juices, and among these we find the... froghoppers, the... plant-lice, and the... scale insects. . . . The frothy secretion often seen in summer upon different plants is caused by the larva of the common froghopper, a specimen of which of a green colour is always to be seen in the middle of the mass.—Loudon, Encyclopedia of Gardening, § 1083.

Frolic. adj. [German, fröhlich.] Gay; full of levity; full of pranks.

We fairies, that do run By the triple Heeate's team, From the presence of the sun, Following darkness like a dream, Now are frolick. Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, v. 2.

The frolick wind that breathes the Spring, Zephyr with Aurora playing, As he met her once a Maying. Milton, L'Allegro, 18.

Frolic. s. Wild prank; flight of whim and levity.

He would be at his frolick once again, And his pretensions to divinity. Lord Roscommon Alcibiades, having been formerly noted for the like frolics and excursions, was immediately accused of this. Swift.

While rain depends, the pensive cat gives o'er Her frolics, and pursues her tail no more. Id.

Frolic. v. n. Play tricks of levity and gaiety. Manly spirit and genius plays not tricks with words, nor frolics with the caprices of a frothy imagination.—Gloucester.

With it.

Then to her new love let her go, And deck her in golden array: Be finest at every blue show, And frolick it all the long day. Rosce, Colin's Complaint.

Frolicsly. adv. In a frolic manner; gaily wildly.

Coming to see you, I was set upon, I and my men, as we were slugging frolicsly, Not dreaming of an ambush of damn rogues. Beaumont and Fletcher, Lover's Progress.

Frolicsomeness. s. Attribute suggested by Frolic, or Frolicsome; pranks; wildness or gaiety.

They with railiness, levity, and a kind of frolicsness, undertake that work.—Bishop Gauden, Illustrations, p. 107: 1653.

Frolicsome. adj. Full of frolic.

His highness bespoke him a new suit and cloak, Which he gave for the sake of this frolicsome joke. Old Ballad of the Frolicsome Duke, &c. Perry, l. ii. 16.

From. prep. [This is the preposition upon which a remark has already been made under En-, viz., that, unlike the others (go in, run up, &c.), it never has an adverbial construction; in other words, is exclusively prepositional, never adverbial.

In form, too, it is peculiar. It is one of the few prepositions which contain more than two consonants, as may be seen by contrasting it with in, up, til, and others.

It, probably, owes its exclusively prepositional character to the existence of the concurrent word forth, which, with a closely allied meaning, is exclusively adverbial, never prepositional.

Its length it owes to the fact of its being derived rather than a simple word; the -m being no part of the root, and its analysis being fr + m.

The -m is the -m- in Former.

The fr- is the f-r- in the same word, as, also, in Fore and For; in Latin pro and præ; in Greek πρo.

The simple form fra, common enough with its present ordinary import in the older writers, is now only found in the expression to and fro. In Swedish it becomes -n, giving från; in Danish, it is simply fra.

In German it is superseded by von, a preposition non-existent in English; being used in German only as an adverb, i.e. as forth or forward.

All its meanings may, like those of for, be deduced from the notion of anteriority or beforeness; only, in for, while we abstract the notion of substitution or equivalence, in from we abstract that of separation, removal, or departure; *pro-*ceeding or *pr-*jection. Hence, it corresponds with the French de, which, though usually connected with the genitive case, is really ablative, denoting taking away from anything. See Of.

Its genuine signification best shows itself when it is connected with to; in which case we have not only the point of departure (terminus a quo), but the point of arrival (terminus ad quem), as, 'He went from London to York.' In this sense it is applied to immaterial as well as material extremes.

'These notions we must examine from first to last, to find out what was the form of the earth.' (T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.)

Hence it denotes—]

1. Distance.

a. In space.

His regiment lies half a mile at least, South from the mighty power of the king. Shakespeare, Richard III. v. 3.

b. In time.

The flood was not the cause of mountains, but there were mountains from the creation.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

I had, from my childhood, a wart upon one of my fingers.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The other had been trained up from his youth in the war of Flanders.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

The milk of tigers was his infant food, Taught from his tender years the taste of blood. Dryden.

2. Physical sequence, i.e. in the way of cause and effect.

By the sacred radiance of the sun, The mysteries of Heavens, and the night; By all the operations of the orbs, From whom we do exist, and came to be, Here I disclaim all my paternal care,

You are good, but from a nobler cause, From your own knowledge, not from nature's laws. Dryden.

David celebrates the glory of God from the consideration of the greatness of his works.—Archbishop Tillotson.

We sicken soon from her contagious care; Grieve for her sorrows, groan for her despair. Prior.

3. Logical sequence, i.e. in the way of inference from premises to conclusion.

If an objection be not removed, the conclusion of experience from the time past to the time present will not be sound and perfect.—Bacon, Considerations on a War with Spain.

This is evident from that high and refined morality, which shined forth in some of the ancient heathens.—South.

4. Contrariety.

Any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing; whence end, both at the first and now, and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature. —Shakespeare, Hamlet, III. 2.

Do not believe, That from the sense of all civility, I thus would play and trifle with your reverence. Id., Othello, I. 1.

Did you draw both bonds to furthest? Sign, to break? Or must we read you quite from what we speak, And find the truth out the wrong way? Thomson.

With an adverb, the construction being as if the adverb were a noun in an oblique case.

From above.

He, which gave them from above such power, for miraculous confirmation of that which they taught endued them also with wisdom from above, to teach them which they so did confirm.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

From afar.

Light demiances from afar they throw.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

From beneath.

An arm arises of the Stygian flood,
Which, breaking from beneath with bellowing sound,
Whirls the black waves and rattling stones around.
Dryden.

From behind.

See, to their base restor'd, earth, seas, and air,
And joyful ages from behind in crowding ranks appear.
Dryden.

From hence, thence, and whence; in which construction from is superfluous.

In the necessary differences which arise from thence, they rather break into several divisions than join in any one publick interest; and from hence have always arisen the most dangerous factions, which have ruined the peace of nations.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

While future realms his wandering thoughts delight,
His daily vision, and his dream by night,
Forbidden Thetis appears before his eyes,
From whence he sees his absent brother fly.
Pope, Translation of the First Book of the Iliad.

With a preposition, the construction being as if the preposition with its case were a noun, of which the meaning were a compound of the signification of the combined words, e.g. from 'amidst the waves'—the middle of the waves.

From amidst.

Thou too shalt fall by time or tardy foes,
Whose circling walls the sea's fun d'ulls enclose;
And thou, whose rival towers invade the skies,
And from amidst the waves with equal glory rise.
Addison.

From among.

Here had new learn
My wand'ring, had not he who was my guide
Up hither, from among the trees appear'd,
Presence divine! Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 512.

From beneath.

My worthy wife our arms mislaid,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

From beyond.

There followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from beyond Jordan.—St. Matthew, iv. 23.

From forth.

Young Arctus, from forth his bridal bow'r,
Brought the full laver o'er their heads to pour,
And canisters of consecrated flour.
Pope, Translation of Homer, The Odyssey.

From off.

The sea being constrained to withdraw from off certain tracts of lands, which lay till then at the bottom of it.—Hooker.

From out.

Knights, untold, may rise from out the plain,
And fight on foot their honour to regain.
Dryden.

From out.

u. Simply.
The king with angry threatnings from out a window, where he was not advanced the world should behold him a holder, commanded his guard and the rest of his soldiers to hasten their death.—Nir P. Sidney.

From out.

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing North and hyperborean seas,
Terror is thine; and wild amazement, flung
From out thy chariot, withers o'er the strong.
Dryden.

From out.

b. With of.
Whatever such principle there is, it was at the first found by discourse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

From under.

He, though blind of sight,
Deceiv'd, and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His fiery virtue rous'd
From under ash into sudden flame.
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1087.

From within.

From within
The broken bowels, and the lacerated skin,
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Straight issues through the sides assembling swarms.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics.

Fromward.

Fromward. prep. Away from; in a different direction: (opposed to towards). Rare.

Fromward.

As cheerfully going towards as Procles went fromward towards his death.—Sir P. Sidney.

Fromward.

Fromward. prep. Fromward. Rare.

Fromward.

1014

The horizontal needle is continually varying towards east and west; and so the dipping or inclining needle is varying up and down, towards or from the south.—Cheyne.

Front. s. [Lat. frons, frontis.] In Botany. Green or leafy branch or bough: (specially applied to the class of ferns).

The front itself varies in having its branches from a quarter of an inch to a full inch in breadth.—Observations on the British Fern, by Dr. Goodenough, &c., lins. Soc. Brit. 19: 1797.

Fronda are plants consisting of a number of leaves or fronds, as they used to be called, attached to a stem, which is either subterraneous or lengthened above the ground. . . . Scale mosses, and Liverworts, differ much in their organs of reproduction, while they have a striking resemblance in their vegetation. This latter, which bears the name of frond or thallus, is either a leafy branched tuft. . . . or it is a flat lobed mass of green vegetable matter lying upon the ground.—Lindley, Introduction to Botany, b. I. ch. iii.

Frondation. s. Lopping of trees. Rare.

Frondation, or the felling off some of the luxuriant branches or sprays of trees, is a kind of pruning.—Ecloga, Sylva, iii. ii. § 8.

Front. s. [Lat. frons, frontis = forehead; often, with an extent of import, face; and thence, with a secondary extension, forepart of anything in general.]

1. Forehead or face.

a. Simply.

His front yet threatens, and his frowns command.
Prior.

b. As the seat of shame or its contrary.

Alone it means impudence; compounded with -less, modesty. See Forehead and Frontless.

Shakespeare was ordered to deliver up the great seal, and instantly carried over his front of brass and his image of power to the mink of the opposition.—Munday, Critical and Historical Essays, Sir W. Temple.

In his defence he [Demetrius] had the front to claim the merit of the blessings which the people had enjoyed during the long period of peace. It was probably felt that he might still be useful; at least that it was not the time to punish him; and he was acquitted.—Thirlwall, History of Greece.

c. As opposed to an enemy.

His forward hand, hurl'd to wounds, makes way
Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce. Daniel.

d. Part or place opposed to the face.

Our men had shot that thundered upon them from the ramper in front, and from the galleries that lay at sea in flank.—Bacon.

e. Van of an army.

Twist head and heart into narrow space was left,
A dreadful interval in front to front
Presented stood, in terrible array.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 104.

2. Forepart; most prominent or conspicuous part of anything, as of a building.

Both these sides are not only returns, but parts of the front; and uniform without, though severally partitioned within, and are on both sides of a great and stately tower, in the midst of the front.—Bacon, Essays.

Lamb, with his sister, sat, as he anticipated, in the front of the pit, and having joined in enacting the epilogue, the brilliancy of which injured the face, he gave way with equal pliancy to the common feeling, and himself and looked as loudly as any of his neighbours.—Talford, Memoirs of Lamb.

3. Part of the head-dress so called.

Lady Kicklebury wears a front, and, I make no doubt, a complete front; or she certainly would have let down her back hair, so overpowering were her feelings, and so bitter her indignation at her daughter's black ingratitude.—Thackeray, The Kickleburys on the Rhine.

I wear fronts now, and a cap. There's nothing but a pack of servant girls and hold impudent rubbish that come out in their braids, and scrappies, and ringlets, and 'a la Eugene', and things.—Salu, Dutch Pictures, The late Mr. D.

Front. v. a. Oppose directly, or face to face; encounter; stand over against any place or thing.

Some are either to be won to the state in a fast and true manner, or fronted with some other of the same party that may oppose them, and so divide the reputation.—Bacon, Essays.

I shall front thee, like some staring ghost,
With all my wrogs about me.
Dryden, Don Sebastian.

The square will be one of the most beautiful in Italy when this statue is erected, and a townhouse built at one end in front the church that stands at the other.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Front. v. n. Stand foremost. Rare.

I front but in that file,
Where others tell steps with me.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. 1. 2.

Frontal. s.

1. In Anatomy. See next entry.

2. In Medicine. External application, either as a bandage or for the purpose of cooling the head by evaporation.

The torpedo, alive, stupifies at a distance; but after death, produceth no such effect; which had they retained, they might have supplied opium, and served as frontals in phrenetics.—Sir T. Brown, Valerius Cordus.

We may apply Interchients upon the temples of madrick: frontals may also be applied.—Wissens, Surgery.

3. In Architecture. Little pediment over a small door or window.

Vast hotels, with their gloomy frontals, and magnificent contempt of comfort.—Sir E. B. Lytton, Pelham, ch. xxii.

4. Hanging in front of an altar. Same as Antependium.

In the arrangement and decoration of the altar of a village church, where but small sums of money can be expended, it is recommended that the altar-cloth be of green colour in the first instance, and afterwards that separate frontals of the other colours be obtained by degrees.—Directorium Anglicanum, p. 258.

Frontal. adj. In Anatomy. Connected with, constituting or helping to constitute, the forehead: (applied chiefly, as the name of certain bones; also certain cavities, processes, ridges, &c. connected with them. The bone being omitted, the construction is often substantival).

In the ox the whole of the upper surface of the cranium is formed by the frontals. . . . The bone differs from the frontal in the greater breadth and convexity of the frontal. . . . The frontal sinuses extend into the horn-corn in all inches, but not so in the majority of antelopes. . . . In the Chickara the frontal developed two pairs of horn-corns; and this peculiarity was also manifested by some gigantic antelopes now extinct.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates.

Frontier. s. [Fr. frontière.]

1. Limit; utmost verge of any territory;

border; march.

I upon my frontiers were keep residence,
That little which is left so in defence.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 268.

2. Forts built along the bounds of any territory. Obsolete.

In the frontiers made by the late emperor Charles the fifth, divers of their walls having given way.—Lee, Practice of Fortification, p. 21: 1589.

With the accent on the last syllable.

He'll tell . . .

Of jacobinisms, parapsy, frontiers.

Etymon, Notes from Blackfryers: 1017.

Frontier. adj. Bordering.

A place there lies on Gallia's utmost bounds,
Where rising seas insult the frontier grounds.
Addison.

Frontinise. s. French wine from the district in Languedoc so called.

He [K. James I.] drank very often, which was rather out of a custom than any delight; and his drinks were of that kind for strength, as frontinise, canary, high canary wine, trent wine, and Scotch ale.—Nir A. Watson, Court of King James, p. 179: 1650.

Frontispiece. s. [Lat. frontispicius; from frons (gen. frontis) = forehead, front, and specio = see, view. The e is suggested by the word piece, as if the word meant a piece in front.] That which is seen in the front, fore part, first part, or beginning of anything: (as, 'The frontispiece of a book,' often an engraving).

With frontispiece of diamond and gold
Embellish'd, thick with sparkling orient gems
The portal shone. Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 208

Who is it has informed us that a rational soul can inhabit no tenement, unless it has just such a sort of frontispiece?—Locke.

The frontispiece of the townhouse has pillars of a beautiful black marble, streaked with white.—Addison.

Frontis. adj. Not blushing; wanting shame; void of diffidence.

To triumph in a lie, and a lie themselves have forced, is frontless. Fully often goes beyond her bounds; but impudence knows none.—B. Jonson, Discourses.

Thine, frontless man, we follow'd from afar,
Thy instruments of death and tools of war.
Dryden, Translation of the First Book of the Iliad.

For vice, though frontless and of harden'd face,
Is daunted at the sight of awful grace.
Id., Hind and Panther.

Frontlet. s.

1. Ornament worn upon the forehead.
How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet on? You are too much of late i' th' frown.—Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 4.
They shall be as frontlets between thine eyes.—Deuteronomy, vi. 8.

2. In Medicine. Frontal.

To the forehead frontlets were applied, to restrain and intercept the influx.—Wiseman, Surgery.

3. In Hair-dressing. Front.

Come, hatter'd beaux, whose locks are turn'd to grey,
And crop discretion's lying badge away
Read where they vend these smart engaging things,
These flaxen frontlets with elastic springs;
No female eye the fair deception sees,
Not Nature's self so natural as them.
Crabbe, The Borough, Newspaper.

Proofs. s. [German direct, pfropfer = cork-screw.] Auger (tool so called). Rare.

And as you have seen
A shipwright bore a naval beam; he oft
Trusts at the auger's proofs; works still aloft,
And at the shanks helps others.
Chapman, Translation of the Odyssey, ix. (Nares by H. & W.)

Fröppish. adj. Peevish; froward.

His cruelties . . . had still the same power, and the same malice, and a fröppish kind of insolence, that delighted to deprive him of any thing that pleased him, and manifestly pleased itself in vexing him.—Lord Clarendon, Life, iii. 288.
Oh, my dear Bud, come home; why dost thou look so fröppish, who has anger'd thee?—Wycherley, The Country Wife.

Fröppishness. s. Attribute suggested by Fröppish.

Such husbands who cannot bear with little disdain, and first fröppishness of imprudent youth, till rectified by kind and winning moderation, are like to those that choose the sour grapes, and leave to others the ripe delicious clusters.—Translation of Plutarch's Morals, iii. 11. (Ord MS.)

Frose. part. adj. Same as Frow, this latter being the more correct form.

The parching air
Burns frose, and cold performs th' effect of fire.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 594.

Frown. part. adj. [A.S. ge-frown, pass. part. of fryman = freeze; the s of the root being changed to r, as also in ge-curen, from cēsan = choose, and forluren, from leosan loose.] Frozen. Obsolete.

My heartblood is well nigh frown I feel,
And my palate grown fast to my heel.
Spenser, Shepherds' Calendar.

Fröry. adj. Frozen.

Her up betwixt his rugged hands he rear'd,
And with his fröry lips full softly kiss'd.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, iii. 4. 35.

Frost. s. Congelation; freezing; work imitative of frost.

This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare, Henry VIII. iii. 2.
When the frost arises upon wine, only the more waterish parts are congealed; there is a wintry spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression.—South, Sermons.
Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost.
Pope, Pastoral, Winter.

Frost. v. n. Shoot out like the water of a moist surface when crystallized by frost.

If the metal be too hot when it drops into the water, the glass-drop certainly frosts and cracks all over.—Birk, History of the Royal Society, i. 38.

Fröstite. s. Effect of partial cold on any part of the surface of the body, when sufficiently intense to take the appearance of freezing.

If the cold be excessive, or its action prolonged,
the part, after suffering more or less unconscious, loses its sensibility. This state of torpor or of benumbing, when fully established, is denominated fröstite, and unless speedily relieved is followed by the death of the part.—Pereira, Materia Medica, p. 25.

Fröstitten. adj. Nipped or withered by the frost.

The leaves are too much fröstitten.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Frösted. adj. Laid on like hoar frost.

The rich broadcled silk unfold,
Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frösted gold.
Clay.

Fröstily. adv. In a frosty manner; without warmth of affection.

Courtling, I rather than shouldst utterly Dispraise my work than praise it fröstily.
B. Jonson.

Frösting. verbal abs. Condition of that which is frosted. In the extract, effects of a frost in the way of giving ruddiness to the complexion.

Like as fond mothers use to send forth their daughters on frösting, early in cold mornings (though into the midst of a vaporous and fussy ayre), who whiles they strive for a colour lose their health.—Bishop Hall, Quo Vadis? (Ord MS.)

Fröstless. adj. Wanting, destitute of frost.

Did you ever see such a fröstless winter?—Swift's Journal, To Stella, Jan. 14, 1710-11. (Ord MS.)

Fröstnail. s. Nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, in order that it may keep its footing on the ground rendered slippery by frost.

The claws are straight only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with fröstnails.
—Grew, Cosmology Sacra.

Fröstwork. s. Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.

By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful mind, and those the hail conveys;
The snowy fleece and curious fröstwork these;
Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze.
Sir R. Blackmore.

No sooner did the warm aspect of good fortune shine out again, but all those exalted ideas of virtue and honour, raised, like a beautiful kind of fröstwork, in the cold season of adversity, dissolved and disappeared.—Bishop Warburton, On Prodiges, p. 17.

Frösty. adj.

1. Having the power of congelation; excessively cold.

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frösty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned soul.
Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus, iii. 1.

The air, if very cold, irritates the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire scorseth in frösty weather.—Bacon.

A snail, half starved with cold and hunger, went out one frösty morning to a bee-hive.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

2. Hoary; resembling frost: (often applied to grey-haired heads).

Where is loyalty?
If it be banish'd from the frösty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. v. 1.

3. Cold; chill: (as opposed to warmth of temperament).

Fröte. v. a. [Fr. frotter.] Rub. Rare.

She smells, she knoweth, and her corps
She loves carefully;
She tusts her hairs, she frötes her face,
She idle loves to be.
Kendall, Flowers of Epigrammata: 1577. (Nares by H. and W.)

The round aristotelian doth beautiful, clean, and fasten the teeth, if they be often fröted or rubbed with the powder thereof.—Gerarde, Herbal, 608. (Ord MS.)

Fröterer. s. One who frötes; rubber. Rare.

I curl his periwig, paint his cheeks, perfume his breath; I am his fröterer or rubber in a hot beam.
—Marton, What you will. (Nares by H. and W.)

Fröth. s. [O.N. frauth.]

1. Foam; bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

When wind exproth from under the sea, as it causeth some resembling of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of fröth.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
They were the fröth my raging folly mov'd
When it boill'd up; I knew not then I lov'd,
Yet then lov'd most.
Dryden, Aurangzeb.

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mixed, let water, a little thickened with soap, be utilized to make a fröth; and after that fröth has stood a little, there will appear to one that shall view it intently various colours every where in the surface of the bubbles; but to one that shall so so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole fröth will grow white with a perfect whiteness.—Sir I. Newton.

A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose fröth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, de-sponding to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist.—Scutry, Sermons.

2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.

It was long speech, but all fröth.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Fröth. v. n. Foam.

He froths within, fröthes treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth.
Dryden, Don Sebastian.

Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it stutter and fröth high.—Grew.

Fröth. v. a. Make to froth: (as to fröth beer, i.e. to make it rise on the top).

Fill me a thousand pots, and fröth 'em, fröth 'em.
Beaumont and Fletcher, The Pilgrim.

He fröth'd his bumpers to the firm;
A jollier year we shall not see.
But tho' his eyes are waxing dim,
And tho' his feet speak ill of him,
He was a friend to me.
Tennyson, Death of the Old Year.

Fröthiness. s. Emptiness; triflingness.

The vanity of his conversation, and the fröthi-ness and fröthiness of his discourse.—South, Sermons, viii. 265.

Fröthy. adj.

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of different natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some fröthy, as elms.—Bacon.
Behold a fröthy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies.
Swift.

2. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the fröthy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue?—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and fröthy men as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat.—Archbishop Tillotson.

Fronsee. v. a. [Fr. froncer.] Frizzle; frizz; ruffle: (chiefly applied to the dressing of the hair. As a substantive, it appears, at least in the extract under the next entry, to have been confounded with Flounce).

Some fronsee their curled hair in courtly guise.
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their ruff attire.
Spenser, Faerie Queen v.
Thus, Night, oft set me in thy pale career,
Till civil morn appear:
Not trick'd and fronsee'd as she was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt.
Milton, Il Penseroso, 121.

Fronsee. s. See Frounce, v. a.

What! shall I leave my state to pins and poking-sticks,
To farthingales and fronsees?
Beaumont and Fletcher, Monsieur Thomas.

Fronsee. part. adj. Frizzled; ruffled.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buckin, or an oversteering fronsee'd head.—Archam, Schoolmaster.

Frösy. adj.

1. Fetid; musty.

Pétioleats in frösy heaps.
Swift.

2. Dim; cloudy.

When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;
A frösy dirty-colour'd red
Hits on her cloudy wrinkled face.
Swift.

Frow. s. [German, frau = woman.] Woman: (generally applied to those of Holland and Germany).

A Dutch Frow's colour hath no grace,
Seen in a Roman lady's face.
Florio, Translation of Montaigne, p. 209.
They are now
Buxom as Bacchus' frow, revelling, dancing.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit at several Weapons.

Your slaves, like the German frow, are all cheeks to the belly.—Jensius, Sin. stigmatized, p. 38.

Frow. adj. [?] ? Brittle. Rare.
That (timber) which grows in gravel is subject to be frow (as they term it) and brittle.—Bosley.

Froward. adj. [A.S. fram weard = from, and ward; hence the opposite to to-ward, i.e. unforward.] Resistant; obstinate.
The froward pain of mine own heart made me delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chillest let in the way.—Sir P. Sidney.
Whose way are crooked, and they froward in their path.—Proverbs, ii. 15.
Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation.—Bacon, Essays.
Motions occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles.—Sir W. Temple.

Frowardly. adv. In a froward manner; peevishly; perversely.
I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly in the way of his heart.—Isaiah, lvi. 17.

Frowardness. s. Attribute suggested by Froward; peevishness; perverseness.
How many frowardnesses of ours does he another? how many indignities does he pass by? how many affronts does he put up at our hands?—South, Sermons.
We'll mutually forget
The warmth of youth and frowardness of age.
Aldison, Cato.

Frower. s. Tool used by woodmen and coopers: (in the extract for splitting; but, probably, allied in origin to Froofe).
A frower of iron for clearing of lath.
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath.
Tusser, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Frowing. adj. [?] ? Foggy; damp. Rare.
Gather not roses in a wet and frowing hour.
Sir J. Buckling, Apleura: 1633. (Nares by H. and W.)

Frowish. adj. Musty. Obsolete.
He that is rank or frowish in savour, hircous.—Withal, Dictionary, p. 286: 1608. (Nares by H. and W.)

Frown. v. n. [N.Fr. frogner.] Express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; look stern.
Say, that she frown: I'll say, she looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew.
Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, ii. 1.

Frown. v. a. Drive back with a look of haughtiness or displeasure.
Ventidius fix'd his eyes upon my passage,
Severely, as he meant to frown me back.
Dryden, All for Love.

Frown. s. Wrinkled look; look of displeasure.
Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour.—Knolles, History of the Turks.
In his half-clos'd eyes
Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His frown yet threatens and his frown command.
Prior.

Frowningly. adv. Sternly; with a look of displeasure.
What, look'd he frowningly?
A countenance more in sorrow than in anger.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 2.

Frowy. adj. [?] Damp. Obsolete.
But if they with thy notes should yede,
They soon might be corrupted;
Or like not of the frowy fide,
Or with the weeds be giuted.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

Frozen. part. adj.
1. Congealed with cold.
What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arms;
E'en such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.
Fierce Boron, with his offspring, issues forth
To invade the frozen wagon of the North.
Id., Translations from Ovid.

2. Chill in affection; wanting in warmth of feeling or enthusiasm.
Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair; but his armour materially representing ice, and all his furniture lively answering thereto.
—Sir P. Sidney.
Be not ever frozen, coy,
One beam of love will soon destroy,
As 't melt that ice to floods of joy.
Carver.

3. Void of heat of appetite.
Even here, where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires.
Pope, Eloisa to Abelard.

Frozenness. s. Attribute suggested by Frozen; state of being frozen.
They soon return to that frozenness which is hardly dissolved.—Bishop Gauden, Hieraspates, p. 486: 1633.

Fructiferous. adj. Bearing fruit. (In Horticulture, Fruitbearing commoner. Applied to results in general).
(For example see extract under Luciferous.)

Fructification. s. Act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation; fertility.
That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a hirc-tree, hath scarce reason to doubt.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Fructify. v. a. Make fruitful; fertilize.
Neither doth the earth bring forth the huddra, or leaves, or other frute, unless it receives moisture of the raine; nor the raine doth fructify without earth.—Martin, Marriage of Friends, sign. Ro. i. b.: 1554.
The loyal levies the sovereign raises are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth.—Flower, Vocal Portent.
Where'er she looks, behold some sudden birth
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth.
Graville.

Fructify. v. n. Bear fruit.
It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles.—Brown.

Fructation. s. Act of putting forth fruit.
Knowing . . . with what superabundant population the first fructation of an advancing society is loaded.—Poensal, p. 60: 1782.

Fructuous. adj. Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.
Apples of price, and plentiful sheaves of corn,
Or interlac'd occur; and both inlull
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound!
J. Phillips, Cyder.

Frugal. adj. [Fr. frugal; Lat. frugi.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.
Reasoning, I oft admire,
How nature wise and frugal could commit
Such disproportion, with superfluous hand
So many noddie bodies to create,
Greater so manifold to this one use.
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 25.
If through mist he sleights his millen beams,
Frugal of light, in lone and struggling streams,
Suspect a driding day.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

Frugality. s. Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.
As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink.—Bacon.
Frugality and bounty too,
Those differing virtues, meet in you. Walker.
In this frugality of your prizes some things I cannot omit.—Dryden, Fables, dedication.
The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

Frugally. adv. Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.
He would have us live soberly, that is to say, honestly, shamefacedly, chastely, temperately, and frugally.—Woolton, Christian Manual, sign. L. iii. b.: 1676.
Mean time young Paulmond his marriage prem'd,
And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun,
To join his brother's bridal with his own.
Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia.

Frugiferous. adj. Bearing fruit: (Fruit-bearing commoner).
Every frugiferous herb which is upon the face of the earth.—Dr. H. More, Conjectura Cabbalistica, p. 8: 1683.

Frugivorous. adj. [Lat. fruges = fruit; voro = devour, eat.] Feeding on fruit: (as opposed to Carnivorous, Graminivorous, and other similar compounds).

In a frugiferous bat I find the following verbal formula.—Quercus, Anatomy of Verberales.

Fruct. s. [Lat. fructus; O.Fr. fruit.]

1. Product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.
The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality.
Shakespeare, Henry V. i. 1.

2. Part of a plant which is taken for food.
By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find.
Sir J. Davies.

3. Production.
The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth.—Ephesians, v. 9.

4. Offspring of the womb; young of any animal.
Blessed shall be the fruit of thy body.—Deuteronomy, xxviii. 4.
Shall the women eat their fruit, and the children of a span long?—Lamentations, ii. 20.
Can't thou their reck'nings keep? the time compute,
When their swol'n bellies shall enlarge the fruit.
Sandys.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.
What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories? Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity?—Swift.
Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him.—Locke.

6. Effect or consequence of any action.
She blush'd when she considered the effect of granting; who was pale when she remembered the fruits of denying.—Sir P. Sidney.

7. Dessert after the meat.
Give first admittance to the ambassadors;
My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, ii. 2.

Fruit. v. n. Produce fruit.
As it is three years before they fruit, I might as well at my age plant oaks, and hope to have the advantage of their timber.—Lord Chesterfield.

Fruitage. s. Fruit collectively; various fruits.
In heav'n the trees
Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines
Yield nectar.
Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 426.
Gravely they pluck'd
The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew
Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flamm'd.
Ibid., x. 661.
What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work?—Dr. H. More.

Fruitbearer. s. That which produces fruit.
Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Fruitbearing. adj. Having the quality of producing fruit.
By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Fruiterer. s. One who trades in fruit.
I did fight with one Samson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's Inn.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. iii. 2.
Walnuts the fruiterer's hand in Autumn stain;
Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment his gain.
Gag.

Frutery. s.
1. Fruit collectively taken.
Of, notwithstanding all thy care
To help thy plants, on the small frutery
Exempt from ill, an oriental blast
Inhaustrous flies.
J. Phillips, Cyder.

2. Fruitloft; repository for fruit.

Frutful. adj.
1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of vegetable product.
If she continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain frutful in the sun's continual absence.—Sir P. Sidney.
The Earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n, so small,
Nor glistering, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the frutful earth.
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 61.

2. Actually bearing fruit.
Adonis' garden,
That one day bloom'd, and frutful was the next.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. i. 6.

3. Prolific; childbearing: (opposed to barren).

Hear, Nature, hear! dear goddess, hear!
Suspend thy purpose, if thou didst intend
To make this creature fruitful!
Into her womb convey sterility!

Shakespeare, King Lear, l. 4.
Male he created thee, but thy conquest
Female for race; then blis'd mankind, and said,
Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the Earth;
Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 529.
I have copied Nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful.—Guy, Preface to the What d'ye call it.

4. Plentiful; abounding in anything.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's publick posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays.

Addison.

Fruitfully. adv. In a fruitful manner.

1. So as to be prolific.

How sacred seeds of sex, and air, and earth,
And purer fire through universal night,
And empty space did fruitfully unite. Roscommon.

2. Plentifully; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off; if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully obeyed.—Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 6.

Fruitfulness. s. Attribute suggested by fruitful.

1. Fertility.

Neither can we ascribe this same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

2. Fecundity.

The goddess, present at the match she made,
So blest'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had shapen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid.

3. Abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary: I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for.—B. Jonson, Discoverie.

Fruition. s. [Lat. frui = enjoy.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.

The consummation of all earthly bliss,
The full fruition of a kindly crown. Poet.
Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as i.
must necessarily estimation.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I am driv'n, by breath of her renown,
Either to seek midnight, or to arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. v. 3.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Can not so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave.

Sandys, Paraphrase of Psalms.

Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,
Naked and unadorn'd, canst find success;
Till by fruition, novelty destroy'd,
The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd.

Gracville.

Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of such conduct, if the affliction be on his body, his appetite is weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed.—Ergers, Sermons.

I shall not expose his transports to you: a stranger shall not intermeddle with his joy. I leave him in the fruition of that felicity which a heart so honest, simple, and feeling as his will sooner or later certainly obtain, from a heart so simple, good, and honest as his own.—Emilia Wyndham, ch. lvi.

Fruitive. adj. Relating to, or consisting in, fruition or enjoyment. Rare.

To what our longings fo. Fruitive or experimental knowledge, it is reserved among the prerogatives of being in heaven, to know how happy we shall be when there.—Boyle.

Fruitless. adj.

1. Barren of, or not bearing, fruit (either real, or figurative in the sense of offspring).

The Spaniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear seed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless.—*Sir
W. Raleigh, History of the World.*
Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe;
No son of mine succeeding.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 1.

2. Vain; productive of no advantage; idle; unprofitable.

Vol. I.

O! let me not, quoth he, return again
Back to the world, whose joys so fruitless are;
But let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or straightway on that last long voyage fare.

Spenser, Faerie Queene.
The other is for entirely waving all marches into antiquity, in relation to this controversy, as being either needless or fruitless.—Waterland.

Fruitlessly. adv. In a fruitless manner;
vainly; idly; unprofitably.

After this fruit curiously fruitlessly enquireth, and confidence blindly determineth.—*Sir T.
Browne, Vulgar Errors.*

Walkhug they talk'd and fruitlessly divin'd
What friend the priestess by those words design'd.
Dryden, Translation of the Kneid.

Fruitlessness. s. Attribute suggested by fruitless; barrenness; unfruitfulness;
vanity.

Christ whips our fruitlessness in the innocent fig-tree; like as the manner was among the Persians, when their great men had offended, to take their garments and beat them.—Hales, Golden Bemaia,
p. 24.

(Certainly the fruitlessness and inconsequence of their vice [swearing] considered, almost no sinners have more to answer for.—Boyle, Against customary Swearing, p. 120.)

Fruity. adj. Resembling, or having the flavour of, fruit: (especially the fruit of which any particular thing is made, e.g.
the vine in 'fruity wine').

Fruiment. s. Older form of Frumenty.

Fruiment, with venison, &c.—Fabyan, vol. ii.
A.D. 1530. (Rich.)

Frumentaceous. adj. Having the character of corn or wheat; see extract.

Frumentaceous plants are those which produce peniculated or knotted stalks, with reed-like leaves, and whose seed growing in spikes or joints is useful to make pulque or bread. . . . Wheat, barley, rye, millet, &c., are frumentaceous plants. Some authors use frumentaceous in a narrower sense, restraining it to plants which bear a conformity to wheat, either in respect to their fruit, leaves, ears, or the like.—Encyclopædia.

Frumentation. s. [Lat. frumentatio; of which it is an English form, rather than a true English word.] Largess of corn.

Frumentation among the Romans [was] a largess of corn bestowed on the people. . . . At first the number of those to whom this largess was given was indefinite, till Augustus fixed it at two hundred thousand.—Kece, Cæsar's Gallic.

Frumenty. s. [Fr. frumentée (Cotgrave); from Lat. frumentum = corn.] Food made of wheat boiled in milk. See Frumenty.

Frumenty makes the principal entertainment of all our country wakes. Our country people call it frumty; it is an agreeable composition of boiled wheat, milk, spices, and sugar.—Dr. Ousey, Materials for a History of Cheshire, p. 10.

Fruimentary. s. Frumenty. Rare.

The fifth book is of peace-porridge; under which are included frumenty, water-gruel, &c.—*King,
Art of Cookery,* letter 3. (Rich.)

Fruump. v. a. [?] Mock. Obsolete.

I am abused and fruump'd, sir.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Maid of the Mill.
You must learn to mock too, fruump your own father on occasion.—Ruggles, Comedy of Ignorance,
v. 2: 1830.

Cassius Chorus, . . . who being now farre steep'd in years, Cæsar was wont to fruump and flout in most opprobrious terms, as a witless and effeminate person.—Holland, Translation of Suetonius, p. 140.
(Rich.)

With off. Fub off.

Was ever gentleman

So fruump'd off with a fool?

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances.

Fruump. s. [?] Joke; flout; trick of mockery. Obsolete.

It appears that they which utterly can be pleasant, and when time serveth can give a merry answer, or use a nipping taunt, shall be able to smite a right worthy man, and make him at his wits end, through the sometime quick and unlook'd for fruump given.—Wilson, Art of Rhetorique, p. 137.
(Rich.)

From hence this orator, this parcel of wit, flew out into a pleasant fruump, as he thinks, but indeed an ugly, inhuman, monstrous ribaldry.—Bishop Hall, Honour of married Clergy, p. 104.

You must look to be eviled, and endure a few court fruumps for it.—B. Jonson, Poetaster.
Sweet widow, leave your fruumps, and be edified.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Scornful Lady.
He [Fabius Maximus] nothing at all regarding such words, persisted still continually in his designs, . . . saying to his friends, that he who would not abide and scoff, but feared fruumps and reviling words, was a greater coward than he who fled before his enemy.—Holland, Translation of Plutarch,

p. 333. (Rich.)

To be girded with fruumps and curtail gibes.—Milton, Apology for Smectymannus. (Rich.)

Fruump. s. [?] That the meaning of this word may be a person on whom jests may be made (especially an elderly woman), is not unlikely; in which case its connexion with the preceding is clear. At the same time it may be nothing more than the older term misunderstood, its newer application being suggested by frump and frumsey. Richardson, who gives only the older sense of gibe, connects it with frumpold.] Formal, grotesque, old woman.

'There,' exclaimed Mrs. Green, 'that's it. You are like the odious fruump I have just been talking of—
"something had will come of it."—*Theodore Hook,
Gilbert Gurney,* vol. ii. ch. iv.

Fruumping. part. adj. Gilding. Obsolete.

Those [lawyers] I mean who having broken down overdone from the grammar schools, run to and fro in all corners studying for scoffs, and fruumping flouts, nor for meet pleas to help any cause.—Holland, Translation of Ammianus Marcellinus. (Rich.)

Fruush. v. a. [O.Fr. fruisser.] Break, bruise, or crush. Obsolete.

They are soon fruush'd with sickness, or too farre withered with age.—Mollanah, Description of Ireland, p. 29.

I like thy armour well;
I'll fruush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, v. 6.

Rinaldo's armour fruush'd and hack'd they had,
Fairfax, Translation of Tasso.

Fruush. s. [Frog is another name for this part, which, as frusch is the German for frog (= rana), and frasher, with a like meaning, is provincial English, is probably named from the animal.] See extract.

Fruush [is] a sort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe; it divides into two branches, running towards the heel, in the form of a fork.—*Ph.
Littorary.*

Frustraneous. adj. Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage. Rare.

Their attempts being so frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so pernicious, it is a marvel that any man should be zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it.—Dr. H. More.

He timely withdraws his frustraneous baffled kindness, and sees the folly of endeavouring to stroke a tyger into a lamb, or to court an Ethiopian out of his colour.—South, Sermons.

Frustrate. v. a. [Lat. frustra = in vain.] Defeat; disappoint; balk; nullify.

The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances.—Spenser.

Now thou hast avenged
Supplanted Adam; and by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,
And frustrate the conquest fraudulent.

Milton, Paradise Regain'd, iv. 606.

Felton and Bellingham repudiated trust in no human being; and they were therefore able to accomplish their evil purposes. But Babbington's conspiracy against Elizabeth, Fawkes's conspiracy against James, Gerard's conspiracy against Cromwell, the Rye House conspiracy, Despard's conspiracy, the Cato Street conspiracy, were all discovered, *frustrate*d, and punished.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xxi.

Frustrate. adj.

1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

He is drown'd,

Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks

Our frustrate search on land.

Shakespeare, Tempest, iii. 3.

The ruler of the province of Judea being by Julian bused in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and off consuming the workmen, made the enterprise frustrate.—
Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

All at once employ their thronging darts;
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design.

Dryden, Translation from Ovid.

2. Disappointed; defeated; balked.

That my lord be not defeated and frustrate his purpose.—Judith, xl. 11.

It is an axiom of nature that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrated.—Hooker, Ecological Polity.

Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will;
Not half-suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.

Frustration. s. Disappointment; defeat.
If ineffectual frustration were intolerable.—Barrow, vol. i. serm. 1.

Vain hate and presumptuous conceits, to which no answer will be given but shame and frustration.—Dr. H. Burn, On the Seven Churches, prof.
In slaves notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power countermands their deepest projects, splits their counsels, and smites their most rash policies with frustration and a curse.—South, Sermos.

Frustratory. adj. Causing any procedure to be void; vacating any former process.
Bartolus restrains this to a frustratory appeal.—Ayliffe, Paragon Juris Canonici.

Frustrum. s. [Lat.] Piece cut off or separated from a body; crum: (chiefly used in Geometry, especially in conic sections).
We have a general theorem in Mr. MacLaurin's Treatise of Fluxions concerning the frustrum of a sphere, cone, spheroid, or conoid, terminated by parallel planes, when compared with a cylinder of the same altitude, on a base equal to the middle section of the frustrum made by a parallel plane. The difference between the frustrum and the cylinder is always the same in different parts of the same or of similar solids, when the inclination of the planes to the axis, and the altitude of the frustrum, are given.—Rees, Cyclopædia.

Frustrous. adj. Having the tendency, or beginning, to take the character of a shrub, as an herb may do by growing larger, and a tree by growing smaller: (this, at least, is the notion suggested by the forms in -esc-; it is, however, generally used as Frutical.)
By this means a frustrous character may be given to the smallest herbs, as is done with the tree mignonette.—Lindley, Theory and Practice of Horticulture.

Frutex. s. pl. frutices. [Lat.—not naturalized, though occasionally used in Botany, and common as the basis of several derivatives. Of these Frutical, etymologically the most correct (being formed as vertical from vertex), is the rarest; while fruticose (which, etymologically, means abounding in shrubs, rather than shrubby, and applies to the shrubby rather than the shrub) is the commonest.] Shrub.

Frutical. adj. [see remarks under Frutex.] Having the nature of a shrub. Rare.
This shrubby or frutical plant (shrubby trefoil) hath so many singular and excellent virtues contained in it, that some have called it by the name chilidunamis, that is, having a hundred properties.—Gerard, Herball, p. 1129. (Ord MS.)

Fruticant. adj. Full of shoots. Rare.
These we shall divide into the greater and more ceduous, fruticant and shrubby.—Evelyn, Introduction, § 3.
Fruticose. adj. [see remarks under Frutex.] Shrubby.
Fruticose stalks of plants are those of a hard woody substance.—Rees, Cyclopædia.

Fry. s. [Mesogothic, fraice = seed.]
1. Swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.

They come to us but as love draws;
He swallows us, and never chaws:
By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks do die;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry. Donne.
Forthwith the sounds and song, each creek and bay,
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave in skulls that oft Bunk the mid-sea. Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 399.
The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fry.—Sir R. L'Estrange.
So close behind some promontory lie
The huge Leviathans, 't attend their prey;
And give no chase, but swallow in the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way. Dryden.

2. Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.
Out of the fry of these rakehell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villany, are their kern continually supplied and maintained.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Them before the fry of children young,
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens' sounding timbrels sung. 11, Færie Queen.

Draw me no constellations there,
Nor dog, nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;
Nor any of that monstrous fry
Of animals that stock the sky. Oldham.

The young fry must be held at a distance, and kept under the discipline of contempt.—Collier, On Priests.

3. Swarm in general.
A flood of mischief flows,
A heap of hurts, a fry of foul devices,
A flock of furies, and thralls a thousand wiles. Blackie, Mirror for Magistrates, p. 26.

4. Lamb's-fry, as the name of a dish, comes under this head, the meaning of the second element being Testicles.

Fry. v. a. [Lat. frigo.] Dress food in a pan on the fire.

1. Suffer the action of fire.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;
Above the brims they force their fiery way,
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day. Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

2. Melt with heat.

Spices and gums about them molting fry,
And, phenix like, in that rich nest they die. Waller.

4. Be ignited like liquor in the pan on the fire.

Where no ford he finds, no water fries,
Nor billows with unequal murmurs roar,
But smoothly slide along, and swell the shore,
That course he steer'd. Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Fry. s. Dish of things fried.
(For example see following entry.)

Frying. verbal abs. Process by which anything is fried.

Frying is akin to this [broiling] . . . but as . . . the meat is cut into thin slices, and laid in a vessel which is interposed between the meat and the naked fire, the heat is more equally applied to the whole substance . . . a fry has more city matter than a broil.—Rees, Cyclopædia.

Fryingpan. s. Pan for frying.
A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street with the tramping of a brass kettle or a fryingpan.—Addison, Spectator.

Fall out of the fryingpan into the fire. Escape from a lesser by plunging into a greater evil.

If I pass by sea, I may chance to fall from the fryingpan into the fire.—Howell, Forall Porrait.
We understand by out of the fryingpan into the fire, that things go from bad to worse.—Sir B. L'Estrange.

Fudge. s. See extract.

Fudge, or sheage, [was] a tax or imposition laid on hearths or chimneys, i.e. on fireplaces, or families, from which was probably derived the hearth-dinner, and chimney-money. . . . Edward the Black Prince, having Aquilaine granted him, laid an imposition of fudge, or sheage, upon the subjects of that dukedom; viz. one shilling for every fire-place. Sometimes it was also called sheage on account of the oven or furnace.—Rees, Cyclopædia, in voce.

Fub. v. a. Same as Fob.

Why Doll, why Doll, I say, my letter fub'd too,
And no answer without I mend my manners? Beaumont and Fletcher, Monsieur Thomas.

Fub. s. Stuffy person.

The same fule deformed fubs.—Eub and a Great Cast, Ep. 41: 1614.

Fabbery. s. [from fub = fob.] Deception. Rare.

O, no; but dream the most fantastical,
O heaven! O fubbery, fubbery! Marston, Malcontent, i. 3.

Fabby. adj. Same as Fuby.

The sculptors and painters apply this epithet fubby to children, and say for instance of the boys of Flammengo, that they are fubby.—Nichols, Literary Anecdotes, vol. ix. p. 359.

Faby. adj. Short and stuffy.

Already had Vandyker removed his sword and belt, and laid them with his three-cornered laced hat on the side-table; he was already cosily, as of wont, seated upon the widow's little faby sofa, with the lady by his side, and he had just taken her hand and was about to renew his suit, . . . when who should bolt into the parlour but the unwelcome Snarleygown.—Marryat, Snarleygown, vol. i. ch. viii.

Fænte. adj. [see Fucus.] Painted; whence, disguised by false show. Rare.
In virtue nothing may be fænte or counterfeit.—Sir T. Elgot, Governour, fol. 152.

Fæchia. s. [from Fuchs, the botanist.] Garden flower so called.

We miss, however, in travelling through Jersey, the picturesque old cottage, with its round arched doorway, and its patch of garden, covered with fæchias, geraniums, verbena, and myrtles.—Ansted, The Channel Islands, p. 118.

Fæcus. s. [Lat.]

1. Paint for the face. Obsolete.

Women chat
Of fæcus this and fæcus that.
Those who paint for dishonesty should have the fæcus pulled off, and the consciousness underneath discovered.—Collier.

2. Disguise; false show.

No fæcus, nor vain supplement of art,
Shall falsify the language of my heart. Rowley, Paraphrase of Job, p. 52.

Fæcus. s. pl. fæci. [Lat.—name of certain seaweeds (three kinds) used by the ancients in dyeing; the tissue that had to be coloured with the purple of the murex (a shellfish), being previously dipped in a ley of them. Hence used for the purple itself, and for cosmetic pigments in general. Verb, fæcus : dy, pass. part. fucatus.] In Botany. Division of the Algae, comprising the plants (chiefly marine) more or less connected with those of the genus Fucus, i.e. the common brown seaweed.
The various authors who have written upon the fæci have very unwarrantably divided the varieties, included in the denomination 'vesiculosis,' into numerous species.—Dr. Thwaites, Observations on the British Fæci, &c., Linnean Transactions, iii. 19.

Fæcus. v. a. Paint. Rare.

The girl with her frantick grimaces, uttering sentences altogether thoughtful and serious, neither fæci'd nor perfu'd, continues her voice a thousand years by favour of the deity that speaks within her.—Translation of Plutarch's Morals. (Ord MS.)

Fud. s. See Mungo and Shoddy.

Fuddle. v. a. [?] Make drunk.

He thinks there's no man
Can give him drink enough.
That's not enough, I'll fuddle him,
Or lin' the suds. Beaumont and Fletcher, The Captain.

I am too fuddled to take care to observe your orders.—Steele, Epistolary Correspondence, i. 162.

Fuddle. v. n. Become fuddled; take the character of a fuddler.

Men will be whoring and fuddling on still.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

Fuddler. s. One who fuddles; drunkard.

The last I heard of him was, that he was grown a fuddler, and ruled at strict men.—Baxter, Life and Times, p. 4: 1620.

Fudge. interj. Expression of contempt, usually bestowed on absurd or lying talkers.

I should have mentioned the very impolite behaviour of Mr. Birchell; who, during this discourse, sat with his face turned to the fire, and at the conclusion of every sentence, would cry out fudge.—Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield, ch. xi.

Fæle. s. [N.Fr. fuayl.] Lat. focule, from focul = hearth. Combustible matter, such as wood or coal, for burning.

This shall be with burning and fuel of fire.—Isaiah, ix. 5.

Fæle. v. a. Supply with fuel. Rare.

And yet she cannot waste by this,
Nor long endure this torturing wrong;
For more corruption needles is
To fuel such a fever long. Donne, Poems, p. 16.
Never, alas! the dreadful name
That fuels the infernal flame. Cowley.

Fæler. s. One who, that which, supplies fuel.

Shops of fashions,
Love's fuelers, and the rightest company
Of players. Donne, Poems, p. 226.

Contention is a fire, backbiters are fuelers, which take it for their office and work to expell and keep away brotherly love from among men; such incendiaries they are, that if it were in their power, they would set the whole world on fire.—Cassius, Proverbs, p. 445. (Ord MS.)

Fælling. verbal abs. Fuel.

The truncheon [of ash] make the third sort of the most durable coal, and is of all other the sweetest of our forest fueling.—Evelyn, p. 129. (Ord MS.)

Fugaciosa. adj. [Lat. fugas, fugacis; fugio = fly; fugacitas, -atis.] Volatile: (chiefly used in Botany, as applied to flowers that soon shed, or lose, their leaves.

[They] require some nutriment to supply the place of the fugacious atoms.—Hallywell, Metamorphoses, p. 100; 1881.

A thing so fine and fugacious, as to escape our nearest search.—Bishop Berkeley, Works, § 43. He had hastily snatched at some little fugacious pleasures.—Sterne, Sentences, II.

Fugacity. s. Volatility; uncertainty; instability; transient character.

Spirits and salts, which, by their fugacity, odour, smell, taste, and diverse experiments that I purposely made to examine them, were like the salt and spirit of urine and such.—Boyle.

Fugh. interj. Expression of abhorrence.

A very filthy fellow; how odiously he smells of his country garlick! fugh, how he stinks of Spain! —Dryden, Don Sebastian.

Fugitive. adj. [Fr. fugitif; Lat. fugitivus.] 1. Not tenable; not to be held or detained.

Our idea of infinity is a growing and fugitive idea, still in a boundless progression, that can stop no where.—Locke.

Happiness, object of that waking dream, Which we call life, mistaking, fugitive theme Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade, Notional good, by fancy only made. —Prior.

2. Unsteady; unstable; not durable.

These momentary pleasures, fugitive delights. —Dumas, Cleopatra; 1390.

3. Volatile; apt to fly away.

The vernal chymick vainly chases His fugitive gold through all his veins. —Crusade, Poems, p. 77.

4. Flying; running from danger or duty; runaway.

Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm, The fugitive Parthians follow. —Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, III, 1.

Thrice fugitive about Troy wall. —Milton, Paradise Lost, ix, 18.

Can a fugitive daughter enjoy herself, while her parents are in tears? —Richardson, Clarissa.

5. Wandering; vagabond.

Putting off his glorious apparel, and discharging his company, he came like a fugitive servant through the midland into Antich, having very great dishonour for that his host was destroyed.—2 Macabees, viii, 35.

They are still seeking change, restless, fickle, fugitive; they may not abide to tarry in one place long. —Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 185.

6. Light; thrown off in haste; perishable; (applied to compositions, as 'fugitive pieces').

Of the laborious and uncertain part of the people, the diction is in a great measure casual and mutable; many of their terms are formed for some temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a state of increase or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore must be suffered to perish with other things unworthy of preservation. —Jakson, Preface to Dictionary.

Fugitive. s. One who runs from his station or duty; one who takes shelter under another power to avoid punishment; runaway; one hard to be caught or detained.

Unarmed men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. —Bacon, Essays, On Marriage and Single Life.

Too many, being men of good inheritance, are fled beyond the seas, where they live under princes which are her majesty's professed enemies; and converse and are confederates with other traitors and fugitives there abiding. —Spencer, View of the State of Ireland.

Your royal highness is too great and too just, either to want or to receive the homage of rebellious fugitives. —Dryden.

What muse but his can Nature's beauties hit, Or catch that airy fugitive, call'd wit? —Marta.

Fugitiveness. s. Attribute suggested by Fugitive; volatility; fugacity; instability; uncertainty.

The ludicrousness and fugitiveness of our wanton reason.—Dr. H. More, Antidote against Idolatry, ch. I.

That diverse salts, emerging upon the analysis of many concretes, are very volatile, is plain from the fugitiveness of salt and of harshness ascending in distillation.—Boyle.

Fügleman. s. [German direct, flügelmann = soldier on the flügel; which, in this case, means one side (one out of two) of a company marching or on drill. Its origin belongs rather to the Chase than the Army, in which last the plural flügel has the same import as wings in English; i.e. it applies to two large bodies of men. The flügelmeister, however, in Hunting is the director of the scouts and markers that move on the side of the sportsman. In English, the -f has been dropped, and is not likely to be readmitted.] Leader of a file; one who acts as a guide to the soldiers in the movements of the drill; leader, regulator, or director, in general.

Daily marched as Fügleman. —Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney.

Fugue. s. [French; from Lat. fuga.] In Music. Symphony consisting of four, five, six, or any other number of notes begun by some one single part, and followed by a second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth part, if the composition consists of so many, repeating the same, or such like notes, so that the several parts follow the leading part, coming in one after another in the same manner; suggesting the notion of one running away from, and being followed by, another. Colgravo calls it a chace or report of music like two or more parts in one. It has also been compared to an echo.

The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and tradition. —Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The leading part, or first treble, is pursued by the second; the second treble by the tenor, and the tenor by the bass; so that fugue is flight or pursuit. —Rees, Cyclopædia.

Fulciment. s. [Lat. fulcio = prop.] That on which a body rests, which acts or is acted upon at each end, as a balance or a lever. —Rare.

The power that equibonderates with any weight must have the same proportion unto it as there is betwixt their several distances from the centre or fulciment. —Bishop Wilkins.

It had need of another fulciment, upon which it might the more firmly rest. —Smith, Political Economy of Ages, p. 75.

Fulcrum. s. pl. fulcra. [Lat. = prop.] In Mechanics. That part of a lever from which the motive power is transmitted to parts to be moved.

As the lever is generally applied to lift or sustain weights by means of a power and fulcrum, or prop, it has taken different names, from a difference in their relative situations. It is called a lever of the first kind when the fulcrum is between the power and the weight. When you stir the fire with a poker, you make use of this lever. The poker is the lever, it rests upon one of the bars of the grate as a fulcrum; the incumbent fire is the weight to be overcome; and the hand at the other end is the power. —Adams, (Orb. MS.).

But it must suffice for the present to say again, . . . that as the inability to conceive the negation of a belief implies the agreement of all past experience in its support; and as no belief whatever of which human nature is capable can have any higher warrant than this; we are justified in holding as valid, all such of Reason's propositions as have the Universal Postulate for their guarantee—knowing that the essential elements of its creed can never be shaken, from want of a fulcrum; and not admitting the hypothetical possibility that some elements of its creed may yet be shaken to have any weight. —Herbert Spencer, Principles of Psychology, ch. I.

Fulfil. v. a.

1. Fill till there is no room for more.

Humily bowingling Thus, that all we, who are partakers of this Holy Communion, may be fulfilled with thy grace and heavenly benediction. —Book of Common Prayer, Communion Service.

2. Answer any prophecy, promise, law, purpose, or design.

They knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. —Acts, xlii, 27.

Fulfiller. s. One who, or that which, fulfils.

That he might not supplant him in his hope of being the fulfiller of the oracle before-mentioned. —Bishop Patrick, On Genesis, iv, 5.

Fulfilling. verbal abs. Act of one who fulfils; process by which anything is fulfilled; consummation; accomplishment; conjunction.

Love worketh no ill to his neighbour; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. —Romans, xlii, 10.

Fulfillment. s. Full performance: (noted by Johnson as not much used. Common enough now).

Capo [is] that by which a man is bound to certain fulfillments. —Horro Tooke, Diversions of Parley, II, 573.

Fulgent. adj. [Lat. fulgens, = entis, pres. part. of fulgeo = dazzle, flash, shine in a dazzling or flashing manner.] Shining; dazzling; exquisitely bright. —Rare.

As from a cloud his fulgent head, And shape, star-bright appear'd. —Milton, Paradise Lost, x, 449.

The illumination is not so bright and fulgent as to obscure or extinguish all perceptibility of reason. —Dr. H. More, Divine Dialogues.

Fulgor. s. Splendour; dazzling brightness like that of lightning.

Glow-worms alive project a lustre in the dark; which fulgor, notwithstanding, ceaseth after death. —Sir T. Browne.

Fulgurant. adj. [Lat. fulgurans, = antis, pres. part. of fulguro = flash as lightning (fulgur); pass. part. fulguratus; fulguratio, = antis.] Lightening; flashing.

Though pitchy blasts from hell upborn Stop the outgoings of the morn, And nature play her fiery games, In this fore'd night, with fulgurant flames. —Dr. H. More, Philosophical Poems, p. 314; 1637.

Fulgurate. v. n. Emit flashes of light.

If enclosed in a glass vessel well stopp'd, it sometimes would fulgurate, or throw out little flashes of light, and sometimes fill the whole vessel with waves of flame. —Philosophical Transactions, no. 134.

Fulguration. s.

1. Act of lightning.

The shine gave such a lightning from one to another . . . so as you should be forced to turn them [the eyes] elsewhere, or not too steadfastly to behold their fulguration. —Dunne, History of the Septuagint, p. 57; 1635.

2. In Metallurgy. See extract.

Fulguration designates the sudden brightening of the melted gold and silver in the cupel of the assayer, when the last film of vitreous lead and copper leaves their surface. —Cro, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Fulham. s. [?] False dice.

Let vultures gripe thy guts! for gourd, and fallow holds, And high and low beguile the rich and poor. —Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, I, 3.

Fuliginous. adj. [Lat. fuligo = smut.] Sooty; smoky.

Burrage hath an excellent spirit to repress the fuliginous vapours of dusky melancholy, and so cure madness. —Bacon.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous link of lies. —Howell.

One knows not; only this one seems to know, that 'the Keeper of the Stores was appointed by Bertrand' or by some mauling of his! —O fuliginous confused kindred of Dis, with thy Tantalus-Ixion toys, with thy angry fire-floods, and streams named of lamentation, why hast thou not thy Lethæ too, that so one might drink? —Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. II, li, v, ch. vii.

Fuliginously. adv. In a fuliginous manner.

Or where the joy 'mid columns, towers, 'Midst all the city's awful trim, To rear some breathless rapid frowns, Or shrubs fuliginously grim? —Shenstone, Rural Elegance.

Fuligo. s. [Lat.] Grime; soot: (not naturalized).

Camphire, of a white substance, by its fuligo affords a deep black. —Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, p. 335. (Ord MS.)

Fulmart. s. Same as Foutmart.

The fleeth, the fulmart, and the ferret, live upon the face and within the bowels of the earth. —J. Walton, Compleat Angler.

Ful. adj. [A.S.]

1. Replete; without vacancy; having no space void.

Better is an handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit. —Ecclesiasticus, iv, 6.

2. Abounding in any quality good or bad.

With provence from Straphan her to ward, He met her full, but full of warefulness. —Sir P. Sidney.

3. Plump; fat.

Do ladies of this country use to give no more respect to men of my full being?—Full being! I understand you not, unless your grace means growing to fulness.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Philaster.
A gentleman of a full body having broken his skin by a fall, the wound inflamed.—Wicseman, Surgeon.

4. Impregnated; made pregnant.

His fair . . .
Who, full of Mars, in time with kindly throes
Shall at a birth two goodly boys disclose.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

5. Filling.

Water digests with a full meal sooner than any liquor.—Arcthotus.

6. Complete; adequate; ample.

That day had seen the full accomplishment
Of all his travels.—Daniel, Civil Wars.
Being tried at that time only with a promise, he gave full credit to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered.
—Hammond, Practical Catechism.

7. Complete without abatement; at the utmost degree.

At the end of two full years Pharaoh dreamed.—Genesis, xli. 1.
After hard riding, plunge the horses into water, and allow them to drink as they please; but gallop them full speed, to warm the water in their bellies.
—Swift, Advice to Sir Isaac, Directions to the Groom.

8. Containing the whole matter; expressing much.

Where my expressions are not so full as his, either our language or my art were defective; but where mine are fuller than his, they are but the impressions which the often reading of him has left upon my thoughts.—Sir J. Denham.

9. Strong; not faint; not attenuated.

I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart; but the empty vessel makes the greatest sound.—Shakespeare, Henry V. iv. 4.
Barrels placed under the floor of a chamber, make all noises in the same more full and resounding.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
Dryden taught to John
The varying verse, the full resounding line. Pope.

10. Mature; perfect.

In the sanctuary of the Mamelukes, slaves reigned over families of free men; and much like were the case, if you suppose a nation, where the custom were that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers out of their possessions.—Bacon.

11. Applied to the moon. Complete in its orb.

Towards the full moon, as he was coming home one morning, he felt his legs falter.—Wicseman, Surgeon.

12. Not continuous, or a full stop.

Therewith he ended, making a full point of a hearty sigh.—Sir P. Sidney.

13. Spread to view in all dimensions.

Till about the end of the third century, I do not remember to have seen the head of a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile.—Addison, Dialogues on the Usefulness of ancient Medals.

Full. s.

1. Complete measure; freedom from deficiency.

When we return,
We'll see those things effected to the full.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. i. 2.
He liked the pomp and absolute authority of a general well, and preserved the dignity of it to the full.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.
The picture of Ptolemy Philopater is given by authors to the full.—Dryden.
(Since rules were made but far enough extend,
Some lucky licence answer to the full
Th' intent propos'd, that licence is a rule.
Pope, Essay on Criticism.

2. Highest state or degree.

The swan's down flatter,
That stands upon the well as full of tide,
And neither way inclines.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 2.

3. Whole; total.

The king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy pow'r to encounter you, my lord;
This is the news at full.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. i. 1.

4. State of being satiated.

When I had fed them to the full.—Jeremiah, v. 7.

5. Applied to the moon. Time in which the moon makes a perfect orb.

Brains in rabbits, woodcocks, and calves, are fullest in the full of the moon.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Used adverbially.

a. Without abatement or diminution.

In the unity of place they are full as scrupulous; which many of their critics limit to that very spot of ground where the play is supposed to begin.—Dryden, Essay on Dramatick Poesy.
Since you may suspect my courage if I should not say,
The pawn I proffer shall be full as good.
Id., Translation of Virgil.

b. With the whole effect.

'Tis the pencil thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it.—Dryden, Translation of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Id.

c. Exactly.

Full nineteen sailors did the ship convey,
A shoal of nineteen dolphins round her play.
Addison, Translation from Ovid.

d. Directly.

He met her full, but full of warefulness.—Sir P. Sidney.
He then confronts the bull,
And on his ample forehead aiming full,
The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

e. Placed before adverbs, adjectives, and participles, to strengthen their signification.

Tell me why on your shield, so readily scord,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?
Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.
My time is not yet full come.—John, vii. 8.
Full little thought of him the gentle knight.
Dryden.
There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself.—Swift.

Full-bloomed. adj. Having perfect bloom.

A month, whose full-bloom'd lips
At too dear a rate are ruse.—Crashaw, Poems, p. 23.

Full-blown. adj.

1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.

My glories are past danger; they're full-blown;
Things that are blasted are but in the bud.
Sir J. Denham, Sophy.
My full-blown youth already fades again;
Of our short being 'tis the shortest space!
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.

He who with bold Crathius is inspir'd,
With zeal and equal indignation fir'd;
Who at enormous villany turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown sail.
Dryden, Translation of Persius.

Full-bottomed. adj. Having a large bottom.

I was obliged to sit at home in my morning-gown, having pawned a new suit of cloaths and a full-bottom'd wig for a sum of money.—Guardian.

Full-hot. adj. Heated to the utmost.

Anger is like
A full-hot horse; who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. i. 1.

Full-mouthed. adj. Having a strong voice or sound.

A full-mouth'd diapason swallows all.
Crashaw, Poems, p. 86.
Had Boreas blown
His full-mouth'd blast, and cast thy houses down?
Quarles, Jonah, sign. K. i. b.

Full-summed. adj. Complete in all its parts.

The cedar stretched forth his branches, and the kind of birds nested within his leaves, thick and hard, and with full-summed wings fastening his talons east and west; but now the eagle is become half-naked.
—Hovell, Vocal Forest.

Fuller. s. [A.S. fullere; Lat. fullo.] One whose business is fulling.

The clothiers have put off
The spinsters, gardeners, fullers, weavers.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. i. 2.
His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them.—Mark, ix. 3.

Fullers' earth. s. [two words.] See extract.

Fullers' earth is a kind of a slow texture, extremely soft and unctuous to the touch; when dry it is of a greyish brown colour, in all degrees, from very pale to almost black, and generally has a greenish cast in it. The finest fullers' earth is dug in our own island.—Will. Mavor, Medals.

Fulling. s. See Milling.

Used adjectivally, or as the first element in a compound.

By large hammers, like those used for paper and fulling-mills, they beat their hemp.—Mortimer.

Fully. adv. [the l sounded, as well as written, twice.] In a full manner; without vacuity; completely; without lack; without more to be desired.

There are many graces for which we may not cease hourly to sue, graces which are in bestowing always, but never come to be fully had in this present life; and therefore, when all things here have an end, endless thanks must have their beginning in a state which bringeth the full and final satisfaction of all such perpetual desires.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Fulminate. v. n. [Lat. fulminatus, pass. part. of fulminare; fulminatio, -onis; from fulmen, -inis = lightning.]

1. Flash and crack (one or both) as lightning.

With a fiery wrath kind thou [Pope] my brow,
That mak'st my muse in flames to fulminate.
Sir J. Denham, Witle's Pilgrimage, sign. I. 4. b.
Laud Rhina fulminate in love to man;
Comets good omens are, when duly seen'd.
Young, Night Thoughts, ix.

2. In Chemistry. Explode with a crack and flash. See Fulmination.

Whilst it was in fusion we cast into it a live coal, which presently kindled it, and made it boil and flash for a pretty while; after which we cast in another glowing coal, which made it fulminate afresh.
—Boyle.

3. Burst or break out as an object of terror: (commonly applied to papal censures, threats, or punishments).

Who shall presume to give orders, or administer sacraments, or grant pardons? . . . Who shall be depositary of the cathars and leagues of princes, or fulminate against the perjur'd infractors of them?
Lord Herbert, History of the Reign of Henry VIII. p. 3-4.

Fulminate. v. a.

1. Cause to explode.

If you fulminate in [salt-petre] in a crucible, and burn off the volatile part with powder of coal.
Bishop Sprat, History of the Royal Society, p. 225.

2. Throw out as an object of terror.

As excommunication is not greatly regarded here in England, as now fulminated; so this constitution is out of use now as in a great measure.—Ayliffe, Parergon Juris Canonici.

For all of ancient that you had before,
(I mean what is not borrow'd from our store,
Was error fulminated over and over.
Dryden, Hind and Panther.

These branches of lawful prerogative, which they had so often fulminated.—Bishop Warburton, Museum, xix.

Fulminating. part. adj.

1. Exploding with a crack and flash, after the manner of lightning; detonating (of which word it is an approximate synonym, the flash as of lightning being more particularly denoted by one word, the crack of thunder by the other); (generally combined with the name of some metal, especially mercury or silver, the fulminating preparations of which are fulminates of fulminic acid, the form and import of which words are purely chemical).

Fulminic acid [is] the acid contained in fulminating mercury; . . . fulminating mercury is the well-known compound used for priming percussion caps. . . . The fulminate in all these processes is to be rejected on filters, washed with distilled water, and dried. . . . Fulminating silver gives a more violent detonation than the corresponding mercurial compound. . . . See Fulmination for the mode of preparing detonating powder for the percussion caps of fire-arms. Fulminating mercury detonates by friction.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

2. Figuratively. Hurlled as a thunderbolt.

Gregory IX. had been on the throne of St. Peter, not eight months before he uttered the fulminating decree.—Nisamen, History of Latin Christianity, b. x. ch. iii.

Fulmination. s.

1. Act of thundering; denunciation of censures.

The fulminations from the Vatican were turned into ridicule.—Ayliffe, Parergon Juris Canonici.
Fulminations that have been uttered these seven years, by those cloven tongues of falsehood and dissension.—Milton, Trance of Kings and Magistrates.

Præal, by his Provincial Letters, did more to ruin the name of Jesuit than all the controversies of Protestantism, or all the fulminations of the Parliament of Paris.—Hallam, Introduction to the Literature of Europe in the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth centuries, pt. iv. ch. iv.

2. In Chemistry. Act of fulminating.

The volatile part was separated from it in the fulmination.—Bishop Sprat, History of the Royal Society, p. 275.

Fulminatory. adj. Having the character of, or consisting in, a fulmination.

Frothy profane Pastorals, honey-mouthed conciliatory Lamentations, and speechless nameless individuals all plentiful, as moderates, in the middle. Still less is a côté gauche wanting: extreme left sitting on the topmost benches, as if aloft on its speculative height or mountain, which will become a practical fulminatory height, and make the name of Mountain famous-infamous to all times and lands.—Carlyle, French Revolution, pt. ii. b. v. ch. ii.

Fulmine. v. a. [Fr. fulminer.] Shoot, or dart, like lightning. Rare.

And ever and anon the rosy red
 Flashed through her face, as if it had been a flame
 Of lightning through bright heaven's fulminant.
Sponser, Faerie Queen.

Fulmine. v. n. Thunder; speak with the resistless power, as it were, of thunder. Rare, the latter extract being a quotation of the former.

Thence to the famous orators repair,
 Those ancient, whose resistless eloquence Whipped at will that fierce democracy,
 Shook the ancestral, and fulmin'd over Greece
 To Macedon and Antioch's throne.

Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 267.
 In these all popular assemblies take boundless delight; by these above all others are the minds of an audience at pleasure moved or controlled. They form the grand charm of Lord Chatham's oratory; they were the distinguishing excellence of his great predecessor, and gave him at will to wield the fierce democracy of Athens, and to fulminate over Greece.—Lord Brougham, Historical Sketches of Statesmen of the Reign of George III., Lord Chatham.

Fulness. s. Attribute suggested by Full; state of being filled so as to have no part vacant.

Your heaven-offering shall be reckoned the fulness of the wine-press.—Numbers, xviii. 27.
 It is a fine and true saying of Bacon, that reading makes a full man, talking a ready man, and writing an exact man. The tendency of institutions like those of England is to encourage readiness in public men, at the expense both of fulness and of exactness.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Glances at Church and State.

Fulsome. adj. [from Full rather than Foul.]

1. Full; plump; as in the following line—
 His lean, pale, hoar, and withered corpse grew Fulsome, fair, and fresh.
Golding, Ovid's Metamorphoses, b. vii. (Trench.)

which translates
 'Pulvis fugit marces; abundant pallorque sitique.'
(Ovid, Metamorphoses, vii. 230.)

2. Cloying; causing surfeit.
 The next is Doctrine, in whose lips there dwells
 A spring of honey sweeter than its name,
 Honey which never fulsome is, yet fills
 The widest soul.
Bosworth, Psyche, b. xix. st. 210. (Trench.)

In the following the last line is the same in both the original and the copy; i.e. it is Donne's as well as Pope's:—
 Well I could wish that still in lordly domes
 Some benches were killed, though not whole locusts;
 That both extremes were banished from their walls,
 Carthian fates and fulsome bacchanals.
Pope, Satire of Dr. Donne. (Trench.)

3. Repelling; nauseous; disgusting.
 Letters full of affection, humility, and fulsome flattery were interchanged between the friends. But the first ardour of affection could not last.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Comic Dramatists of the Restoration.

Fulsome. adj. [from A.S. fūl = foul, rather than full.] Obscene: (compare foul-mouthed).
 A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet.—Dryden.
 (See also under Fulsome.)

In the following it is difficult to say with which root the word is most connected. It may mean rank, at heat (fūl); or it may simply mean pregnant, in which the connection is with full.

He stuck them up before the fulsome crew.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 3.
 The same applies to several of the secondary forms.

Fulsome. adv. In a fulsome manner. Rare.

1. Rankly; strongly.
 Box is naturally dry, juicy, fulsome, and loathsome smelling.—Newton, Herbal to the Bible, 1887.

2. Filthily.
 Full gorges bark, if not much rather spew,
 Most fulsome.

Sir J. Davies, Witte's Pilgrimage, when T. I.
 God was more displeased with his people, because they builded, decked, and trimmed up their own houses, and suffered God's house to be in ruin and decay, to be uncleanly and fulsome. Homilies, For repairing and keeping clean Churches.

Fulsome. s. Attribute suggested by Fulsome.

1. Obscenity. [from fūl.]
 Chaste and modest as he [Pericles] is esteemed, it cannot be denied but that, in some places, he is brutal and fulsome. No decency is considered, no fulsome is omitted, no venom is wanting, as far as decency can supply it.—Dryden.

2. Overfilling; stuffing. [from full.]
 Making her soul to loathe dainty meat, or putting a surfeit and fulsome into all which she enjoys.—Bogers, Naisos the Syrian, p. 32. (Trench.)

3. Disgusting character. [equivalent].
 Others have described them by some diseases, to manifest the fulsome and loathsomeness thereof; pride, by an inflammation; luxury, by a fever; envy, by a leprosy.—Price, Creation of the Foe, sign. B. l. b. 1610.

Fulvid. adj. [Lat. fulvidus, from fulvus = tawny.] Having a deep yellow colour. Rare.

And in right colours to the life depict
 The fulvid eagle with her sun-bright eye.
Dr. H. More, Song of the Soul, i. 3.

Fumage. s. [N.Fr.] Tax on chimneys.

As early as the Conquest mention is made in Domesday Book of fumage or fouage, vulgarly called smoke-farthings, which were paid by custom to the king for every chimney in the house.—Sir W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, b. i. ch. viii. (Riell.)

Fumbe. v. n. [Dutch, fummelen.]

1. Attempt anything awkwardly or ungainly.

His wither'd fist still knocking at death's door,
 Fumbe and drivelling as he draws his breath,
 For brief, the shape and messenger of death.
Swickville, Induction to Mirrour for Magistrates.
 Our mechanic theists will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system.—Chadworth.
 It is continuing to fumble on the late, though the muck has been long over.—Bishop Warburton, Dedication to the Freethinkers.

2. Poke about.
 Adams now began to fumble in his pockets, and soon cried out, 'O! I have it! not about me.'
Fielding, Adventures of Joseph Andrews.

From him who rears a jowin lauk and lung,
 To him who strains his all into a song;
 Perimpo some bonny Caledonian air,
 All larks and brans, though he was never there;
 Or, having whelp'd a prologue with great pains,
 Feels himself spent, and fumbles for his brains.
Copey, Table Talk, 537.

3. Puzzle.
 Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse.—Dryden, Spanish Friar.

Only because you should not go on with your story; if you did but see how silly a man fumbles for an excuse, when he's a little ashamed of lying in love, you would not wonder what I laugh at, ha! ha!
Cibber, The Careless Husband.

4. Play childishly.

I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end.—Shakespeare, Henry V, ii. 3.

5. Stutter; hesitate in the speech.

She fumbled out, 'Thanks, good'; and so she died.
Marston, Antonio's Revenge.

He fumbled in the mouth.
 His speech doth fall. Tragedy of King John, 1611.

Fumbe. v. a. Manage awkwardly.

As many farewells as he stars in heaven,
 With distinct breath and counten'd kisses to them,
 He fumbled up all in one loose adieu.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iv. 4.

His gray bald-pate choir
 Came fumbling o'er the beads, in such an agony
 They told 'em false for fear. Dryden, Spanish Friar.

Fumbler. s. One who fumbles.

Imagine, then, your Highlander
 Over a can of muddy beer,
 Playing at piquet with a pair
 Of drunken fumbler for his fare.
C. Cotton, Epistle to the Earl of — (Rich.)

Fumbling. part. adj. Having the character of a fumbler.

But have you told all the midwits you know, all the orange-wenchers at the play-houses, the city husbands, and old fumbling keepers, of this end of the town, for they'll be the readiest to report it?—Wycherley, The Country Wife.

Fumblingly. adv. In a fumbling manner.

Many good scholars speak but fumblingly.—B. Jonson, Discov'ry.

Fume. s. [Lat. fumus.]

1. Smoke.

Thus fighting first a while themselves consume;
 But straight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
 They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
 And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly.
Dryden.

2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.
 Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
 Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes.

Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, i. 1.
 It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes as they do in tobacco, of other things, to dry and comfort.—Bacon.

The fumes of drink discompose and stupefy the brains of a man overcharged with it.—South, Sermons.

Mung'd in sloth we lie, and more stupor,
 As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine.
Dryden, Translation of Persius.

The vapours of vinegar, the fumes of burning sulphur, have been long prescribed and practised.—Enc. Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

3. Rage; heat of mind; passion.

The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty.—South, Sermons.

4. Anything unsubstantial; idle conceit; vain imagination; fancy; crotchets.

When Thucydides is asleep, his two chamberlains will I with wine and wassel so convince,
 That memory, the warder of the brain,
 Shall be a fume. Shakespeare, Macbeth, i. 7.
 Plato's great year would have some effect, not in removing the state of life individuals; for that in the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influences upon these things below, than they have, but in gross.—Barrow.

To lay aside all that may seem to have a show of fumes and fancies, and to speak solidly, a war with Spain is a mighty work.—Id., Considerations on a War with Spain.

Fume. v. n. [Fr. fumer; Lat. fumo.]

1. Smoke.

[Their pray'r] pass'd
 Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
 With incense, where the golden altar fum'd
 By their great Intercessor, came in sight
 Before the Father's throne.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 16.

2. Vapour; yield exhalations, as by heat.
 Tie up the libertine in a field of fusts,
 Keep his brain fuming.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 1.
 Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
 And always boil in each extended vein.
Lord Roscommon.

3. Pass away in vapours.

We have
 No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning;
 Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
 Before our hands be at work.
B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

4. Be in a rage; be hot with anger.

When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
 He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan;
 He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground,
 The hollow tow'r with clamours rings around.
Dryden.

Fume. v. a.

1. Smoke; dry in the smoke. Rare.
 Those that serve for hot countries, they used at first to fume by hanging them up on long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire.—Carow.

2. Disperse in vapours.
 The heat will fume away most of the scent.—North.

3. Fumigate as with incense; scent; perfume.

Fume all the ground,
 And sprinkle holy water.
Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

Now are the lawn sheets fum'd with violets.
Marston, What you will.

FUMET FUNCTIONALLY} FUME

She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame,
And oft before the sacred altars came.
To pray for him who was an empty name. Dryden.

Fumet. s. [Fr. fumée (? Lat. fumus) = dunq.] Dunq of the deer.

For by his skin, his entrails, and his port,
His frayings, fumets, he doth promise sport.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

Fumette. s. [Fr.] High flavour, as of overkept game: (superseded by the equally exotic term haut goût).

A haunch of ven'non made her sweat,
Unless it had the right fumette. Swift.

Fumid. adj. Smoky; vaporous. Rare.

A cross and fumid exhalation is caused from the combust of the sulphur and iron with the acid and nitrous spirit of aqua fortis.—Sir T. Browne, Vul- gar Errours.

Fumigate. v. n. Purify, deodorize, disinfect, or medicate by means of vapour.

Would'st thou preserve thy fumish'd family,
With fragrant thyme the city fumigate,
And break the waxy walls to save the state.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil's Georgics.

Fumigation. s. Purification by means of deodorizing or disinfecting vapours.

Fumigations, often repeated, are very beneficial.—
A. Routh.

For very bad cases in which gaseous fumigation is applicable, nothing can be more rapid and effective in its action than this gas (nitric oxide). . . . For fumigation no acid vapour used is pleasant except vulgar, and, in cases where the impurity is not of the most violent kind, it may be used with great advantage. Even this, however, acts on some bright substances, a disadvantage attending most fumigations.
—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines. (Illust.)

Fuming. part. adj. Smoking; reeking; steaming-
ing.

From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Fuming. verbal abs.

1. Fumigation.

The fuming of the holes with brimstone, garlic, or other unsavoury things will drive moles out of the ground.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Fume (in its fourth sense).

O Fancie fond, thy fumings hath me fed!
The stinking stench of thine inclined head,
Hath poisoned all the virtues in my head.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 250.

Fumingly. adv. In a fuming manner; un-grilly; in a rage.

That which we move for our better learning and instruction sake, turneth unto anger and choler in them; they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly, that they are ashamed to defile their pens with making answer to such idle questions.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Fumish. adj. Smoky; hot; choleric.
Rare.

One loves soft music and sweet melody;
Another is perhaps melancholic;
Another fumish is, and choleric.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 158.

Fumishing. s. Same as Fumet.

He [the buck] makes his fumishings in divers manners and forms as the hart does.—Gentleman's Recreation, p. 77.

Fumishness. s. Attribute suggested by Fumish. Rare.

Drive them out of us all fumishness, induration, and self-will.—Corviale, Fruitful Lessons, p. 24:
Purkin Society. (Trench.)

Fumitory. s. [Lat. fumus = smoke, one or more of the plants of the genus having been believed to rise like a smoke, reek, vapour, or exhalation from the ground.]
Native plant so called of the genus Fu- maria.

Her fallow leas,
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon. Shakespeare, Henry V. v. 2.

For another form see Furrowweed.

Fumosity. s. Tendency to emit fumes.

The mountains are fumose, and the myne very low, or so far within, that it is not sufficient to put forth any signs of fumosity.—Eden, Martyr's Con- science, 328. (Ord MS.)

In Paphlagonia is a well, that maketh men drunk with drink of it; now this is, because that water receiveth the fumosity of brimstone, and other minerals, through which it runneth.—Folltham, Re- velation, 214. (Ord MS.)

FUNC

Famous. adj. Fumy. Rare.

He must abstaine from garlike, onions, mustard, and such like famous things.—Barrough, Method of Physick, 1024. (Nares by H. & W.)

Famy. adj. Having the character of, abounding in, or productive of, fumes.

From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
And puff'd the famy god from out his breast:
Ere then he dreamt of darts and lucky play;
More lucky had he laid till the day.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Fan. s. [?] Sport; high merriment; fro-licsome delight.

Don't mind us, though, for all my fan and jokes,
You hardy may find us bloods good-natur'd folks.
Dr. H. More.

Fanambulant. s. [Lat. funambulus, from fumus = rope + ambulo (pres. part. ambulans,
-antia) = walk.] Rope-dancer. Rare.

Hee's a fan to stand like the fanambulant,
Who seems to tread the air.
Sylvestre, Translation of Du Bartas.
(Ord MS.)

Fanambulatory. adj.

1. Performing like a rope-dancer.

There were fanambulatory elephants, as we are informed by Suetonius.—Chambers.

2. Narrow, like the walk of a rope-dancer.

Tread softly and circumspectly in this fanambu-
latory track and narrow path of goodness.—Sir T.
Browne, Christian Morals, l. 1.

Fanambulist. s. Rope-dancer.

What man will withhold from the fanambulist
the praise of justice, who considers his inflexible uprightness?—Looker-on, no. 80.

Fanambulo. s. [Italian.] Same as Fun- ambulist. Rare.

We see the industry and practice of tumblers and fanambulos.—Racon, Discours touchant l'eloge de l'Intellectuel Powers.

Fanambulus. s. [Latin.] Same as Fun- ambulo. Rare.

I see him walking not like a fanambulus upon a cord, but upon the edge of a razor.—Sir H. Wotton, Remarks, p. 365.

Functio. s. [Lat. functio, -onis; functus, pret. part. of fungor = discharge a duty.]

1. Duty; employment; office; business; craft; vocation; calling; occupation, either generally or with application to any particular act.

The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe:
now none is excluded from that functio of any degree, state, or calling.—A. Schickel, Whigist.

Without difference these functioes cannot, in orderly sort, be executed.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Follow your functio, go, and batten on cold bits.
—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 5.

This double functio of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has addressed to her.—Addison.

Let not these indigents discourage us from asserting the true privileges and pre-eminence of our high functio and character.—Bishop Atterbury.

They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functioes they use sacerdotal garments.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functioes.—Bentley, Sermons.

Had the report stopped here, those who drew it up might justly have been blamed for the unfair and ill natured manner in which they had discharged their functioes; but they could not have been accused of misapplying functioes which did not belong to them for the purpose of insulting the sovereign and exasperating the nation.—Macaulay,
History of England, ch. xzv.

For a long period preceding the Reformation, it may be almost said, there was no formal theory on the subject of private judgment, nor for some time after it; in such a matter, practice, according to the order of nature, precedes speculation. Yet there has always been a certain relation between the individuality of man, and his position and functioes as a member of the Church, in which relation the subject of private judgment is essentially involved.
—Clarkson, The State in its Relations with the Church, ch. vii.

2. Discharge or performance of the same.

There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the functio of his public calling, and the same person in common life.—Swift.

3. In Medicine. Share taken by the different parts of the body in the growth and action

FUNC

of the living and healthy organism, whether animal or vegetable: (the chief object of investigation in Physiology, as contrasted with structure the chief object in Anatomy).

Diseases of the auricle, especially erysipelous inflammation extending to it, and boils, may impair the functio of hearing, but never in a remarkable manner, nor permanently, unless they have extended to internal parts.—Copland, Dictionary of Practical Medicine, Hearing.

Sudden shocks, fright, terror, violent fits of anger, anxiety, grief, sadness, morbid affections,
—all not merely affect the functioes of the heart in a very remarkable manner, but sometimes also alter its structure.—Ibid., Heart.

That functio taken precedence of structure, seems also implied in the definition of life. If life consists of inner actions so adjusted as to induce outer actions—if the actions are the substance of life, while the adjustment of them constitutes its form;
then, may we not say that the actions to be formed must come before that which forms them—that the continuous change which is the basis of functio, must come before the structure which brings functio into shape? Or again, . . . since the accompanying new complexity of structure is simply a means of making possible this better adjustment; it follows that functio is from beginning to end the determining cause of structure. Not only is this manifestly true where the modification of structure arises by reaction from modification of functio; but it is also true where a modification of structure otherwise produced, apparently initiates a modification of functio.—Herbert Spencer, Inductions of Biology.

4. In Arithmetic. Result of certain, or formal, arrangements of, and operations on, numbers. See extract.

Two different numbers cannot be formed in the same manner from the same numbers; but they may be formed in the same manner from different numbers; as nine is formed from three by multiplying it into itself, and sixteen is formed from four by the same process. Thus there arises a classification of modes of formation, or, in the language commonly used by mathematicians, a classification of functioes. Any number, considered as formed from any other number, is called a functio of it; and there are as many kinds of functioes as there are modes of formation. The simple functioes are by no means numerous, most functioes being formed by the combination of several of the operations which form simple functioes, or by successive repetitions of some one of those operations. . . . In order to carry on general reasoning on the subject of functioes we require a nomenclature enabling us to express any two numbers by names which, without specifying what particular numbers they are, shall show what functio each is of the other; or in other words, shall put in evidence their mode of formation from one another. The system of general language called algebraical notation does this. The expressions a and a^2 denote, the one any number, the other the number formed from it in a particular manner. The expressions a , b , a , and $(a+b)$, denote any three numbers, and a fourth which is formed from them in a certain mode. The following may be stated as the general problem of the algebraical calculus: F being a certain functio of a given number, to find what functio F will be of any functio of that number. For example, a binomial $a+b$ is a functio of its two parts a and b , and the parts are, in their turn, functioes of $a+b$:
now $(a+b)^2$ is a certain functio of the binomial;
what functio will this be of a and b , the two parts?
The answer to this question is the binomial theorem.
. . . The resolution of equations is, therefore, a mere variety of the general problem as above stated. The problem is—given a functio, what functio is it of some other functio? And in the resolution of an equation, the question is, to find what functio of one of its own functioes the number itself is.—J. S.
Mill, System of Logic, lib. xiii. § 6.

Functional. adj. Relating to, connected with, or consisting in, a function: (one of its chief applications is in Medicine, where it is opposed to organic or structural, and denotes impaired action rather than change of structure in the part or organ to which it refers).

That pain in the head is often merely an indication of functional disorder, or of altered sensibility of the marginal nerves distributed to the head, must be generally admitted.—Copland, Dictionary of Prac- tical Medicine, Headache.

In these cases, the disorder must, in the present state of our knowledge, be viewed as purely func- tional, or nervous, or dynamic-vital, as termed by various writers; and it may, without much stretch of ingenuity, be chiefly referred either to impaired or to excessive action.—Ibid., Heart.

Functionally. adv. In a functional manner.
The organ is said to be functionally disordered.
—Lawrence, Lectures, li.

Functionary. s. One who has any particular duty to discharge; one invested with any office; official: (common as the word is now, no example of it is given in the previous editions).

Finally, we may draw from these particulars in his history, an inference suggested also by the diaries recently published of his two predecessors, Lord King and Lord Cooper, that the importance of the Chancellor in former times was far inferior to that which this high functionary now enjoys.—Lord Brougham, Historical Sketches of Statesmen during the reign of George III., Earl Camden.

It would be most pernicious to open the House of Commons to all placemen, and not less pernicious to close that House against all placemen. To draw with precision the line between those who ought to be admitted and those who ought to be excluded would be a task requiring much time, thought, and knowledge of details. But the general principles which ought to guide us are obvious. The multitude of subordinate functionaries ought to be excluded. A few functionaries, who are at the head or near the head of the great departments of the administration, ought to be admitted. The subordinate functionaries ought to be excluded, because their admission would at once lower the character of Parliament and destroy the efficiency of every public office. They are now excluded; and the consequence is that the State possesses a valuable body of servants who remain unchanged while cabinet after cabinet is formed and dissolved, who instruct minister after minister in his duties, and with whom it is the most sacred point of honour to give true information, sincere advice, and strenuous assistance to their superior for the time being.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xix.

On the establishment of Christianity, as the religion if not of the empire, of the emperor, the Bishop of Rome rises at once to the rank of a great accredited functionary; the bishops gradually, though still slowly, assume the life of individual character.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, b. i. ch. ii.

The decisions of an executive body may, therefore, be expected to carry more weight, to command more respect, and to be more in accordance with general sentiment, than those of a single functionary, and thus to meet with more ready obedience from the community.—Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, ch. vii.

Fund. s. [Fr. fond; Lat. fundus—farm.]

1. Stock; capital; that by which any expense is supported.

He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the art, and sciences for a supply.—Dryden.

Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,
And part employ'd to roll the wat'ry tide. Id.
In preaching, no man succeeds better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books.—Swift.

At the same time he filled another post, which, if not among the highest in the state, was one of the most important in the eyes of the people; the treasurer of the thesauri fund, which, as Æschines takes great pains to prove, involved a large share in the general control and direction of the finances.—Bishop Thirlwall, History of Greece, ch. lvi.

2. Stock or bank of money.

As my estate has been hitherto either lost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres.—Addison.

3. Plural, with the Definite Article, i.e. The Funds. That portion of the National Debt which is not terminable; public stocks relating to the same.

In the beginning of the funding system, the term fund meant the taxes or funds appropriated to the discharge of the principal and interest of loans; those who held government securities, and sold them to others, selling, of course, a corresponding claim upon some fund. . . . During the reign of William III. and Anne, the interest stipulated for loans was very various. But in the reign of George I. a different practice was adopted. Instead of varying the interest of the loan according to the state of the money market at the time, the interest was fixed at three and a half per cent.; the necessary variation being made in the principal funded.—McCulloch, Dictionary of Commerce.

Fund. v. a. Place money in the funds.
(For example see extract under Funda.)

Fundament. s. [Lat. fundamentum.] Hinder part of the body.

The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament
Began to kick, &c. Butler, Hudibras, l. ii. 844.

Fundamental. adj. Having the character of, or serving for, a foundation; that upon which the rest is built; essential; important; not merely accidental.

Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth.—Sir W. Raleigh, Essays.

Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the successor should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead.—Swift, Examiner.

Such we find they are, as can controul
The scrofulous actions of our wayward soul,
Can fright, can alter, or can chain the will;
Their ill all built on life, that fundamental ill.

Yet some there were among the sounder few,
Of those who less pronounced and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws.

Pope, Essay on Criticism, pl. lii.
(See also last extract under next entry.)

Fundamental. s. Leading proposition; important and essential part of any doctrine (generally theological) which is the groundwork of the rest.

We propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably in respect of superstructure and consequences that arise from them.—South, Sermons.

It is a very just remark, that there should be no much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points.—Swift.

An additional support of the doctrine of an infallible universal church, and of an authoritative church-tradition, is sought to be derived from the distinction between fundamentals and non-fundamentals, or (in other words), between matters of faith, to be held as de, and matters of mere opinion. It is alleged, that the authority of the true church, and of church-tradition, is decisive with respect to fundamentals and matters of faith, but that, in other things, entire agreement is not necessary; so that a Christian who rejects any of the latter, does not incur the sin of heresy. But here, again, the difficulty is merely shifted, not solved; it is transferred to another point, but it is not diminished. There is no received or certain test for distinguishing between fundamental and non-fundamental doctrine.—Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, ch. iv.

Fundamentality. s. Character of being Fundamental.

That upon every point, small and great, he must surrender, it is not necessary for the general purpose to contend; but where he finds antiquity and universality combined with fundamentality, the conclusion is inevitable, and in proportion as he finds the evidence of each of those three conditions, is it plainly legitimate.—Gladsone, The State in its Relations with the Church, ch. vii.

Fundamentally. adv. In a fundamental manner; with the character of a foundation; essentially; originally.

An virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perspective in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end.—Græc.

Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution.—Bentley.

The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposit in such hands as would preserve the people.—Swift.

Funded. part. adj. Placed (as money) in the Funds.

This was the beginning of the funded debt.—McCulloch, Dictionary of Commerce.

Fundholder. s. One who has money invested in the funds.

From this passage we should have been inclined to think, the dividends to be a free gift periodically sent down from heaven to the fundholders, as quails and manna were sent to the Israelites. . . . A fundholder, we will suppose, spends dividends amounting to five hundred pounds a year; and his ten nearest neighbours pay fifty pounds each to the tax-gatherer, for the purpose of discharging the interest of the national debt. If the debt were wiped out, a measure, be it understood, which we by no means recommend, the fundholder would cease to spend his five hundred pounds a year. He would no longer give employment to industry, or put food into the mouths of labourers. . . . Each of the ten neighbours of our fundholder has fifty pounds a year more than formerly. Each of them will, as it seems to our feeble understandings, employ more industry and feed more mouths than formerly. The sum is exactly the same. It is in different hands.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Southey's Colloquies on Society.

Funding. verbal abs. Putting into the funds; placing in the condition of a funded debt. See Fund.

Funds. s. plur. See Fund.

Funèbrial. adj. [Lat. funèbris.] Belonging to funerals; solemn; melancholy, funeral.

Rare.
Their carousals . . . were convivial, festival, sacrificial, nuptial, honorary, funèbrial.—Sir T. Browne, Miscellanea, p. 91.

Their funèbrial carousals had little of beauty in them beside roses, while they made them of myrtle, rosemary, spium, &c. under symbolical intimations.—Ibid.

Funèbrious. adj. Used at the ceremony of burying the dead. Rare.

His body was afterwards interred with funèbrious exequies and solemnities.—Mercurius Rusticus, in 1644.

Funeral. s. [Fr. funérailles; Lat. funera, plural of funus, funeria.—see last extract.]

1. Solemnization of a burial; payment of the last honours to the dead; obsequies.

Here, under leave of Brutus and the rest,
Come I to speak in Cesar's funeral.

Shakespeare, Julius Cesar, iii. 2.
All things that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral.

Id., Romeo and Juliet, iv. 5.
He that had cut out many unburied, had none to mourn for him, nor any solemn funerals, nor wretchedness with his fathers.—2 Macbeth, v. 10.

No widow at his funeral shall weep. Samyls.

2. Pomp or procession with which the dead are carried.

The long funerals blacken all the way. Pope.
You are sometimes desirous to see a funeral pass by in the street.—Swift, Advice to Servants, Directions to the Chambermaid.

3. Burial; interment.

May he find his funeral
I th' sands, when he before his day shall fall.

Sir J. Denham.

Used affectively.

Our instruments to melancholy bells,
Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast.
Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iv. 5.
To converse with his friends and standers by as as may do them comfort, and ease their funeral and civil complaints.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Ecclesiastics of Holy Dying, vi. § 3.

Let such honours
And funeral rites, as to his birth and virtues
Are due, be first perform'd. Sir J. Denham, Sophy.
Thy hand o'er towns the funeral torch displays,
And forms a thousand hills ten thousand ways.

Dryden.
[The word funeral, Mr. Malone says, was, agreeably to its French origin (funerailles), almost always used in the plural, previous to the Restoration. But this is not the case. The singular is found repeatedly in Barrow's Allegory of 1584: 'Friends come together to set forth the solemnization of his funeral.' Again, in Sherwood's Dictionary, 1632: 'A funeral'; and 'Of a funeral'.—Tidd.]

Funeration. s. Solemnization of a funeral.

Rare.
In the rites of funeration they did use to anoint the dead body with aromatick spices and ointments before they buried them. And so was it the Jewish custom to perform their funerals.—Knatchbull, Annotations on the New Testament, p. 41.

Funereal. adj. Suiting a funeral; dark; dismal.

But if his soul hath winged the destin'd flight,
Inhabitants of deep disastrous night,
Howe'er with pious speed repair the main
To the pale shade funereal rites ordain.

Pope's Homer, Odyssey.

Funest. adj. [Lat. funestus.] Doleful; lamentable. Rare.

The violent ends or downfalls of great princes, the subversion of kingdoms and empires, or whatever else can be imagined of funest or tragical.—Phillips, Theatrum Poeticum, pref.

The boy is ominous of some funest accident.—Keelyn, Sylva, p. 302.

Funge. s. Fungus; blockhead; dolt; fool. Rare.

A very idiot, a funge, a golden ass.—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, to the reader.

They are mad, empty vessels, funges, beside themselves, derided.—Ibid., p. 122.

Fungosity. s. Fungous growth.

Eggs cut into the matrix of the earth, or certain little pustules and fungosities on its surface.—Bibliotheca Bibliographica, l. 292: Oxf. 1720.

Fungous. adj. Having the character of a fungus.

The second instrument of the voice is the tongue; and this, by reason of its fungous substance and volubility, is so meet and so principal an agent therein, that speech itself, and all the variety thereof, doth among all sorts of men go by the name of the tongue.—Smith, Portraits of Old Age, p. 137.

It is often employed to keep down the fungous lips that spread upon the bone; but it is much more painful than the escharotic medicine.—Sharp, Surgery.

The manner productions of the French and English press; that fungous growth of novels and of pamphlets.—Harris, Hermes.

Fungus. s. [Lat.]

1. Mushroom: (in Botany, where the term has its widest import, it means the great class of plants akin to the mushrooms, toadstools, puffballs, moulds, and the like. In ordinary language it means the poisonous or useless, as opposed to the edible, members of this class. In the former case the plural is Latin; in the latter, English).

Plant-life is all directly or indirectly dependant on the heat and light of the sun: directly dependant in the immense majority of plants, and indirectly dependant in plants which, as the fungi, flourish in the dark: since these, growing as they do at the expense of decaying organic matter, immediately draw their forces from the same original source.—Herbert Spencer, The Correlation and Equivalences of Forces.

2. In Medicine. Morbid growth suggesting the notion of a fungus: (at present limited to those of a vascular and malignant character).

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as the fibres lengthen too much, are too fluid, and produce fungus, or as they harden and produce callosities.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments. This eminence is composed of little points, or granula, called fungus, or proud flesh.—Sharp.

Funk. v. a. [see extract under Funk, s.] Poison with an offensive smell.

Tobacco drives to vex
A numerous squadron of the tender sex;
What with strong smoke, and with his stronger breath,
He funks Eusketia and her son to death.
King, The Parody, canto iii.

Funk. v. n. Fear; be in a fright.

The west part of the veal, and the Greek for hunc, is the name of a man that makes funk.
Epigram on J. Burton, when Proctor at Oxford

Funk. s. [see extract.] Alarm; perturbation manifested by the smell.

[Funk—Properly an exhalation. Languor, fun, smoke. . . Bouché, Funger; Walloon, funki, funker, to smoke, funquon (smoke), imperfectly burnt charcoal. Hence the metaphorical sense of perturbation, fright. In de funk zinn (to be in a funk), in perturbation case. (Kilim.) 'Si commences a fun (begin to be disturbed), of colour changer, of doubts etc.' &c.—Weidmann, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Funnel. s. [from Lat. infundibulum.] Inverted hollow cone with a pipe descending from it, through which liquors are poured into vessels with narrow mouths.

If you pour a pint of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it; but with a funnel, and by degrees, you shall fill many of them.—H. Johnson, Discoveries.

Funnel. s. [for funnel, from Lat. funus = oven.] Pipe or passage of communication: (especially a tube serving as a chimney).

Towards the middle are two large funnels, bored through the roof of the grates, to let in light or fresh air.—Addison.

Funny. adj. Comical; strange.

I have done his sermon more honour than is really its due, in wasting a whole day in writing some funny remarks upon it.—Remarks on a Sermon at All Souls' College in 1780, p. 22.

Funny. s. Short wherry so called.

He was drifting down in a funny.—Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney.

Fannybone. s. That part of the elbow over which the ulnar nerve passes, which, when struck, from being suddenly pressed upon the bone, causes a peculiar sensation not unlike an electric shock down the arm.
Colloquial.

Fur. s. [Fr. fourrure.]

1. Soft kind of hair: (as that of the hare or rabbit, compared with that of the horse or ox).

This night wherein the cubdrawn bear would couch,
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Kept their fur dry, unbattered he runs,
And bids what will take all.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 1.

2. The same with the skin as used in manufactures; articles of dress made therewith.

Peltry is nearly synonymous with fur, and comprehends the skins of different kinds of wild animals that are found in high northern latitudes, particularly in the American continent; such as the beaver, bear, moose, deer, marten, mink, sable, wolverine, wolf, &c. When these skins have received no preparation, but from the hunter, they are most properly called peltry; but when they have had the tinner also tawed or tanned by an aluminous process, they may then be denominated furs.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

3. In Medicine. Foul secretion on a mucous surface, especially the tongue. See Sordes.

Methinks I am not right in every part;
I feel a kind of trembling at my heart;
My pulse unequal, and my breath is strong;
Beside a filthy fur upon my tongue.

Dryden, Translation of Persius.
His skin was very hot . . . his tongue covered with a white fur.—Dr. P. M. Latham, Lectures on Subjects connected with Clinical Medicine, lect. ix.

4. Concretion in general; deposit.

Down in the cellars, as up in the bed-chambers, old objects that he well remembered were changed by age and decay, but were still in their old places; even to empty beer-casks hoary with cobwebs, and empty wine-bottles with fur and fungus choking up their throats.—Dickens, Little Dorrit.

Fur. v. a. Lure or cover with skins that have soft hair, or with fur.

How mad a sight it was to see Dametas, like rich tissue furred with lambskins!—Sir P. Sidney.
You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest;
You fur your floors with reason.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2.

Fur. adv. [see Further.] Far.

The white lovely dove
Doth on her wings her utmost swiftmess prove,
Finding the grips of falcon fierce not fur.
Sir P. Sidney.

Furbelow. s. [see Ferdigew.] Pudding; ornaments attached to it; flounce.

Nay, off in dreams invention we bestow
To change a flounce, or add a furbelow.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto ii.
Furbelows and flounces have been disposed of at will.—Guardian, no. 110.

Furbelow. v. a. Adorn with ornamental appendages, with or as with furbelows.

When ornaments too fiercely glare,
You calm them with a milder air;
To break their points, you turn their force,
And furbelow the plain discourse. Prinr.
She was flounced and furbelowed; every ribbon was crinkled, and every part of her garments in curl.—Addison.

Her women, insolent and self-carew'd,
By Vanity's unwearied finger dress'd,
Forgot the blush that virgin form impart
To modest cheeks, and borrow'd one from art;
Were just such trifles, without worth or use,
As silly pride and illenous prodium:
Curl'd, scented, furbelowed, and flounc'd around,
With feet too delicate to touch the ground,
They stretch'd the neck, and roll'd the wanton eye,
And sigh'd for every fool that flatter'd by.

Cowper, Repentance, 61.

Furbish. v. a. [Fr. fourbir, pres. part. fourbissant.] Burnish; polish; rub to brightness.

Furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines.—Jeremiah, xlv. 4.

With up. Preprou for bringing out afresh, the need of burnishing implying previous rust or disuse.

Some others who furbish up and reprint his old errors, hold that the sufferings of the damned are not to be, in a strict sense, eternal; but that, after a certain period of time, there shall be a general god-delivery of the souls in prison, and that not for a further execution, but a final release.—South, Sermons.

As for my grandmother's barony, I should look upon the termination of its allegiance in my favour as the act of my political extinction. What we want, sir, is not to fashion new dukes and furbish up old baronies; but to establish great principles which may maintain the realm and secure the happiness of the people.—Disraeli the younger, Contagion h. viii. ch. iii.

Furcation. s. [Lat. furca.] Divarication a twining of a fork. Hare.

roure.

Furdle. v. a. [O.Fr. fardeler.] Contract; draw up, as it were, into a furdle or bundle. Hare.

The rose of Jericho . . . being a dry and ligneous plant, is preserved many years, and though crumpled and furdled up, yet, if infused in water, will swell and display its parts.—Sir T. Browne, Miscellanies, p. 34.

Furfur. s. [Lat. = bran. — scarcely naturalized.] Scurf or dandruff, with a likeness to bran.

They reduce the rest; as to leprosy, ulcers, itches, furfur, scales.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 231.

Furfuraceous. adj. In Medicine. Delicately scurfy, like bran.

A furfuraceous pellicle is then given off.—Plumbe, Diseases of the Skin.

Furibund. adj. [Lat. furibundus.] Furious. Barbours.

O Muses, may a woman poorer and blinder
A lion-dragon or a bull-beast blinder?
Is 't possible for pulling wench to tame
The furibund champion of fame?
G. Harvey; 1683. (Nares by H. & W.)

Furious. adj. [Fr. furieux; Lat. furiosus.] Mad; phrenetic.

No man did ever think the hurtful actions of furious men and innocents to be punishable.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Furiously. adv. In a furious manner; madly; violently; vehemently.

Which when his brother saw, fraught with great grief
And wrath, he to him leapt furiously.

Spruser, Faerie Queen.

Furiosness. s. Attribute suggested by Furious; frenzy; madness; transport of passion.

The boiling thirst of pain and furiosness.
Briwer, Comedy of Lingua.

Furl. v. a. [see Frill.] Draw up; contract.

When fortune sends a stormy wind,
Then shew a brave and present mind;
And when with too indulgent sales
She swells too much, then furl thy sails.

Creech, Translation of Horace.

Furlong. s. [A.S. furlang = long as a furrow, the measure being as much land as could be ploughed in a straight line in a day.] Measure of length, i.e. eighth part of a mile.

If a man stand in the middle of a field and speak aloud, he shall be heard a furlong in round, and that in articulate sounds.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Coming within a few furlongs of the temple, they passed through a very thick grove.—Addison, Fables.

Furlough. s. [Dutch, verlof = leave, permission.] Temporary licence for a soldier to be absent from service.

Brutus and Cato might discharge their souls,
And give them furlough for another world;
But we, like wretches, are obliged to stand
In starless nights, and wait till appointed hour.

Dryden.

Furmenty. s. Same as Frumenty; each of which forms undergoes a change in pronunciation, the one giving furmety, the other frumenty.

Remember, wife, therefore, though I do it not,
The seed-cake, the pasties, and furmenty pot.
Tasso, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

He'll find you out a food,
That needs no teeth nor stomach; a strange furmety,
Will feed ye up as fat as hams 't the forerads.

Rossmont and Fletcher, Boudicca.

Furnace. s. [Lat. furnax, -acia.] Fire-place, oven, or stove, enclosed wholly or for the greater part on all sides, as opposed to an ordinary grate, which is open in front, and used for the larger kind of operations, such as metallurgy, pottery and assaying; the furnaces of assay used for operations on a small scale being least in point of size.

FURN

Whoso fall-th not down and worshippeth, shall the same hour be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace.—Daniel, iii. 6.

Furnace. v. a. Throw out as sparks from a furnace. Rare.

Ha-furnaces
The thick sighs from him.

Furnament. s. [Fr. fourniment; Italian, fornimento.] Furniture. Rare.

Lo! where they spyde with spoodie whirling pace
One in a chariot of strange furniment
Towards them driving

Furnish. v. a. [Fr. fournir, pres. part. fournissant.]

1. Supply with what is necessary to a certain purpose.

Thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock.
—Deuteronomy, xv. 14.
Auric, having driven the Turks from Corone, both by sea and land, furnished the city with corn, wine, victual, and powder.—Knolles, History of the Turks.

2. Give; supply.

These simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested and furnished to the mind only by these two ways, sensation and reflection.—Locke.

With out. Rare.
It is not the state, but a compact among private persons that hath furnished out these several remittances.—Addison.

3. Equip; fit out for any undertaking; (sometimes with out).

Will your lordship lend me a thousand pounds to furnish me?—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. l. 2.
Idem, Summa, and Intelligens.
Have furnish'd out three different sects.

Prior, Alma.
Doubtless the man Jesus Christ is furnished with superior powers to all the angels in heaven, because he is employed in superior work.—Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

4. Supply with furniture (for a house).

Plato entertained some of his friends at dinner, and had in the chamber a bed or couch, neatly and costly furnished. Diogenes came in, and got up upon the bed, and trampled it, saying, I trample upon the pride of Plato. Plato mildly answered, But with greater pride, Diogenes.—Bacon, Apophthegms.

The wounded arm would furnish all their rooms, And bleed for ever scarlet in their looms.

Furnish. s. Specimen; sample. Obsolete.
To lend the world a furnish of wit, she lays her own to pawn.—Greene, Groatsworth of Wit, 1621.

Furnisher. s. One who supplies or fits out.

Patterns of all sorts of things belonging to the libitinal or furnishers of the funeral.—Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 20.
How the sleek Pagan might mine and undermine, one knows not well; this however one does know; that his war-office has become a den of thieves and confusion, such as all men shudder to behold. . . . That furnishers scour in gips, over all districts of France, and drive bargain.—Carlyle, French Revolution, pt. iii. b. ii. ch. ii.

Furnishing. verbal abs. Supply; act of supplying; thing supplied; filling up with furniture; decoration; appendage.

Something deeper,
Whereof, perolance, there are but furnishings.

Furnishment. s. Furniture. Rare.
It was munited with artillery of all sorts, and other furnishings for warre, in great plenty.—Time's Storehouse, p. 345. (Ord MS.)

Furniture. s.

1. Moveables; goods put in a house for use or ornament.

No man can transport his large retinue, his sumptuous fare, and his rich furniture into another world.—South, Sermons.

There are many noble palaces in Venice; their furniture is not very rich, if we except the pictures.—Addison.

2. Appendages.

By a general conflagration mankind shall be destroyed, with the form and all the furniture of the earth.—Archbishop Tillotson.

3. Equipage; embellishments; decorations.

Young Chloris, with vauntful lustled,
And after his gales did cast abroad to fire,
And there he gay his furniture prepare. Sponsor.
I'd give bay curial and his furniture
My mouth no more were broken than these boys.
And writ as little beard.

Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, ii. 2.

FURT

The duke is coming: see the barge be ready, And fit it with such furniture as suits The greatness of his person.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII. ii. 1.
The ground might be of a mixt brown, and large enough, or the horse's furniture must be of very sensible colours.—Dryden.

4. Materials for work of any kind.

He disclaims all assistance; he'll decide upon all points freely and supinely by himself; without furniture, without proper materials.—Bentley, Philo-leutherus Lipsiensis, § 1.

5. Supply. Obsolete.

There shalt thou know thy charge, and there receive Money, and order for thy furniture.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. iii. 3.
It shall be requisite for the furniture of necessaries herunto apperteyning.—Idem, Translation of P. Martyr's Decades, prof. (Ord MS.)

Furred. part. adj. Covered wholly or in part, coated, or ornamented, with fur.

1. Of animals.

Through latter'd clothes small vices do appear;
Robes and furr'd gowns hide all.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 6.

2. In the sense of sordid, or deposit.

To make lamplblack, take a torch and hold it under the bottom of a litten bason; and as it groweth to be furred and black within, strike it with a feather into some shell. Pecham.

The sisters, mourning for their brother's loss, Their bodies hid in bark, and furr'd with moss.

Dryden.
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues.

A dungeon wide and horrible; the walls
On all sides furr'd with mouldy damps, and hung
With clots of rusty gore. Addison.

Furrow. s. [a form of Furring.] See extract.

Furrows, in shipbuilding, [is] a term sometimes used to imply the same as dillings; that is to say, pieces supplying the deficiency of timber in the moulding way.—Young, Nautical Dictionary.

Furring. s. [?] See extract.

Furring in architecture [is] the small slips nailed on joints or rafters, where some parts of them are lower than others, or where the surface is not regular, so as to bring the building thus are to receive into the same planes.—Brand and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Furrow. s. [A.S. furh.] Trench made by the plough for the reception of seed.

Wheat must be sowed above furrow before Michaelmas.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Then ploughs for seed the fruitful furrows broke.
Dryden, Translation from Ovid.

Figuratively. Wrinkle.

My lord it is, though time has plough'd that face
With many furrows since I saw it first;

Yet I'm too well acquainted with the ground
Quite to forget it. Dryden and Lee, Oedipus.

Furrow. v. a. Cut in furrows; make by furrowing.

Thou canst help time to furrow me with age,
But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage.

Shakespeare, Richard II. i. 3.
From thence he furrow'd many a churchful sea.

P. Fletcher, Piouser Elegies, ii. 13.
There go the ships that furrow out their way;
Yes, there of whales enormous sights we see.

Sir H. Wotton.
No briny tear has furrow'd her smooth cheek.

Sir J. Suckling.

Furrow-weed. s. Weed that grows in furrowed land.

Crown'd with rank samiter, and furrow-weeds.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 4.

Furry. adj.

1. Covered with fur; dressed in fur.

From Volga's banks th' imperious Czar Leads forth his furry troops to war.

Fellon, To Lord Gower.

2. Consisting of fur.

Stretch out thy laxy limbs, awake, awake,
And winter from thy furry mantle shake. Dryden.

Not arm'd with horns of arbitrary might,
Or claws to misse their furry spoils in flight. Id.

3. Coated with fur as sordid or deposit.

Get out the wine, thought I—picturing to myself
Two foggy devotions, half full of the remnants of yesterday's illusion, with a sort of furry rim just over the surface, of which the expression gave me a strong idea.—Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney, vol. iii. ch. iv.

Farther. [This is the comparative of forth, an adverb, though in many combinations it has an adjectival construction; more forth = more fore, more forward, more in front. German vorder, and vorderer. As this suggests the notion of removal, the secondary meaning of more distant follows; and as long as this is expressed by the word under notice there is nothing anomalous. The likeness, however, of the forms fur (fore) and fur coincides with the likeness of their significations; the result being such words as (1) further, an apparent comparative of fur, (2) fur for fur, and (3) the use of further in the sense of more forward, as shown in the words Fartherance, Farther (verb), and Farthermore, all of which have originated in a confusion between the two words.]

FURT

{FURNACE FURTIVE

1. More in advance.

What further need have we of witnesses?—Methu, xxi. 65.

But further way found none, so thick intwin'd,
As one continu'd brake, the undergrowth
Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast that pass'd that way.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 173.

Some wandering spirit of heaven by fountain side,
Or in thick shade retir'd, from him to draw
What further would be learn'd. Id., iv. 180.

2. Farther.

And the angel of the Lord went further, and stood in a narrow place.—Numbers, xlii. 2.

Farther. v. a. Forward; promote; advance; countenance; assist; help.

Things thus set in order, in quiet rest,
Shall further thy harvest, and pleasure the heat.

Tassie, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Grant not, O Lord, the desire of the wicked; further not his wicked device. Psalm, cxi. 2.

Could their fond superstition have further'd so great attempts, without the mixture of a true persuasion concerning the irresistible force of divine power.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

This binds me then to further my design,
As I am bound by vow to further thine. Dryden.

Fartherance. s. Promotion; advancement; help.

The Gauls learned them first, and used them only for the fartherance of their trade and private business.—Strabo.

Our diligence must search out all helps and fartherances of direction, which scriptures, councils, fathers, historians, the laws and practices of all churches afford.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

If men were minded to live righteously, to believe a God would be no hindrance or prejudice to any such design, but very much for the advancement and fartherance of it.—Archbishop Tillotson.

Thus, amid obstructions and stimulating fartherances, has the question of the trial to grow; emerging and submerging; fostered by solicited patriotism.—Carlyle, French Revolution, pt. iii. b. ii. ch. v.

Fartherer. s. One who furthers; promoter; advancer.

That earnest favourer and fartherer of God's true religion, that faithful servitor to his prince and country.—Archam.

Farthermore, also Farthermore. adj. More-over; besides.

The Lord said farthermore to him, Put now thine hand into thy bosom.—Exodus, iv. 6.

Farthermore, it is necessary to everlasting salvation, that he rightly believe the incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Book of Common Prayer Athanasian Creed.

Farthest. adv. [superlative of Forth.] At the greatest distance.

For whereas Celsius the Epicure objected that Jesus chose publicans and men of wicked conversation to be his own disciples; even therein peculiarly hath he shewed the effectuality of his doctrine in the curing of men's souls, as a physician cloth in healing those that are sorest sick and furthest from hope of recovery in a city.—Treasure of Christian Religion, 541. (Ord MS.)

The furthest a prudent man should proceed in general is to laugh at some of his own follies.—Shenstone.

Furtive. adj. [Fr. furtive; Lat. furtivus.]

Stolen; gotten by theft; having a stolen or clandestine character.

A furtive simulation, and a bastardly kind of adoption.—Jeremy Taylor, Artificial Happiness, p. 96.

Or do they, as your schemes, I think, have shown, Dart furtive beams and glory not their own,
All servants to that source of light, the sun? Prior.

The parties alleged themselves to have been married clandestinely in the earl of Hertford's house by a minister whom they had never before seen, and of whose name they were ignorant, in the presence only of a sister of the earl then deceased. This entire absence of testimony, and the somewhat improbable nature of the story, at least in appearance, may still, perhaps, leave a shade of doubt as to the reality of the marriage. On the other hand, it was unquestionable that their object must have been a legitimate union; and such a hasty and furtive ceremony as they asserted to have taken place, while it would, if sufficiently proved, be completely valid, was necessary to protect them from the queen's indignation.—Hallam, History of England, ch. vi.

Furuncle. s. [Fr. furuncle; Lat. furunculus.] In Medicine. Boil.

A furuncle is in its beginning round, hard, and inflamed, and as it increases, it swells up with an acute head, and sometimes a pustule; and then it is more inflamed and painful, when it arrives at its state, which is about the eighth or ninth day.—Wise, Surgery.

The true skin or corion is penetrated by small coiled prolongations derived from the cellular tissue underneath. With these, the vessels and nerves proceed to the superficial of the corion to form the papillary tissue and vascular rete. When inflammation commences in one or more of these prolongations, furunculus or boil, hordeolum or sty, and anthrax or carbuncle, are the results. . . . The varieties of furuncle are generally dependent upon disordered states of the digestive functions, and the characters which they assume vary with the states of vital action and of the circulating fluids.—Copland, Dictionary of Practical Medicine.

Fury. s. [Fr. furie; Lat. furor, a common word, though less like the word under notice in respect to its form than Furia the rare, or hypothetical, singular of the Latin Furiæ = Furies, i.e. three heathen female deities so named. The details of the confusion are obscure. Probably, though it would savour of a refinement to make separate entries, they are, in reality, two distinct words.]

1. Rage; passion of anger; tumult of mind approaching to madness.

I do oppose
My patience to his fury; and am arm'd
To suffer with a quietness of spirit
The very tyranny and rage of his.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iv. 1.
He hath given us to know the nature of living creatures, and the furies of wild beasts.—Apu-cynus, Wisdom, vii. 30.

2. Enthusiasm; exaltation of fancy.

Taking up the lute, her wit began to be with a divine fury inspired; and her voice would, in so beloved an occasion, exceed her wit.—Sir P. Sidney.
A sylb that had number'd in the world
The sun to course two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury saw'd the work.

Shakespeare, Othello, iii. 4.
Greater than human kind she seem'd to look,
And with an accent more than mortal spoke;
Her stirring eyes with sparkling fury roll,
When all the gods came rushing on her soul.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

3. One of the Furies; terribly woman.

The sight of any of the house of York,
Is as a fury to torment my soul.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. i. 3.
It was the most proper place for a fury to make her exit; and I believe every reader's imagination is pleas'd when he sees the angry goddess thus sinking in a tempest, and plunging herself into hell, amidst such a sort of horror and confusion.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Furze. s. old plural in -n. [see Gorse.]
Native plant so called; gorse (Ulex europæus).

Carry out gravel to fill up a hole,
Both timber and furze, the turf and the cole.
Furze, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.
For furze, there growth great store of furze, of which the shrubby sort is called tane, and the better grown French.—Caron, Survey of Cornwall.
We may know
And when to reap the grain, and when to sow,
Or when to fell the furze.

Dryden, Translation of Virgil.
Many thousands of square miles which are now rich corn land and meadow, intersected by green hedge-rows, and dotted with villages and pleasant country seats, would appear as moors overgrown with furze, or ferns abandoned to wild ducks.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. iii.

Furze. adj. Made of, relating to, or consisting in, furze.

For we must not always choose that which is easier to be had and willing to be gotten; for we put 1026

by some and furzen bushes; we tread underfoot brins and brambles, though they catch hold of us.
—Holland, Translation of Plutarch, p. 126. (Rich.)

Furzy. adj. Abounding in, or overgrown with, furze.

Wide through the furzy field their route they take.

Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake. Gay.

Fuse. adj. FUSCIOUS. Rhetorical; rare.

Expectation was alert on the receipt of your strange-shaped present, while yet undecoded from its fuse envelope.—Land, Letter to H. C. Robinson.

Fuscous. adj. [Lat. fuscus] Brown; of a dim or dark colour.

[The] feathers of the wing of a dark or fuscous colour.—Ray, Remains, p. 247.

Fuse. v. a. [Lat. fusus, pass. part. of fundo.] Melt; put into fusion; liquefy by heat.

(For example see last extract under Fusibilility).

Fuse. v. n. Be melted; be capable of being liquefied by heat.

Pure tin, when heated this way, fuses.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines, Alloy.

Fuse. s. FUSCE.

The blasting, or shooting, tools are a sledge, or mallet; claying bar; needle or nail; scraper; tamping-bar; &c. Besides these tools the miner requires a powder-horn, rashes to be filled with gunpowder, tin cartridges for occasional use in wet ground, and paper rubbed over with gunpowder or grease for the sniffs or fuses.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Fusee. s. [from Fr. fusée = squib, cartridge.] Instrument of the nature of a train for firing an explosive: (FUSE commoner).

Fusee of a bomb or grando shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderson makes twenty-seven seconds.
—Harris.

Fusee. s. [Fr. fusée = spindle.] Cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.

The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the next wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fusee, and that by the motion of the spring; the whole frame of the watch carries a resemblance in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist.—Sir M. Hale, Origin of the Mind.

Fusel (Fusel oil). s. [German direct.] Strong and somewhat fetid spirit from the distillation of potatoes.

This compound has long been known under the name of oil of potato-spirit; it is the fusel oil of the Germans.—Brande, Manual of Chemistry, p. 1763.

Fusible. adj. [Lat. fusibilis; subst. fusibili-litas, -atis; fusus, pass. part. of fundo = pour out; fusio, -onis.] Capable of being fused.

Colours afforded by metalline bodies either colliquate with or otherwise penetrate into other bodies, especially fusible ones.—Boyle, Experiments and Considerations touching Colours.

(See also under next entry.)

Fusibility. s. Capacity of being fused.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metalline nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into a nobler use.—Sir H. Wotton, Elements of Architecture.

The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals, which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness.—Locke.

It would be hardly possible to infer the melting point of an alloy from that of each of its constituent metals; but in general the fusibility is increased by mutual affinity in their state of combination. Of this a remarkable instance is afforded in the fusible metal consisting of 8 parts of bismuth, 8 of lead, and 8 of tin, which melts at the heat of boiling water of 212° Fahr., though the melting point deduced from the mean of its components should be 314°. This alloy may be rendered still more fusible by adding a very little mercury to it, when it forms an excellent material for certain anatomical injections, and for filling the hollows of carious teeth.
Nor do the colours of alloys depend, in any considerable degree, upon those of the separate metals;
thus the colour of copper, instead of being rendered paler by a large addition of zinc, is thereby converted into the rich-looking pinchbeck metal. By means of alloys we multiply, as it were, the numbers of useful metals, and sometimes give usefulness to such as are separately of little value. Since these compounds can be formed only by fusion, and since many metals are apt to oxidize readily at their melting temperature, proper precautions must be taken in making alloys to prevent this occurrence, which is incompatible with their formation.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Hutton, in his speculations concerning the geological effects of heat, naturally availed himself of the laws which Black had unfolded. One of those laws was, that certain earths owe their fusibility to the presence of fixed air in them before heat has expelled it; so that, if it were possible to force them to retain their fixed air, or carbonic acid gas, as we now call it, no amount of heat could deprive them of the capability of being fused.—Buckle, History of Civilization in England, vol. ii. ch. vi.

Fusile. s. [Fr. fusil = steel for tinderbox; Lat.
facile, from foculus = hearth.] Matchlock;
firelock gun; musket.

The fusile intended for officers are generally mounted with silver.—Ross, Cyclopaedia, in voce.

Fusile. s. [Fr. fuséau = spindle.] In Heraldry.
Spindle-shaped element of a blazon so called.

Fusile must be made long, and small in the middle; in the ancient coat of Montague, amongst three fusile in fesse gules.—Poacham, On Blazoning.

Fusile. adj.

1. Capable of being fused.

Some less skillful, fancy these scraps that occur in most of the larger Gothic buildings of England are artificial, and will have it, that they are a kind of fusile marble.—Woodward, Essay towards a Natural History of the Earth.

2. Fused; melted; liquefied.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be Fusile, or grav'n in metal.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 570.

Perpetual flames,
O'er mind and senses, and the stubborn flint,
Prevailing, turn into a fusile sea.

J. Phillips, Cyder, b. ii.

Fusileer. s. Soldier armed with a fusil;
musketeer.

It seems that there was some apprehension of a revue; for a strong body of fusileers was under arms to support the civil power.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. xii.

Fusion. s. Act of fusing; state of being fused.

Metals in fusion do not flame, for want of a copious flame; except species which fuses copiously, and thereby flames.—Sir J. Newton, Opticks.

Fuse. s. [A.S. fús = active.] Tumult; bustle; stir; ado.

Nor with unakes keep a fuse:
I submit, and answer thus. Swift.
Here's a fuse indeed, about nothing.—Folding, Adventures of Joseph Andrews.
I've known a dozen weddings made even thus,
And some of them high names! I have also known
Young men who—though they hated to discuss Pretensions which they never dream'd to have shown—
Yet neither frighten'd by a female fuse,
Nor by mistachew moved, were let alone,
And lived, as did tin broken-hearted fair,
In happier plight than if they form'd a pair.

Byron, Don Juan.
'I see old mother Dalmaine dresses her as much like the Doncaster belle as she possibly can.'—'Yes, and spoils her,' said Lord Squibs 'but old mother Dalmaine, with all her fuse, was ever a bad cook, and overdid everything.'—Dissol the younger, The Young Duke.

Fusinus. s. Attribute suggested by Fussy.
(For example see extract under next entry.)

Fussy. adj.

She was fussy no doubt; but her real activity bore a fair proportion to her fusinus.—Merryat, Snarleypoo.

Fust. s. [N.Fr. fuste = cask.] Trunk or body of a column. Rare.

The bases of a number of columns remain in their original position, and their broken fustes lie scattered around.—A. Drummond, Travels through Germany, Italy, and Greece, vol. xi. 1748.

Fust. v. n. Grow fusty.

Sure he, that made us with such large discourse
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability of godlike reason
To fust in us unlearn'd. Shakespeare, Hamlet, iv. 4.

Fusted. part. adj. Become fusty.

His blown were
Of fusted hops, now lost for lack of sale.
Bishop Hall, Satire, iv. 6.

Fustet. s. See Fustic.

Fustian. s. [O.Fr. fustaine.]

1. Kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only; see second extract.

In supper ready, the house trimm'd, the serving-men in their new fustian and their white stockings!—Shakespeare, Twelfth of the Shrove, iv. 1.

Fustian is a species of coarse thick twisted cotton, and is generally dyed of an olive, leaden, or other dark colour. Besides the common fustian, which is known by the name of pillow (probably plain), the cotton stuffs called corduroy, velveteen, velveteen, thickset, used for men's wearing apparel, belong to the same fabric. The commonest kind is merely a twofold of four or sometimes five leaves, of a very close stout texture, and very narrow, seldom exceeding 17 or 18 inches in breadth. It is cut from the loom in half pieces, or ends as they are usually termed, about 35 yards long, and, after undergoing the subsequent operations of dyeing, dressing, and folding, is ready for the market.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

2. Bombast. See, also, Lindsay-wolsey, and Stuff.

Nor will you raise in me combustion,
By dint of high herolek fustian. Butler, Hudibras.
What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's ode? In general, I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they contain.—Dryden.

Fustian is thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other.—Ibid.
At first the mouth of our stage was rude,
While in the cockpit and blackbird it stood;
And this might please enough in former reigns,
A thrifty, thin, and beautiful audience.
When Bussy d'Amboise and his fustian took,
And men were ravished with Queen Gordiane.
Oldham, Horace's Art of Poetry imitated in English.

Chance thoughts, when power'd by the clow,
Off rise to fustian, or descend to prose. Smith.

Used adjectively.

When men argue, th' greatest part
Of th' contest falls on terms of art,
Until the fustian stuff be spent,
And then they fall to th' argument. Butler, Hudibras.

Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Æneid, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse.—Dryden, Translation of The Fœny's Art of Painting.

Fustianist. s. One who writes or admires fustian.

Preferring the gay rankness of Apuleius, Arnobius, or any modern fustianist, before the native Latinisms of Cicero.—Milton, Apology for Smectymnuses.

Fustic. s. [?] Sort of wood brought from the West Indies, used in dyeing cloth.

Next to galls old fustic increases the weight about 14 in 12.—Bishop Sprat, History of the Royal Society, p. 246.

At last, Friday pitched on a tree; for I found he knew much better than what kind of wood was fustic for it; nor can I tell, to this day, what wood to call the tree we cut down, except that it was very like the tree we call fustic, or between that and the Nicaragua wood, for it was much of the same colour and smell.—DeFoe, Life and Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.

The old fustic of the English dyer, as the article fustic is their yellow fustic. It is the wood of the Morus tinctoria. It is light, not hard, and pale yellow with orange veins; it contains two colouring matters, one resinous, and another soluble in water. The latter resembles weld, but it has more of an orange cast, and is not so lively. Its decoction in water are brightened by the addition of a little gine, and more by curdled milk. This wood is rich in colour, and imparts permanent dyes to woollen stuffs, when aided by proper mordants. It unites well with the blue of the indigo vat and saxon blue in producing green of various shades. Alum, tartar, and solution of tin, render its colour more vivid; sea salt and sulphate of iron deepen its hue. From 5 to 6 parts of old fustic are sufficient to give a lemon colour to 16 parts of cloth. The colour of weld is, however, purer and less inclining to orange; but that of fustic is less affected by acids than any other yellow dye. This wood is often employed with sulphate of iron in producing olive and brownish tints, which agree well with its dull yellow. For the same reason it is much used for dark greens.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Fustigate. v. a. [Lat. fustis = club.] Beat with club, cudgel, or stick.

Disident prices, passing along with their sacred water for the dying, seem wishful to be massacred in the streets; whereas Patriarchs will not gratify them. Altho' palm of martyrdom, however, shall not be denied; martyrdom not of massacre, yet of fustigation. At the refractory places of worship, patriot men appear: patriot women with strong hanel wands, which they apply. Shut thy eyes, O reader: see not this misery, peculiar to these later times,—of martyrdom without sincerity, with only cant and contumacy! A dead Catholic church is not allowed to lie dead; no, it is quarantined into the dolefullest death-life; whence, if humanity, we say, shuts its eyes. For the patriot women take their hanel wands, and fustigate, amid laughter of bystanders, with alacrity: broad bottom of priests; alas, nuns too, reversed and cottons retournés!—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. II. b. iv. ch. I.

Fustigation. s. Beating with club, cudgel, or stick.

They punished such as swore falsely by their prince with fustigation.—Archbishop Bancroft.
Fasting and fustigation may do something. Robin, Honey Moon.

(For another example see extract under Fustigate.)

Fustilarian. s. Low fellow; stinkard; scoundrel. Rare.

Away, you scullion, you rampallan, you fustilarian; I'll tickle your catastrophe.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. ll. 1.

Fustling, or Fustings. s. Fustilarian. Rare, colloquial, or slang.

You may daily see such fustings walking in the streets, like so many tins, each moving upon two potsh-pots.—Junius, Six Signatures, p. 39; 1630.

Fasty. adj. Savouring, i.e. smelling or tasting, of the cask; mouldy. See Fust.

The large Achilles, at this fasty stuff,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause.
Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, I. 3.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he were as good crack a fasty nut with no kernel.—Ibid. II. 1.

The fasty phlebotomists hate thine honours.
Id., Cymbeline, I. 9.

Futile. adj. [Lat. futiles = vain, trifling.]

1. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.

The word may have some allusion to the vessel called futile, used in the sacrifice of Vesta, of that narrow bottom that it could not stand, but was forced to be held up. Thus say, a man is futile; and, by alluding to a vessel, you call him a leaking, vain, dissolute fellow; a cracked vessel; he still runs out.—Archbishop Wake, Reflections on Texts of Scripture, p. 234; 1701.

The sons of earth, the vulgar crew,
Anxious for futile gain, beneath me stray,
And seek with erring step contentment's obvious way.
Shelton, One after Sicknes.

2. Talkative; loquacious.

One futile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal.—Bacon.

Futility. s.

1. Want of weight; want of solidity.

Trifling futility appears in their aims of the zodiac, and their mutual relations and aspects.—Hentley.

But Musgrave... saw that, if the imputations which the opposition had been in the habit of throwing on the Chancellor were exhibited with the precision of a legal charge, their futility would excite universal derision, and thence it was more expedient to move that the House should, without assigning any reason, request the King to remove Lord Somers from his Majesty's council, and presence for ever.—Murray, History of England, ch. xiv.

2. Talkativeness; loquacity.

This fable does not strike so much at the futility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a prying humour.—Sir E. L. Kilmour.

Fatious. adj. Worthless; trifling. Rare.

I received your answer to that fatious pamphlet.—Mallet, Familiar Letters, II. 45.

God implants no instincts in his creatures that are fatious and vain.—Gracille, Sermons, p. 257.

Future. adj. [Lat. futurus; Fr. futur.] About to be hereafter: (as, 'the future state').

Glory they sung to the most High! good will To future men, and in their dwellings peace.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 183.

His [Lord Camden's] divisions in the Court of Chancery... have occupied all century; and he was of too firm a mind, and, at the same time, too discreet and modest, to fall into the great error which shipwrecked the judicial fame of future equity judges, well versed in the practice of their courts. He neither... so dilated to pronounce the opinion he had formed, as to pay off the evil day of decision;... nor did he place... his chief praise in unhesitating and promiscuous dispatch of business... so as to draw from Mr. Samuel Romilly the comparison, that he preferred the slow justice of the chancellor to his deputy's speedy injustice.—Lord Brougham, Historical Sketches of Justices of the Reign of George III., Part Camden.

Future. s.

1. Time to come; somewhat to happen hereafter.

The letters have transported me beyond This ign'ant present time; and I feel now The future in the instant.

The mind, once led by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after.—Lodge.

But such precautions as these were barely sufficient to maintain tranquillity for the present; much more was needed for the future.—Bishop Thirlwall, History of Greece, ch. lv.

2. In Grammar. Tense so called: (vocabo = I shall, or will, call, being the future of voco = I call). In the following extracts both substantival and adjectival.

Mr. Harris, in his distribution of tenses, reckons three definite future tenses, besides the common indefinite future, which he calls the sort of the future, viz. the imperfect future, as scripseris ero, I shall be beginning to write; the imperfect or extended future, as scriberis ero, I shall be writing; and the perfect future, as scripseris, I shall have done writing.—Ross, Cyclopaedia, in voco.

But if we so scantily provided for this official passive adjective, we are still worse respecting the future adjective: for I cannot recollect a single instance of it in English except this single word future. Yes, one more; Venture or Adventure. Which, though it appears as a substantival, means merely (anything, something, aliquid) Venturum. Can anything be more lame and awkward than our 'about to be' and 'about to come' and 'about to do'?—Horne Tooke, Diversions of Purley.

Futurely. adv. In time to come. Rare.

This prescience of God, as it is prescience, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding; neither doth God's foreknowledge impose any necessity, or bind.—Sir W. Raleigh.

It more imports me Than all the actions that I have foregone, Or futurely can hope.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Two Noble Kinsmen.

Futurition. s. State or condition of being about to be.

The time expressed denotes the futurition at the latter day.—Bishop Pearson, Exposition of the Creed, art. ii.

It is imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or not.—Smith, Sermons, I. 255.

Futurity. s.

1. Time to come.

Not my service past, nor present sorrows, Nor purpos'd merit in futurity, Can ransom me. Shakespeare, Othello, III. 4.

I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron.—Swift.

2. Event to come.

All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place.—South.

This great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee, Though skill'd in fate and dark futurity.
Pope, Translation of the First Book of the Thebaid of Statius.

3. State of being about to be; futurition.

It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, solute and intent mind, as it may be, in no where found but among the platonic ideas.—Glauville, Scripta Scientifica.

Fuzz. s. [Fr. fusée.] In Furriery. Kind of splint so called. See extract.

Splint, or splint, among farriers, [is] a callous, insensible excrescence or scab, that sometimes sticks to a horse's shank-bone, generally on the inside below the knee. If there be one opposed to it on the outside, it is called a pegged or pinned splint, because it does, as it were, pierce the bone, and is extremely dangerous. Some call this a double splint, and others a thorough splint. ... Fuzzes [are] two dangerous splints, joined from above downwards; commonly a fuzz rises to the knee and lames the horse. Fuzzes differ from excrescences or thorough splints in this, that the latter are placed on the two opposite sides of the leg.—Ross, Cyclopaedia, Splint and Fuzz.

Fuzz. See Fuzzy.

Fuzz v. a. Same as Fuzzle.

The University troop dined with the Earl of Abingdon, and came home well fuzzed.—A. Wood, Life, by himself, p. 345.

Fuzz s. Fuzzball.

Fuzzball. s. Globular kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters forth a fine dust.

As touching all the sorts of mushrooms, truffles, puffs, fushals, or fuzzes, these particulars following are observed.—Holland, Translation of Physic, li. xii. ch. iii. (Rich.)

Fuzzie. v. a. Fuddle.

Having liberally taken his liquor, my fine scholar was so fuzzed, that he was no sooner laid in bed, but he fell fast asleep.—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 604.

Fussy. adj. See extract.

[Fuss, fussy.—German fuschen, Swiss fusien, pfusen, English fuzz, represent the sound of water flying off from a hot surface, of air and water in intimate mixture and commotion. Hence fuss, having the nature of things which fuss, a frothy, spongy mass, a confused mixture of air and water, as champagne foaming out of a bottle. Prussian, fussen, fussern, to fuss or break up into a fuss or spongy mass of filaments. Fussy or fusy turnips (moose rapen—Kilian) are soft and spongy. A fussy outlin is woolly and indistinct.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Fy. intrj. [as the German is pfui, this spelling is better than fe.] Word of blame and disapprobation.

Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, whom none can call our power to account?—Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 1.

Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place? Linhand me, or I swear, I'll scratch your face: Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite: My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite. Dryden.

Fyst. s. Breaking of wind from behind, so as to be smelly, rather than heard.

Demande: What thynges it is that the more that one drynketh . . . the less he shall pynter.—Response: It is furter fyestes, for who that drynketh a hundred thousande they shall never pynt a drop.—Demandes Japans: 1611. (Kemble, Solomon and Satura.)

[Foist [is] the act of breaking wind in a suppressed manner from behind. Letitians-Tritonic, creat, spat, crepitus ventris, flatus ventris; French, voise; (Old English foet.—Jamieson, Dictionary of the Scottish Language.)

This, sometimes spelt foist, is the origin of Foist; i.e. insinuate something which proves disagreeable, but which does not proclaim its intrusion. As it is the smell which betrays it, it is confused with fusty, suggestive also of a smell, but one of a different origin.

G.

G A B

GAB. s. Mouth; tongue (with an unfavourable meaning): (vulgarly used: as, 'Hold your gab'—stint your talk; also, 'Gift of the gab'—power of talk).

Gabble. v. n. [see Gobble.] Talk hastily and indistinctly, actually or approximately, as a goose; prate; make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage, Show thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes With words that made them known.

Which made some think, when he did gabble, Th' had heard three labourers of Babel; Or Cerberus himself pronouncing A host of languages on us.—Butler, Hudibras. Such a rout, and such a rattle, Ran to hear Jack Puddling gabble. Swift.

What the devil! d'ye think people of business can stand gabbling—lose time with people that's got no money? This is a piece of sport, and those that can't.—What d'ye mean, sir? gabbling! I can't sport!—O'Keefe, Fountainsbleas, iii. 1.

Gabble. s. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals; loud talk without meaning.

Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose; enough a language, gabble enough, and good enough.—Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, iv. 1.

For with a hideous gabble rises loud Among the builders; each to other calls, Not understood. Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 56. Opposite hor, on two benches, [sat] twelve or fourteen men, rosy, chubby little children, learning their crane-crow-row, and gabble enough they made about it.—Kingley, The Waterbabies.

Gabbling. verbal abs. Noise of one that gabbles.

Flocks of fowl, that when the tempests roar, With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent shore. Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Gabel. s. [i.e. Lat. gabulum = tax.—see last extract.] Excise; tax. Obsolete.

To lay upon them such gabels, taxes, and all manner of tributes, as should please the king to demand.—Sir E. Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, p. 1: 1618.

This may be done, if he impose new gabels, or imposts upon his subjects.—Jeremy Taylor, Dissuasive against Popery, iii. § 3. [Middle Latin, gabulum, gabulus, gabulus, rent, tax. 'Wallford counting six pence redditus v. libras de gablo.'—Oxford. Here gablos redditus pro theolonia et gablo, reg. &c.' (Doomsday in Deuance.) 'Villam et totum gabulum, quodcumque villis.' (Charta Philippi Comitis Flandrie, A.D. 1174.) The gabeller in the forest of Devon is the officer whose business is to collect the mining dues. . . . To gab a mine, to acquire the right of working it; . . . and gab is the common word in Ireland for a payment of rent, or for the rent due at a certain term.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Gabeller. s. Collector of taxes. Obsolete. To their tumultuous burning the gabeller's roods I think I may, not unaptly, compare our burning the popa.—Wright, View of the late Troubles, pref.: 1686.

G A D

Gaberdine. s. [Spanish, gubardina.] Kind of smock frock.

My head way is to creep under his gaberdine; there is no other shelter hereabout.—Shakespeare, Tempest, li. 2. You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog, And spit upon my Jewish gaberdine.

The knight did straight submit, And labl his weapons at her feet: Next he disrobd his gaberdine, And with it did himself resound. Butler, Hudibras.

These stately gaberdines had excited much wonder in the British court, where they and their wearers were equally the subjects of derision.—Agnes Strickland, Lives of the Queens of England, Catharine of Aragon.

Gabion. s. [Fr.] Wicker basket filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.

His battery was defended all along with gabions, and casks filled with sand.—Knoden, History of the Turks.

Gable. s. [German, giebel.—see Gave-look.] End, as opposed to the side, of a house; and presenting the stories above the entrance with a perpendicular aspect, narrowing, and at last coming to a point: (used affectionally with end).

I affect not these high gable ends.—B. Jonson, Poetaster.

Take care that all your brick work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work.—Mortimer, Theatrical.

Gaby. s. Silly staring person. Colloquial.

Gad. s. [see Goad.] Obsolete.

1. Rod; wand; sceptre.

To fawning dogs sometimes I gave a bone, And flung some scraps to such as nothing had; But in my hands still kept the golden gad, That serv'd my turne. Sackville, Induction to Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 517.

2. Wedge or input of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts, some in bars and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel.—Moxon, Mechanical Exercises.

3. Point.

I will go get a leaf of brass, And with a gad of steel will write these words. Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus, iv. 1.

4. ? Spur: (whence on the gad = on a sudden).

Kent banished thus! And France in choler parted! And the king goes to-night! I subscribed his power! Confined to exhibition! All this done Upon the gad! Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 2.

Gad. v. n. Rove loosely and irregularly.

The virgins will be over finely apparelled and trimmed, and will need at overmuch liberty good ranging and *gad*ing abroad.—Martin, Marriage of Priester, sign. Dd. 4. b. 1584.

Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad.—Boetastius, xxv. 22.

G A D L

No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be *gad*ing.—Locke.

Gadabout. s. One who runs much abroad without business. Colloquial.

Gadder. s. One who gads; rambler; one who runs much abroad without business.

A drunken woman, and a gadler abroad, causeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame.—Richardson, xxi. 8. If also be a noted reveller, a gadler, a singer, a pranker, or a dancer, then take heed of her.—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 567.

Gading. part. aff. Roving.

Envy is a *gad*ding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home.—Bacon, Essays, On Envy. There, shepherd, thou the woods and desert caves, With wild thyme and the *gad*ding vine o'ycrown. And all their robes mean. Milton, Lycidas, 39.

Gadding. verbal abs. Act of one who gads; condition of a gadler.

There's an ox lost, and this excomb runs a *gad*ding after wild fowl.—Sir R. L'Estrange. Will-a-wop leads the traveller a *gad*ding Through ditch and through quagmire and bog, But no eyes could set me a *gad*ding Like those of my sweet Molly Mog. Gay, Songs and Ballads.

Gaddingly. adv. In a gadding manner.

If that doth belch out putting rymes, And *gad*dingly doth stray, Is like the fowler who to catch His bird, as noble men say, Gave back for none into a trench. Drant, Translation of Virgile's Arts of Poetry. (1646.)

Gadsy. s. Fly which annoys cattle either by stinging or laying its eggs. It translates the Latin ostrus. See second extract.

The fly called the *gad*sy breedeth of somewhat that swimmeth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds.—Bacon.

Of the varieties of the *gad*sy . . . the horse-hot deposits its eggs on much parts of the horse as the animal can lick with his tongue. They are thus . . . introduced into the stomach; are there hatched and form bots. Another more tormenting fly of the same genus is the fundament-bot, which lays its eggs on the lips of the animal, causing him so much irritation as to induce him to gallop and seek refuge in the water. . . . The ox-warble deposits its eggs on the back of oxen, causing great torture to the animal and much agitation to the herd, if many are attacked at once. . . . [Its] ovipositor is furnished with teeth, and acts as an anger or gnat; and when this comes in contact with a nerve of sensation the oxen seem to be driven almost to a state of madness. . . . Humboldt mentions a species of *gad*sy which has been found in the low regions of the torrid zone . . . attacking man and depositing the eggs in his skin, causing there painful tumours.—C. W. Johnson, Farmer's Encyclopedia.

Gading. s. Rover; wanderer; truant. Rare.

The wandering gadling in the summer tide
That finds the sidler with his reckless foot,
Starts not dismayed so solemnly aside,
As jealous despite did, though there were no boots;
When that he saw me sitting by her side,
That of my health he very crop and root.

Wyatt, Of the Jealous Man, &c. (Rich.)

Gadwall s. [see Garganey.] Duck, not uncommon as a bird of passage, so called, Anas strepera.

The gadwall or grey duck . . . is a rare species. . . Montague mentions that during the many years he devoted to observing and collecting British birds he was never able to obtain a recent specimen. Examples, however, are occasionally to be met with on our eastern coast, and not uncommonly in the London markets, but some of these latter birds are very probably brought from Holland.—Farrell, British Birds, iii. 254.

Gag s. [see Gavelock.] In Navigation. Spar to which the head of a fore-and-aft sail is bent; see extract.

The gag, or prop, used in extending the upper corner of a fore-and-aft sail, [was] originally doubtless provided with a fork at the lower end, with which it embraced and slid on the mast.—Waldwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.

Gaffer s. [godfather, of which it is a contracted form.] See Gossip.
A few honest gaffers with their olock pastor.—Bishop Gaulden, Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ Supplicia, p. 585; 1689.

For gaffer Treadwell told us, by the bye,
Excessive sorrow is exceeding dry. Gay, Pastorals.

Gaffe s. [see Gavelock.] Hook, or small grapple, by which a crossbow is strung.
The gaffe of a cross-bow.—Rhewood.
My crossbow in my hand, my gaffe on my rack,
To land in when I please, or, if I list, to slack.
Drayton, Muses' Elysium.

Gag v. n. [?] Stop the mouth with something to hinder speech.

It's out of his gurgled already; unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, i. 5.
Our Spanish licensing gags the English press.—Milton, Areopagitica.

They might possibly by obstinacy harden, or by diversion gag, conscience; but they could not bribe and corrupt it.—Dr. H. More, Deceit of Christian Piety, p. 121.

There came'd rebellious logic, gagg'd and bound;
There, stripp'd, fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground.
Pope, Dunciad, iv.
The iron had not yet entered into the soul. The tune was not yet come when eloquence was to be gagg'd, and reason to be hoodwinked, when the harp of the poet was to be hung on the willows of Aeneas, and the right hand of the painter to forget its cunning.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Macaulay.

Gag s. Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.

Your drunken prohibitions, and expurgations induces, your gags and shuffles.—Milton, A vindication upon a Defence of the Unhappy Remonstrance.

None when the kids their dams too deeply drain,
With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain.
Dryden.

Your woman would have run up stairs before me; but I have secured her below with a gag in her clasp.—Id.

The wretched government of Lewis the Fifteenth had murdered, directly or indirectly, almost every Frenchman who had served his country with distinction in the East. . . . Lally was dragged to the common place of execution with a gag between his lips.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Lord Clive.

When an innocent man was broken on the wheel at Toulouse, when a youth, guilty only of an indiscretion, was beheaded at Abbeville, when a brave officer, borne down by public injustice, was dragged, with a gag in his mouth, to die on the Place de Grève, a voice instantly went forth from the banks of Lake Lemán, which made itself heard from Moscow to Cadix, and which sentenced the unjust judges to the contempt and detestation of all Europe.—Ibid., Burke's History of the Pope.

Gage s. [Fr. gager.—see Guarantee.] Pledge; pawn; caution; anything given in security.

He, when the shamed shield of slain Samsony
He sp'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage
Of victor's glory from him snatch'd away.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

In any truth, that got not possession of our minds by self evidence or demonstration, the arguments, that gain it, are the vouchers and gages of its probability.—Locke.

Gage v. a.

1. Wager; lay down as a wager; impawn; give as a caution, pledge, or security.

A moiety comment
Was gaged by our king. Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 1.
He found the Turkish merchants making merry:
unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him.—Knoles, History of the Turks.

2. Bind by some caution or surety; engage.

My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, i. 1.

Gagger s. One who uses a gag to stop the mouth.

I undertook to answer that very worthless author,
'the gagger of all protestants' mouths for ever.'—Bishop Montague, Appeal to Caesar, dedication: 1625.

Out of just indignation against this gagger and his fellows.—Ibid.

Gaggle v. n. Make a noise like a goose.

Birds prune their feathers, gaggle, and crows seem to call upon rain; which is but the comfort they receive in the relaxing of the air.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
May fit gaggle with melodious voice,
And never want gooseberries or apple-sauce. King.

Gagging s. Noise made by geese.

You know how the gagging of geese did once preserve the capital.—Howell, Familiar Letters, iv. 1.

Gaily adv. In a gay manner.

Gaily said of you.—Barret, Alceste: 1680.
Wights, who travel that way daily,
Jog on by his example gaily. Swift, Piece described to him, ed. Barret, p. 133.

Thomson was introduced, and being gaily interrogated about the state of his affairs, said, that they were in a more practical posture than formerly.—Johann, Lives of the Poets, Thomson.
Some show their gaily gilded trim
Quick glancing to the sun. Gray, Ode I.

With well—well and gay.

For this purpose, wherof we now write, this would have served gaily well.—William, Arts of Rhetorika, fol. 111 a.: 1534.

Gain v. u. [N.Fr. gagner; Fr. gagner.]

1. Obtain; get; receive.

a. As profit, advantage, or overplus; win, as opposed to lose.

What reinforcement we may gain from hope.
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 109.
A leper once he lost, and gain'd a king.
Ibid., l. 471.

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that.—T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

b. As that which is neither gain nor loss.

I acceptance found, which gain'd
This answer from the gracious voice divine.
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 435.

If such a tradition were endeavoured to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult to conceive how ever it should come to be universally propagated.—Archbishop Tillotson, Sermons.
For fame with toil we gain, but lose with ease.
Sure some to vex, but never all to please. Pope.

c. Applied to a loss.

Ye should not have loosed from Crete, and have gained this harm and loss.—Acts, xxvii. 21.

2. Draw into any interest or party.

Come with presents laden from the port,
To gratify the queen and gain the court.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

If Pyrrhus must be wrought to pity,
No woman does it better than yourself:
If you gain him, I shall comply of course.
A. Philips, Discreet Mother.

3. Obtain as a wooer.

He never shall find out fit mate, but such
As some misfortune brings him, or mistake,
Or whom he wishes most shall gain him.
Through her perverseness, but shall see her gain'd
By a far worse. Milton, Paradise Lost, s. 900.

4. Reach.

Now spurs the late traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 3.
Death was the port, which I almost did gain:
Shall I once more be lost into the main? Waller.
Sun I would him praise
In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
And when high noon hath gain'd his height, and when thou fall'st. Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 173.

Gain over. Draw to another party or interest.

The court of Hanover should have endeavoured to gain over those who were represented as their enemies.—Swift.

Gain v. n.

1. Grow rich; have advantage; be advanced in interest or happiness.

Thou hast taken unry and increase, and thou hast gain'd gain of thy neighbours by extortions.
—Ezekiel, xxi. 12.

2. Enroach; come forward by degrees: (with on).

When watchful herons leave their wat'ry stand,
And mounting upward with erected flight,
Gain on the sky, and soar above the night.
Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

So on the land while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains. Pope.

3. Get ground; prevail against: (with on).

The English have not only gained upon the Venetians in the Levant, but have their cloth in Venice itself.—Addison.

4. Obtain influence with: (with on).

My good behaviour had gained so far on the em-perour, that I began to conceive hopes of liberty.—Swift.

Gain s. Profit; advantage: (as opposed to loss).

Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victory should be used, or the pains thereof communicated to the general content.—Sir W. Raleigh, Essays.

It is in praise of men as in gettings and gains;
for light gains make heavy purses; for light gains
come thick, whereas great come but now and then.
—Bacon, Essays.

That, sir, which serves and seeks for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm.

Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 4.
Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you?—2 Corinthians, xii. 17.

Gain adj. [A.S. gegen = against; see Meet.] Straight; direct: (as, 'the gainest way', i.e. most direct, shortest). Provincial.

Gainor s. One who gains.

The client, besides retaining a good conscience, is always a gainor, and by no means can be at any loss, as seeing, if the composition be overhurd, he may relieve himself by recourse to his cath.—Bacon, Of the Alienation.

If what I get in empire
I lose in fame, I think myself no gainor.
Sir J. Denham, Sophy.

He that loses any thing, and gets wisdom by it, is a gainor by the loss.—Sir R. L. Estange.

By trade, we are as great gainors by the commodities of other countries as of our own nation.—Addison, Preacher.

Gainful adj.

1. Advantageous; profitable.

He will dazzle his eyes, and bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase, some rich match, or advantageous project.—South, Sermons.

2. Lucrative; productive of money.

The statute of 32 of Hen. 8. c. 38, intending to mar the Romish market of gainful dispensations, and injurious prohibitions, professeth to allow all narrines that are not prohibited by God's law.—Bishop Hall, Cases of Conscience.

Gaingiving s. [gain = again.] Giving back; return.

It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gain-giving as would, perhaps, trouble a woman.—Shakespear, Hamlet, v. 2.

Gainless adj. Unprofitable; producing no advantage.

So absolutely gainless to himself in his vilest capacity.—Hammond, Works, iv. 514.
It is a strange folly thus to pursue what is so utterly gainless.—Whole Duty of Man, ch. vi. § 14.

Gainlessness s. Attribute suggested by gainless; unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainlessness as well as laboriousness of the work; miners buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore
they digged: no more is the inevitable misor.—*Dr.
H. More, Deceit of Christian Piety*.

Gainly adv. [gain, adj.] Handily; readily; dexterously.

She laid her child, as gainly as she could, in some fresh heaven and grass.—Dr. H. More, Conjectura Cabbalastica, p. 133.

Gainsey v. u. [gain = against.]

1. Contradict; oppose; controvert with; dispute against.

Speeches which gainsey one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Too feeble then; thou didst not much gain;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss.
Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 1188.

2. Deny anything.

I never heard yet
That any of those bolder vices wanted
Less impediment to *gain*sey what they did,
Than to perform it first.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, III. 2.

Gainseyer. s. One who gainsays; opponent; adversary.

Such as may satisfy gainseyers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the same at our hands.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Policy.
We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest gainseyers of Scripture, even in that which we read for Scripture unto the people.—Ibid.

It was full matter of conviction to all gainseyers.
—Hammond.

Others sought themselves a name by being his gainseyers, but failed of their purpose.—Bishop Fell.

On the vigil of John the Baptist's day it was rumoured abroad, that the saviour himself had appeared in the heavens, bleeding, pierced with the nails and lance, on a cross which shone like fire. It was to encourage forty thousand pilgrims, who were already to have taken the Cross. This was seen more than once in different places, in order to confute the incredulous gainseyers. But of those forty thousand who were enrolled, probably no large proportion reached Southern Italy.—Milman, History of Latin Christianity, b. x. ch. iii.

Gain saying. s. Opposition.

They have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam, and perished in the gain saying of Core.—Jude, 11.

Gainst. prep. Abbreviation of Against.

Tremble, ye nations, who, secure before,
Laugh'd at those arms, that 'gainst ourselves we bore.
Dryden.

Gainstand. v. a. [gain—against.] Withstand.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of reverent duty gainstand the force of so many carnal desires.—Sir P. Sidney.

In Bodome was none found that did gainstand that furious and beauteous multitude, which did compass about and besiege the house of Lok.—Knight, Trial of Truth, fol. 80 b. 1580.

Gainstrive. v. a. [gain—against.] Withstand; oppose.

The False gainstrive us not.
Grinnald, in Songs and Sonnets printed by Tottel; 1557.

Gainstrive. v. n. Make resistance.

On the spoils of women he doth live,
Whose bodies chaste, whenever in his power,
He may then catch, unable to gainstrive,
He with his shameful lust doth first deflower,
And afterwards themselves doth cruelly devour.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, lv. 7, 12.

Gait. s.1. Way (as, 'Go your gait'); march; walk; progress.

Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,
And all her vain allurement did forsake.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

2. Manner and air of walking.

Great Juno comes, I know her by her gait.
Shakespeare, Tempest, iv. 1.

He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

He associated in those days with John Palmer, the comedian, whose gait and bearing he seemed to copy; if John (which is quite as likely) did not rather borrow somewhat of his manner from my godfather.—Lamb, Essays of Elia, My First Play.

His [Hazlitt's] countenance was then handsome, but marked by a painful expression; his black hair, which had curled stiffly over his temples, had scarcely received its first tints of grey; his gait was awkward; his dress was neglected; and in the company of strangers, his bashfulness was almost painful.—Talfourd, Memoirs of Lamb.

Gaited. adj. Having a particular gait, or method of walking: (as the second element in a compound).

You must send the ass upon the horse, for he is slow gaited.—Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, III. 1.
And heavy gaited loads lie in their way.
Id., Richard II. III. 2.

Gaiter. s. [Fr. guêtre.] Kind of spatterdash: (generally in the plural).

Lax in their gaiters, laxer in their gait.
J. & H. Smith, Rejected Addresses, Imitation of Crabbe.

She usually wears gaiters about her legs, on account of the support which they give her when walking.—Wrazel, Berlin, II. 307.

Gaiter. v. a. Dress with gaiters.

The cavalry must be saddled, the artillery-horses harnessed, and the infantry gaitered.—Proceedings on the Trial of Lord G. Boscawen, p. 11: 1760.

Gala. s. [See last extract; also, for a doubtful suggestion as to its remote origin, the extract from Wood.] Showing, reception, or entertainment.

They dressed as if for a gala at Versailles, ate off plate, drank the richest wines, and kept harpms on board, while hunger and scurry reigned among the crews, and while corpses were daily flung out of the portholes.—Marx, History of England, ch. III.

Either the first element of a compound or adjectival, gala-day being the commonest combination.

Why is Paris dancing, and flinging fire-works? They are gala-nights, these last of September; Paris may well dance, and the universe: the edifice of the constitution is completed . . . And now by such illumination, jubilee, dancing and fire-working, do we joyously hand the new social edifice, and first raise heat and reek there, in the name of Hope.—Carlyle, The French Revolution, pt. II. b. v. ch. I.

[The klutis frequently held learned disputations, at which the professors of the academy appeared, divided according to their different faculties—logicians, mathematicians, jurists, and physicians were dressed in their gala costume, thalas, or their doctoral mantles. The powers of the English universities have still the original form of the Arabic thalas or kafan.—O. C. Wood, Translation of Von Hammer's History of the Assassins, ch. I.

[Gala, Regale.—Italian, far gala, to be merry, to eat and drink well; regalare, to feast or entertain; restid di gala, to dress fine and gay; gala, ornament, luxury, dress. Spanish, dia de gala, a court day, holiday. Old French gala, good cheer, jollity; galer, to lead a joyous life. (Boquet).—Waggon, Dictionary of English Etymology.

Galaetic. adj. Connected with, relating to, or constituted by, the Galaxy or Milky Way.

The nebulae are not dispersed with anything like uniformity; but are abundant around the poles of the galactic circle, and rare in the neighbourhood of its plane.—Herbert Spencer, The Instability of the Homogeneous.

Galactometer. s. See extract.

The quantity of cream which any given milk . . . contains can be easily measured by the galactometer, which consists of a narrow tube of glass not more than five inches in length, three of which is divided into hundred parts, and on being filled with milk to the top of the graduated scale, whatever number of degrees the thickness of the cream embraces will be the percentage of the cream yielded by the milk. For example, if the cream covers four lines of the scale it is four per cent., if eight lines eight per cent.—Braude, Manual of Chemistry, 4290.

Galage. s. See Golosh.

My heart-bill is well like frome, I feel;
And my galage grown fast to my heel.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

Galago. s. [? Portuguese.] Small lemur of continental Africa of the genus so called.

The galagos (according to Adanson) have much of the manners of monkeys and squirrels. . . . The galago is about seven inches long, the tail about nine.—Translation (by Griffith, Smith, and Pidgeon) of Cuvier's Regne Animal.

Galangal. s. In Medical Botany. See extracts.

The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste.—Sir J. Hill, Materia Medica.

Galangal (root) of English drugists occurs in pieces which are as thick as the finger, seldom exceeding three inches in length, cylindrical or somewhat tuberosus, often forked, sometimes slightly striped longitudinally, and marked with whitish circular rings. Its odour is agreeably aromatic; its taste peppery and aromatic. It is the rhizome of Alpinia galanga. . . . Its effects, uses, and doses are analogous to ginger.—Ferreira, Elements of Materia Medica.

Galantine. s. [P] In Cookery. See extract.

If returned to its form, instead of being rolled, it must be stewed gently for an hour, and may then be sent to table hot, covered with mushroom, or any other good sauce that may be preferred; or it may be left until the following day, and served garnished with the jelly, which should be firm, and very clear and well-flavoured; the liquor in which the calf's foot has been boiled down, added to the broth, will give it the necessary degree of consistency. French cooks add thyme or other herbs to these preparations of poultry (the last of which is called a galantine), but these our own taste would lead us to reject.—Eliza Acton, Modern Cookery, p. 256.

Galaxy. s. [Gr. γάλα, γάλακτος—milk; Fr. galaxie.]

1. In Astronomy. The Milky Way.

A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd.
Claudian.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy.
Cowley.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 577.

We dare not undertake to show what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy.—Bentley.

2. Any splendid assemblage of persons or things.

There are stars of several magnitudes; some goodly and great ones, that move in orbs of their own; others small and scarce visible in the galaxy of the church; but all are stars, and no star is without some light.—Bishop Hall, Learning, p. 48.

Often has my mind hung with fondness and admiration over the crowded, yet clear and luminous, galaxies of imagery, diffused through the works of Bishop Taylor.—Dr. Parr.

In the Latin form.

Then touched with love my inward soul did cry,
We worth the faults and follies of mine eye!
The milk-white galaxia of her brow,
Where love doth dance involuts of his skill,
Like to the temple where true lovers vow
To follow what shall please their mistress' will.
R. Greene, Poems.

Galbanum. s. [Lat. galbanum.] Gum resin so called, from some plant of the natural order Umbellifloræ; used in medicine as an antispasmodic.

And the Lord said unto Moses, Take unto thee sweet spikenard, stacte, and onycha, and galbanum [khalbanah]; these sweet spices with pure frankincense; of each shall there be a like weight: and thou shalt make it a perfume, a confection after the art of the apothecary, tempered together pure and holy.—Exodus, xxx. 34, 35.

I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh, as galbanum.—Ecclesiasticus, xxiv. 15.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops or tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour; its smell is strong and disagreeable. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil, as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant.—Sir J. Hill, Materia Medica.

Hitherto no sufficient evidence has been adduced to prove that galbanum has been yielded by any known plant. . . . Sir John McNell sent home specimens of a plant called a second sort of ammoniacum. . . . Dr. Lindley was kind enough to send me a small fragment of this gum-resin for examination; but I was unable to identify it with any other known product of the order Umbellifloræ. It certainly was neither umbellifera nor ammoniacum; nor did it appear to be either myrsinum or galbanum. The precise country where galbanum is produced has not been hitherto ascertained. Dioscorides says it is obtained in Syria: a statement which is perhaps correct, though hitherto no evidence of this has been obtained. It is not improvable that it is procured also in Persia, or even in Arabia, as suggested by Dr. Royle. Opuntia galbanifera grows in the province of Khorsan, near Herod.—Persia, Elements of Materia Medica, p. 1054.

Gale. s. [P] Wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze. See second extract.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here from old Verona?
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, II. 2.

Gales, or gales of wind, are more particularly understood by mariners to be those storms which, chiefly during winter in high latitudes, blow sometimes from one direction for several days together.—Young, Nautical Dictionary.

Gale. s. [Dutch, gage]; hence gail would be the better spelling.] Native plant so called, Myrica Gale.

Our busy streets and sylvan-walks between,
Fun, marriage, bog and heath, all intervene;
Here pits of erag, with spongy, glady issue,
To some enrich the uncultivated space:
For there are blossoms rare, and curious rush,
The gale's rich balsam, and sun-dew's crimson bluish,
Whom velvet leaf with radiant beauty dress,
Forms a gay pillow for the plover's breast.
Crabbe, The Borough.

Galeated. adj. [Lat. galea—helmet.]

1. Covered as with a helmet.

A galeated cochineal copped, and in shape somewhat more conical than any of the foregoing.—Woodward, On Pussis.

2. In Botany. Bearing a flower resembling a helmet, as the monkshood.

Gálēna. s. [Gr. γαλήνη.] Ore (native sulphuret) of lead.

When a crystal, as, for instance, a crystal of galena, (sulphuret of lead,) is readily divisible into smaller cubes, and these into smaller ones, and so on without limit, it is very natural to represent to ourselves the original cube as really consisting of small cubical elements; and to imagine that it is a philosophical account of the physical structure of such a substance to say that it is made up of cubical molecules. And when the galena crystal has externally the form of a cube, there is no difficulty in such a conception; for the surface of the crystal is also conceived as made up of the surfaces of its cubical molecules. We conceive the crystal so constituted, as we conceive a wall built of bricks. But if, as often happens, the galena crystal be an octahedron, a further consideration is requisite in order to understand its structure, pursuing still the same hypothesis.—Whewell, History of Scientific Ideas, vol. II. ch. III.

The principal lead ores in England are those worked in the north of Derbyshire, in the county of Flintshire, in North Wales, and in the neighbourhood of Alston Moor in Cumberland; and the veins containing the ore here often been alluded to as offering some singular and interesting peculiarities of form. From these veins the ore of lead called galena (a rich sulphuret) and ores of zinc (calamine and blende) are obtained in considerable abundance, and the lead is usually accompanied by a small percentage of silver, varying from two to about four-and-twenty ounces per ton.—Austen, Geology, II. 308.

Gálēniacal. adj. [Galen, the famous Greek physician so called.] Characterized by reference to the practice or teaching of Galen: (no far as it is a common, rather than a proper, term, Medical, as opposed to Chemical).

He has been a packhorse in the practical and old Galenical way of physick.—Life of A. Wood, p. 379.

Chymical medicines are observed to relieve of tetter than to cure; Galenical decoctions have more of body in them; they work by their substance and their weight.—Dryden. (Ord MS.)

Gálēniacal. s. [see preceding entry.] Galenical (medical) preparation.

If you are a dispenser of chemicals and galenicals by retail, never let your shop get into disrepute by saying you are without any obsolete or ridiculous article that can be enquired for.—Doze for the Doctor.

Gálēniacism. s. [see preceding entries.] In Medicine. Doctrine of Galen.

Paracelsus, and after him Van Helmont, altered the whole body of medicine; exploded Galenism, and the whole Peripatetic doctrine; and rendered medicine almost wholly chymical.—Chambers.

Gálēnist. s. [see preceding entries.] Physician that, in his way of practice, follows the method of Galen, i.e. as medical rather than chemical.

Let men dispute whether thou breathe or no; Only in this be not Galenist: to make Court's hot ambition wholesome, do not take A dram of country's dulness; do not add Correctives, but, as chymiques, purge the bad.
Donne, Poems, p. 147.

Gálēno. s. In Church Architecture.

1. Resting-place before the entrance to a church.

The galies at Lincoln cathedral is a porch on the west side of the south transept.—Glossary of Architecture.

2. Gallery at western end of a cathedral, where penance was done: (so defined in certain books, but with doubtful propriety).

Gall. s. [A.S. gealla = gall; gealow = yellow.]

1. Bile.

Come to my woman's breast, And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers!
Shakespeare, Macbeth, I. 5.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk: Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an owl with success.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

2. Same used as a pigment.

Clarified or gall combines readily with colouring matters or pigments, and gives them solidity either by being mixed with or passed over them upon paper. It increases the brilliancy and the durability of ultramarine, carmine, green, and in general of all delicate colours, whilst it contributes to make them spread more evenly upon the paper, ivory, &c. Miniature-painters find a great advantage in employing it; by passing it over ivory, it removes completely the unctuous matter from its surface; and when ground with the colours, it makes them spread with the greatest ease, and renders them fast. It serves also for transparencies. It is first passed over the varnished or oiled paper, and is allowed to dry. The colours, mixed with the gall, are then applied, and cannot afterwards be removed by any means. It is adapted finely for taking out the spots of grease and oil.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

3. Gallbladder.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar.—Sir T. Browne.

4. Anything extremely bitter.

Poison be their drink! Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste!
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. III. 2.

She still insults, and you must still adore; Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more.
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

His daintiest food, his richest wines, were all Turn'd by remorse to vinegar and gall: The softest down, by living body press'd; The rich man bought, and tried to take his rest; But care had thorns upon his pillow spread, And scatter'd sand and nettles in his bed.
Crabbe, The Borough.

5. Rancour; malignity; bitterness of temper.

Archilochus to vent his gall and spite, In keen satirics first was known to write; Dramatic authors used this sort of verse On all the Greek and Roman theatre, As for discourse and conversation fit, And aptest to drown the noise of the pit.
Oldham, Horace's Art of Poetry imitated in English.

Suppose your hero were a lover, Though he before had gall and rage; . . . He grows dispirited and low, He hates the light and shuns the blow. Prior, Alma. In private life he [Mr. Gratian] was without a stain, whether of temper or of principle; singularly amiable, as well as of unblemished purity, in all the relations of family and of society; of manners as full of generosity as they were free from affectation; of conversation as much seasoned with spirit and impregnated with knowledge as it was void of all asperity and gall.—Lord Bringham, Historical Sketches of Statesmen of the Reign of George III., Gratian.

Gall. s. [Italian, galla.] In its most general sense a round or nutlike swelling, made in a leaf (generally an oak leaf) by a hymenopterous insect (especially Cynips quercus), by means of a puncture, followed by a deposition of eggs, itself followed by a swelling, and other changes, resulting in an excrescence of an astrigent and styptic character. In Chemistry it is a technical term; one preeminently so, inasmuch as a modification of the gallie acid has been called ellagic, by a kind of rebus; giving, perhaps, the most artificial term in English. Gallie acid and Gallate (salt of the same) are also technical, though common. See Tannin. In Botany, and, to a certain extent, in common language, it means excrescence produced by an insect on an oak. Etymologically, it means a piercing. See extracts.

Galls or galnuts are preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have Oriental and European galls; the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm texture, and a disagreeable, acrid, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a few austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort. The general history of galls is this: an insect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the tree, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg, which, as soon as it is in the winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen, the maggot or its remains are sure to be found within. It has been observed that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries; but this observation should be confined to the medicinal galls: for all those excrescences which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true galls, though less firm in their texture.—Sir J. Hill, Materia Medica.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbid excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venomous liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed.—Ray, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them.—Iberham.

The Levant galls are of two different appearances and qualities: the first are heavy, compact, imbricated, the insect having not been sufficiently advanced to eat its way through the shell; prickly on the surface, of a blackish or bluish green hue, about the size of a musket ball. These are called black blue, or Aleppo galls. The second are light, spongy, pierced with one or more holes; smooth upon the surface, of a pale grayish or reddish yellow colour, generally larger than the first, and are called white galls.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Gall. s. [see Sanddive.] See extract.

Gall of glass, called also sanddive, is the neutral salt skimmed off the surface of melted crown glass, which, if allowed to remain too long, is apt to be reabsorbed in part, and to injure the quality of the metal, as the workmen call it.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Gall. s. Sore or irritable place from chafing or fretting.

This is the fatallest wound; as much superior to the former as a gangrene is to a gall or a scratch.—Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.

The little tumours resulting from the pressure of the middle are called warbles, and when they elevate they frequently become abscesses. For saddle galls there is no better application than strong salt and water, mixed with a fourth part of tincture of myrrh.—Stephens, Book of the Farm.

Gall. v. a. [Fr. galler.]

1. Hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly, It may be death. Shakespeare, Hamlet, IV. 7. His yoke is easy, when by us embraced; But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast.
Sir J. Denham.

2. Impair; wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth; And that my state being galled with my expense, I seek to heal it only by my wealth.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, III. 4. If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses.—Ray, On the Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

3. Teaze; fret; vex.

In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

What they seemed contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleases us the better, if we say that it galleth them.—Ibid.

When I show justice,

I pity those I do not know;

Which a diabolical offence would after gall.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, II. 2.

All studies here I solemnly defy,

Save how to gall and pinch this Hollenbrooke.

Id., Henry IV. Part I. I. 3.

No man commits any sin but his conscience smites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it.—Archbishop Tillotson.

The sentiments of Cromwell were widely different. He was not what he had been; nor would it be just to consider the change which his views had undergone as the effect merely of selfish ambition. He had, when he came up to the Long Parliament, brought with him from his rural retreat little knowledge of books, no experience of great affairs, and a temper galled by the long tyranny of the government and of the hierarchy.—Maccusley, History of England, ch. I.

4. Harass; keep in a state of uneasiness.

The Helots had gotten new heart, and with diverse sorts of shot from corners of streets and house windows galled them.—Sir P. Sidney.

Light demilances from afar they throw, Fasten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows.—Aldrich.

Gall. v. n. Act in a galling manner. Rare.

I have seen you galling and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.—Shakespeare, Henry V. v. 1.

Gálēniacal. adj.

1. Showy.

A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no gally with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby.—Isaiah, xxxiii. 21.

2. Highspirited.

Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough.—Sir P. Sidney.

Gallant, adj. Conspicuously courteous in respect to women.

I shall be at home all the morning. It will be but gallant, that you should pay me a little visit when you have transacted your business.—Diercks the younger, Coningsby, b. viii. ch. vi.

Gallant, s. Showy person.

a. As one who is gay or sprightly.

The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vastius.—Kneller, History of the Turks.

The gallants, to protect the lady's right, Their fustianous brandish'd at the grisly Urylen.

b. As one who is brave, high-spirited.

He shall recount his worthies, [in the margin, gallants.]—Nahum, li. 5.

The mighty [in the margin, gallants] are spoiled.—Zechariah, xl. 2.

c. In his attentions towards women.

One that is well nigh worn to pieces with age, to show himself a young gallant!—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 1.

Gallant, v. a. Pay conspicuous attentions to women.

Mr Roger took the lady by the hand, leading her through all the shower, covering her with his hat, and gallanting a familiar acquaintance through rows of young fellows, who winked at Sukey in the state she marched off.—Spectator, no. 416. (Ord M.)

At their first coming to town, I was in a manner obliged to gallant them to the play.—The World, no. 164.

Gallantise, s. Gallant bearing. Rare.

Gray-headed senate and youth's gallantise.
Sylvestor, Translation of Dhanatan,
(Nares by H. and W.)

Gallantly, adv. In a gallant manner.

1. Gaily; splendidly.

The brave imposture gallantly to dress.
Beaumont, Pygmalion, xv. 267.

2. Bravely; nobly; generously.

You have not dealt so gallantly with us as we did with you in a parallel case: last year a paper was brought here from England, which we ordered to be burnt by the common hangman.—Swift.

Gallantness, s. Attribute suggested by Gallant; elegance; completeness in respect of some acquired qualification.

Four customers are more pleasant to be recounted than profitable to be followed: the liberties of neighbours, the gallantness of women, the goodness of wine, and the mirth and joy at feasts.—Wit's Commonwealth, p. 154. (Ord M.)

From the Italian he will borrow his reservedness, not his jealousy and humour of revenge; from the French his horsemanship and gallantness that way, with his confidence, and nothing else.—Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel, p. 100.

Gallantry, s. Showiness of appearance; show; magnificence; glittering grandeur; ostentatious finery.

Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all The English youth flock to their admiral. Waller.
And since that opera's at length come in,
Our players have so well improved the scene
With gallantry of habit, and machine,
As makes our theatre in glory vie
With the best ages of antiquity.
Oldham, Horace's Art of Poetry imitated in English.

2. Bravery; nobleness; generosity.

That gallantry and greatness of soul, that constant garb of justice.—Dr. H. More, Song of the Soul, Note, p. 373.

The eminence of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and enabling study of nature.—Glasse, Science Scientific, p. 100.

Had we any sense of true gallantry and bravery of mind in us, we should despise all other kinds of life but this.—Scott, Christian Life, l. 3.

3. Courtship.

a. Honourable.

The martial Moore, in gallantry refin'd,
Invent new arts to make their charmers kind.
Granville.

That which we call gallantry to women, seems to be the heroic virtue of private persons; and there never breathed one man, who did not, in that part of his days wherein he was recommending himself to his mistress, do something beyond his ordinary course of life.—Tulley, no. 91.

b. Dishonourable or equivocal.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a prostitute; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and ; fancy begins.—Swift.

4. Number or group of gallants.

Hector, Deiphobus, and all the gallantry of Troy,
I would have arm'd to-day.—Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, iii. 1.

Gallature, s. [Lat. gallus = cock bird.]

Trend of an egg. Rare.

Whether it be not made out of the grandis, gallature, germ, or trend of the egg, as Aquapende and stricter enquiry informeth us, I dole know of lower doubt.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, b. iii. ch. xxviii. (Rich.)

Whether it be not more rational epicureane to contrive whole dishes out of the nobles and spirited particles of plants than from the gallatures and treddles of eggs.—Id., Cyrus's Garden, ch. iii. (Rich.)

Gallbladder, s. Bladderlike receptacle, attached to the liver, for the reception of the gall or bile.

When the functions of the liver, or those of the stomach and duodenum, are impaired, the gall-bladder and ducts necessarily participate in the disorder; and the bile is liable to accumulate in them. The accumulation may arise from one or more of the following conditions:—1st. Impaired tonic contractility of the coats of the gall-bladder, and perhaps also of the ducts. . . . 2nd. A congested or tumefied state of the mucous membrane at the outlet of the common duct, and in the duodenum. 3rd. Impassation of the bile in the gall-bladder and ducts, from the morbid state of the secretion, or from the absorption of its more fluid parts, whilst retained in these situations. . . . 4th. Temporary or constant occlusion of the ducts from inflammation, from the pressure of tumours, or from the presence of biliary calculi, either in them or in the gall-bladder.—Copland, Dictionary of Practical Medicine.

Galleas, s. [Fr. galeace.] Low-built vessel, with both sails and oars.

My father hath no less

Than three great argosies, besides two galleases,

And twelve tight galleys.

Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, ii. 1.
The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galleases.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Galled, part. adj. Irritated.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things.—Locke.

Galleon, s. [Spanish, galeon.] Spanish ship of burden, armed, and with four or sometimes five decks.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk or set on fire by the Spanish galleons.—Sir W. Raleigh, Apology.

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleons and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers or castles.—Bacon, Considerations on a War with Spain.

In February 1565, near four hundred ships were ready to start. The value of the cargoes was estimated at several millions sterling. These galleons which had long been the wonder and envy of the world had never conveyed so precious a freight from the West Indies to Seville.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. 22.

Gallery, s. [Fr. galerie.]

1. Kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow.—P. Sidney.

The row of return on the lanquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupolas.—Bacon.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known. Sir J. Denham.

Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

2. Seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends. Pope.

Used adjectively.

My dear friend,
Before I end,
Have you any
More orders for Don Giovanni,
To give Him that doth live

Your faithful Zany?

Without railery,

I mean Gallery.

Ours;

For I am a person that shuns

All ostentation,

And being at the top of the fashion;

And seldom go to operas

But in formal pauperism!

Lamb, Letter to W. Ayrton.

Galleas, adj. Destitute of, or wanting, gall or bitterness; inoffensive.

Saltless and gall-less be thy enme!

Cervantes, Poems, &c., p. 30.

Which dost the pure and candid dwellings love.

Cowley, On the Restoration of King Charles II.

Galley, s. [L. Lat. galeria, galea; Fr. galere.]

1. Vessel impelled by oars, rather than by sails, and, as such, for a large vessel, rare; though it was the common ship of the ancients, and at present used in the Mediterranean.

Jason ranged the coasts of Asia the Levi in an open boat, or kind of galley.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

On any ground his galley steers;

Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore.

Dryden.

2. The same used as a place of punishment for Galleyslaves.

The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawk and his hounds, his dice and his courtship every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the galley for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure.—South, Sermons.

He, therefore, exhorted the king to exile all the Moriscos, except some whom he might condemn to work in the galley, and others who could become slaves, and labour in the mines of America.—Buckle, History of Civilization in England, vol. ii. ch. i.

Galleysloop, s. Barge of state.

His built of cedar larger or galleysloop, their sterns being set with pearl and precious stones.—Hakewell, Apology, p. 400.

Out of my doors, you sons of noise and tumult, begot on an ill May day, or when the galleysloop is aloft to Westminster!—R. Jonson, Epitaph.

No plays, nor galleysloops, no strange amusements to run and wonder at.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit without Money.

He has performed such a matter, wench, that if I live next year I'll have him captain of the galleysloop, or I'll want my will.—Id., Knight of the Burning Pestle.

Galleyslave, s. Man condemned for some crime to row in the galleys.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor man, he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy.—Bishop Burnet.

Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission.—Dr. H. More, Devty of Christian Piety.

The surgeon vent's dash against the shore,

Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar.

Garth.

Galliard, s. [Fr. gaillard.] Gallant; gay;

brisk, lively man; fine fellow. Obsolete.

Selden is a galliard by himself.—Cleveland.

Used adjectively.

What a thing to laugh at, to see a judge or serjeant at the law in a short coat garded and pounced after the galliarde fashion!—Sir T. Elyot, Governour, fol. 91.

Galliard, s. [from the Spanish gallarda; Italian, gagliarda.] Kind of dance.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards.—Bacon.

Used adjectively.

The triple's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion as when galliard-time and measure-time are in the melody of one dance.—Id.

Galliardise, s. Merriment; exuberant gaiety. Obsolete.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watery sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way mercurial, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company.—Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici.

Galliardness, s. Attribute suggested by Galliard; gaiety; cheerfulness.

His rest filled him, his countenance changed, his

A Kent, when from the gallstones got loose,
Drops into Styx, and turns a Soland goose.

Cleveland.

Gallstone. s. In Medicine. Biliary concretions.

Spasms of the bile-ducts has been presumed rather than proved. Without denying, however, its occurrence, particularly when acid bile, or gallstones, are passing along the ducts, I believe that it seldom takes place unless from these causes, and in connection with inflammatory irritation. The symptoms cannot be separated from those attending the passage of gallstones, by which it is almost invariably occasioned.—Cupland, Dictionary of Practical Medicine.

Gally. adj. Having the (bitter) character of gall. Rare.

He abhorred thy gally and bitter drinks of wine.—Archbishop Cranmer, Answer to Bishop Gardiner, p. 244.

Gally-broches. s. Galligaskins.

They pull in peeces fast
Their gally-broches all arowe.

Gustafso and Bernardo to Yayne: 1570.
(Nares by H. & W.)

Gallyworm. s. [?] Native myriapod of the genus Iulus.

In the male gally-worm, the testis consists of minute vesicles appended, for the most part alternately, to the sides of a long efferent tube.—Owen, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, loc. xviii.

Gally. v. n. Gape. Rare.

Next, mynd thy grave continually,
Which gallyes thee to dour.

Kendall, Flowers of Epigrammes: 1577.
(Nares by H. & W.)

Galsome. adj. Angry; malignant.

Such accusations... any vulgar man... may cry out upon, and condemn both of galsome bitterness and of wilful fraud and falsehood.—Bishop Morton, A Discharge of the five Imputations against the Bishop of Durham, p. 210: 1531.

Galvanic. adj. Connected with, or consisting in, galvanism.

All the galvanic combinations, analogous to the new apparatus of Mr. Volta, which have been heretofore described by experimentalists, consist (as far as my knowledge extends) of series, containing at least two metallic substances, of one metal and charcoal, and a stratum of fluids; and it has been generally supposed that their agencies are, in some measure, connected with the different powers of the metals to conduct electricity; but I have found, that an accumulation of galvanic influences, exactly similar to the accumulation in the common pile, may be produced by the arrangement of simple metallic plates or arcs, with different strata of fluids.—Sir H. Davy, Philosophical Transactions, pt. II. art. 21: 1801.

Galvanical. adj. Galvanic.

The phenomena of magnets, of electrical bodies, of galvanic apparatus, seem to form obvious materials for such sciences.—Wheat, Philosophy of the mechanical Sciences.

Galvanism. s. [Galvani, the name of the discoverer of the facts out of which the science has been developed.] Branch of electricity so called.

Although galvanism and electricity may be considered as the same principles, still, according to the present state of our knowledge, they may be thus distinguished. Galvanism is the portion of electricity, which forms a component part of the conducting body, in the act of undergoing a change in its capacity, from a greater to a lesser state; while electricity is the result of a temporary change in non-conducting bodies, inasmuch that their capacities become, by attrition, momentarily increased.—Wilkinson, Elements of Galvanism, p. 302: 1804.

But Johnson only ran off, to return

With many other warriors, as we said,

Unto that rather somewhat rusty bourn,

Which Hamlet tells us is a pass of dread.

To Jack however this gave but slight concern:

His soul (like galvanism upon the dead)

Acted upon the living as on wire,

And led them back into the lowest fire.

Byron, Don Juan, viii. 41.

Galvanize. v. a. Affect by the power of galvanism.

I have tried galvanism in two cases of palsy, both hemiplegia, one a young lady, aged 20, the other a gentleman, aged 25; and, though neither of them were cured, they both received benefit, particularly the gentleman. After being galvanized for twenty minutes, they felt a flowing warmth the remainder of the day. The apparatus I used was a pair of twenty-four pair of plates, of five inches diameter.—Carpus, in Electricity and Galvanism, p. 106: 1803.

(See also under Fustigate.)

Galvanized. part. adj. Acted upon, or effected by, galvanism.

Galvanized iron is a somewhat fantastic name newly given in France to iron coated by a peculiar patent process, whereby it resists the rusting influence of damp air, and even moisture, much longer than ordinary tin plate. The following is the prescribed process. Clean the surface of the iron perfectly by the joint action of dilute acid and friction, plunge it into a bath of melted zinc, and stir it about till it be alloyed superficially with this metal; then take it out and immerse it in a bath of tin such as is used for tinning tin plate. The tin forms an exterior coat of alloy. When the metal thus prepared is exposed to humidity, the zinc is said to oxidize slowly by a galvanic action, and to protect the iron from rusting within it, whereby the outer tinued surface remains for a long period perfectly white in circumstances under which iron turned in the usual way would have been superficially browned and corroded with rust.—Enc. Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Galvanometer. s. Measure for ascertaining the power of galvanic operations.

In the experiments performed by Professor Faraday on a large living gymanoid, the most powerful shocks were received when one hand grasped the head and the other hand the tail, of which I had painful experience; especially at the wrists, the elbows, and across the back. But the nearer the hands were together within certain limits, the less powerful was the shock. It was demonstrated by the galvanometer that the direction of the electric current was from the anterior parts of the animal to the posterior parts, and that the nervous touching the fish with both hands received only the discharge of the parts of the organs included between the points of contact.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates.
(For another example see extract under next entry.)

Galvanoscope. s. Test for galvanic action.

The phenomena of electro-dynamics are solely produced by electricity in motion. The passage of electricity through solid or liquid conductors is essential; in fact a magnetic needle is a galvanoscope, by which means the existence and direction of an electric current may be detected... But a magnetic needle... may even serve, by the degree of deflection, as an exact measure of its force. When used for this purpose under the name of a galvanometer, some peculiar arrangements are required in order to ensure the requisite delicacy and precision.—Turner, Elements of Chemistry, p. 101: 1817.

Gálvry. adj. ? Cleverly. Rare.

If you happen upon a light person that is young and frothily gálvry, of word making, colour, and fast going, if you buy him for me for reasonable money and send him over your money shall be repaid.—Wrightley, To Sir T. W. Hall, Oct. 1537. (Rich.)

Gambashes. s. [Generally, perhaps always, plural.] The final -s, however, is not part of the root.—Italian, gambascie (for grammascie, as Scotch grammashes (Jamieson); French gambaches. The corruption to gambages probably took effect under the supposition of a derivation from French jambe, Italian gamba. A further corruption converted gambages into gambadoes.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.] Kind of leggings: (according to Grose, short spatterdashes worn by ploughmen. In the Praise of Yorkshire Ale (1697), they are explained as coarse cloth stockings that button upon other stockings, to keep one warm).

Darius is all bedawed with golden lace,

Hose, doublet, jerkin, and gambashes too.

Lucies, Scourge of Polly: 1611.

(Nares by H. & W.)

He wore a little brown capouch, fit very near to his body, with a white towel; also a pair of breeches and gambashes of the same coloured cloth, and on his head a clay-coloured cap; his gambashes were fitted up half the leg.—Shelton, Translation of Don Quixote, iv. 1.

Gambadoes. s. pl. [see Gambashes.] Spatterdashes; boots worn upon the legs above the shoe.

I know not whether in [James I.] or his son first brought up the use of gambadoes, much used in the west, whereby when one rides on horseback his legs are in a coach, clean and warm in those dirty countries.—Fuller.

The pettifogger ambles to her in his gambadoes once a week.—Dennis, Letters.

Gambir. s. [Malay.] Concrete juice of an astringent plant so called [Uncaria Gambir]. On the island of Pinang there are sixty thousand gambir plantations. Poirer, Elements of Materia Medica and Therapeutics.

Gambison. s. [L.Lat. gambeso.] See extract.

Gambeson... in the ancient military language was a kind of coat or doublet worn under the cuirass to make it sit easy.—Arns, Cyrtopædia, in voce.

Gambit. s. [Fr.; from Ital. gambetto = trip of the heels.] Move at chess so called; see extracts.

Gambit [is] an opening in which a pawn is sacrificed gratuitously at an early stage of the game under particular circumstances upon the chance of obtaining compensation through the attack thereby gained. There are many descriptions of gambits, the king's gambit being the name of the parent-stock of the greatest number of them. Some gambits are distinguished by the names of their several inventors or of those players who first published or practised them; as the Cochrane gambit, &c. Others, for the sake of distinction, are named from some particular move at the commencement, as the bishop's gambit.—Walker, Art of Chess-Play.

This move occurs in the old work of Paulinus, who gives some ingenious variations on it. Lopez and later authors have hence entitled it Dominio's gambit.—Stanton, Chessplayers' Handbook.

Gamble. v. n. Play extravagantly for money.

(For example see extract under Gambler.)

Gamble. v. n. Waste or lose by gambling: (as, 'He gambled away his fortune').

Gambler. s. One who gambles.

A gambler's acquaintance is readily made and easily kept, provided you gamble too.—Sir E. R. Lpton, Polham, ch. lxix.

Gambling. verbal abs. Act or practice of one who gambles.

She held out against all the old-fashioned of fashion, and allurement of example; she had an inherent abhorrence of gambling.—Lawson, no. 21.

Gambo. s. [?] Spur-winged goose, Anser gambensis: (given by Yarell in the synonymy, but not in the text).

Gamboge. s. See extracts.

Gamboge is a concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature, heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America, and the East Indies, particularly from Cambodia, or Camboja.—Sir J. Hill, Medical Notes.

Gamboge is a gum resin, concreted in the air from a milky juice which exudes from several trees. The gamboge gutta, a tree which grows wild upon the coasts of Ceylon and Malabar, produces the coarsest kind of gamboge; the gamboge vera ('Stalagmites cambogisches') of Ceylon and Siam affords the best... Gamboge is used as a pigment, in miniature painting, to tinge gold varnish; in medicine as a powerful purge. It should never be employed by confectioners to colour their liquors, as they sometimes do.—Enc. Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Gambol. v. n. [see last extract.] Dance; skip; frisk; jump for joy; play merry frolics.

That I have uttered; bring me to the test,
And I the matter will record, which madmen
Would gambol from.—Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 4.

The king of elfs, and little fairy queen,
Gambol'd on heath, and danced on every green.

Dryden.

The monsters of the flood
Gambol around him in the wat'ry way.

And heavy winks in awkward measures play. Pope [Cotgrave renders gamboller, merely, 'to wag the legs in sitting, as children use to do; but gamboler, 'to turn heels over head, to make many gambols.' Our own word was formerly gambols. 'To fetch gambols, French gamboler, Latin currere in sublimi jactura. Gambolling horses, being full of pranks, skips or skippings.' (Hulnot.) Harriet also gives gambol for gambol in his dictionary. One 'that can gambol or dance fast.' (Barkley's Believe, 1870, vol. 2.) The origin is evidently the Italian gamba, the leg.—Zwd.

Gambol. s.

1. Skip; hop; leap for joy.

A gentleman had got a favourite spaniel, that would be still toying and leaping upon him, and playing a thousand pretty gambols.—Sir E. R. Lpton, Polham.

Baruch through the conquer'd Indies rode,
And boasts in gambols frisk'd before their honest god.

Dryden.

In the older form with -d.

Quid est quod hic gaudet? What is the matter that you leape and skyppe so? for that you say such gambolles.—Chal. The Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 72. (Rich.)

2. Frolic wild prank.

For who did ever play his gambols,
With such unamiable rambles? Battler, Hudibras.

Gamboling. part. adj. Sportive.

No other antelope has so completely the lively gamboling manners of the young goat as the kipp-springer; it bounds with the greatest force and precision from rock to rock, and will often stand firm upon a point so rugged and small as to excite astonishment how it can retain its footing.—Spencer, Natural History and Classification of Quadrupeds, p. 287.

Gambone. s. Gammon (of bacon), of which it is the older form.

And then came halting Jane,
And brought a gambone
Of bacon that was ready.
Shelton, The Tunnings of Elinor Ranning. (Rich.)

Gambrel. s. [Italian, gambarella.] Leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mixed as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? as appears by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambrel, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back.—Gross.

Gambrel. v. a. [Cambrel.] Carry as on a cambrel.

Lay by your scorn and pride, they're scurvy qualities,
And meet me, or I'll box you while I have you,
And carry you gambrel'd thither like a mutton.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Nice Valour.

Game. adj. [see Gam.] Crooked; (as, 'a game leg'). Colloquial, or slang.Game. adj. Courageous; plucky; (often used adverbially; as, 'He died game'). Colloquial, slang.Game. s. [A.S. gamen; Frisian, guma.]

1. Sport of any kind.

We have had pastimes here, and pleasant game,
Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2.
Let my son Martin disport himself at any game truly antique.—Arbutnot and Pope, Martinus Scribblers.

2. Jest; (opposed to earnest or seriousness).

Then on her head they set a garland even,
And crowned her 'twist earnest and 'twist game.
Spenser.

3. Insolent merriiment; sportive insult.

Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,
On my refusal to distress me more;
Or make a game of my calamities?
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1320.

4. Single match at play.

There is no man of sense and honesty, but must see and own, whether he understands the game or not, that it is an evident folly for any people, instead of prosecuting the old honest methods of industry and frugality, to sit down to a public gaming-table, and play off their money one to another.—Bishop Berkeley, Essay towards presenting the Ruin of Great Britain.

Used adjectively.

It is very wonderful to see persons of the best sense passing away a dozen hours together in bustling and dividing a pack of cards, with no other conversation but what is made up of a few game phrases.—Addison, Spectator, no. 55.

5. Scheme pursued; measure planned.

This seems to be the present game of that crown,
And that they will begin no other till they see an end of this.—Sir W. Temple.

6. Field sports; (as the chase, or fulcroy).

If about this hour he make his way,
Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends with horse and men,
To set him free from F's captivity.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. iv. 5.

What arms to use, or nets to frame,
Wild beasts to combat, or to tame,
With all the mysteries of that game.
Waller.
Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game,
Spied a company of buntards and cranes.—Sir E. R. Strange.

7. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legalized, licensed, or certificated sportsmen.

Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his game,
With war, and hostile wars, such as refuse Subjection to his omnipotent tyrannous.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xii. 50.

There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I know not which to follow.—Dryden, Relics, Preface.
A bloodhound will follow the person he pursues, and all bounds the particular game they have in chase.—Arbutnot.

Go, with thy Cynthia hunt the pointed spear
At the rough bear, or chase the flying deer;
I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,
At human hearts we fling, nor ever miss the game.
Prior.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man;
Our haughty Norrini boasts that barb'rous name,
And makes his trembling slaves the royal game.
Pope, Windsor Forest.

Shorten my labour, if its length you blame,
For, grow but wise, you rob me of my game.
Young.

This was game indeed to us, but this was no feed;
and I was very sorry to lose three charges of powder and shot on a creature that was good for nothing to us.—De Foe, Life and Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.

Used adjectively, or as the first element in a compound; e.g. 'Game laws.'

8. Solemn contest, exhibited as a spectacle to the people; (generally in the plural).

The games are done, and Cesar is returning.
Shakespeare, Julius Cesar, i. 2.
Milo, when out-rune the Olympick game,
With a huge ox upon his shoulders came.
J. Denham.

Such was the character which he publicly assumed, and in this capacity he ordered the remains of Eurycles, Philip, and Cymon to be buried in the royal sepulchre at Rome, and honoured their memory with funeral games.—Bishop Thirlwall, History of Greece, ch. lviii.

Gamecock. s. Cock bred for fighting.

They manage the dispute as fiercely as two gamecocks in the pit.—Locke.

Gamegall. s. Scurism; quip. Obsolete.

Shortly after this quipping game-gall.—Mollified. (Rich.)

Gamekeeper. s. Person who looks after game, and sees that it is not destroyed.

There were four hunts in the morning and concerts in the evening. Every gentleman of the legation had a gamekeeper specially assigned to him.—Murray, History of England, ch. xxiii.

Gamey. adj. In a game, plucky, or courageous manner. Colloquial.

Struggle gamey to the finish [i.e. of a boatrace].

—Saturday Review, April 1, 1865.

Gamesome. adj. Frolicsome; sportive;

playful; lively; gay.

Game, though old, yet gamesome, kept one end with Cæsar.—Sir P. Sidney.
I am not gamesome; I do lack some part of that quick spirit that is in Antony.

Shakespeare, Julius Cesar, i. 2.
The gamesome wind among her tresses plays,
And curl'd up those growing riches short.

Fairfax.

Belial, in like gamesome mood.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 620.
This gamesome humour of children should rather be encouraged, to keep up their spirits and improve their strength and health, than curbed or restrained.—Locke.

Gamster. s.

1. One who is over-addicted to gaming.

A gamster, the greater under he is in his art, the worse was he.—Bacon.
Could we look into the mind of a gamster, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and untadours; her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves.—Addison, Guardian, no. 120.

2. One engaged in play. Obsolete.

When leuity and civility play for kingdoms,
The gentler gamster is the soonest winner.
Shakespeare, Henry V. iii. 6.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamster's wealth always more than a looker on; but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which settles business straight.—Bacon.

3. Merry frolicsome person. Obsolete.

You're a merry gamster.

My lord Rambo. Shakespeare, Henry VIII. i. 4.

4. Prostitute. Obsolete.

She's impudent, my lord,

And was a common gamster to the camp.

Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, v. 3.

Gaming. verbal abs. Practice or habit of gamsters or gamblers; gambling.

Conventuism will tempt them to cheat and cheat in gaming.—Whole Duty of Man, ch. ix. §7.

Gaming for any thing considerable is founded upon avarice; and is, if not a direct, yet, what is much worse, a deliberate violation of the tenth commandment.—Delany, Sermon on Gaming.

I come, in the next place, to consider the ill consequences which gaming has on the bodies of our female adventurers. It is so ordered, that almost every thing which corrupts the soul decays the body.—Addison, Guardian, no. 120.

Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no way profits either body or mind.—Locke.

Gammer. s. [gymnother.—A.S. gemedder.]

Term of address to a woman corresponding to Gaffer as addressed to a male. See Gossip.

Gammen. s. [Italian, gambone—leg.] Etymologically, the hnm or hock, but in fact the hinder and thick part of a sitch of bacon, with part of the leg.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold:
A rusty gammon of mine was't years old.

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

Gammens, that give a relish to the taste,
And potted fowl, and fish, come in so fast,
That are the first is out, the second sticks.

Id., Translation of Persius.

As in some Irish houses where things are so-so,
A gammon of bacon hangs up for a show;
For of eating a rather of what they take pride in,
They'd as soon think of eating the pan it was fried in.

Goldsmith, The House of Venison.

Gammon. v. a. Be fool; delude; (as, 'He gammoned me with a trumped-up story').

Gammon. s. Nonsense; foolery; (as, 'That's all gammon'). Colloquial, slang.

Gammot. s. [?] See extract. Rare.

An instrument serving to cut out the roots of ulcers or sores; it is called the insertion knife or gammot.—Nomenclator. (Nares by H. & W.)

Gamut. s. [see last two extracts.] First note in Guido Aretino's scale of music;

scale itself.

Malice, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you gamut in a tricker sort.

Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iii. 1.

When by the gamut some musicians make
A perfect song, others will undertake,
By the same gamut clumskily, to equal it;
Things simply good can never be imit.

Johnson, Poems, p. 70.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That run by note, and through the gamut rage;

In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire.

Addison.

[It is the Greek letter Γ, gamma, and not, the name of a musical note, Guido Aretin. distinguished the first note of his scale by the Greek letter, with a view, according to some, of showing that the Greeks were the inventors of music; but, as others think, of recording his own name by this, the initial letter of it.—Todd.] [Gamut, gamma.—French gamme, the musical scale.

Said to be derived from gamut, the Greek name of the letter Γ, used in denoting the notes of the scale, but the accounts of the reason why this letter was adopted for the purpose are confused and contradictory, and why the Greek name should have been used at all is not explained. The real origin is, in all probability, the French game or gamme, a chain of bells, which would supply the most familiar example of the musical scale. The addition of the final ut in gamut arose from the use of that syllable to mark the first note in the scale.—Walshwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Gander. See Gaucher.Gander. s. [A.S. gandra.] Male of the Goose, q. v.

Ganderylas. s. [?] Native flower so called; ? silverweed, i.e. Potentilla anserina.

Purple narcissus like the morning rays,
Pale gandergrass and azure culverkeys.

Lawson, Secrets of a Gynlogist: 162.

(Nares by H. & W.)

Gang. v. n. See Go.

But let them gang alone, . . .

As they have brewed, so let them bear blame.

Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

Your flaunting beaus gang with their breasts open.—Arbutnot.

Gang. s. Number herding together; troop;

company; tribe; herd. Often contemptuous.

Oh, you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, iv. 2.

As a gang of thieves were robbing a house, a wastif fell a barking.—Sir E. R. Strange.

The good woman herself began to suspect her guests, and imagined those without were rogues belonging to their gang.—Fielcing, Adventures of Joseph Andrews.

But the terror and dejection of the gang were beyond the power of wine; and so many had stolen away, that those who were left could effect nothing.

—Maccusley, History of England, ch. xxi.

1035

Gangboard. s. In Navigation. See extract.

Gang-board [a] a board or plank with several cleats or steps nailed to it for the convenience of walking into or out of a boat upon the shore, where the water is not deep enough to float the boat close to the landing-place.—Falconer, Marine Dictionary.

Ganglion. adj. Ganglionic.

I have... ascribed this very important... manifestation of life to the organic or ganglionic nervous system.—Clyde, Dictionary of Practical Medicine, Irritation.

Ganglion. s. [Gr. γάγγλιον.]

1. Tumour in the tendinous and nervous parts. Obsolete.

Bonecancers usually represent every bone dislocated, though possibly it be but a ganglion, or other crude tumour or preternatural protuberance of some part of a joint.—Wiseman.

2. Enlargement on the course of certain nerves.

A ganglion, then, essentially consists of a collection of nerve-vesicles, or ganglion-globules interspersed among nerve-fibres. When a nerve enters a ganglion, its component parts separate and pass through the ganglion in different directions, so as to be variously distributed among the branches that pass out of it. The only exception to the general fact that the vascular matter occupies the centre of the ganglia occurs in the cerebrium of Vertebrata, in which it is chiefly disposed on the exterior, forming the cortical envelope. The manner in which the nerve-fibres are connected with the ganglionic vesicles appears to be not always the same.—Carpenter, Principles of Physiology, §§ 230, 231.

Some impression is made upon the peripheral termination of a nerve; this impression is propagated along the nerve until it reaches a ganglion; there some action is set up which is propagated along another nerve proceeding from the ganglion to a muscle; and thus the stimulus carried through an afferent nerve to some inner centre of communication, is reflected from it through an efferent nerve to the contractile agent.—Herbert Spencer, Data of Biology, ch. iv.

Phral both Greek and English; i.e. in both -a and -s.

Amongst all this diversity in the number, size, and position of the nervous masses, certain ganglia are obviously homologous with those which have received determinate names in the lamellibranchiate mollusks. The branchial ganglia receive impressions from and transmit them to the gills; they communicate also with the brain, and through that centre associate the gills with all other parts of the body.—Owen, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, lect. xxii.

Ganglionic. adj. Having the nature of, or consisting in, a ganglion or ganglions.

(For example see extract under Ganglion, 2.)

Gangrel. s. [?] See extract. Rare.

Long homme, long comme une jereche, très long. A long gangrel; a slim, a long, tall fellow that hath no naking to his height.—Nomenclator. (Nares by H. & W.)

Gangrenate. v. a. Produce a gangrene; mortify. Rare.

Parts cutaneous, gangrenated, siderated, and mortified, become black, the radical moisture or vital sulphur suffering an extinction.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Gangrene. s. [Fr. gangrène; Gr. γάγγραινα.] Mortification; stoppage of circulation followed by putrefaction.

This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrene, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Gangrene is the death of a part or the whole of a structure or organ. The terms gangrene, sphacelus, and mortification have been used indifferently; but, as mortification and sphacelus signify the last result of the morbid state, are no longer a disease, but its termination—the term here adopted is the more appropriate one. . . . The more vascular a part is, the more disposed is it to inflammation, and consequently to gangrene. Hence cellular and nervous tissues are much more liable to it than fibrous and osseous structures. . . . When inflammation is about to pass into gangrene, very evident changes take place in the colour, temperature, sensibility, and vital cohesion of the part. The redness becomes darker, or changes to a livid, violet, purplish hue. The increased temperature of the inflamed part is much lessened, and the pain and tenderness diminished. Vesicles also appear on the surface, owing to the effusion of serum, or of a sanguinolent serum, under the cuticle. These changes become more manifest as the gangrene passes into its second stage. The colour becomes grey, yellowish grey, greenish, brown, or black, or various intermediate shades. The vessels are now enlarged, or the cuticle is entirely separated by the effusion of a bloody serum beneath it, which swells and leaves the skin loosely covered by it, or partially denuded and discoloured. The insupportable erythema on pressure, is tuffy, soft, roil, and insensible. It when afterwards emits odorous and offensive odour, indicating that the gangrenous part is quite dead, and is undergoing decomposition. If the organic nervous power is depressed, or the blood contaminated, the above changes may spread to adjoining parts; whereas, if the vital powers are restored, and the assimilating and excreting functions promoted, the march of the inflammation will be limited by the process of ulceration, by which the gangrenous part is ultimately removed, the loss thus occasioned being partially repaired by the exudation of coagulable lymph, which, becoming organised in the form of granulations, gradually completes the state of reparation and cicatrises.—Clyde, Dictionary of Practical Medicine.

Gangrene. r. a. Mortify: (in its medical sense).

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently; for that the few spirits that remain in these parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Gangrene. v. n. Become mortified.

Wounds immediately Rankle and fester, and gangrene To black mortification.

Milton, Samson Agonistes, 621.
As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out.—Wicman, Surgery.

Gangrened. part. adj. Affected with Gangrene.

Gangrened members must be loy'd away,
Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay.

Dryden.

(See also second extract under Gangrene, s.)
Gangrenous. adj. Having the character of gangrene; mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hemorrhages, insides red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Gangtide. s. Time of beating the boundaries of parishes: (gangdays and gangweek are also used).

At fast-even, pass judges, gangtide gaites,
Did alle masses bring.

Warner, Aldion's England. (Nares by H. & W.)

Gangue. s. [German, though spelt as if of French origin; the final -ue showing that the -g- is to be sounded, i.e. as gang-g.]

Gangue [is] a word derived from the German gang, a vein or channel. It signifies the mineral substance which either encloses or usually accompanies any metalloids in the vein. Quartz, lamellar carbonate of lime, sulphate of baryta, sulphate and fluoride of lime, generally form the gangue; but a great many other substances become such when they predominate in a vein. In metallurgical works the first thing is to break the mixed ore into small pieces, in order to separate the valuable from the useless parts, by processes called stamping, picking, sorting.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures and Mines.

Gangway. s. See extract.

Gangway [is] a narrow platform or range of planks laid horizontally along the upper part of a ship's side, from the quarter-deck to the fore-castle; . . . [it] is also that part of a ship's side, both within and without, by which persons enter and depart. . . . Gangways is likewise used to signify a narrow passage left in the hold when a ship is laden. . . . Finally, a gangway implies a thoroughfare or narrow passage of any kind.—Falconer, Marine Dictionary.

Gangweek. s. Week for beating the boundaries of parishes; often Rogation week; same as Gangtide. Preserved where the custom is preserved, otherwise obsolete.

It [dreich] serveth well to the decking up of houses and banquetting-rooms, for places of pleasure, and for beautifying of streets in the crowne or gang-week, and such like.—Gerarde, Herball, p. 1278: 1633.

Gannet. s. [?] British bird so called, Sula alba, Sulan goose.

The gannet is a constant resident on our coast, but with considerable change of locality, depending on the season of the year.—Tarrell, British Birds, iii. 405.

Ganoid. adj. In Ichthyology. See Ctenoid and Placoid.

Gantelope. s. [see next entry.] Military and naval punishment, in which the criminal running between two parallel lines of men receives a blow from each man.

He is thin to run the gantlope through the torments and reproaches of his own conscience.—Scott, Works, Sermon in 1804, li. 20.

Gantlet. s. [see last two extracts.] The ordinary spelling with -u is perhaps not so thoroughly established as to make a return towards an improved, though still faulty, mode of spelling impracticable.] Same as preceding.

But wouldst thou, friend, who lost two legs alone, Woudst thou to run the gantlet these expose To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes?

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.
Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes.—Lodge.

[Corrupted from gantlope, gant, all, and loopen, to run, Duden. (Dr. Johnson).] Skinner deduces it from Ghent, and the Dutch verb, as if the punishment was first practised at that place. In later times, the word has been found in the shape of Ghentlope, on this supposition, whether justly or not. Dr. Johnson gives an instance of gantlope, but only of the corruption gantlet.—Todd.

[In the phrase to run the gantlet, the word is a corruption of gantlope, arising from the possibility of this giving meaning to the term in English ears, under the supposition that the punishment consisted in a blow from the gantleted hand of each of a line of soldiers through which the criminal was made to pass. But the blow was always given with a rod, as appears in the German durch die Spies-punthe laufen (Spitz or Spies-punthe, a switch); French, passer par les verges. To run the gantlet or gantlope, to run through a company of soldiers standing on each side, with each a switch in his hand to scourge the criminal. The punishment was probably made known to us through the wars of Gustavus Adolphus, as the expression is pure Swedish, Spä gantlop, from gata, a street, or, in military language, a line of soldiers, and lop, course.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Ganza. s. [Spanish.] Goose. Rare.

What modest indignation can forbear stamping at the presumption of those men, who, as if Dominico Gonsales his eagle, they had been mounted by his gansas from the moon to the empyreal heaven?—Bishop Hall, Variable World, § 7.

They are but idle dreams and fancies,
And savour strongly of the ganzas.

Butler, Hudibras, ii. 3.

Gaol. s. See Jail.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol.
Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 6. letter.

Have I been ever free, and must my house Be my re-entive enemy, my gaol?

Id., Timon of Athens, iii. 4.

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners.—Id., Henry VI.

In the morning usually the thief is sent to the gaol.—Thomson and Fletcher, Martial Maid.

The points for consideration under this head are—the College of Maynooth; the Regina Domini; the National System of Education, together with a brief reference to the Kildare Place Society; the employment of clergymen in gaols; and the arrangements recently established in the new scheme of a poor law for that country. Gladstone, The State in its Relations with the Church, ch. ix.

Gaoler. s. See Jailor.

This is a gentle protest; seldom, when The steeld gaoler is the friend of men.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iv. 2.

I know not how or why my surely gaoler, Harsh as his iron, and insouciant as pow'r When put in vulgar hands, Clementine, Put off the bridle.

Dryden, Cleonora.
We have often heard men . . . lament that they can find no modern dunces resembling those fair pupils of Ascham and Aylmer who, . . . while the horns were sounding, and the dogs in full cry, sat in the lonely oriel, with eyes riveted to that immortal page which tells how meekly and bravely the first great martyr of intellectual liberty took the cup from his weeping gaoler.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Lord Bacon.

Gap. s.

1. Opening in a broken fence; breach; passage; opening in general.

Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and openings of gates.

Tasso, Hundred Poets of good Husbandry.
Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge for the house of Israel.—Ezekiel, xiii. 5.

2. Interstice; vacancy; hiatus.

Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first We were discover'd. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, v. 3.
One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing.—Swift.

G A P E

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other.—Pope.

3. Deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour.—Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 2.
Nor is it any brech or gap in the works of nature.—Dr. H. More.

Stop a gap. Patch up, or make a shift, for a time.

His policy consists in setting traps, in finding ways and means, and stopping gaps.—Swift.

Stand in the gap. Stand forward, as a defender of anything, in a post of danger; act as champion.

He said he would have destroyed them, had not known his chosen stood before him in the gap.—Parsons, cvi. 23.

The people of the land have used oppression, and corrupted robbery, and have vexed the poor and needy; yea, they have oppressed the stranger wrongfully. And I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it; but I found none.—Ezekiel, xlii. 20, 30.

What would become of the church, if there were none more concerned for her rights than this? Who would stand in the gap?—Lecky.

Gape. v. n. [A.S. geapian.]

1. Open the mouth wide; yawn.

As fellow birds,
Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away;
And at each least that stirs each blast of wind,
Gape for the food which they must never find.—Dryden.

She stretches, gapes, undimms her eyes,
And asks if it be time to rise.—Swift.

With fur. Long for.

To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes.—Sir J. Denham.

To thy fortune be not thou a slave;
For wilt hast thou to fear beyond the grave?
And then, who gaped for my estate, draw near;
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear.—Dryden, Translation of Perennis.

With after. Long for; seek.

As a servant earnestly desir'd (in the march, gaped after) the shadow, and as an hireling look'd
For the reward of his work.—Job, vii. 2.
What shall we say of those who spend their days
In gaping after court-favour and preferments?—Sir R. L. Estcourt.

With at. Open the mouth for anything.

Many have gaped at the church revenues; but, before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopp'd in the church-yard.—South, Sermons.

2. Open with a breach.

If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape
And bid me hold my peace.—Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 2.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incision of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower.—South, Sermons.

That all these actions can be performed by alignment, as well as by inclination, is plain, by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound.—Arbuthnot.

There is not, to the best of my remembrance, any vessel gaping on another, for want of a suture in this point.—Dryden.

3. Stare with hope, expectation, or wonder.

The king gaped and gazed upon her with open mouth.—Estcourt, iv. 31.

Others will gape & anticipate
The cabinet designs of fate;
Apply to winds, to forewinds
What shall, and what at all never be.—Butler, Hudibras.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dower; and the end of all this is to cause laughter; a very monster in a Bartholomew fair, for the use to gape at.—Dryden, Translation of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

4. Stare irreverently.

They have gaped upon me with their mouth.—Job, xvi. 10.

Gape. s. State of gaping.

The mind is not here kept in a perpetual gape after knowledge.—Addison, Spectator, no. 432. (Ord. MS.)

Gaper. s.

1. One who gapes, by simply opening his mouth, or by staring foolishly.

G A R B

Guard, put by those papers,
And, gentlemen sailors, see the gallery clear.
—Bonnett and Fletcher, Bloody Brother.

2. One who longs or craves: (often with fur).

(Goods and livings were not small)
The papers for them tear the world in hand
For ten years' space.—Mirror for Magistrates, p. 370.

The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained wet near into every paper's mouth.—Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

Gapesed. s. [?] formed, as a ludicrous term, after the manner of rapesed.]

Gaping. At the present time, colloquial.

Whilst others they do make repair
To Smithfield to Bartholomew Fair,
To see Jack Pudding act his tricks,
Whilst others they pursue his pocket picks;
And by that means 'tis plainly clear,
They for their gapesed lay just dear.—Poor Robin, 1104. (Surrey by H. & W.)

Gaping. part. adj. Acting as one who gapes.

The plunks, their pitchy corruption wash'd away,
Now lying, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,
Rush through the ruins of her gaping side.—Dryden.
And, if my muse can through just now see,
That gaping, nameless, gaping fool he be. —Rowe.
Where elevated o'er the gaping crowd,
Clasp'd in the board the peju'd head is how'd,
Betwixt retire.—Cap. Triclin.

Gaping. verbal abs. Act of one who, or that which, gapes.

Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour.—Arbuthnot.

Gaptoothed. adj. This is a word which Dryden may be said to have either coined or applied by mistake.

The Wife of Bath in Chaucer is gaptoothed, a term that has yet to be satisfactorily explained. Teeth showing interstices, or (in anatomical language) diastemata of gum, is what the word before us seems to mean.

The rever, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other as much as the winning lady princess and the broad-speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath.—Dryden, Preface to Fables.

Gar. v. a. [Danish, gjøre; Swedish, göra.]

This is the ordinary term for make, the forms of which are as rare in Norse as those of g-r are rare in German. The language of the Shepherd's Calendar being archaic or provincial, the extract, though from Spenser, standing also as it does with greet, is no evidence to the word's being English. At any rate gar is Scotch, and, in Scotland, of Norse origin. It has not been noted as a provincialism in the southern parts of the Danish area in England, e.g. Lincolnshire, Leicestershire, &c.] Make.

Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gares thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?
Or is thy language broken, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lass forsaken?
—Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

Garb. s. [Fr. garbe; at first, simply manner, air, fashion; then good manner, good fashion, grace.]

And with a lisp'd garb this most rare man
Speaks French, Dutch, Spanish, and Italian.—Dryden. (Rich.)

1. Manner. Obsolete.

And with a lisp'd garb this most rare man
Speaks French, Dutch, Spanish, and Italian.—Dryden. (Rich.)

2. Exterior appearance. Obsolete.

Who, having been jaded for bluntness, doth affect
A sunny roughness, and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature.—Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 2.

Some noblemen of that kingdom [Ireland] lived in a higher garb, and unto greater expenses than the noblemen in England were able to do.—Lord Clarendon, Life, iii. 707.

Hornor's will, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their clothes, did wear.—Sir J. Denham.

3. Fashion of dress; dress; habit.

In how and doublet,
The home-boy's garb.
—Bonnett and Fletcher, Love's Pilgrimage.
Thus Bellin, with words clad'd in reman's garb, Counsell'd ignoble ease and peaceful sloth.
—Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 320.

G A R C

[GAPH
GARBROW]

He jumps himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physick, and sets up.—Sir R. L. Estcourt.

Gárbage. s.

1. Refuse: (spelt with -ish: see Rubbish).

Obsolete.
Tarn, the tare, waste, or garbish, of any ware or merchandise.—Phorus.

2. Offal.

The cloyed will,
That estate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravishing first the lamb,
Leaps after for the garbage.—Shakespeare, Cymbeline, i. 7.

Last, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will save itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage.—Id., Hamlet, i. 6.

A thou more senseless than the roq'ty
Of old mispivy and mungry,
That out of garbage of cattle
Preserv'd the events of truce or battle.—Butler, Hudibras.

Common in the following course corbination.
When you receive rondign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage.—Dryden.

Gárbie. v. a. [Ital. gurbillare = sift; Span. gurbillar; gurbillo = sieve.]

1. Cleanse by sifting. Obsolete.

Upon the 7. of April 1629, he [Dr. Winne] with seven others were appointed commissioners by his majesty for gurbilling Indawoo.—Ward, History of Greenwich College and Professions, p. 254.

2. Pick and choose, in argument, such facts as suit a particular purpose, the rest being kept back; sophisticate.

But you who fathers and traditions take,
And garbie some, and some you quite forsake.—Dryden.

Some errors have been detected by writers of this generation in the speculations of Adam Smith. Yet we still look with peculiar veneration on the Wealth of Nations and on the Principles, and should regret to see either of those great works garbled even by the ablest hands.—Marx, Critical and Historical Essays, Croker's edition of Bunsell's Life of Johnson.

The materials for the history of a people are more extensive, more indirect, and therefore less liable to be garbled, than are those for the history of a government.—Buckle, History of Civilization in England, vol. i. ch. vii.

Gárbie. s. Obsolete.

1. Tare (as in Tare and Tret); refuse.

Averroes weight is by custom (yet continued also by statute), and thereby are weighed all kind of grocerie wares, physick drugs, butter, cheese, flesh, waxe, pitch, tarre, tallow, waxes, leup, salt, iron, Steele, lead, and all other commodities not before named (as it seemeth), but especially every thing which beareth the name of garbel, and whereof is such a refuse or waste.—Dalton, Country Justice: 1620.

2. Rascal.

How did the bishop's wife believe
On this most sacrilegious slave?
Did not the lady smile upon the garbie?—P. Pindar.

Gárbied. part. adj. Sophisticated.

At last they told her, or told her such a garbled story as people in difficulties tell.—Thackeray, Vanity Fair, ch. xlv.

Gárbier. s. One who garbies.

a. In the earlier sense of the word. See extract.

The garbler of spires is an officer of great antiquity in the city of London, who is empowered to enter any shop, warehouse, &c., to view and search drugs, &c., and to garble and cleanse them.—Cowley.

b. In the later sense.

A farther secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it.—Swift, Examiner.

Gárboll. s. [N.Fr. garbonil; Ital. garbuglio.]

Disorder; hurlyburly.

Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read
What garbolls she awak'd.—Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, i. 3.

Give me the number'd verse that Virgil sings,
And Virgil's self shall speak the English tongue;
Manhood and garbolls shall be dumb.—Bishop Hall, Satires, i. 6.

Upon this ball caused open rebellion in the north, and many garbolls.—Proceedings against Garret, &c. sign. P. 3 b.

Gárbrow. s. [? graculus.] ? Jackdaw.

Rare.

She tripped it like a barren doe,
And strutted like a garbrow.
—Chapman, Drollery, p. 67: 1636. (Surrey by H. & W.)

Garden. s. [Fr. jardin; Ital. giardino; German, garten.] Piece of ground enclosed and cultivated for herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure; (figuratively) any plot, district, or region of extraordinary beauty and fertility, whether naturally or as the result of agriculture rather than horticulture.

I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,

The pleasant garden of great Italy.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, i. 1.

In the royal ordering of gardens, there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year.—Baron, Essay.

Garden. v. n. Cultivate a garden; lay out gardens; act as a gardener.

At first, in Rome's poor age,

When both her kings and commons held the plough,

Or garden'd well. — H. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

When men grow to civility and elegance, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection.—Bacon.

Gardener. s. One who gardens.

Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The gardener may lop religion as he pleases.—Hamlet.

Gardening. verb. n. Cultivation or planning of gardens.

My compositions in gardening are after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nice elegancies of art.—Spectator.

Gardenly. adj. Having the character of a garden; like, or relating to, a garden.

The crop throughout being unusual in a gardenly manner.—Marshall, Rural Economy. (Ord MS.)

Gardenware. s. Produce of gardens. Rare.

A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-seeds than gravel.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Gare. s. [? gar as in garfish.] If so, in a gare means under the spur.

In a gare and heat they will run, ride, and take any pain; but only so long as the pang holds.—Rogers, Naaman the Syrian, p. 380. (Trench.)

Garfish. s. [A.S. gār = spear.] British sea-fish so called (Belone vulgaris); Esox Belone; mackerel guide; greenbone; horn-fish; longnose; gorehill; sea-newt.

The garfish, included by Linnaeus in the genus Esox, and thus associated with the true pike, was called sea-pike. . . . The garfish . . . is occasionally taken off the coast of Newbury in the mackerel season, and is not unfrequently called a swordfish.—Farrall, British Fishes.

Garganey. s. [? a transformation of Querquedula; gaduall also being probably the same, i.e. taken from the last two syllables, -quedul, the present word being from the fuller form.] Species of duck so called; summer teal, Anas Querquedula.

Intermediate in size between the teal and the widgeon, the garganey is rather a rare species.—Yarrell, British Birds, iii. 278.

Gargarism. s. [Gr. γάργαρα; Fr. gargarisme.] Gargle.

Apophlegmatism and gargarism draw the rheum down by the palate.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Such (medicines) as are not swallowed, but only kept in the mouth, are gargarism.—Barton, Anatomy of Man, p. 387.

Gargarise. v. u. Use as a gargle.

Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargarized, doth ease the hiccough; for that it is astringent, and inhibits the motion of the spirit.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Gargarise. v. n. Gargle.

This being relaxed, may make a shaking of the larynx; as when we gargarize.—Holder, Elements of Speech.

Garget. s. [? — connected with gargol.] Distemper in cattle.

This garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

After recovery from lambling, the only complaint the ewe is subject to is inflammation in the udder, or udderclap, or garget.—Stephens, Book of the Farm, 236.

Gargle. v. a. [Fr. garguiller.]

1. Hold up, and keep in play, any liquid in the back part of the mouth, or upper part of the throat, by the regulated expiration of air from the lungs, the result being a sound well expressed by the word under notice; the process being one in Medicine, for the purpose of cleansing, stimulating, or giving tone to parts in contact with the fluid.

They cough, and then they order every hair;
Next gargle well their throats.

Dryden, Translation of Persius.

Warble; play in the throat.

Those which only warble long,

And gargle in their throats a song. — Waller.

No charm'd you were, you was'd a while to doat

On nonsense gargled in an emuch's throat. — Beaton.

Gargle. v. n. Use gargle.

Gargle twice or thrice with sharp oxyerate.—Harey.

Gargle. s. Liquor, or mixture, with which the mouth or throat is gargled.

His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure.—Visman, Surgery.

The treatment of these more acute states of inflammation of the tube should be entirely antiphlogistic. Local vascular depletions; active purgatives, especially calomel with antimony; cooling and detensive gargles, particularly those with the bicarbonate of soda, or nitre, or hydrochloric acid.

In these cases I have advised the use of gargles, with either the murate of ammonia, or the bicarbonate of soda, and assiduous friction behind the ears night and morning with the liniments or embrocations in the appendix.—Copland, Dictionary of Practical Medicine, Hearing.

Gargol. s. [? — connected with garget.] Distemper in hogs so called.

The signs of the gargol in hogs are, hanging down of the head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Garing. adj. Staring; gazing.

With fifty garing heads a monstrous dragon stands. — Phaer. (Rich.)

Garish. adj. [? gar as in garfish.]

1. Gaudy; showy; splendid; fine; glaring.

A woman's garish eye.

Riche, Simonides, sign. Q. ii. b. 1684.

The manner of laying out of hairs in those dais was much more modest, or at least nothing so garish as it is now.—Exposition of Solomon's Song, p. 200; 1684.

Three or four will outrage in apparel, huge hose, monstrous hats, and garish colours. — Jeham.

Lady Love doth vaunt with garish grace. — Mirror for Magistrates, p. 214.

The garish and wanton fashion of the woman's dishovelling her hair. — Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 214.

And now at last had laid all garish pompe aside. — Dryden, Polydore.

Pray no worship to the garish sun.—Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iii. 2.

Hide me from day's garish eye. — Milton, Il Penseroso, 151.

Through conjugal and garish rudiments.—Ed., Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.

These garish effects of fantastical fancy.—Dr. H. More, Conjecturae Cabalisticæ, p. 218.

Fame and glory transports a man out of himself: . . . it makes the mind loose and garish, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kin of dissolution upon all the faculties. — South, Sermons, ii. 3-2.

Garishly. adv. In a garish manner.

1. Splendidly; gaudily.

Trimmed up garishly, as a virgin that loves to go gay. — Dr. Warton, Sermons, p. 68; 1018.

2. Wildly; in a flighty manner.

Starting up, and garishly staring about, especially in the face of Eliza.—Hinde, Eliza's Libidinoso; 1004.

Garishness. s. Attribute suggested by Garish.

Finery; flaunting gaudiness.

The garishness, wantonness, and riches of silken garments grow in contempt.—Florio, Translation of Montaigne, p. 115; 1618.

The painted faces and mannishness, and monstrous disfigurement of the sex, the fashions hollow, prodigious garishness, wanton paupering in the other, were too well, that too many of us savour more like the golden sockets of the holy lights, than the bowels of the altar.—Bishop Hall.

Flighty or extravagant joy.

Let your hope be without vanity, or garishness of spirit; but sober, grave, and silent.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Reason of Holy Living.

This [lustre] is a singular, corrective of that pride and garishness of temper, that renders it impatient of the sobriety of virtue, but open to all the wild suggestions of fancy and the impressions of vice.—South, Sermons, ix. 157.

Garland. s. [Fr. guirlande; L.Lat. garlanda.]

1. Crown; see extract.

At present we know no other garlands but of flowers; but garland was at one time a technical name for the royal crown or diadem, and not a poetic one, as might at first sight appear, as witness these words of Matthew of Paris in his 'Life of Henry III.' Rex vultu denudat et coronam auream, quam vulgariter garlandam dicunt, redimitit.

'In the adoption and obtaining of the garland, I being seduced and provoked by subtle counsel, we did commit a naughty and abominable act.' (Grafton, Chronicle of King Richard III.)

'In whose [Edward the Fourth's] time, and by whose occasion, what about the getting of the garland, keeping it, losing and winning again, it hath cost more English blood than hath twice the winning of France.' (Sir T. More, History of King Richard III. p. 107.)

'What in me was purchased, Falls into thee in a more fairer sort: So thou the garland wear'st successfully.' (Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. i. 1.)

—Trench, Select Glossary of English Words.

Wreath of branches or flowers.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,

A garland made, on temples for to wear;

For he then chose was the dignity

Of village-lord that Whitbourne to hear. — Sir P. Sidney.

Her robes and godlike heroes rise to view,

And all her faded garlands bloom anew. — Pope.

Top; principal; thing most prized; (both crown and flower have a similar import).

With every minute you do change a mind,

And call him noble, that was once your hate,

Thou vile, that was your garland. — Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 1.

Collection of little printed pieces.

These [ballads] came forth in such abundance, that in the reign of James I. they began to be collected into little volumes, under the name of garland, and at length to be purposely written for such collections.—Bishop Percy, Reliques of the Ancient Poetry, Essay on the ancient Minstrel.

Garland. v. a. Deck with a garland.

He was garlanded with alms, &c. . . .

his hand a trident.—R. Jonson, Ju.

Garlick. s. [A.S. garleac.] Culinary herb, akin to the onions, so called.

She smelled brown bread and garlick. — Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iii. 2.

Garlick is of an extremely strong smell, and of an acid and pungent taste. It is extremely active, as may be proved by applying plasters of garlick to the feet, which will give a strong smell to the breath. — Sir J. Hill, Materia Medica.

Garment. s. [N.Fr. garment.] Article of apparel, clothing, or dress.

However, rather thing, or I shall shake thy bones

Out of thy garments. — Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iii. 1.

Our leaf, once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

Garrep. s. [? gar; the rep is the nap in napkin.] Dinner cloth. Obsolete.

A garrep to be laid under the pot upon the table to save the table-cloth cleanliness.—Willis, Dictionary, p. 176; 1608. (Nares by H. & W.)

Garner. s. [Fr. grenier; Lat. granarium.]

Place in which thrashed grain is stored up.

The garner are laid down, the barns are broken down; for the corn is withered.—Joel, i. 17.

Sundry fens the rural realm surround;

The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground:

For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,

In winding mazes, works her hidden hole. — Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

Garner. v. a. Store as in garner.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,

Where either I must live, or wear no life. — Shakespeare, Othello, iv. 2.

Garnet. s. [Ital. garbato; L.Lat. granatus.]

from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.] Precious stone so called.

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the sapphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polle as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of blueish; its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby.—Hill.

Garnets are usually disseminated and occur in all the primitive strata from granite to chert slate. The finer varieties, noble garnet or almandine, and the reddish varieties of garnet, are employed in jewellery: the first are called the Syrian or oriental;

the others hyacinth. In some parts of Germany garret gravel is washed, pumiced, and employed as a substitute for emery. The garrets of Peru are most valued.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

GARNMENT. s. Older form of Garment.

This is he which cometh fro Edmnd, in clothes dird with blood, ful counell in his garnment, passing forth in vertues, and not in honours of batell, neither in hige tortures.—Peece, Repressor, ch. v. 224.

GARNISH. v. a. [Fr. garnir; pres. part. garnissant.]

1. Decorate; embellish; trim.

There were hills which garnished their proud heights with stately trees.—Sir P. Sidney.
Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnish'd with fruits, delighting both the eye and taste.—Sir W. Raleigh.

All the streets were garnish'd with the citizens, standing in their liveries.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

The nation resembled the demoniac in the New Testament. The Puritans boasted that the unclean spirit was cast out. The house was empty, swept, and garnish'd; and for a time the expelled tenant wandered through dry places seeking rest and finding none. But the force of the exorcism was spent. The fiend returned to his abode; and returned not alone. He took to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself. They entered in, and dwelt together; and the second possession was worse than the first.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Comic Dramatists of the Restoration.

2. In Cookery. Set off a dish by laying something round it.

With what expence and art, how richly drest I Garnish'd with apparagus, himself a feast!

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

No man larks salt pork with orange-peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitcock'd cel.

King, Art of Cookery.

GARNISH. s.

1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment; apparel.

No are you, sweet,
Er'n in the lovely garnish of a boy.

Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, II. 6.

Matter and flounce they produce;
For garnish this, and that for use;

They seek to feed and please their guests.
Prior, Alma.

2. Prison fee.

Like a fresh tenant in Newgate, when he has received the payment of garnish.—Swift, Tale of a Tub.

The Sheriffs of London have ordered, that no debtor, in going into any of the gaols of London and Middlesex, shall, for the future, pay any garnish; it having been for many years a great oppression to many.—Gentleman's Magazine, xlii. 230: 1732.

GARNISHMENT. s. Ornament; embellishment.

Satan's cleanliness is pollution, and his garnishment of disorder and wickedness.—Bishop Hall, De-cent S. u. l. § 9.

GARNITURE. s. Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in garniture of their knees, that they are inferior in furniture of their heads.—Jr. L. More, Government of the Tongue.

An nature has peared out her charms in the greatest abundance upon the female part of our species, so they are very industrious in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art. The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed either for a ball or a birthday.—Addison, Spectator, no. 265.

Her education in youth was not much attended to; and she happily missed all that train of female garniture, which passeth by the name of accomplishments.—Lamb, Essays of Elia, Mackery End.

GARROTE. s. [Spanish, garrute—iron collar used for straitling criminals.] A modification of this some few years back was used by footpads, by which the traveller was seized by the throat, and, for a time, suffocated.

GARROTE. v. a. Assault by means of a garrote.

GARROTTE. s. One who applies a garrote.

We ventured to suggest last week that one way to check garrotting would be for Londoners to learn to defend themselves. . . . A proficient in the art of self-defence would be likely to take an attack by garrotters coolly.—Saturday Review, November 24, 1844.

GARROTING. verbal abs. System, practice, or method, of garrotters.

We need not be too severe on the frantic alarm which Paternosters and all his genus are displaying at the increase of what is called garrotting.—Saturday Review, December 6, 1844.

GAROUS. adj. [Lat. garum—pickle.] Resembling pickle made of fish; strout; rusk. Rare.

In a civet-cat an offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish; whereof this humour may be a garrous excretion, and oldsm separation.—Sir T. Browne.

GARPIKE. s. Garfish.

The confluent premaxillaries constitute the sword-like anterior prolongation of the snout in Xiphiids, and are firmly and invariably articulated with the pre-nasal and maxillary bones, in both the sword-fish and the garpike.—Owen, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, lect. v.

GARRAN. s. [Gaelic, Scotch and Irish.]

Horse; nag.

When he comes forth he will make their cows and garrans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

Every man would be forced to provide winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garrans shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrans would decrease.—Sir W. Temple.

Yet, by my description, you'll find he in short is
A pack and a garran, a tip and a tortoise.—Swift.

GARRET. s. [?] Rotten wood. Obscure.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by day-light, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret.—Bacon.

GARRET. s. [Fr. garite—tower of a fort or castle.] Room on the highest floor of a house.

The mob, commission'd by the government,
Are seldom to an empty garret sent.

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret.—Arncliffe, History of John Bull.

On earth the god of wealth was made
Sole patron of the building trade;

Leaving the arts the spacious air,
With license to build castles there;

And 'tis conceiv'd they thus did pretence,
To lodge in garrets, comes from thence.

Swift.

The pure, fervent, and constant loyalty which, in the preceding reign, had remained undimmed, on fields of disastrous battle, in garrets and cellars, and at the bar of the High Court of Justice, was scarcely to be found among the rising courtiers.

—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Sir W. Temple.

In the event of a counterrevolution it seemed that he [Clarendon] had nothing in prospect but a garret in Holland or a scaffold on Tower Hill.—Id., History of England, ch. xvii.

GARROTTED. adj. Protected by turrets.

The high cliffs are by sea inaccessible round about, saving in one only place towards the east, where they prefer an uneasy landing place for boats; which, being fenced with a garrotted wall, admitteth entrance through a gate, and is within presently commanded by an hardly climbed hill.—Cowley, Survey of Cornwall.

Flint walls are very frequently garrotted.—Glossary of Architecture.

GARROTEER. s. Inhabitant of a garret: (applied chiefly to poor authors).

Mount now to Gallo-helens; appear
As deep a student as a garretteer.

Donne, Upon Virgil's Cædithia, 201. (Orl 218.)

To pen with garretters, obscure and shabby,
Inscriptive nonsense in a fancied abey.

Milnes, Paraphrase of Literature.

GARRISON. s. [N.Fr. garrison.]

1. Fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill contriv'd,
With a new chain of garrisons you bind.

Waller.

2. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me,
Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garrison.

Sir P. Sidney.

3. State of being placed in a fortification for its defence: (with in).

Some of them that are laid in garrison will do no great hurt to the enemies.—Spenser, View of the State of Ireland.

GARRISON. v. a.

1. Supply a place with an armed force to defend it; place soldiers in garrison.

The Polish never will defend it.—
Yes, 'tis already garrison'd!

Shakespeare, Hamlet, IV. 3.

Garrison's round about him like a camp
Of faithful soldiery.

Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1427.

There was a single bridge that led into the island, and before it a castle garrison'd by twenty knights.

—Tutler, no. 194.

2. Secure by fortresses.

Others those forces join,
Which garrison the conquests near the Rhine.
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

GARRET. s. [Fr.] Golden-eye, or golden-eye duck (Sula Clangula): (given by Yarrrell in the synonymy, but not in the text).

GARRALITY. s.

1. Loquacity; incontinence of tongue; inability to keep a secret.

Let me here,
As I deserve, pay on my punishment;

And expiate, if possible, my crime,
Shameful garrality.

Milton, Samson Agonistes, 688.

2. Quality of talking too much; talkativeness.

Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided: first of all loquacity or garrality.—Ray, Wisdom of God manifest in the Works of the Creation.

GARRULOUS. adj. [Lat. garrulus.] Prattling; talkative.

Busy and garrulous men.—Bishop Reynolds, Works, p. 717.

In some respects Mr. Leigh Hunt is excellently qualified for the task which he has now undertaken. His style, in spite of its mannerism, may, partly by reason of its mannerism, be well suited for light, garrulous, demitory 'ana,' half critical, half biographical.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Comic Dramatists of the Restoration.

Skelton had been born in Holland during the English troubles, and was therefore supposed to be peculiarly qualified for his post; but he was, in truth, unfit for that and for every other diplomatic situation. Excellent judges of character pronounced him to be the most shallow, sickle, passionate, presumptuous, and garrulous of men.—Id., History of England, ch. v.

GARTER. s. [N.Fr. jartier.]

1. String or riband by which the stocking is held upon the leg.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit.—Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, IV. 1.

When we rest in our clothes we loosen our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage.—Ray.

Haudestone garters, at your knees.

There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,
And all the trophies of his former loves.

Pope.

2. Mark of the order of the Garter, the highest order of English knighthood.

Now by my Garter, my garret, and my crown. . . .
Thy Garter, profound, hath lost his holy honour;

Thy garret, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue.

Shakespeare, Richard III., IV. 4.

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race.

Dryden.

3. In Heraldry. Principal King at Arms.

Two aldermen, lord mayor, Garter, Cramer, duke of Norfolk, &c.—Shakespeare, Henry VIII., v. 4, stage direction.

Sir Walter Bickerstaff married Maud the milkmaid, of whom the then Garter king, as arises (a nervous person) said pleasantly enough, that she had spoiled our blood, but mended our constitutions.—Addison, Tatler, no. 78.

GARTER. v. a.

1. Bind, or fasten, with a garter.

He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose.

—Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, II. 1.

2. Invest with the order of the Garter.

GARTERED. part. adj. Wearing a (in the extracts The) Garter.

Fay, conclusion make, if e'er thy marshall'd knights
So nobly deck'd their old majestic rites,
As when, high throut'd amid thy trophy'd shrine,
George shone the leader of the garter'd line!

Warburton, Poem on the Birth of the Prince of Wales, 1782.

Swift retained no pleasing recollection of Moor Park. . . . Long after, when he stood in the Court of Requests, with a circle of garter'd peers round him, or punned and rhymed with cabinet ministers or secretaries St. John's Mount-Palestine, he remembered, with deep and sore feeling, how miserable he used to be for days together when he suspected that Sir William had taken something ill.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Sir William Temple.

GAS. s. [said to have been invented, or coined, by Van Helmont. If so, it is one of the few words of which the artificial origin is known, and perhaps the only one which has taken root in language. In doing this, however, it began as a scientific term, and only became general when lighting by gas was introduced. To another body Van Helmont gave the name Blas, which shows how one combination may start another. It has been suggested that Chaos is the actual word out of which proceeded the excoitation of the one under notice.] Aeriform body, as opposed to fluids and solids. Such, at least, is its meaning in Chemistry. In the Arts it chiefly means carburated hydrogen, as used for the purposes of illumination.

1039

Nymphs! your bright aquadrum watch with chemie eyes
The cold elastic vapours as they rise;
With playful force arrest them as they pass,
And to pure air betwixt the flaming gas.

Darwin, Botanic Garden, pt. 1.
With wine inflated, man is all quibon,
And feels a power which he believes his own;
With fancy soaring to the skies, he thinks
His all the virtues all the while he drinks;
But when the gas from the balloon is gone,
When sober thoughts and serious cares come on,
Where then the world that in himself he found?
Vanish'd—and he sank grov'ling on the ground.

Croft, The Borough.
The word gas, which is the name now given to every kind of air which differs from the air of the atmosphere, was first introduced into chemistry by Van Helmont. He seems to have intended to denote by it everything which is driven off from bodies in the state of vapour by heat. He divides gases into five classes.—Thomson, System of Chemistry, 1802.

The notion of the fermentation of fluids, and of the aerial product thence resulting, to which [Van Helmont] gave the name of gas, forms an important part of his doctrine; and of the six directions which he assumes, the first, pressure an acid, which is neutralized by the soil when it reaches the duodenum, and this constitutes the second digestion.—Whewell, History of Scientific Ideas, b. ix. ch. i. sect. 2.

Gas is the generic name of all these elastic fluids which are permanent under a considerable pressure, and at the temperature of zero of Fahrenheit. Many of them, however, by the joint influence of excessive cold and pressure, the repulsive state of the particles may be balanced or subverted, so as to transform the elastic gas into a liquid or solid. . . . Ammonia, carbonic acid, carburated hydrogen, chlorine, muriatic acid, sulphuric acid, sulphurated hydrogen, are the gases of most direct interest in the arts and manufactures.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Gasconade. s. [Gasconade, name of Gascony, supposed to be of a bragging disposition.] Boast; bravado.

Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you?—Swift.

Gasconade. v. n. Utter gasconades.

Gasconading. part. adj. Bragging.

Gasconading. verb. abs. Bragging.

From this gasconading a moral we gather,
That the projects of wisdom depend on the weather.
Courtney.

Gascon. adj. Having the character, or consisting, of gas.

When cubs are heated in a cast-iron retort to ignition, the progress of decomposition is as follows: First, and before the retort is red-hot, steam issues along with the atmospheric air. . . . When the retort has come to a bright cherry-red heat, the disengagement of gas is most active. By and by, the gascon production diminishes, and eventually ceases entirely, although the heat be increased.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Gash. v. a.

1. Cut, or hack, in gashes.

To what end do we jangle and gash the garments that are sewed together to cover our bodies, but that thereby we may, as it were, by a most fond and ridiculous anatomy, open and lay forth in the eyes of all men what kind of people we are in our inward hearts; jagged, (God wot) and ragged, vain, light, and nothing sound?—Translation of Ballinger's Sermons, p. 239: 1578.

2. With a special application to wounds.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death.—Sir J. Hayward.

It is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it; but to carve a beautiful image, and to polish it, requires great art and dexterity.—Archbishop Tillotson, Sermons, vol. 1. § 2.
Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,
He roan'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell.

A. Phillips.
Gash. s. [L. German, gatschen.] Deep and long cut; deep irregular wound from a cut or slash; less properly (as in last extract), seam or scur thereof.

He glancing on his helmet, made a large
And open gash therein; were not his target,
That broke the violence of his intent,
The weary soul from thence it would discharge.

Spenser.
Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lids; but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground.—
Sir J. Hayward.

But the ethereal substance glow'd,
Not long divid'd; and from the gash
A stream of nectareous humour issuing flow'd.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 330.
I was fond of back-sword and cudgel-play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar.—Arbuthnot.

Gashful. adj. Unless for Gastful, full of gushes; looking terrible.

'Tis not the holding of thy hands so high,
Nor yet the purer squinting of thine eye;
Nor yet your mimic mouthing, nor antic faces,
Nor scripture phrases, nor affected graces,
Nor prodigal uprearing of thine eyes,
Whose gashful looks do seem to peck the skies;
'Tis not the strict reforming of your hair
So close that all the neighbour skill is bare;
'Tis not the drooping of thy head so low,
Nor yet the lowering of thy sudden brow
No, no: 'tis none of this that God regards;
Such sort of foibles their own applause rewards.

Quarles, History of Jonah, sign. II. 2: 1620.
Came death, and welcome; which spoke, comes in
A gashful, horrid, monstrous, terrible, ugly shape.—
Gayton, Notes on his Quixote, p. 63: 1534.

Gasket. s. [Fr. gascette.] See extract.

Gasket [is] a sort of platted cord fastened to the sails of a ship, and used to furl or tie up the sail firmly to the yard, by wrapping it round both six or seven times, the turns being at a competent distance from each other. But gasket is that which supports or ties up the lunt of the sail, and should consequently be the strongest. . . . Quarter gasket is used only for large sails. . . . The yardarm gasket is made fast to the yard-arm, and serves to bind the sail as far as the quarter gasket on large yards, but extends quite into the lunt of small sails.
—Falconer, Marine Dictionary. (Barney.)

Gaskins. s. Galligaskins.

If one joint break, the other will hold;
Or, if both break, your gaskins fall.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, 1. i.
Come, come, George, let's be merry and wise;
The child's a fatherless child, and say they should put him into a strait pair of gaskins, twice worse than kilt grass, he would never grow after it.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of the Burning Pestle.

Gasometer. s. See extract.

Gasometer properly a measure of gas though it is employed often to denote a recipient of gas of any kind. . . . The gasometer serves not merely as a magazine for receiving the gas when it is purified, and keeping it in store for use, but also for communicating to the gas in the act of burning such a uniform pressure as may secure a steady unflinching flame. It consists of two essential parts:
1. Of an under cylinder, open at top, and filled with water; and 2. of an upper floating cylinder or clock, which is a similar elastic inverted and of somewhat smaller dimensions, called the inverted.—Ure, Dic- tionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Gasp. v. n. [P. Icelandic, gaspa—yawn.]

1. Catch breath with labour, or convulsively; fight for breath.

a. By both inspiring and expiring.

He gasps for breath; and, as his life flows from him,
Demands to see his friends.
Addison, Cato.

b. Chiefly by expiring.

I lay me down to gasp my latest breath:
The wolves will get a breakfast by my death.
Dryden.

2. Long; pant: (with after).

The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and gasped after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom.
—Spectator.

Gasp. v. a. Breathe out in gasps: (with away).

He gaspers round, his eyeballs roll in leath,
And with short sobe he gasps away his breath.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Gasp. s. Act of catching the breath by gasp- ing; breath so drawn or caught.

When he was at the last gasp, he said, Thou, like a fury, takest us out of this present life; but the king of the world shall raise us up, who have died for his law, unto everlasting life.—2 Maccabees, vii. 9.
If in the dreadful hour of death,
If at the latest gasp of breath,
When the cold damp bedews your brow,
You hope for mercy, shew it now.
Addison, Rosamond.

Gast. v. a. [A.S.—see Ghost.] Affright; terrify.

When he saw my brow alarmed spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, round'ly encount'ring,
Or whether gast by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled. Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 1.

Gaster. v. a. Same as Gast.

The sight of the lady imagaster'd him.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit at several Weapons.

Gastful. adj. Dreadful. See Ghost.

And he dreading, wide; How gastful is this place!
Here is more other thing to put the lions of God,
and the gate of Heaven.—Peevle, Repreuer, ch. xiii.

Gastness. s. Terror. See Ghost.

Look you pale, mistress?
Do you perceive the gastness of her eye?
Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more news.
Shakespeare, Othello, v. 1.

Gastrie. adj. [Fr. gastrique; Gr. gastrin—belly.] Belonging to, relating to, or connected with, the belly.

1. In Anatomy and Physiology. Applied to certain nerves that supply the abdominal viscera, and to the secretion by which digestion is chiefly promoted in the stomach.

The great purpose of the gastrie digestion appears to be to dissolve the albuminous and gelatinous constituents of the food. . . . The solvent action of the gastrie fluid is aided by the movement of the walls of the stomach. Croft, Principles of Physiology, General and Comparative, § 410.

Indigestion may . . . arise from depression or modification of the nervous influence; giving rise, 1st, to imperfect or disordered action of the muscular coats of the stomach; 2nd, to a diminished or modified secretion of the gastrie juices.—Copland, Dictionary of Practical Medicine, Digestive Canal.

2. In Pathology. Applied to certain form of fever.

Owing to this circumstance the divisions of continued fevers . . . have been arbitrary and varied. Still arranged thence inflammatory, putrid, bilious, and pituitous; J. P. Frank [as] the inflammatory, gastrie, and nervous; . . . J. Frank [as] typhoid, gastrie or bilious, rheumatic or catarrhal, and the inflammatory. . . . These and other modifications [of bilio-gastrie fever] depend upon the causes and combination of causes producing it, and have given rise to the appellations gastrie, bilious, yellow, gastro-bilious, gastro-inflammatory, bilious-inflammatory, bilious continued, gastro-nervous, &c., applied to it by modern writers, and cause it frequently to be confounded with the severe inflammatory fever on the one hand, and with pestilential yellow fever on the other.—Copland, Dictionary of Practical Medicine, Fever.

Gastroliquism. s. See extract.

Gastroliquism [is] a hybrid term synonymous with ventriloquism. Hooper, Medical Dictionary.

Gastroliquist. s. [Fr. gastroligue; from Gr. gastrin + Lat. loquor—speak.] Ventriloquist (which latter, being wholly Latin (reuter, -tris=belly), is the better word. Gastroliquism, and perhaps other equally objectionable terms, may be found in writers of indifferent authority).

Gastroliquists are persons, who have acquired the art of modifying their voice, so that it affects the ear of the hearers, as if it came from another person, or from the clouds, or from under the earth.—Reid.

Gastrimargism. s. [Gr. gastrin—belly and margis—in respect to the belly, insatiable, voracious, over-given to high feeding.] Insatiability. Rare.

He not addicted to the foul vice of gastrimargism and belly-clear, like Myrtydriotes, who when he rid a sultan to Olymbia his daughter carried with him a thousand cooks, as many fowlers, and as many fishers.—Optick Glass of Humors, 1610.

Gastronomie. s. [French rather than English.] Adept in gastronomy.

Moreover the happy gastronomie may wash it down with a selection of thirty wines, from Burgundy to Tokay.—J. F. Simpson, Handbook of Dining, Translation from Brillat-Savarin, ch. iii.

Gastronómie. adj. Relating to, connected with, or consisting in, gastronomy.

In our high gastronomie circles, in those select reunions where politeness are obliged to give way to a dissertation on taste—what is expected? what is brought up at the second course?—J. F. Simpson, Handbook of Dining, Translation from Brillat-Savarin, ch. vii.

Gastronómical. adj. Relating to Gastro- nomy.

Every one at a French dinner is served on a cold plate. The reason of a custom, or rather a necessity, which one would think a nation so celebrated for their gastronomical taste would recoil from, is really, it is believed, that the ordinary French porcelain is so very inferior, that it cannot endure the preparatory heat for dinner.—Disraeli the younger, Coningsby, b. vi. ch. ii.

Gastronomist. s. Gastronome: (upon which word it is an improvement, being more in accordance with the ordinary English forms, such as Economist).

I was glad to have an opportunity of dining with so renowned a gastronomist.—Sir E. B. Lytton, Pelham.

Gastronomy. s. [Gr. gastrop = belly, vîpov = law.] Principles of cookery; science of delicacies in the way of food; art of dining.

'Yes!' I cried. 'Let us for once shake off the prejudices of sectarian faith, and do justice to the order of those incomparable men, who, retiring from the cares of an idle and sinful world, gave themselves with univided zeal and attention to the theory and practice of the profound science of gastronomy.'—Sir E. B. Lytton, Pelham.

Gastropod. s. [Gr. gastrop belly, podḗs = foot.] Large class of molluscs, both aquatic and terrestrial (the snails and slugs being examples of the latter division), so called from the organ of locomotion, or foot, being situated on the abdominal surface.

The part of the mantle which invests the viscera in the conchiferous gastropods is smooth, thin, and sub-transparent, resembling the sac of a hernia, which, with the viscera themselves, appears to have escaped from the common muscular integument of the body. . . . The primitive muscular fibre is smooth in all gastropods. . . . The cutaneous muscular layer consists of oblique, longitudinal, and transverse fibres, intimately united with the corium. Upon the ventral surface it becomes very thick, and forms a long disc called the foot. The fibres of this part contract successively, so as to form wrinkles or transverse waves following each other from behind forwards; whereby the disc glides over solid bodies or the surface of water. The circular foot of the limpet is used as an adhesive sucker. In some species it extends to a great breadth; in many it is extended lengthwise, and more or less cleft transversely. . . . The tentacles, buccal mass, and penis, have their special retractors muscles in most gastropods. . . . At the grade of the molluscan organisation which the gastropods have reached, their capabilities and spheres of action become more extended and diversified than in the pteropods and accephala; some are terrestrial, some arboreal, whilst the more numerous aquatic species are endowed with power to swim, submerge, and devour organised matter, dead and living. The nervous system of the gastropods is accordingly not only more complex and concentrated, but also subordinated to better developed masses in connection with organs of special sense and exploration, but it offers greater variety in its general arrangement, and especially in the position of its ganglia, than in the lamellibranchiate class, and with these modifications considerable differences in the outward configuration of the body are necessitated.—Queen, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, lect. xxii.

Why is it that the naked gastropods, such as our common slugs, deviate from bilateral symmetry, though their modes of movement are those along with which complete bilateral symmetry usually occurs? The reply is, that their deviations from bilateral symmetry are probably inherited, and that they are maintained in such parts of their organization as are not exposed to laterally symmetrical conditions. There is reason to believe that the naked gastropods are descended from accephala that had shells; the evidence being that the naked gastropods have shells during the early stages of their development, and that some of them retain rudimentary shells throughout life. Now the shelled gastropods deviate from bilateral symmetry in the disposition of both the alimentary system and the reproductive system. The naked gastropods, in losing their shells, have lost that immense one-sided development of the alimentary system which fitted them to their shells, and have acquired that bilateral symmetry of external form which fits them for their habits of locomotion; but the reproductive system remains one-sided, because, in respect to it, the relations to external conditions remain unchanged. The rephalopods, which are interpretable as higher developments on the gastropod type, show us bilaterally-symmetrical external form with habits of movement through the water in two-sided attitudes.—Herbert Spencer.

Gate. s. [A.S. geat.]

1. For buildings rather than enclosures. Door of a city, castle, palace, or large building.

Vol. I.

Open thy gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul lies through these wounds to seek out thee.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part III. l. 4.

2. Gate of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without Good-morrow to the sun. Id., Cymbeline, iii. 3.

3. For enclosures rather than buildings. Frame of timber, or other material, with bars.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?—
Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 1.

4. Avenue; opening; inlet; means of entrance generally.

Austria had done nothing but wisely and politically, in settling the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war.—Knutler, History of the Turks.

The gate of a country is not like the gate of an house; I mean, it is not the utmost limit of the land, as the other is of the building; but rather a difficult pass to be surmounted before we can penetrate into the most valuable part of the country.—A. Drummond, Travels through Germany, Italy, and Greece, p. 246.

Common as both the first and second element of a compound, e.g. gatekeeper, flood-gate.

Gatevein. s. In Anatomy. Translation of vena portæ = vein of the gate, i.e. the vein by which the liver is supplied with blood for the secretion of bile. (Obsolete.)

Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disgorgeth that blood.—Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

Gateway. s. Passage through, or by means of, a gate.

Gateways between enclosures are so many, that they cannot part between one field and another.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Gather. v. a. [A.S. gaderian.]

1. Collect; bring into one place; assemble; accumulate.

Jacob said unto his brethren, Gather stones; and they took stones, and made an heap. —Genesis, xxxi. 36.

They have gathered themselves together against me. —Job, xvi. 10.

I will gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him. —Isaiah, lvi. 3.

He that by gathering and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. —Proverbs, xiii. 8.

Save us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name. —Psalm, cvi. 17.

All the way went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. —Bacon, New Atlantis.

In the following the construction is us 'eat of the fruit,' i.e. eat the fruit in part; and the construction, notwithstanding the government of the substantive by the preposition of, really active or transitive.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind. —Matthew, xiii. 47.

2. Pick up; glean; cull.

His opinions
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Gather'd from all the famous colleges.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII., iii. 2.

Cast up the highway, gather out the stones. —Isaiah, lxi. 10.

3. Crop; pluck

What have I done?
To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No longer gain'd, but slighted and betray'd?
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and quickly thrown away,
To wither on the ground! —Dryden, Spanish Friar.

4. Draw together from a state of diffusion; compress; contract.

Immortal Tully shone,
The Roman rostrum check'd the council's throne;
Gather'd his flowing robe he seem'd to stand,
In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand.

Pope.

5. Collect charitable contributions.

Few Sundays come over our head, but decay'd householders or shipwreck merchants are gather'd far.—Dr. King, Sermons, p. 57: 1015.

6. Pucker needlework; contract into small folds.

I'm confident it will look better when gather'd.—Cibber, Careless Husband.

6 R

7. Contract; get.

All faces shall gather blackness.—Joel, ii. 6.

With special applications to:

a. Harvest: (with in).

The seventh year we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase. —Leviticus, xxv. 20.

b. Breathing. Used figuratively. Have respite.

The luckless lucky maid
A long time with that saviour people staid,
To gather breath, in many miseries. —Spenser.

c. Logic. Collect by inference.

That which, out of the law of reason or of God, men probably gather to be expedient, they make it law. —Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day of dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance.

Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, iv. 3.
After he had seen the vision, we endeavour'd to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us. —Acts, xvi. 10.

By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Set in their sad discourse, and various plaint,
Thence gather'd his own doan.

Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 344.
Mademoiselle de Senbury, who is as old as Babel, is translating Gather into French: from which I gather that he has formerly been translated into the old Provencal.—Dryden.

Gather ground. Gain ground.

He gathers ground upon her in the chase;
Now breaks upon her hair with wearier pace.

Dryden.

Gather. v. n.

1. Be condensed; thicken.

When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, East, and West, on airy currents born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn.

Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it.

Addison, Cato.

2. Grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.

Their snow-hill did not gather as it went; for the people came into them. —Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

3. Assemble.

There gathered unto him from Jerusalem a very great multitude of men, and women, and children. —1 Peter, viii. 21.

Gather. s. Pucker; cloth drawn together in wrinkles, with a character of a ruff or frill.

Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches, and the gathers,
Part cannons, pettricks, and feathers.

Butler, Hudibras.
Indeed, I always thought it would become your ladyship better without it. But now suppose, would you carry'd another row of gold round the scollops, and then you take and lay the silver plain all along the gathers, and your ladyship will perfectly see, it will give the thing ten thousand times another air. —Cibber, The Cuckold Husband.

Gatherable. adj. Capable of being gathered: (in the extract, in its logical import, i.e. deducible from premises). Rare.

The priesthood of the first-born is gatherable hence, because the Levites were appointed to the service of the altar, instead of the first-born, and as their Asipue, or price of redemption. (Num. iii. 41.)

Gatherin, Moses and Aaron, i. 6.

Gatherer. s. One who gathers.

a. Generally.

I will spend this preface about those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and dispenser of other men's stuff. —Sir W.otton, Preface to Elements of Architecture.

b. By getting in a crop of any kind.

I was a herdsman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. —Amos, vi. 14.

Not in that land
Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand.

May, Translation of Virgil.

Gathering. verbal abs.

1. Assembly; accumulation; collection.

There be three things that mine heart saith: the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. —Ecclesiasticus, xxvi. 5.

To receive the gatherings together of the waters which were to run from amongst the hills, and the mountains and hills raised upon the face of the antediluvian globe. —Shuckford, On the Creation, p. 122.

2. Collection of charitable contributions.

Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gatherings when I come.—1 Corinthians, xvi. 2.

3. Generation of pus or matter.

Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the case of a broken juggernaut after the painful gathering and milling of it.—Dr. H. More, Discourse of Christian Piety.

Gáton. s. Tree so called. See Guelder Rose.

Gáttoothed. adj. See Gaptoothed.

Gaud. s. [O.Fr. gaud.] Ornament; trinket; hauble.

Their saythe is a substance of thynges unseem, and not of gaudes and fables apperfyng to the eye.—Bale, I tell a Course at the Conynghe Place, fol. 33, b: 1318.

He hath it put into the minds of good Christian princes and magnificents to disburden her [the church] of those stinking and defiled gaudes. Harmer, Translation of Beza's Sermons, p. 82: 1547.

Some bound for Guinea, golden sand to find, More all the gauds the simple natives wear; Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd, For folded turbans fluesht holland bear. Dryden, Annus Mirabilis.

Gaud. v. a. Decorate with gauds.

Gauded. adj. Decorated with gauds: (in the extract, coloured, painted).

Our well'd dances Commit the war of white and damask, In Their nicely gauded cheeks. Shakespeare, Coriolanus, II. 1.

Gaudery. s. Finery; ostentatious luxury of dress.

The triumph was with pageants and gaudery, but one of the worst and noblest institutions that ever was.—Harcot, Essays.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, or late, but in the high woods, the blushing garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with chivalry its richly, and as much in the fashion, as the jewels that wear them is usually grown out of it.—South.

A plain suit, since we can make but one, Is better than to be by tarnish'd gaudery known. Dryden.

Gaudiness. s. Attribute suggested by Gaudy; showiness; tinsel appearance.

Nether are the men much less silly of this pernicious folly, who, in imitation of a gaudiness and foppery in dress introduced of late years into our kingdom, cannot find materials in their own country, worthy to adorn their bodies of clay, while their minds are naked of every valuable quality. Swift, Sermon on the State of Ireland.

Gaudy. adj. Showy; splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.

Coddy thy habit as thy purse can buy, But not exult in fanny, rich, and gaudy; For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shakespeare, Hamlet, I. 3.

Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess, As thick and numberless As the gay notes that people the sun beams. Milton, Il Penseroso, 6.

Gaudy. s. [Lat. gaudium.] Feast; festival; day of plenty.

He may surely be contented with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow.—Cheyne.

Used adjectively, or as the first element in a compound.

I have good cause to set the cocke on the hope, and make gaudy cheer.—Polygraph, Acolutus; 1510.

Come, Let's have another gaudy night: call to me All my mad capains, fill our bowls; once more Let's mock the midnight bell. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, III. 1.

"His joy clad like joy, Which is more honest than a cunning grief 'Tis only far'd with sables for a show, But gaudy hearted." Mansinger, Old Law.

Was he thinking of the old Roman luxury, or of a gaudy-day at Cambridge?—Lamb, Essays of Elia, Grace before Meat.

I will make Amends hereafter by some gaudy-spy. Tennyson, Hylde of the King, Fuld.

Gauge. s. [Fr. gauge.] Measuring rod; measure in general; standard.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of your trade and wealth.—Locke.

Timothy proposed to his mistress that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high, and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured.—Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

What is the reason that in a box where there are nine black balls and one white, we expect to draw a black ball nine times as much (in other words, nine times as often, frequency being the gauge of intensity in expectation) as a white? Obviously because the local conditions are nine times as favourable, because the hand may alight in nine places and get a black ball, while it can only alight in one place and find a white ball. . . . It is, in fact, evident, that when once causation is admitted as an universal law, our expectation of events can only be rationally grounded on that law.—J. S. Mill, System of Logic, III. 18, § 41.

Gauge. v. a. Measure as with a gauge and in respect to the contents of a vessel; measure generally.

The vases nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird.—Derham, Physico-Theology.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer, of taking measure or gauging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel.—Pope, Essay on Homer's Battles.

With such kind of admiral discourse they emptied the bowl of punch, paid their reckoning, and separated: Adams and the doctor went up to Joseph; Parson Barnabas departed to celebrate the foresaid deceased, and the carterman descended into the cellar to gauge the vessels.—Fletcher, Life and Adventures of Joseph Andrews.

Gauger. s. One who gauges: (especially an officer appointed by the Excise for that purpose).

royal jurisdiction: and appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and collector.—Carter, History of Cornwall.

From the madmen who held the white staff and the great seal, down to the humbled tide-water and gauger, what would now be called gross corruption was practised without disguise, and without remorse.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. 11.

Gault. s. [?] In Geology. Formation between the Upper and Lower Greensand. Provincial; probably most peculiar to the parts about Cambridge, which stands on the gault.

The gault, immediately overlying the lower greensand, is rarely absent, and may, perhaps, be considered as the most persistent of all the beds of the cretaceous group, scarcely ever changing its peculiarities of mineral composition or fossil remains.—Hastot, Geology.

Gault. r. a. In Husbandry. Dress with clay.

Gauling. verbal abs. Chaying with gault, i.e. with clay, where it is so named.

The process of gauling or chaying the wall is conducted in this manner.—Stephens, The Book of the Farm, 212.

Gaunch. r. a. Punish, after the manner of Turkey, by hanging the offender alive on a hook.

The earlier explanation is 'drop from a high place upon hooks,' and this is what Sir W. Scott has adopted in his edition of Dryden. The still more cruel punishment, however, of tying the victim's hands and feet, and then hanging him on a hook passed under the lowest ribs, disgraces more than one Eastern country. It is to this that the following lines of Smith, from the Muse Anglicaum, quoted by Johnson, most closely apply:—

Cohors extensis qui pia stridulis
Gemitu onusti, vel sude trans sinum Luctantur acti, pendulive
Sanguineis trepidant in uncis.
Take him away, gaunch him, impale him. Dryden, Iona Sebastian.

Gauching. verbal abs. Punishment of being gaunched.

Among them are more frequent and horrid executions than in the rest of Turkey, as crucifixing, gauching, laying alive.—Blount, Voyage to the Levant, p. 44.

Gaunt. s. Mongre.

Oh, how that anno bests my composition! Oh! taint, indeed, and gaunt in being old: Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast: And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt? For sleeping England long time have I watch'd: Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt: The pleasure that some fathers find upon, Is my strict fast: I mean my children's looks: And therein fasting thou hast made me gaunt: Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave, Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones. Shakespeare, Richard II, II. 1.

Two madiffs gaunt and grim her flight pursu'd,
And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood imbu'd. Dryden, Fables.

Gauntlet. s. [Fr. gantlet.] Iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges.

A waly gauntlet now with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II. I. 1.

Feel but the difference soft and rough: This a gauntlet, that a mull. Cleaveland.

So to reject the Vandalia of the stage,
Our vet'ran bard resumes his tragick rage: He throws the gauntlet Ohwy w'd to wield,
And calls for Englishmen to judge the field. Southern.

Run the gauntlet. See Gantlet.

Gauntree. s. See extract.

Gauntree.—A frame to set, creaks on in a cellar. French châtrée, a support for vines, gantry or stiling for ladders, treadle to saw timber on (Colgrave); also the stocks on which a ship is built. From Latin gantheria, a horse of burden, then applied (as in modern languages a horse, ass, or mule) to a wooden support for various purposes. (Suifertius, a prop for a vine, rafter of a roof, treadle or horse to saw timber on. (Littellon.) The German uses hack, a gaul, in the last of these senses. In like manner we speak of a clutch-horse, and French cheval, a little horse, is a minter's case) (German, ack, an ass), the frame which supports his work.—Wedgwood, Dictionary of English Etymology.

ase. s. [Fr. gaze.] Kind of thin transparent silk.

Ganze [is] the thin canvas that serves women for a ground into their cushions, or pursework; also, the slight stuff, tiffany; also, a mantle, &c.; also wealth, substance, and a prince's treasury.—Colgrave.

Silken clothes were used by the ladies; and it seems they were thin like ganze.—Arbuthnot, Tables of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

But the philosopher was allowed to disprove the charge of sobriety, or at least to make amends for his fault; and, on the king's sending for him the next day, he made himself drunk judiciously in the sight of all the court, and dined with cynics in a house dress of Tarantine ganze.—Sharpe, History of Egypt, ch. 12.

The lady was all of a flutter with faded interest, washed ganze, and rubbed three times refreshed.—Smollet, Expedition of Humphrey Clinker.

Gauzy. adj. Having the character of, or made of, gauze; light; unsubstantial.

The whole essay, however, is of a flimsy, gauzy texture.—Foster, Essay.

Gavel. s. [?] Ground. Obsolete, or provincial.

Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days. Mortimer.

And as fields, that have been long time ploughed With catching weather, when their corn lies on the gavel heap,

Are with a constant northwind dried. Chapman, Translation of the Iliad, xii.

Gavellet. s. [?] See extract.

Gavellet [is] an ancient and special kind of cess, as used in Kent, where the custom of gavellet continues, whereby a tenant, if he withhold his rent and services due to the lord, shall forfeit his land. . . . The word gavellet, in its original signification, imported rent; but it means also a process for the recovery of rent . . . peculiar to Kent and London. . . . This remedy of gavellet as well as cessavit is now fallen wholly into disuse.—Toulmin, Law Dictionary.

Gavelkind. s. [?] In Law. Principle or practice of devising property without favour to the eldest son, i.e. as opposed to that of primogeniture.

Amongst other Welsh customs, he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind.—Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

(For another example see extract under preceding entry.)

Gavelock. s. [A.S. gafeloc, from gaf, most usual in the plural form, i.e. gafas—the prongs of a fork or forklike instrument.] Crowbar.

Down, came thou hither into the midst of the heat with thy gavelock. Nimble, see you forth into the left wing of the battell; and thou, Syrians, into the right.—Terence in English: 1014.

Gavial. s. [?] Asiatic crocodile.

The gavials have the muzzle narrow and greatly elongated. The teeth are pretty nearly equal. . . . The hind feet are indented at the external edge, and palinated to the end of the toes. There are two large holes in the base of the cranium behind the eyes, which may be perceived through the skin. They have been as yet observed only on the ancient continent. The most known is the gavot of the Ganges, a species which becomes very large, and which, independently of the length of its muzzle, is remarkable for a thick cartilaginous prominence surrounding the nostrils and thrown backwards. This prominence occasioned Albin to assert that there exist in the Ganges some crocodiles which have a horn on the end of the muzzle.—Translation of Currier's Règne Animal.

In the alligators and crocodiles the teeth are more unequal in size, and less regular in arrangement, and more diversified in form, than in the gavots. . . The teeth of the gavot are subequal, most of them present the form of a crown, . . . long, slender, pointed, subcompressed from before backward, with a trenchant edge on the right and left sides, between which a few blunt longitudinal ridges traverse the basal part of the enamelled crown.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates.

Gavotte. s. [Fr. gavotte.] Dance so called: (Cotgrave calls it a kind of brawl danced, commonly, by one alone).

The disposition in a fiddle to play tunes in pre-judice, sarabands, jigs, and gavots, are real qualities in the instrument. Arbuthnot and Pope, Martinus Scribdicus.

Gawky. adj. [see Gowk.] Awkward; ungainly.

A large half-length of Henry Danvers represents him tall, awkward, and gawky.—Prinault, Tour in Scotland.

Gay. adj. [Fr. gai.]

1. Airy; cheerful; merry; frolic.

Smooth flow the waves, the sephyras gently play;
Belinda smile'd, and all the world was gay.
Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto ii.

2. Fine; showy.

You have respect to him that wareth the gay
chubbing.—James, ii. 3.

3. Specious.

Neither your lyric dissembling, nor your painted colours, nor your gay rhetoric, nor witty inventions, nor so hide and cover the truth that it shall not appear.—Archbishop Cranmer, Answer to Bishop Gardiner, p. 356.

Enjoy your dear wit, and gay rhetoric,
That hath so well been taught her dawning force.
Milton, Comus, 790.

4. Addicted to pleasure; loose.

Gay. s. Ornament; embellishment. Rare.
Morse and untractable spirits look upon precepts in emblem as they do upon gays and pictures,
the fooleries of so many old wives' tales.—*Sir R.
L'Estrange.*

Gáyal. s. [?] In Zoology. Species of ox
so called. See extract.

The Urus Gáyalus, or gáyal bison of India, presents us for culture upon the true ox. It shows a disposition intermediate between the frolic of its own congeners, and the gentleness of the ox. It has been domesticated by certain tribes of India from time immemorial; and is particularly remarkable for a high and sharp ridge, which commences on the hinder part of the neck, and slopes gradually up till it comes over the shoulder joints: this evidently is but a modification of the hump on the ordinary bison, and of the elevated shoulders of the Cameloparab.—Seaton, Natural History and Classification of Quadrupeds, § 288.

Gázy. s. (Gaiety commoner.)

1. Cheerfulness; airiness; merriment; light amusement.

And from those gazyeties our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires.
Sir J. Denham.

2. Finery; show.

Gázy. adv. In a gay manner.

Nest thou how gayly my young master goes,
Vaunting himself upon his fishing tows?
Bishop Hall, Satire, iii. 7.

The ladies, gayly dress'd, the Mall adorn
With curious dies, and paint the sunny morn.
Gay, Trivia, l. 145.

Like some fair flow'r, that early spring supplies,
Thine gayly blooms, but ev'n in blooming dies. Pope.

Gáyness. s. Attribute suggested by Gay:
(Gaiety commoner).

Our gayness and our gill are all bewitch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field.
Shakespeare, Henry V. iv. 3.

Dollency of fare, softness of lodging, gayness of attire.—Bishop Hall.

The Creator . . . is willing mankind should serve themselves of all his creatures' various excellencies, in their strength, weight, light, sweetness, warm-ness, fineness, beauty, and colours; not only to necessity and plainness, but also curiosity and gay-ness.—Jerome Taylor, Artificial Handoyness, p. 98.

Gáysome. adj. Full of gaiety.

And, fier'd with heat of gaysome youth, did venter,
With warlike troops, the Norman coast to enter.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 633.

Gaw. s. See Grip.

Gaze. v. a. [?] Look intently and earnestly; with eagerness.

High stations tumults, but not bliss create;
None think the great unhappily, but the great.
Fools gaze and envy; Envy darts a sting,
Which makes a swain as wretched as a king.
Young.

Gáze. v. a. View steadfastly. Rare.

Strait toward him ev'n my world ring eyes I turn'd,
And gáz'd a while the ample sky.
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 257.

The godlike presence; for athwart his brow
Dispassure, longer'd with a mild concern,
Look'd down reluctant on me.
Akenside, Pleasures of Imagination, b. ii.

Gaze. s.

1. Intent regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being lighten'd with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,
And lifted up above the world's gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise. Spranger.
Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
If any air of music touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of music.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription.—Adrian, Preacher.

You shall see younger men, your inferiors in station and talents, rise to the highest dignities and attract the gaze of nations, while you are doomed to neglect and obscurity.—Montagu, Critical and Historical Essays, Gladiators on Church and State.

2. Gazingstock.

I must die
Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;
To grind in linnen fetters, under task,
With my heav'n-gifted strength.
Milton, Samson Agonistes, 32.

Gázeful. adj. Having the character of a gazer; looking intently. Rare.

The brightness of her beauty clear,
The ravish'd hearts of *gaze*ful men might mar
To admiration of that heavenly light.
Spenser, Hymn on heavenly Beauty.

Gázehound. s. [canis opusculus.] Hound that pursues not by the scent, but by the eye.

Seest thou the gazehound? how with glance severe
From the close herd he marks the destin'd deer?
Tickell.

Gázol. s. [Arabic, ghazal.] Member of one of the divisions of the class of antelopes, especially the gazel of Arabia and Persia, celebrated by the beauty of its eyes; the zopsac and Dorens in Greek and Hebrew.

Wild gázels are caught by sending into the herd one already taken and tamed with a noise so factured to his horns as to entangle the animal that first approaches to oppose him.—Goldsmit, Natural History.

The gázels antelope may, then, be said to have their horns lyre-shaped, with the bony cores solid:
they are provided with a small lacrymatory sinus, and with ungainly pores: the knees are generally tufted.—Seaton, Natural History and Classification of Quadrupeds, § 253.

Her eye's dark charm 'twere vain to tell,
But gaze on that of the gázels,
It will assist thy fancy well. Dryden, The Gleaner.

Gázement. s. View. Rare.

Then forth he brought his snowy Florinello . . .
Cover'd from people's gázement with a veil.
Spenser, Faerie Queen, v. 8, 17.

Gázer. s. One who gazes.

In her cheeks the vermeil red did shew,
Like roses in a bed of lilac shed;
The which amorous colours from them threw,
And gázers wince with double pleasure fed.
Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Sure they would do so, but that,
By the ordinance of fate,
There is some concealed thing,
So each gázers limiting,
He can see no more of merit.
Thus becomes his worth and spirit.
Wilder, Mistress of Philarete.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gázers strike;
And, like the sun, they shine on all alike.

His learned ideas give him a transcendent delight;
and yet, at the same time, discover the blindness which the common gazer never observed.—Watts, Logic.

Gazet. s. [Ital. gazetta.] Venetian half-penny: (in extract, accented on the first syllable).

Where you have said the word, I am content,
But will not give a gazet less.
Masping, Maid of Honour.

Gazette. s. [see last two extracts.] Newspaper, especially one of an official character.

O, I shall be the fable of all fests,
The freight of the gazette, shipboys' tale,
And, which is worst, ev'n talk for ordinary.
R. Jonson, Volpone.

They carry in their pockets Tacitus,
And the gazette, or Gallo-Belgicus.
Id., Epigrams, 92.

I am glad to hear from abroad in the high Dutch gazette, that there is a treaty of exchange in hand between Prince Rupert and Prince Casimir of Poland.—Sir H. Wallon, Relations, p. 579.

And sometimes when the loss is small,
And danger great, they challenge all;
Print new additions to their fears,
And emendations in gazettes. Rafter, Hudibras.

An English gentleman, without geography, cannot well understand a gazette. Locke.

This cannot bear a name mentioned in it that does not bring to mind a piece of the gazette.—Addison, Guardian.

All, all but truth, falls dead-born from the press;
Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.

Think yourself situated on a low rock,
To see a people scatter'd like a flock,
Some royal music waiting at their heels,
With all the saviour thirst a gázers feel.
Then view him self-proclaim'd in a gázers yet.
Chief monster that has plac'd the nations yet.
Corpus, Table Talk, 37.

In the seventeenth century the pulpit was to a large portion of the population what the periodical press now is. Scarce any of the clergymen who came to the parish church ever saw a gazette or a political pamphlet.—Marsden, History of England, ch. iii.

During a considerable time the unofficial gazettes, though much more numerous and amusing than the official gazette, were scarcely less costly.—Ibid.
ch. xxi.

[The Gazette was a kind of literary newspaper, in single sheets, published at Venice in the sixteenth century, which was sold for a gázet. The foglio d' avviso, from the circumstance of its price, has given the name of gázet to newspapers in many countries. At first, we used, in the plural, gázets.
Our gázets have to be regularly printed in 1665.
—Ibid.]

Gazette. Commonly derived from gazetta, a small Venetian coin supposed to have been the price of the original newspaper. But the value of the ga-zetta was so small ('not worth a farthing of ours,' Florida) that it never could have been the price either of a written or printed sheet. The radical meaning of the word is shown in Italian gazetta, gazette, all manner of idle chattering or vain pra-tices, but now generally used for running reports, daily news, intelligence, and advertisements as are daily invented and written upon foreign nations, viz. from Venice, Rome, and Amsterdam. (Florida.)
The object of the gazette was to communicate the political chit-chat of the day.—Widdowood, Dictionary of English Etymology.

Gazette. r. a. Insert in a gazette: (as,
'The dissolution of partnership is gazetted,'
'His promotion is gazetted').

Gazetteer. s.

1. Writer of news.

Mount us w. to Gallo-Belgicus appear
As deep a statesman as a gazetteer.
Johnson, Verses on Coryat the Traveller.

2. Officer appointed to publish news by authority.

Saith is no more: I feel it die;
No gazetteer more innocent than I. Pope.

He was, without the trouble of attendance or the utilization of a request, made gazetteer.—Johnson, Lives of the Poets, King.

3. Gazette.

Glasses and bottles, pipes, and gazetteers,
As if the table ev'n itself was drunk,
Lie a wet broken scene. Thomson, Seasons, Autumn.

The host looked steadily at Adams, and after a minute's silence asked him 'if he was one of the writers of the gazetteers?' for I have heard, says he,
'they are writ by parsons.'—Gazetteers answered
Adams: 'What is that?'—'It is a dirty newspaper,' replied the host, 'which hath been given away all over the nation for these many years to abuse trade and honest men, which I would not suffer to lie on my table, tho' it hath been offered me for nothing.'—Pickens, The Adventures of Joseph Andrews.

They have drawn through columns of gazetteers and advertisements for a century together.—Burke, On the State of the Nation.

4. Title of certain works on geography: (as 'The Universal Gazetteer').

But tell me, . . . is that Isola Bella a true spot in geographical denomination, or a floating Delos in thy brain? Larks that lurk in verity in the bosom of Lake Maggiore? . . . And what if Maggiore itself be but a coinage of adaptation? Of this, pray resolve me immediately. . . . Lake Lemano I know, and Lemno Lake (in a punch bowl) I have swum in, though these lumps be long since dry. But Maggiore may be in the moon. Tush! this riddle for me, for my shelves have no gazetteer. — Laub, Letter to Proctor.

Gazingstock. s. One gazed at: (generally with an unfavourable import).

I will cast abominable filth upon thee, and make thee vile, and will set thee as a gazingstock. — Nahum, iii. 6.

Ye were made a gazingstock both by reproaches and afflictions. — Hebrews, x. 23.

Every eye that is transported, and every heart that is fired with that immodest gazingstock, are so many spoils and trophies of their temptations. — Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 247.

Gaul. v. n. Congeal. Rare.

Receiving the dew of heaven into the caprine shell, it [the mother-pearl] forms little grains or seeds within it, which cleave to its sides, then grow hard and gaul, as it were. — Parthenius Sicris, p. 190: 1653.

Gean. s. See extract.

Gean, the wild cherry; French, guiane; Polish, avian; Bohemian, aviane; in European Turkey, seichina; Wallachian, reian; modern Greek, searoe. We may conclude from this identity, and from the great quantity of pipe-sticks of it exported every year from Turkey, that the name originated in that country. — Dr. A. Prior, Names of native British Plants.

Gear. s. [A.S. geara.]

1. Furniture; accoutrements; dress; habit; ornaments.

Array thyself in her most gorgeous gear. — Spenser, Faerie Queen.
When he found her bound, at sight from her gear, And vile tormentors ready saw in place, He broke through. — Keats, Translation of Tasso.
I fancy every body observes me as I walk the street, and long to be in my old plain gear again. — Ashdon, Guardian.

To see some radiant nymph appear In all her plitt'ring birthday gear, You think some goddess from the sky Descended richly cut and dry. — Swift.

2. Traces by which horses or oxen draw; harness for draught.

Apollo's spite Pallas discern'd, and flew to Tydeus' son;
His accoutrements, and his horse made fresh; then took her angry run
At king Eumelus, broke his gear. — Chapman, Translation of the Iliad.

She rises before the sun to order the horses to their gear. — Johnson, Rambler, no. 135.

3. Stuff.

They turn frankincense, and other sweet savours; and light also a great number of waxes, candles and tapers; not supposing this gear to be any thing available to the divine nature. — R. Bannan, Translation of Sir T. More's Utopia, ii. 11.

Do you love tobacco? — Surely I love it, but it does not me; yet with your reverence I'll be bold, — I pray light it, sir. How do you like it? I promise you, it is notable smoking gear indeed. — Beaumont and Fletcher, Scornful Lady.

4. Business, things, or matters.

That to Sir Calidore was easy gear. — Spenser, Faerie Queen, vi. 3. 6.

Why, hear you, nurse? How comes this gear to pass? — B. Johnson, Magdalen Lady.

Hath not the virtue of this magic dust, I shall appear some harmless villager, Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. — Milton, Comus, 164.

Géason. adj. [?] Rare; uncommon; wonderful.

The lady, hark'ning to his sensefull speech, Found nothing that he said unmet nor geason. — Spenser, Faerie Queen, vi. 4. 37.

It to leaches wound strange and geasons. — Id., Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Such as this age, in which all good is geason. — Id., Vision of the World's Vanity.

It was frosty winter's season, And fair Flora's wealth was geason. — Id., Green, Philomel.

Geek. s. [A.S. geac = cuckoo.]

1. Fool; simpleton.

Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd, And made the most notorious geek and gull That e'er invention play'd on? — Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, v. 1.

2. Jest.

Why did you suffer Iachimo, Slight thing of Italy, To stain his noble heart and brain With needless jealousy, And to become the geek and scorn Of th' other's villany? — Shakespeare, Cymbeline, v. 4.

Gécko. s. [see extract.] Member of a family of the Saurian division of the Reptiles, consisting of nocturnal lizards.

The gecko . . . have not the hank form of those [Saurians] of which we have hitherto treated, but are, on the contrary, flattened, especially about the head, and have the feet middling and the toes nearly equal. . . . The geckos are numerous, and spread through the warm regions of both continents. The glossy and leamy aspect of the gecko, and a certain resemblance to the salamanders and toads, has caused them to be held in abhorrence and accused of being poisonous, but without any real proof of the fact. . . . Gecko is a name given to a species from the East Indies, and imitated from its cry, as another species has been named Toukai at Siam, and a third Geitje, at the Cape. — Translation of Cuvier's Règne Animal.

Geo. s. Name of the seventh letter in the English alphabet.

Geo. Term used by waggoners to their horses when they would have them go faster.

A learned friend, whose communications I have frequently had occasion to acknowledge in the course of this work, says, the exclamation geho, geho, which carmen use to their horses, is probably of great antiquity. It is not peculiar to this country, as I have heard it used in France. In the story of the milkmaid who kicked down her pail, and with it all her hopes of getting rich, as related in a very ancient collection of apocryphs, entitled 'Dialogus Centurionum,' printed at Gouda, in 1580, is the following passage: 'Et cum sic gloriaretur, et exultaret, cum quanta gloria discurreret in pluvium virum, super equum suum, geho, geho, geitje pedes percutere terram, quasi percuteret equum calcitrans.' — Brand, Popular Antiquities.

Gélatine. s. [see Gelly and Jelly.] See extract.

Under [the] name [of gelatina (tissue)] are included the organic tissue of the bones, that of tendons and ligaments, the cellular tissue, the skin, and the serous membranes. All these substances dissolve by long-continued boiling in water, and the solution on cooling forms a jelly. The coarser forms of gelatine from hoofs, hides, &c., are called glue; that from skin and their membranes is known as size; and the purest gelatine, from the air-blisters and other membranes of fish, is called bladders. — Tanner, Elements of Chemistry, 1857.

To whatever degree we might imagine our knowledge of the properties of the several ingredients of a living body to be extended and perfected, it is certain that no mere summing up of the separate actions of these elements will ever amount to the action of the living body itself. The tissue, for instance, is, like all other parts of the animal frame, composed of gelatine, fibrin, and other products of the chemistry of digestion, but from our knowledge of the properties of these substances could we ever predict that it could taste, unless gelatine or fibrin could themselves taste. — J. S. Mill, System of Logic, iii. vi. § 1.

Gélatine. adj. Gelatinous.

You shall always see their eyes hid carefully up in that spermatik gelatine matter, in which they are deposited. — DeCaus.

Gélatinize. v. n. Become as gelatine or jelly.

All these gelatinize on cooling. — Pereira, On Food and Diet.

Gélatinize. v. a. Turn into gelatine or jelly.

They are easily gelatinized. — Pereira, On Food and Diet.

Gélatinous. adj. Consisting, having the character, of gelatine.

That pellucid gelatinous substance is an excrement cast off from the schools of fish that inhabit the main. — Woodward.

Geld. v. a. preterite gelded or gelt; past part. gelded or gelt.

1. Castrate.

Geld bull-calf and ram-lamb as soon as they fall. — Tusser, Five Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

2. Deprive of any essential part.

He bears his course, and runs me up With like advantage on the other side, Gelding the opposed continent as much As on the other side it takes from you. — Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part 2. iii. 1.

3. Deprive of anything immodest, or liable to objection.

For they, by his antient copy, know Both how to geld and to adulterate it. — Beaumont, Pygmalion, i. 196: 1631.

They were diligent enough to make sure work, and to geld it so clearly in some places that they took away the very manhood of it. — Dryden, Preface to Cato.

Geld. s. [A.S.] Compensation; fine; payment; tribute.Gelder. s. One who gelds.

Geld later with gelders, as many one do; And look of a dozen to geld away two. — Tusser, Five Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Often the second element of a compound.

No sow-gelder did blow his horn To geld a cat, but cry'd reform. — Buller, Hudibras.

Gélding. s.

1. Animal castrated, particularly a horse.

Though naturally there be more males of horses, bulls, or rams than females; yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen and wethers, there are fewer. — Crusoe.

The lord lieutenant may chase out one of the best horses, and two of the best geldings; for which shall be paid one hundred pounds for the horse, and fifty pounds a-piece for the geldings. — Sir W. Temple.

2. Eunuch. Obsolete.

Lysimachus was very angry, and thought great even that Demetria should reckon him a gelding. — North, Translation of Plutarch's Lives, p. 541. (French.)

Géld. adj. [Lat. gelidus.] Cold.

If she find some life Yet lurking close, she blows his geld tip. — Murton, Sophonisba.

From the deep ooze and geld cavern rous'd, They flourish. — Thomson, Seasons, Spring.

Géllly. s. Same as Jelly.

Oh, then my best blood turn To an infected gelly. — Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.

The sun and moon become like waxen globes, The shooting stars and all in purple gellies, And chaos is at hand. — Dryden and Lee, Belshazzar.
The white of an egg will coagulate by a moderate heat, and the hardest of animal solids are resolvable again into gellies. — Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Gelt. s. Gelding: (the latter the commoner term).

The gelded gells they esteem the most profitable. — Murton, Husbandry.

Gem. s. [A.S. gym.]

1. Jewel; precious stone.

I have his fancy drew: And so to take the gem Urania sought. — Sir P. Sidney.

Stones of small worth may lie unseen by day; But night itself does the rich gem betray. — Chapman.
The basis of all gems is, when pure, wholly diaphanous, and either crystal or an adamantine matter; but we find the diaphanous of this matter changed, by means of a fine metallic matter. — Woodward, Essay towards a Natural History of the Earth.

2. Bud.

From the joints of thy prolific stem A swelling knot is raised, call'd a gem; Whence, in short space, itself the cluster shows. — Sir J. Denham.

Embodien'd out they come, And swell the gems, and burst the narrow room. — Dryden.

Gem. v. a. Adorn with, or as with, jewels or buds.

She who in her life-time was condemn'd, Ev'n in her very funerals is gemm'd. — Lucan, Lucan's Pharsalia, p. 101.

Evening, blisful harbinger of light, Gems with the dews of health the drooping flower. — Tate of St. Margaret.

Gem. v. n. Put forth the first buds.

Last rose, in dance, the stately trees, and spread Their branches, hung with copious fruit; or gemm'd Their blossoms. — Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 224.

Gémel. s. [Lat. gemellus; Fr. gémme, gemelle.] Pair.

The quadren doth never double; or, to use a word of heraldry, never bringeth forth gemels. — Drayton, Barons' Wars, pref.

Gémel ring. s. See Gemow.Géminal. s. Pair. Rare.

The often harmony thereof softened the verse more than the majesty of the subject would permit, unless they had all been geminals or geminals. — Drayton, Barons' Wars, pref. (Ord M.S.)

Geminatión. s. Repetition; duplication.

If the will be in the sense, and in the conscience both, there is a gemination of it.—Bacon, Tables of the Collocation of Good and Evil.

That gemination, after the manner of the Hebrews, hath much emphasis, and fortifies the signification of the words.—Hobbes, Standard on Promissory Oaths, l. 13.

Be not afraid of them that kill the body: fear him, which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell: yea, I say unto you, with a gemination, which the present controversy shows not to have been causeless, fear him.—Boyle.

Gemini, s. pl. [Lat.] The Twins, Castor and Pollux, the third sign in the zodiac.

In Gemini that noble power is shown,
That twins their hearts, and doubt not two make one.
—B. Jonson, Masques.

Gemini, or Géminy. interj. See extract.

A parcel of laxy claps, I dare say—but I'll make them stir their stumps. Well, here we are at last. Oh! gemini gig, how my poor bones do ache!—Morton, Secrets worth knowing, l. 1.

[Gemini!] By Gia.—The wish to avoid the sin of profane swearing without giving up the gratification of the practice has led to the mangling of the terms ... in exclamation, so as to deprive them of all apparent reference to sacred things. Hence French mort bleu, corbleu, for mort, corps de Dieu; sapement for sacrament; Kwailian mein eho! for mein eho!; Almeo bi toub! in Galle! bi Gouch! Golz! Holz! Polz! O Jema! O Je! Jerna, Jerra, Jemer, Jepper, Jegera, Jemine. Platt Deutsch, Je! Ja! Heer Je! Jemine!—Waggoner, Dictionary of English Etymology.

Géminois. adj. Double. Rare.

Christians have baptized these géminois births, and double commemorations, with several names, as conceiving in them a distinction of souls.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Géminy. s. Pair; brace; couple. Rare.

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couch-fellow, Nim; or else you had looked through the grate, like a géminy of halibuts.—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
"A géminy of asses split, would make just fit of you.—Congreve.

Gemma. s. plur. gemme. [Lat.] Bud: (in Botany and Zoology, used both as an independent word and as the basis of several compounds and derivatives connected with the phenomena of growth and reproduction; e.g. gemmae, gemmae, gemmae).

(For examples see extract under Gemination.)

Gemmary. adj. Pertaining to gems or jewels. Rare.

The principle and gemmary affection is its transiency; as for irascibility, which is found in many gems, it is not discoverable in this.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Gemination. s. Process by which buds are given off.

1. In Botany, with the ordinary sense of the term, budding.

2. In Zoology, applied to the reproduction of corallines, hydras, and numerous other species of the lower animals, wherein the process is akin to that of the budding of plants.

In other annelids we find that the string of segments arising by gemination from a single germ becomes a permanently united whole; the tendency to any more complete union than that which marks out the segments, being lost; or, in other words, the integration having become relatively complete, leaving out of sight the question of alliance among the types above grouped together, that which is here concerns us to notice is, that longitudinal gemination does go on; that it is displayed in that primitive form in which the gemme separate as soon as produced; that we have types in which such gemme hang together in groups of four, or in groups of eight and ten, from which however the gemme successively separate as individuals; that among higher types which do not become individually independent, but separate into organized groups; and that from these we advance to forms in which all the gemme remain parts of a single individual. One other significant class of facts must be added. A few cases have been pointed out, one of them quite recently, in which annelids multiply by lateral gemination. M. Pagenstecher alleges this of the Rugose gemmifera: describing a certain number of the segments of the body as severally bearing on their dorsal surfaces a bud on each side. And M. L. Vaillant, after citing this observation of M. Pagenstecher, gives an account of a species of Hydra in which a great number of buds were borne by a single segment. That the longitudinally-produced gemme which compose an annelid, should thus have, one of them or several of them, the power of laterally budding-off gem-

me, from which no doubt other annelids arise, gives further support to the hypothesis that, primarily, the segments were independent individuals. And it suggests this belief the more strongly, because certain types of Coelenterata, we see that longitudinal and lateral gemination do occur together, where the longitudinally-united gemme are demonstrably independent individuals.—H. Marten, History of English Poetry, ii. 178. (Orel MS.)

Gémmeous. adj. Connected with, or having the nature of, a gem.

Sometimes we find them in the gémmeous matter itself.—H. Marten.

Gémmy. adj. Resembling, having the nature of, consisting of, or adorned with, gems.

Night westward did her gémmy world decline.

Drummond, Sonnets, pt. ii. (Orel MS.)

The fitting cloud against the sunn'd dros'd,
And, by the sun illum'd, pouring bright
A gémmy show'—

The gémmy bridle glitter'd free,
Like to some handle of stars we see
Hang in the golden galaxy.

The bridle bells rang merrily
As he rode down to Camelot.

—Tennyson, The Lady of Shalott.

Gémow. adj. [see Gimmel.] Parallel.

Obsolete.

Parallels or gemows lines be such lines as be drawn forth still in one distance, and are no more in one place than in the other, for as if they be never at once in then at the other, then are no parallels, but ...

—R. Recorde, The Pathway to Knowledge, contain'g the first Principles of Geometry.

Génder. s. [Fr. genre; Lat. genus, -eris.]

1. Kind; sort: (genus commoner).

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that if we will supply it with one gender of herbs, or distract it with many, the power and correlative authority of this lies in our wills.—Shakespeare, Othello, l. 5.

The other motive,
Why to a publick court I might not go,
Is the great love the general gender bear him.

—J. H. H. iv. 7.

2. In Grammar. Conventional sex attached to certain words, according to the practice of the language.

Sex and gender are qualities which belong to substances, but cannot belong to the qualities of substances.—J. South, On the Formation of Language.
Cudworth, some times exhibit in the word gender, signifies the lower part of the arm on which we lean.—Latham.

Ulysses speaks of Nausleia, yet immediately changes the word into the masculine gender.—Bénigne.

How far have we gender in English? The distinction of sex by wholly different words, such as Boy and Girl, Father and Mother, Horse and Mare, &c. is not gender. Neither are words like Manservant and Hecate, contrasted with Maidservant, She-woman, &c. The Latin words Genitrix=a mother, and Genitor=a father, give an approach to gender rather than gender itself. This is because the difference of sex, though shown by the syllables -or and -le, is not shown in the inflection. ... Contrast with this the words Domina=a mistress, and Dominus=a master. ... It is evident that, if Genitrix is a specimen of gender, Domina is something more. It is a specimen of true gender.—De R. G. l. latham, English Grammar for Classical Schools.

Génder. r. a. Engender. Rare.

Hath the rain a father? or who hath begotten the drops of dew: out of whose womb came the ice? and the hoary frost of heaven, who hath gendered it?—Job, xxxviii. 28, 29.

English and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strikes.—A. Timothee, li. 23.

Génder. v. n. Copulate; breed; engender. Rare.

A cistern for foul toads
To gender in.—Shakespeare, Othello, iv. 2.

Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind.—Leviticus, xix. 19.

Genealogical. adj. Pertaining to genealogies.

Among the rest was the room in which James I. died, and a picture with a genealogical tree of the house of Cecil painted on the walls.—Gough, Topography, Theobalds.

Genealogist. s. [Gr. γενεά=generation, in the sense of life of a son as compared with that of his father, + λογος=word, system, principle.] One who studies pedigrees, descents, or genealogies; one who traces descents.

Considering what trash is thought worthy to be hoarded by genealogists, the following may not be a dispensable addition to those repositories.—Walpole.

Genealogize. v. n. Investigate genealogies.

Genealogizing. verbal abs. Study of genealogies.

In the same race of genealogizing, they traced the descent of Jesus Christ from Adam through the Levitical and royal tribes, the Jewish patriarchs, judges, kings, prophets, and priests.—Watson, History of English Poetry, ii. 178. (Orel MS.)

Genealogy. s. History of the succession of families; enumeration of descent in order of succession; pedigree.

The ancients ranged classes into several regions; and in that order successively rising one from another, as if it was a pedigree or genealogy.—T. Barret, Theory of the Earth.

Generability. s. Capability of being generated.

I am not disposed to enlarge my treatise with those dark and important enquiries, so often affording scope to the elements and whimsies of men of sense—the generability of the passions, the origin of ideas, and the generability of mind.—Johnstone, On Metaphysics, part.

Generable. adj. Capable of being generated.

Others say, that the terms of particular words are generable and corruptible.—Hortley, Sermons, 6.

General. s. [from Fr. général.] One who has the command over an army.

A general is one that hath command an army.—Locke.

The war's whole art each private soldier knows,
And with a gen'ral's love of conquest glows.

—Addison, The Campaign.

General. adj. [see Genus.]

1. Constituting a genus: (as opposed to particular and special).

They, because some have been admitted without trial, make that fault general which is particular.—H. Hogg.

It is to our immortal countryman, Bacon, that we owe the broad announcement of this grand and fertile principle; and the development of the idea, that the whole of natural philosophy consists entirely of a series of inductive generalizations, commencing with the most circumstantially stated particulars, and carried up to universal laws, or axioms, which comprehend in their statements every subordinate degree of generality; and of a corresponding series of inverted reasoning from particulars to generals, by which these axioms are traced back into their constituent consequences; and all particular propositions deduced from them; as well those by whose immediate considerations we rise to their discovery, as those of which we had no previous knowledge.—Sir J. Herschel, Discourse on Natural Philosophy, art. 26.

The function of naming, and particularly of general names, in induction, may be recapitulated as follows. Every inductive inference which is good at all, is good for a whole class of cases. ... We can only secure its being remembered, or give ourselves even a chance of carrying it in our memory any considerable number of such uniformities, by registering them through the medium of permanent signs; which (being, from the nature of the case, signs not of an individual but, but of an undifferentiated, that is, of an indefinite number of facts similar to one another) are general signs; universal general names, and general propositions. And here I cannot omit to mention an oversight, committed by some eminent metaphysicians; who have said that the cause of our using general names is the infinite multitude of individual objects, which, making it impossible to have a name for each, compels us to make one name serve for many. This is a very limited view of the function of general names. Even if there were a name for every individual object, we should require general names as much as we now do. ... It is only by means of general names that we can convey any information, predicate any attribute, even of an individual, much more of a class. Rigorously speaking we could get on without any other general names than the abstract names of attributes; all our propositions might be of the form 'such an individual object possesses such an attribute,' or 'such an attribute is always (or never) conjoined with such an individual attribute.' In fact, however, mankind have always given general names to objects as well as attributes, and indeed before attributes; but the general names given to objects imply attributes, derive their whole meaning from attributes; and are chiefly useful as the language by means of which we predicate the attributes which they connote.—J. S. Mill, System of Logic, b. iv. ch. iii. §§ 3, 4.

2. Abstract.

A general idea is an idea in the mind, considered there as separated from time and place, and able to represent any particular being that is conjoinable to it.—Locke.

3. Public; relating to the common weal, or community at large.

Nor would we dignify him burial of his men,
Till he be disburied at St. Colman's hill,
Ten thousand dollars to our gen'ral use.
—Shakespeare, Macbeth, l. 2.

Not fall'd they to express how much they praise'd,
That for the general safety he deserv'd
His own. Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 481.

4. Not directed to any single object, or for any particular application or employment: (as 'a general servant,' opposed to cook, lady's maid, or a special and professed one).

If the same thing be peculiarly evil, that general aversion will be turned into a particular hatred against it.—Bishop Sprat.

5. Having relation to all.

The wall of Paradise upspring,
Which to our general sire gave prospect large
Into his nether empire neighbour'd round.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 143.

6. Lax.

Where the author speaks more strictly and particularly on any theme, it will explain the more loose and general expressions.—Watts, On the Improvement of the Mind.

7. Vulgar; plebeian. See second sense of General, s. and Generality.

You will rather show your general lowts
How you can frown. Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iii. 2.

8. Free from details or complications; compendious.

I have been bold,
(For that I knew it the most general way.)
To them to use your signet and your name.
Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, ii. 2.

9. ? Generous.

She's general, she's free, she's liberal,
Of hand and purse she's open and
She is no miserable hidebound wretch;
To please her friend at any time she'll stretch;
At once she can speak true or lie on either,
And is at home, abroad, and altogether.
Taylor (the Water-poet).

Construction, especially with the names of persons invested with office, adjectival, e.g. 'attorney, solicitor, vicar, inspector general.'

General. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Whole; totality; main, without insisting on particulars.

In particulars our knowledge begins, and so spreads itself by degrees to generals. Locke.

With in.

That which makes an action fit to be commanded or forbidden, can be nothing else, in general, but its tendency to promote or hinder the attainment of some end.—Austin.

I have considered Milton's Paradise Lost in the fable, the characters, the sentiments, and the language; and have shown that he excels, in general, under each of these heads.—Addison.

An history painter paints men in general; a portrait painter, a particular man; and consequently a defective model.—Sir J. Reynolds.

2. The public; the vulgar: (with the).

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business,
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general
Take hold on me; for my particular grief
Insects and swallows other sorrows.

The play, I remember, pleased not the million;
'twas cavil'd to the general; but it was as I received
It, and others, whose judgment in such matters cried
In the top of mine, an excellent play.—Id., Hamlet, ii. 2.

Undervaluing many particulars (which they truly esteemed), as rather to be censured to than that the general should suffer. Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion, b. v.

Generalia. s. [Lat. plural neuter of generalis.] Generalities.

Science, therefore, following one cause to its various effects, while art traces one effect to its multiplied and diversified causes and conditions; there is need of a set of intermediate scientific truths, derived from the higher generalities of science, and destined to serve as the generalis or first principles of the various arts.—J. S. Mill, System of Logic, b. vi. ch. xi. § 3.

Generalissimo. s. [Italian.] Supreme commander.

Pitull had passed through all the principal chambers of the state in the civil way; and had lastly in the military been generalissimo.—Sir H. Hallam.

Commission of generalissimo was likewise given to the prince.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Pompey had deserved the name of Great; and Alexander with the same commendation was generalissimo of Greece.—Sir T. Browne.

The officers of the generalissimo of the world, that are as the eyes and ears of the great king, in the weling and hearing all things.—Dr. M. More, Conjectura Cabbalistica, p. 185.

Ingratitude . . . a sin of an universal comprehension; and, as I may so speak, the generalissimo of sins, having an influence upon all the particular sins and irregularities of our practice.—South, Sermons, iv. 118.

In he? I see him coming—huzza! I'll blow him to the devil, if he were generalissimo.—G. Colman the younger, The Poor Gentleman, v. 2.

[Generalissimo, French, from general.] Addison, having termed Agamemnon generalissimo of the Grecian expedition, (Tatler, 152,) is reproved by Bishop Hurd with this reflection on the word: 'Instead of this cant and indelicate term, he should have used the more noble one of general, or commander in chief.' (Addison's Works, edit. Hurd, vol. ii. 357.) The examples from Clarendon and Browne, given by Dr. Johnson, might have served to renew the word from such a charge. The authority of Sir Henry Wotton, Henry More, and South, which I add, further shew the serious manner in which the word is used.—Phil.

Generality.

1. State of being general; quality of including species or particulars; value of a generalization.

Because the curiosity of man's wit cloth with peril wade farther in the search of things than were convenient, the same is thereby restrained unto such generalities as, everywhere offering themselves, are apparent to men of the weakest conceit.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

These certainties do only in the generality mean—'the part'—'the manner'—'the disordered'—Asylite, Peregrinus Africa vi.

2. Main body; bulk; common mass: (with the).

Necessity, not extending to the generality, last resting upon private heads.—Sir W. Raleigh, Kinsmen.

By his own principles he excludes from salvation the generality of his own church; that is, all that do not believe upon his grounds.—Archbishop Tillotson.

The generality of the English have such a favourable opinion of treason, nothing can cure them.—Addison.

They publish their ill-natured discoveries with a secret pride, and uphold themselves for the singularity of their judgement, which has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admire.—Id.

Generalization. s. Act or process of grouping in a genus.

The original invention of such words would require a yet greater effort of abstraction, and generalization, than that of nouns adjective.—A. Smith, On the Formation of Language.

Generalization [is] the act of comprehending under a common name several objects agreeing in some point which we abstract from each of them, and which that common name serves to indicate.—Whately, Logic, index.

For a few well-observed facts, rational deductions, and cautious generalizations, we have whole clouds of systems and doctrines, of speculations and fancies, built merely on the workings of the imagination, and the labours of the closet.—Lawrence, Lectures, iii. (Oral MS.)

In our inquiries into the nature of the inductive process, we must not confine our notion to such generalizations from experience as profess to be universally true. There is a class of inductive truths avowedly not universal; in which it is not pretended that the predicate is always true of the subject; but the value of which, as generalizations, is nevertheless extremely great. An important portion of the field of inductive knowledge does not consist of universal truths, but of approximations to such truths; and when a conclusion is said to rest on probable evidence, the premises it is drawn from are usually generalizations of this sort.—J. S. Mill, System of Logic, b. iii. ch. xiii. § 1.

The class of fallacies of which we are now to speak is the most extensive of all; embracing a greater number and variety of unfounded inferences than any of the other classes, and which it is even more difficult to reduce to unbeliefs or species. If the attempt made in the preceding books to define the principles of well-grounded generalization has been successful, all generalizations not conformable to these principles might, in a certain sense, be brought under the present class: when however the rules are known and kept in view, but a casual lapse committed in the application of them, this is a blunder, not a fallacy. To entitle an error of generalization to the latter epithet, it must be committed on principle; there must lie in it some erroneous general conception of the inductive process; the legitimate mode of drawing conclusions from observation and experiment must be fundamentally misconceived.—Id. b. v. ch. v. § 1.

Generalize. v. a.

1. Arrange in a genus.

Sometimes the name of an individual is given to a general conception, and thereby the individual in a manner generalized.—Reid.

New opinions, founded on a legitimate process of observation and inference, are generally worked out in solitude by persons of studious and reflective habits. . . . Respecting opinions so formed and so propagated, no general proposition can be laid down. Their character as to soundness will depend on the peculiarities of the several persons with whom they originate; and the reception which they meet with from the public will be determined by its capacity to form a judgment on the matter. For example: the existence of a man with such mighty powers of discovery and demonstration as Newton, and the recognition of his doctrines among his contemporaries, depend upon causes which do not admit of being generalized.—Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, ch. ix. § 1.

So, too, the proper relation between the people and their rulers, and the amount of liberty which the people should possess, instead of being inductively generalized from an historical inquiry into the circumstances which had produced most happiness, might, in the opinion of Hutcheson, be ascertained by reasoning from the nature of government, and from the ends for which it was instituted.—Blackie, History of Civilization in England, vol. ii. ch. vi.

The two general functions of the article definite equally in Greek and English are, 1st, to individualize, as, e.g. 'It is not any sword that will do; I will have The sword of my father;' 2nd, the very opposite function, viz. to generalize in the highest degree—a use which our best English grammarians wholly overlook—us, e.g. 'Let The sword give way to The gown;' not that particular sword, but every sword.—De Quincy, Style.

2. Invest with a character of generality in the sense of latitude or laxity.

There would be an anterior question. We should first be called to do, in our law and policy, what has been already done in reference to personal qualifications for offices; to generalize and relax our obligation; to contemplate, in what is deemed a liberal spirit, the advancement, not merely of the interests of the Church, but of religion at large, under the different forms of it bearing the Christian name.—Glendon, The State in its Relations with the Church, ch. vii.

Generalize. v. n. Indulge or exercise one's self in generalizing.

(For example see Generalizing, part. aff.)

Generalizer. s. One who generalizes.

The most vivid imagination of the boldest generalizer or speculator upon the unity of organisation in the animal kingdom could never have divined that the bones and the carapace were at one period of their lives locomotive animals, swimming about under very similar forms, and by almost identical natatorial instruments.—Quere, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, ch. xiii.

Generalizing. part. aff. Tending to, or consisting in, generalization.

The reviewer holds that we pass from special experiences to universal truths in virtue of the inductive propensity—the irresistible impulse of the mind to generalize on induction. I have already given reasons why I cannot adopt the former expression; but I do not see why space, time, number, cause, and the rest, may not be termed different forms of the impulse of the mind to generalize. But if we put together all the fundamental ideas, results of the generalizing impulse, we must still separate them as different modes of action of that impulse, showing themselves in various characteristic ways in the various modes of reasoning which belong to different sciences. The generalizing impulse in one case proceeds according to the idea of space; in another, according to the idea of mechanical cause; and so in other subjects.—Whewell, History of Scientific Ideas, note on ch. 2.

Generalizing. verbal abs. Act of one who generalizes; process by which generalizations are made.

The operations of the understanding by which we are enabled to form general conceptions . . . appear to me to be three: First, the resolving . . . a subject into its known attributes and giving a name to each. . . . Secondly, the observing of one or more such attributes to be common to many subjects. The first is by philosophers called abstraction; the second may be called generalizing; but both are commonly included under the name of abstraction. It is difficult to say which of them goes first. . . . It seems . . . that we cannot generalize without some degree of abstraction; but, I apprehend, we may abstract without generalizing. . . . A third operation . . . [is that] by which . . . we form abstract notions of the genera and species of things. Reid, Inquiry into the Human Mind, essay v. ch. iii.

Generally. adv. In a general manner.

1. Without specification or exact limitation.

Generally we would not have those that read this work of Sylvia Kylvorum, account it strange that we have set down particulars untold.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. In the main; without minute detail; in the whole taken together.

Generally speaking, they live very quietly.—Adams, Guardian.

Generally speaking, they have been gaining ever since, though with frequent interruptions.—Asch.

How many sacraments hath Christ ordained in his church?—Two only, as generally necessary to salvation, that is to say baptism and the supper of the Lord.—Church Catechism.

Generality. s. Attribute suggested by General; wide extent, though short of universality; frequency; commonness: (Generality commoner).

They had, with a general consent, rather springing by the generality of the cause than of any artificial practice, set themselves in arms.—Sir P. Sidney.

Generalship. s. Command of one who commands an army: (applied, generally, to good or bad management or tact).

Cicero laments, in one of his letters, at his generalship.—Bolingbroke, Letters on History.

This is looked upon in no other light, but as an awful stroke of generalship in Trim to raise a dust.—Sterne.

The king was still only a learner of the military art. He acknowledged, at a later period, that his success on this occasion was to be attributed, not at all to his own generalship, but solely to the valour and steadiness of his troops.—Macaulay, Critical and Historical Essays, Frederic the Great.

Generality. s. Whole; totality. Rare.

The municipal laws of this kingdom are of a vast extent, and include in their generality all those several laws which are allowed as the rule of justice and judicial proceedings.—Sir M. Hale.

Generant. s. [see Generate.] Begetting or productive power.

Some believe the soul made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant: whether it be immediately created or produced hath been the great ball of contention.—Glanville, Serpentina Scientificæ.

In such professed generations the generant or active principle is supposed to be the sun, which, being an incandescent body, cannot act otherwise than by its heat.—Rap.

Generato. v. a. [Lat. generatus, pass. part. of genero; pres. part. generans, -antis; generatio, -onis; generabilis: capable of being generated or engendered.]

1. Beget; propagate.

Those creatures which being wild generate seldom, being tame, generate often.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

God created the great whales, and each soul living, each that crept, which plentifully the waters generated by their kinds; And every kind of wine after his kind; And saw that it was good, and blessed them.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 391.

2. Cause; produce.

Sounds are generated where there is no air at all.—Bacon.

Whatever generates a quantity of good chyle, must likewise generate milk.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

The modes of consciousness called pressure, motion, sound, light, heat, are effects produced in us by agencies which, as otherwise expended, crush or fracture pieces of matter, generate vibrations in surrounding objects, cause chemical combinations, and reduce substances from a solid to a liquid form.—Herbert Spencer, Elements of Psychology.

When impressions have been so often experienced in conjunction, that each of them calls up readily and instantaneously the ideas of the whole group, those ideas sometimes melt and coalesce into one another, and appear not several ideas, but one; in the same manner as when the seven prismatic colours are presented to the eye in rapid succession, the sensation produced is that of white. But as in this last case it is correct to say that the seven colours when they rapidly follow one another generate white, but not that they actually are white; so it appears to me that the complex idea, formed by the blending together of several simpler ones, should, when it really appears simple, (that is when the separate elements are not consciously distinguishable in it,) be said to result from, or be generated by, the simple ideas, not to consist of them. Our idea of an orange really consists of the simple ideas of a certain colour, a certain form, a certain taste and smell, &c., because we can by interrogating our consciousness, perceive all these elements in the idea. But we cannot perceive, in so apparently simple a feeling as our perception of the shape of an object by the eye, all that multitude of ideas derived from other senses, without which it is well ascertained that no such visual perception would ever have had existence; nor, in our idea of extension, can we discover those elementary ideas of existence, derived from our muscular frame, in which Dr. Brown has shown it to be highly probable that the idea originates. These therefore are cases of mental chemistry: in which it is proper to say that the simple ideas generate, rather than that they compose, the complex ones.—J. N. Mill, System of Logic, b. vi. §. iv.

Generation. s.

1. Act of begetting or producing.

Seals make excellent impressions; and so it may be thought of sounds in their first generation: but then the dilution of them, without any new sealing, shows they cannot be impressions.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

If we deduce the several races of mankind in the several parts of the world from generation, we must imagine the first numbers of them, who in any place agree upon any civil constitutions, to assemble as so many bands of families whom they represent.—Sir W. Raleigh.

The natural functions are those which without the intervention of the will operate on their proper objects to preserve the bodies of animals; they are digestion, absorption, nutrition; to which was added generation. The animal functions are those which involve perception and will, by which the animal is distinguished from the vegetable; they are sensibility, locomotion, and voice.—Whewell, History of Scientific Ideas, b. ix. ch. iii.

2. Family; race.

Yare a doe.—

Thy mother's of my generation: what's she, if I be a dog?—Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, i. 1.

3. Progeny; offspring.

The barbarous Scythian,

Or he that makes his generation missive To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom Be as well neighbour'd.—Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 1.

4. Single succession; i. e. graduation in the scale of genealogical descent.

This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled.—Matthew, xxiv. 38.

A marvellous number were cited to the conquest of Palestine, which with singular virtue they performed, and held that kingdom some few generations.—Sir W. Raleigh, Essays.

5. Age.

By some of the ancients a generation was fixed at an hundred years; by others at an hundred and ten; by others at thirty-three, thirty, twenty-five, and twenty; but it is remarked, that the continuance of generations is so much longer as they come nearer to the more ancient times.—Glanville.

Every where throughout all generations and ages of the Christian world, no church ever perceived the word of God to be against it.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Generative. adj.

1. Having the power of propagation.

He gave to all that have life a power generative to continue their species and kind.—Sir W. Raleigh, History of the World.

In grains and kernels the greatest part is but the nutriment of that generative particle, so disproportionate unto it.—Sir T. Brown.

2. Prolific; having the power of production; fruitful.

If there hath been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty upon the earth, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables?—Boutley.

Generator. s.

1. Power which begets, causes, or produces.

Imagination assimilates the idea of the generator into the reality in the thing engendered.—Sir T. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

2. One who begets.

Adam hath not only fallen from his Creator, but we ourselves from Adam, our primary generator.—Sir T. Brown, Christian Morals, i. 28.

Genérice. adj. Relating to, or consisting in, the classification of objects under genera, as opposed to species.

Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit; yet this is but a general or genérice difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry: the specific difference of wine, therefore, is its pressure from the grape.—Watts, Logic.

These men—whom modern writers set down as the Sages, and denounce as the moral pestilence of their age—were not distinguished in any marked or genérice way from their predecessors.—Græc, History of Greece, bk. ix. ch. lvi.

Porto Santo, for instance, is a very small island (not more than seven miles in length), yet the number of endemic species which it includes is so perfectly astounding that it may be appropriately termed a genérice area of radiation. . . . It would seem, when viewed on a broad scale, as if particular districts throughout the world had been made as it were the special fields for the exercise of the creative force,—or that, genérice areas of radiation were part of the elementary design. Thus, Professor E. Forbes records his belief that most, if not indeed all, of the terrestrial animals and plants now inhabiting Britain are members of specific centres beyond its bounds,—they having migrated to it over a continuous land, before, during, or after the glacial epoch. Hence, since the greater number of them are supposed to have come from the central Germanic plains, we may assume that these plains were one of the primary areas of diffusion of a large mass of created beings; Spain may have been another; and certainly all evidence would tend to prove that this west Atlantic province was, also, well stocked with aboriginal forms.—T. F. Wollaston, On the Location of Species, ch. v.

Genérice. adj. Same as Genérice.

The word consumption being applicable to a proper and improper, to a true and bad, consumption, requires a genérice description qualified to both.—Horro, Dictionary of Consumption.

Genériceally. adv. In a generic, or generic manner.

These have all the essential characters of weaknesses, and show that they are of the very same specific grade with those to which they are so genériceally allied.—Wollaston.

Generosity. s.

1. High birth. Obsolete.

To break the heart of generosity, And make bold power look pale.—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, i. 1.

Their eyes are commonly dark and small, noses little, nails almost as long as their fingers, but serving to diminish their generosity.—Horro, Voyages, i. 253. (Trench.)

2. Magnanimity; liberality: (this latter being at present the nearer synonym).

It would not have been your generosity, to have passed by such a fault as this.—Locke.

Can he be better principled in the grounds of true virtue and generosity than his young tutor is?—Locke, Thoughts on Education.

Generous. adj. [Fr. généreux; Lat. generosus.]

1. Having a good extraction.

Let her not be poor, how generous never; for a man can buy nothing in the market with gentility.—Lord Burleigh, Precepts to his Son.

2. Noble of mind; magnanimous; open of heart.

A generous virtue of a vicious kind, Pure in the last recesses of the mind.—Dryden.

That generous boldness to defend An innocent or absent friend.—Sir J.

The generous soul who wit and gold refines, And ripens spirits as he ripens mines.—Pope.

The generous critic's fault the poet's fire, And taught the world with reason to admire.—Locke, Essay on Criticism, p. 1.

Pray for others in such forms, with such length, importunity, and earnestness, as you use for yourself; and you will find all little ill-natured passions die away, your heart grow great and generous, delighting in the common happiness of others, as you used only to delight in your own.—Law.

In the following the import is intentionally ambiguous or equivocal.

Such was Rosecommon, not more learned than good,

With manners generous as his noble blood.—Pope.

3. Used of animals. High-spirited; showing blood or breeding; daring; courageous. Obsolete.

So the imperial eagle does not stay, Till the whole carcase he devour; As if his generous hunger understood That he can never want plenty of food, He only sucks the luscious blood.—Cowley.

His opening wounds, and now he hears their cries: A generous pack.—Adrian.

4. Liberal; munificent.

When from his vest the young companion bore The cup the generous landlord own'd before, And paid profusely with the precious bowl, The stinted kindness of this cheerful soil.—Parnell, The Hermit.

5. Rich.

Having in a digestive furnace drawn off the ardent spirit from some good sack, the phlegm, even in this generous wine, was copious.—Rapin.

Those who in southern climes complain, From Phœbus rays they suffer pain, Must own that pain is well repaid, By generous wines beneath a shade.—Swift.

Generously. adv. In a generous manner.

When all the gods our ruin have foretold, Yet generously he does his own wish hold.—Dryden, Indian Emperor.

Generousness. s. Attribute suggested by Generous; quality of being generous: (Generosity commoner).

The whole Buddhist religion was nothing but a perpetual banishment of all true generousness and freedom of mind.—Spencer on Prodigies, p. 82: 1665.

Is it possible to conceive that the overflowing generosities of the Divine Nature would create immortal beings with more or various principles—Collier, On Kindness.

Genesis. s. [Gr. γενεα.]

1. Generation; the first book of the Pentateuch, which begins with the account of the creation of the world.

The first [book of Moses] is called Genesis, because it contains the history of the creation of the world, with which it begins; and the genealogy of the patriarchs down to the death of Joseph, where it ends.—Bishop Patrick, Paraphrases and Commentaries on the Old Testament, On Genesis.

2. In Biology. Evolution.

Having concluded what constitutes an individual, we are in a position to deal with the multiplication of individuals. For this, the title genesis is here chosen, as being the most comprehensive title—the least specialized in its meaning. By some biologists, generation has been used to signify one method of multiplication, and reproduction to signify another method; and each of these words has been thus rendered in some degree null to signify multiplication in general. . . . Up to quite recent times, it was believed, . . . that all the various processes of multiplication observable in different kinds of organisms, have one essential character in common; it was supposed that in every species, the successive generations are alike. It has now been proved, however, that in plants, and in numerous animals, the successive generations are not alike; that from one generation there proceeds another whose members differ more or less in structure from their parents; that these produce others like themselves, or like their parents, or like neither; but that eventually, the original form reappears. Instead of there being, as in the cases most familiar to us, a constant recurrence of the same form, there is a cyclical recurrence of the same form. These two distinct processes of multiplication may be aptly termed homogenesis and heterogenesis. . . . Unfortunately the word genesis has been already used as a synonyme for spontaneous generation. . . . Save by those few who believe in spontaneous generation, however, little objection will be felt to using the word in a sense that seems much more appropriate. The kind of genesis, once supposed to be universal, in which the successive generations are alike, is always sexual genesis. . . . In every species of organism which multiplies, genesis, each generation consists of males and females; and from the fertilized germ they produce, the next generation of similar males and females arises. . . . In ovo-viviparous genesis, there is an internal incubation; and though the young are in this case finally detached from the parent in the shape of eggs, they do not leave the parent's body until after they have assumed something like the parental form. Looking around, we find that homogenesis is universal among the vertebrates; there is no known vertebrate animal, but what arises from a fertilized germ, and moults into its single individuality the whole products of this fertilized germ. Herd, p. 89, new ed., Linnæan Society of Biology, ch. vii.

Almost losing, though it ultimately does, the marks of its infernal genesis; it needs but to watch the use of new metaphors, and the coining of new words, to see under a disguised form, the same fundamental intuition of likeness of relations. . . . Id., First Principles, § 43.

The genesis of all other modes of force from chemical action, scarcely needs pointing out. . . . Id., The Correlation and Equivalence of Forces.

Genet. s. Small-sized Spanish horse. You'll have your nephews wish to you; you'll have coarsers for coming, and genets for germanes. Shakspeare, Othello, l. 1.

He shows his statue too, where placed on high, The genet underneath him seems to fly. Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

Genet. s. [?] Animal skin to weazels so called.

The next subdivision of the Viverræ are the genets. . . . From their slender and elegant body, pointed muzzle, . . . we might feel inclined to refer them to the family of the martens. But a more attentive examination, and a more detailed study of their organization, prove their approximation to the civets, by the side of which they are accordingly arranged in a particular group.—Translation of Cuvier's Règne Animal.

Geneothliology. adj. [Gr. γενεθλιακή.] Pertaining to activities as calculated by astronomers; showing the configurations of the stars at any birth. Rare.

The night immediately before he was sighting the art of these foolish astrologers, and geneothliology enthusiasts, that use to pry into the horoscopes of activities.—Hurdell, Vocal Furnat.

The geneothliology astrologers have other signs, more subtle, though perhaps not much more certain.—Ferrand, Love Melancholy, p. 142.

Geneothliology. s. System of pedigrees. Rare.

It seems by Strabo, that one of the sects of the Chaldeans did so hold to astronomy still, that they wholly rejected geneothliology.—Stillingsfleet, Origines Sacre, l. i. ch. iii. (Ord MS.)

Geneothliatic. s. One who calculates nativities. Rare.

The truth of astrological predictions is not to be referred to the constellations: the geneothliatic conjecture by the disposition, temper, and complexion of the person.—Drummond.

Genève. s. See Gin.

Bid him sleep:
'Tis a sign he has ta'en his liquor; and if you meet
An officer preaching of sobriety,
Unless he read it in Genève print,
Lay him by the heels. Massinger, Duke of Milan.

Genial. adj. [Lat. genialis.]

1. Relating to propagation. Obsolete.

Richer of the genial bed by far,
And with mysterious reverence I deem.
Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 658.
Creator Venus, genial power of love,
The bliss of men below and gods above! Dryden, Fables.

2. Giving cheerfulness or supporting life.

Nor will the light of life continue long,
But yields to double darkness rich at hand;
So much I feel my genial spirits drop. Milton, Samson Agonistes, 202.

3. Natural; native. Obsolete.

It chiefly proceedeth from natural inaptitude, and genial indisposition.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

4. Gay; merry.

The celebrated drinking ode of this genial archdeacon [Walter de Maupais] has the regular returns of the most lively rhyme.—T. Warton, History of English Poetry, vol. i. disc. 2.

Geniality. s. Genial character; (more especially in respect to natural cheerfulness, or agreeable warmth of temper or manner).

He had a natural geniality of disposition that drew him to his friends.—Telford, Memoirs of Lamb.

Genially. adv. In a genial manner.

1. By genius; naturally. Obsolete.

Some men are genially disposed to some opinions, and naturally as averse to others.—Sir R. Glauville, New Year's Scientific.

2. Cheerfully.

The splendid genially warmth the fertile earth.—Harris, Hermes, l. i. ch. iii.

Genialization. s. Act of kneeling; (Genuflexion communis).

There are five points in question: the solemn festivities; the private use of other sacrament; genialization at the eucharist, &c.—Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 307.

Genie. s. [Fr.] Inclination; disposition; turn of mind. Not naturalized.

Dr. J. Wallis, the keeper of the University registers, &c. did put into the hands of A. Wood the keys of the school-tower, and the key of the room where the said registers, &c. are deposited, to the end that he might advance his current genie in antiquities.—Life of A. Wood, p. 117.

Genio. s. [Italian.] Mum of a particular turn of mind. Rare, not naturalized.

Some genios are not capable of pure affection; and a man is born with talents for it as much as for poetry, or any other science.—Tulder.

Genitals. s. pl. Parts belonging to government.

Jain is conceived to be Jupiter, who was the youngest son, who is said to have cut off the genitals of his father.—Sir T. Browne.

Genetting. s. [see Genetting.] Early apple so called.

In July come early pears and plums in fruit, genettings, and collins.—Bacon.

Genitive. adj. [Lat. genitivus.] In Grammar. Name of the second case in Latin.

All relatives are said to reciprocate, or mutually infer each other; and therefore they are often expressed by this case, that is to say, the genitive.—Harris, Hermes, l. ii. ch. iv.

The relation of possession, or belonging, is often expressed by a case, or different ending of the substantive. The case answers to the genitive case in the Latin, and may still be so called, though perhaps more properly the possessive case.—Bishop Lowth, A short Introduction to English Grammar.

Genitor. s. Sire; father. Rare.

Profane legends . . . termed by their genitors and forefathers golden legends.—Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 18: 1614.

Whosoever is generative, is from him which is the genitor.—Bishop Pearson, Exposition of the Creed, art. 1.

Genitoria. s. Genitals. Rare.

They cut off his genitoria (and they may be was hung like an ass), and sent them for a present to the Duke of Main.—Hoodell, Letters, b. l. lett. xix. (Ord MS.)

Geniture. s. Generation; birth.

This work, by merit first of fame secure, Is likewise happy in its geniture.

Dryden, Epistle to Sir R. Howard, Campbell).

Genius. s. (for plural see extract from Campbell).

1. Protecting or ruling power of men, places, or things.

There is none but he Whose being I do fear; and, under him, My genius is rebuk'd; as it is said Mark Antony was by Cæsar.

Shakspeare, Macbeth, iii. 1.
The genius and the mortal instruments Are then in council; and the state of man, Like to a little kingdom, suffers then.

Id., Julius Cæsar, ii. 1.
And as I wake, sweet music breathe, Sent by some spirit to mortals good; Or th' unseen genius of the wood.

And the tame demon that should guard my throne, Shrinks at a genius greater than his own. Dryden.
To your wild genies sacrifice this day; Let common men's respect fully give way. Id.

Still had she god's; but midst the tide Two angel forms were seen to glide, The genius of the stream. Gray.

The word genii hath by some writers been erroneously adopted for genius. Each is a plural of the same word genius, but in different senses. When genius in the singular means a separate spirit or demon, good or bad, the plural is genii; when it denotes mental abilities, or a person eminently possessed of these, the plural is geniuses.—Campbell, Philosophy of Rhetoric, b. ii. ch. iii. (Ord MS.)

2. Man endowed with superior faculties.

There is no little writer of Pindaric who is not mentioned as a prodigious genius.—Addison.
Among great geniuses, those few draw the admiration of all the world upon them, and stand up as the prodigies of mankind, who by mere strength of natural parts, and without any assistance of art or learning, have produced works that were the delight of their own times, and the wonder of posterity. Id., Spectator, no. 120.

3. Mental power or faculties.

The state and order does proclaim The genius of that royal dame. Walley.

4. Disposition of nature by which any one is qualified for some peculiar employment.

Your majesty's sagacity, and happy genius for natural history, is a better preparation for enquiries of this kind than all the dead learning of the schools. T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth, pref.

One science only will our genius fit; No vast art, so narrow human wit. Pope, Essay on Criticism.

5. Nature; disposition.

Studious to please the genius of the times, With periods, points, and tropes he adorns his crimes. Deplan.

Another genius and disposition improper for philosophical contemplations is not so much from the narrowness of their understanding, as because they will not take time to extend them.—T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth, pref.

He tames the genius of the stubborn plain. Pope.

Gent. adj. Gentle; fair; fine; delicate. Obsolete.

Gowns of silk; why those be too bad, side with a witness. Small and gent i' the waist, but backs as broad as a burghess.

Needless moults, as crisps and scarfs, worn a la mode, Fined with wretts, as sweet as chaute, no want but abundance. R. Green.

Vespaiani, with great spoil and rage, Forewaded all; till Genulus gent

Forewaded him to come. Spenser, Faerie Queene.
She that was noble, wise, so fair and gent, Cast how she might their harmless lives preserve. Fairfax.

Gent. s. Abbreviation for Gentleman.

'I fear you are speaking on a subject of which I know nothing,' said Coningsby, mulling; 'I do not understand business at all; though I am not surprised that, being at Manchester, you should suppose so.'—'Ah! not in business. Item! Professional?'—'No,' said Coningsby, 'I am nothing.'—'Ah! an independent gent! hem! and a very pleasant thing, too.'—Disraeli the younger, Coningsby, b. iv. ch. ii.

'Whom could we get but him to drink Laura's home-made wine?' The truth is the gent who came from the city to dine at the Oval could not be induced to drink it.—Theobald, Book of Snobs, ch. xlii.

And behold at this moment the reverend gent enters from the vestry.—Thackeray, The Newcomes, ii. 60; ed. 1861.

Gentle. adj. [Fr. gentil.]

1. Having a character of gentility; polite; elegant in behaviour, manner, mien, or dress; civil.

He had a gentler manner of blinding the chains of his kingdom than most of his predecessors.—Spenser, The Faerie Queene.

Several ladies that have twice her fortune, are not able to be always so gentle, and so constant at all places of pleasure and expense.—Law.

No spruce that he can never be gentle.—Tatler.
'The society is very good still, is it not?' 'Oh, very gentle,' replied the man; 'but not so shining as it used to be' (oh! these horrid words! how enough to melt even the author of —).—Sir E. R. Lytton, Pelham.

2. As applied to the stage, indicating the manners of gentlemen: (as opposed to finds, buffoons, or other exaggerated characters).

Their parts have no union of gentle comedy, and fall into the most filthy double meanings when they have a mind to make their audience merry.—Addison, Travels in Italy.

Genteel. adj. Somewhat genteel. Rare.

If a young woman has a genteel education, and a small fortune, she stands upon the brink of destruction; and even if she is discreet, she secretly knows what trade to put herself in, in order to be out of the way of temptation.—Joshua Tucker, Essay on Trade, p. 167. (Ord MS.)

Genteelly. adv. In a genteel manner.

Those that would be genteelly learned, need not purchase it at the dear rate of being illiterate.—Glaucius, Scipio's Letters, p. 106.

After a long future of eating and drinking, and building, he concludes the great work of dining genteelly.—Southey, Roderick.

She is not handsome, being very sickly, but seems lively, and genteelly shaped.—Scipio's Letters, Travels through Spain, let. xxxix.

Genteelness. s. Attribute suggested by Genteel.

He had a genius full of genteelness and spirit, having nothing that was ungraceful in his postures and dresses.—Dryden, Translation of In Virgil's Art of Painting.

Præcædence has denuded the genteelness of modern effeminacy, by uniting it with the simplicity of the ancients and the grandeur and severity of Michael Angelo.—Sir J. Reynolds.

Gentian. s. [Lat. gentiana; said to be named after Gentius, king of Illyria, who first discovered the virtues of the plant.] Native plants so called of the genus Gentiana.

We in England call it crosswort gentian; but the ordinary word is called gentian, which is a learned word mixed of Latin and English together, or rather, word of some Italianism. The Latins call the lesser sort gentianella.—Cole, Adam in Paradise, ch. cxxx.

The root of gentian is large and hard, of a tolerably firm texture, and remarkably tough: it has a faintish and disagreeable smell, and an extremely bitter taste.—Sir J. Hill, Materia Medica.

If it be bluish, and the orifice small, dilate it with gentian root.—Wicquart, Surgery.

Gentianella. s. Garden plant so called of the genus Gentiana: (it is also given as an approximately English name to the rare native plant Schwertia).

(For example see first extract under Gentian.)

Gentile. s. [Lat. gentilis.—Its import here is not so much that of a derivative of gens, with its ordinary Latin signification of clan, sept, family, caste, or tribal division in general, as that of the Greek ἔθνος, from ἔθνος = nation. And, even of this, the sense is that of the Greek of the New Testament rather than that of the classical writers, or the language in general.] One belonging to the nations of the world in general, as opposed to the particular and privileged nation of the Jews; i.e. the nations beyond the pale of the true religion. As Christianity spread, it meant heathen or pagan. For the strictly Latin meaning of gens, see Gentile.

Tribulation and anguish upon every soul that doth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the gentile.—Romans, ii. 2.

Gentiles or infidels, in those actions, upon both the spiritual and temporal good, have been in one pursuit conjoined.—Bacon.

Gentilèsse. s. [Fr. gentillesse.] Character of a person of gentle birth. Obsolete.

Her years advancing her to the use of reason, there was a pretty emulation among them, who should render her mistress of the most gentilèsse, and teach her the most witty and subtle discourses, to serve her upon all occasions.—History of France, 1655. (Nares by H. & W.)

She with her wedding clothes undresses Her complaisance and gentilèsse.

Rather, Hudibras.

Gentilish. adj. Heathenish; pagan. Rare.
Not fitting the (tongue of Scripture to a Gentilish idiom.—Milton, Tetrachordon.

Gentilism. s. Heathenism; paganism.

If invocation of saints had been produced in the apostolical times, it would have looked like the introduction of gentilism again.—Bishop Stillingfleet.

He that if he had been born of heathen parents, or put out to nurse to an Indian, would have sucked in as much of gentilism as Heavenward, Works, iv. 511.

The Greeks, in the time of sickness and mourning for the dead, retain not only customs by us accounted superstitions, but also savouring somewhat of ancient gentilism.—Sir P. Eynard, View of State of the Greek and Arian Church, p. 250.

Gentilitions. adj. Peculiar to a nation; hereditary; entailed on a family.

That an unnecessary labour is gentilitions or national into the Jews, reason or sense will not induce.—Sir T. Browne.

The common cause of this distemper is a particular and perhaps a gentilitions disposition of body.—Arbutnot.

Gentility. s.

1. Position of a gentleman.

'Tis meet a gentle heart should ever shew By courtesy the fruit of true gentility.—Sir J. Harrington.

I have read Shakspeare at Lincoln's Inn, and have published my Canons of Criticism; and for this I am to be decreed of my gentility.—Edwards, Canons of Criticism, pref.

All the men of quality [begin] to speak the Gallic idiom in their houses, as a high strain of gentility.—Harris, Philological Inquiries.

2. Genteel character.

I hope for the future the dignity, and I may add (tho' it be an old word) the gentility, of the school, will still be maintained upon a parity with its two sisters; and this I say, being fully convinced we have clarity-schools enough already, without sinking so respectable an institution as that of Winchester into that inferior and plebeian class.—James Harris to Dr. Warburton, Wind's Memoirs. (Ord MS.)

3. Gentry.

Gentry must needs, in the end, make a poor gentility.—Sir J. Davies, Discourse on the State of Ireland.

4. Paganism; heathenism.

When people began to copy the falsehood of oracles, whereupon all gentility was built, their hearts were utterly averted from it.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Gentilize. v. n. Live as, affect or become invested with the character of, a gentile.

Gentilizing. part. adj. Bearing one's self as a gentile.

This is not my conjecture, but drawn from God's known denunciation against the gentilizing Israelites.—Milton, Way to establish a Free Commonwealth.

Gentle. s. [?] Larva of the fleshy, and other insects, found in currian, and used by anglers (to whom the word is probably limited) as a bait.

He will in the three hot months bite at a flounder, or at a green gentle.—Isaac Walton, Compleat Angler.

Gentile. adj. [Fr. gentil; from Lat. gentilis.] connected with, or belonging or attached to, a gens; gen. gentilis; plural gentes. Like clan, sept, house, tribe, and several other words of like import, gens is a difficult word to render in another language, so much so, that in many works upon the history and constitution of Rome it is left untranslated, and the division to which, for example, Julius Caesar or Cornelius Sylla belonged, is called the Julian or the Cornelian gens. Connection, however, with some gens or other was essential to the possession of the highest status in the way of Roman citizenship. Hence, as a series of secondary meanings, pedigree, lineage, purity of blood, good birth, descent, breeding, and the like. It is from gentilis in this sense, introduced into our own language from the French, that gentle—gentleman, and its numerous congeners, are derived. For gentilis with another signification, see Gentile.]

1. Well born; well descended, though not noble.

They entering and killing all of the gentle and rich faction, for honesty sake broke open all prisons.—Sir P. Sidney.

These are the studies wherein our noble and gentle youth ought to bestow their time.—Milton, Tractate on Education.

Of gentle blood, part shed in honour's cause, Pope.

Each parent springs.

2. Belittling a gentleman.

For all so soon as she did me admit Into this world, and showed heaven's light, From mother's lap I taken was midwit, And straight deliver'd to a fiery knight, To be upbraught in gentle threats and martial might. Spenser, Faerie Queene, l. 9, 2.

3. Soft; bland; mild; tame; meek; peaceable.

I am one of those gentle ones that will use the devil himself with courtesy.—Shakspeare, Twelfth Night, iv. 2.

The gentle heart on earth is prov'd unkind.

Your chance was wise; for, had she been deny'd, A swift revenge had follow'd from her pride; You from my gentle nature had no fears; All my revenge is only in my tears. Dryden, Indian Emperour.

4. Soothing; pacific.

And though this sense first gentle music found, Her proper object is the speech of men. Sir J. Davies.

Gentle. s. Gentleman; man of birth: (Gentleman the commoner term).

Gentle, do not repent; If you pardon, we will mend. Shakspeare, A Lover's Complaint.

Where is my lovely bride?

How does my father? Gentle, methinks you frown. Id., Taming of the Shrew, iii. 2.

Spelt -ile.

Fine Basil desireth it may be her lot To grow as a willow-herb, trim in her pad; That ladies and gentles, for whom we do serve, May help him as we do, poor life to preserve. Tranter, Five Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Gentle. v. a. Make gentle. Obsolete.

He today that sheds his blood with me, Shall be my brother; he be never so vile, This day shall gentle his condition. Shakspeare, Henry V. iv. 3.

Gentlefolk. s. Persons distinguished by their birth from the vulgar.

The queen's kindred are made gentlefolk. Shakspeare, Richard III. l. 1.

Gentlefolk will not care for the remainder of a bottle of wine; therefore set a fresh one before them. —Swift.

Gentleman. s. [See Gentle; a gentleman being, in the first instance, a member of one of the classes or divisions of the body politic invested with the rights, privileges, or characteristics in general of a gens, or some like honourable class. The test of such a relation might be either actual descent, or certain rights and privileges, e.g. that of bearing coat armour, holding certain offices or professions. As long as the criterion is of this kind, the application of the term is comparatively easy; and a gentleman is the member of a definite class, the only question being as to the extent to which he has all its characteristics.

Thus far the contrast is between the gentleman and the members of the classes below him. As compared, however, with a nobleman, he is in a somewhat subaltern position, the gentry being often opposed to the nobility; though, in reality, every nobleman is, a fortiori, a gentleman, just as every officer is a soldier; though expressions to the contrary, founded upon refinements as to the characteristics of the class, are common enough on both sides; e.g.

1049

'Lord A. is no gentleman; 'Captain B. is no soldier.'

This explains the following definition, which stands as in the previous editions:—

1. Man of birth; man of extraction, though not noble.

Chin became a churl from the curse of God, and soth a gentleman through his father and mother's blessing. —Dame Juliana Berners, Treatise on Chaucer's Art. 1486.

A civil war was within the bowels of that state, between the gentle and the peasant. —Sir P. Sidney.

I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins; I was a gentleman.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iii. 2.

Inquire me out some mean-born gentleman,
Whom I will marry straight to Clarence's daughter.
Id., Richard III. iv. 2.

He hither came a private gentleman,
But young and brave, and of a family
Ancient and noble. —Id., Othello.

You say a long descended race
Makes gentlemen, and that your high degree
Is much disparaged to be match'd with me. Id., Othello.

He is so far from desiring to be used as a gentleman, that he desires to be used as the servant of a gentleman. —Law.

2. The secondary meanings of gentle are still more complicated. Whatever in the way of gracefulness or graciousness is either actually connected with, or supposed to be deduced from, the good blood, or the favourable social position, of a gentleman whatever, too, is suggested by the word gentle or gentler, may pass as an element in the definition of a gentleman. Hence, there are, in fact, two different words: a member of the class of gentry being one thing, an individual with the characteristics of a gentleman being another. The import of the word, then, varies with the condition of the speaker; the practical rule being that every one, who has any pretensions to it at all, whoever else he may exclude, always includes himself. This tendency to laxity of import is favoured by the ordinary colloquial use of the negative expression 'no gentleman,' which means a great deal more than not a gentleman. In many cases a euphemism for blackguard, it has a tendency to dichotomize the whole class of men, making them all either gentlemen or the very opposite. The correlative to gentleman in the way of sex is Lady rather than gentlewoman. Lady, however, has a similar relation to Lord.

The dictionary meaning is marked out in a broad hint way, and probably includes all that was originally necessary for the correct employment of the term; but in process of time so many collateral associations adhere to words, that wherever should attempt to use them with no other guide than the dictionary, would confound a thousand nice distinctions and subtle shades of meaning which dictionaries take no account of; as we notice in the use of a language in conversation or writing by a foreigner not thoroughly master of it. The history of a word, by showing the causes which determined its use, is in these cases a better guide to its employment than any definition; for definitions can only show it meaning at the particular time, or at most the series of its successive meanings, but its history may show the law by which the succession was produced. The word gentleman, for instance, in the correct employment of which a dictionary would be no guide, originally meant simply a man born in a certain rank. From this it came by degrees to denote all such qualities or advantageous circumstances as were usually found to belong to persons of that rank. This consideration at once explains why in one of its vulgar acceptations it means any one who lives without labour, and in its more elevated significance it has in every age signified the refined, character, habits, and outward appearance, in whomsoever found, which, according to the ideas of that age, belonged or were expected to belong to persons born and educated in a high social position. —J. R. Mill, System of Logic, iv. ch. v. § 1.

3. Term of complaisance: (sometimes ironical.)

The same gentlemen who have fixed this piece of morality on the three naked sisters dancing hand in hand, would have found out as good a one had there been four of them sitting at a distance, and covered from head to foot. —Aldouson.

You see among men, who are honoured with the common appellation of gentlemen, so many contradictions to that character, that it is the utmost ill-fortune to bear it. —Tulley, no 66.

4. One who attends the person, or regulates the ceremonial, of a man of rank: (used sometimes adjectively, the page and esquire, as compared with the noble and knight, being its nearest analogues.)

Thomas More, the Sunday after he gave up his chanceryship, came to his wife's page, and used the usual words of his gentlemanly usher, Madam, my lord is gone. —Cruden.

Let be call'd before us
That gentleman of Buckingham's in person.
Shakespeare, Henry VIII. i. 2.

Gentlemanlike. adj. Like, or becoming, a gentleman. See Gentlemanly.

Tyrannus is a sweet-fac'd man; a proper man as our shall see in a summer's day; a most lovely gentlemanlike man. —Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, i. 2.

My father charged you in his will to give me good education: you have train'd me up like a peasant, hiding from me all gentlemanlike qualities. —Id., As you like it, i. 1.

James supposed that the prioste was struck dumb by the irresistible force of reason, and eagerly embraced his grievance to produce, with the help of the whole episcopal bench, a satisfactory reply. 'Let me have a solid answer, and in a gentlemanlike style; and it may have the effect which you so much desire of bringing me over to your church.' —Macaulay, History of England, ch. vi.

Gentlemanly. adj. [ly—like.] Gentlemanlike, of which it is a secondary form.

For a distinction between the two compounds, see the second extract under Gentlemanly. It implies that a gentlemanlike person may be anything but a gentleman in reality, being merely an imitation of one; whereas to be gentlemanly is to have the true and actual character of gentility. Whether the distinction be worth encouraging or neglecting, the identity in the way of derivation should be remembered.

He huddeth himself a gentleman, and swearneth to work, which, he saith, is the life of a peasant or churl; but curseth himself to his weapon, and to the gentlemanly trade of stealing! —Spenser, Fair of the State of Ireland.

Two clergyman stood candidates for a free-school, where a gentleman procured the place for the better scholar and more gentlemanly person of the two. —Swift.

Gentlemanship. s. Carriage of a gentleman; quality of a gentleman.

His fine gentlemanship did him no good. —Lord Melford.

He treated me in a gentlemanlike manner: it should rather be gentlemanly; otherwise it is a reflection, as if his gentlemanship was affected, or mine was doubtful. —Pegge, Anecdotes of the English Language.

Gentleness. s. Attribute suggested by Gentle.

1. Goodness of extraction.

Gentleness and gentility are the same thing; and if they are not the same words, they come from one and the same original: from whence likewise is derived the word gentleman. —Pegge, Anecdotes, i. 46.

2. Gentlemanly conduct.

I must confess,
I thought you lord of more true gentleness.
Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, ii. 2.
I love measure in the foot, and number in the voice; they are gentleness, that oftentimes draw no less than the face. —B. Jonson, Epicure.

3. Softness of manners; sweetness of disposition; meekness; tenderness.

My lord Sebastian,
The truth you speak doth lack some gentleness.
Shakespeare, Tempest, ii. 1.

Your brow and haughty scorn of all,
Was stately and monarchical;
All gentleness with that counten'd,
A dull and slavish virtue seem'd.
Cowley.

Her maiden gentleness, and oft at eye
Visits the herds. —Milton, Comus, 342.

The perpetual gentleness and inherent goodness of the Ormond family. —Dryden, Roderick, Dedication.
Moderns must correct their servants with gentleness, prudence, and mercy. —Bayly.
Women ought not to think gentleness of heart despicable in a man. —Richardson, Clarissa.

4. Kindness; benevolence. Obsolete.

he meant it in, they murmure and grudge, and say, the gentlen in have all, and there never were so many gentlemen and so little gentleness. —R. Golpin, Sermon before King Edward VI. p. 41.

The gentleness of all the gods go with thee.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 1.

Gentleship. s. Carriage, rank, condition, or character, of a gentleman. Obsolete.

Some in France, which will needs be gentleness, have more gentleship in their last than in their first. —Lockham, Schoolmaster.

Gentlewoman. s.

1. Woman of birth above the vulgar; woman well descended.

The gentlewoman of Rome did not suffer the infants to be so long swathed in poorer people. —Abbot, Description of the World.

2. Lady.

Gentlewomen may do themselves much good by kneeling upon a cushion and weeping. —Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

They were shy to the strangers, but the eldest acquainted her father that her mother and the young gentlewoman were up, and that breakfast was ready. —Fichtelberg, Adventures of Joseph Andrewe.

3. Woman who waits about the person of one of high rank.

The late queen's gentlewoman, a knight's daughter, to be her mistress' mistress.

Her gentlewoman, like the Nereids,
So many mermaids, tended her f' the eyes,
And made their heads adorings. —Id., Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2.

4. Word of civility or irony.

Now, gentlewoman, you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical downcast look. —Dryden.

- Gentry. adv. In a gentle manner; softly; meekly; tenderly; indolently; kindly; without violence.

Fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gently wardied, craves
A noble cunning. —Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 1.

A sort of great hat, as men lie asleep with their heads naked, will suck their blood at a wound so gently made as not to awake them. —Grew, Anatomia.
My mistress gently chides the fault I made. —Dryden.

The mischiefs that come by inadvertency, or ignorance, are but very gently to be taken notice of. —Locke.

Gentry. s.

1. Birth; condition; rank derived from inheritance.

You are certainly a gentleman,
Clerk-like, experienced, which no less adorns
Our gentry than our parents' noble name,
In whose success we are gentle.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.

2. Class of people above the vulgar; those between the vulgar and the nobility.

They slaughtered many of the gentry, for whom no sex or age could be accepted for excuse. —Sir P. Sidney.

How cheerfully the hawkers cry
A satire, and the gentry buy. —Swift.

Of our old gentry he appeared a stem.
Lamb, Sonnet to Rogers, on the Death of his Brother.

3. Term of civility real or ironical.

The many-edged gentry there above,
By turns are rind'd by tumult and by love. —Prior.

4. Civility; complaisance. Obsolete.

Show us so much gentry and good will,
As to extend your time with us a while.
Shakespeare, Hamlet, ii. 2.

Genuflection. s. [Lat. genu = knee, and flecto = bend.] Act of bending the knee; adoration expressed by bending the knee.

Books and shoes are so long smanted, that one can hardly kneel in God's house, where all genuflection and postures of devotion and decency are quite out of use. —Hanell, Letters, iii. 2. 11th.

Here we all the rites of adoration, genuflections, wax-candles, incense, oblations, prayers only excepted. —Bishop Stillingfleet.

It is proper here to observe, that out of the numerous witnesses who must have beheld Henrietta performing such extraordinary genuflections at the gallows-tree, not one was examined before the privy-council; therefore the statement is utterly without evidence. —Agnes Strickland, Lives of the Queens of England, Henrietta Maria.

Genuine. adj. [Lat. genninus.] Unadulterated; real; natural; true: (as opposed to adulterated, sophisticated, counterfeit, spurious).

Experiments were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones.—Hople.

The belief and remembrance, and love and fear of God, have so great influence to make men religious, that where any of these is, the rest, together with the true and genuine effects of them, are supposed to be.—Archbishop Tillotson.

A sudden darkness covers all;

True genuine night: night added to the groves.

Dryden.

Genuinely, adv. In a genuine manner; without adulteration; without foreign admixtures; naturally.

There is another agent able to analyze compound bodies less violently, more genuinely, and more universally than the fire.—Hople.

Genuineness, s. Attribute suggested by Genuine; freedom from anything counterfeit; freedom from adulteration; purity; natural state.

To show how day and night, winter and summer, arise from Copernicus his hypothesis, will not only explain these verses, but extremely set out the fitness and genuineness of the hypothesis itself.—Dr. H. More, Essay of the Soul, vol. 2, p. 114; 1617.

It is not essential to the genuineness of colours to be durable.—Hople.

Not was the standard at Oxford higher. When, in the reign of William the Third, Christ Church rose up as one man to defend the genuineness of the Epistles of Phalaris, that great college, then considered as the first seat of philology in the kingdom, could not muster such a stock of Attic learning as is now possessed by several youths at every great public school.—Jacobson, History of England, ch. 11.

Genus, s. [Lat. pl. genera; whence generalis general.] Genus, especially in its oblique form, generis, &c., is the fundamental term upon which General, Generalize, &c., have been framed; and, as such, though a Latin rather than an English word, commands attention. It is the basis of a class of words which are not only important in themselves, but have a special bearing on language. The difference between general (an approximate synonym for common) and proper (or individual) names, to go no further, indicates this. The question as to its import falls under two heads: the main word with which it is connected being Species.

It is of Greek origin: the Greek for genus being γένος; the Greek for species being εἶδος. Genos is connected with the root of γενέσθαι, which appears in a simpler form in γενέσθαι, and also in the Latin genus (the word before us) and genero, &c.; gignere (i.e. with the interposed g) being also a Latin word. Word for word, it is also the English kin, kind; a difference in genus being, presumptively, a difference of kind, as opposed to one of degree; or, mutatis mutandis, a difference of species, respect being had to Varieties. This points to a relation in the way of origin, or connection in the way of pedigree, being the leading notion with genus, rather than with any perceptible qualities independent of community of descent.

Species, on the other hand, is the Latin for εἶδος, both being connected with words indicating sight, or the thing seen; Latin species = view; Greek εἶδος = see. This points to a relation in the way of a connection in physical or visible properties.

On the relation of genus to species turns the leading principle as to the heading of the two great divisions under which the meanings are to be classified. The first contains the cases where genus and species each mean simply—

1. Group; class. A group or class may contain others; inasmuch as one class may contain another: e.g. the class of Englishmen is contained in that of men, and that of men in that of animals, that of animals in that of organized beings, and so on in the way of both ascent and descent; Londoners belonging to a group subordinate to that of Englishmen. A term, such as object of thought, which includes everything, and which can be subordinated to nothing else, is the name of the highest (summum) genus. A single individual so separated from its nearest congeners as to form a class by itself gives the lowest (infimum) genus. All the others are subalternate, or Subaltern; each being larger than the one below it, and smaller than the one above it.

In this way species and genus both mean the same thing, i.e. class; the only point worth noting being that, wherever the two came together, species is always the lower, and never the higher, denomination; to which it may be added that, after certain visible outward signs of connection have disappeared, there is no chance of species ever being used.

Thus far both genus and species denote a mental rather than a real classification; i.e. meaning group or class, however determined, with the only reservation that genus is the higher denomination. If from (say) the term Englishman in the foregoing series of illustrations we descend to Londoner, we specialize; if from the same term we ascend to animal, we generalize.

A general idea is called by the schools genus, and it is one common nature agreeing to several other common natures: animal is a genus because it agrees to horse, &c., whale, and lambs.—Locke.

Observing many individuals to agree in certain attributes, we refer them all to one genus, and give a name to the class. . . . When a class is very large, it is divided into subordinate classes; . . . the higher class is called a genus or kind; the lower a species or sort of the higher. . . . In this distribution of things into genus and species it is evident that the name of the species comprehends more attributes than the name of the genus. . . . Hence, it is an axiom in logic that the more extensive any general term is, it is the less comprehensive, and, on the contrary, the more comprehensive, the less extensive. Thus, in the following series of subordinate general terms—Animal—Mammal—Præmammal—Præmammalian, every subsequent term comprehends in its signification all that is in the preceding, and something more; and every antecedent term extends to more individuals than the subsequent.—Acad. Essay on the Human Mind, ch. 1.

2. Here, species is something more than a subaltern genus, inasmuch as it is the name of a class which contains individuals connected, or supposed to be connected, by community of descent; its chief use being in Zoology. It is physical rather than mental.

Nothing has a greater tendency to lead to the mistake just noticed, and thus to produce unreflected verbal questions and fruitless homonymy, than the prevalence of the notion of the realists, that genus and species are some real things, existing independently of our conceptions and expressions.

There is one circumstance which ought to be noticed, as having probably contributed not a little to foster this error: I mean, the peculiar technical sense of the word 'species' when applied to organized beings. It has been laid down in the course of this work, that when several individuals are observed to resemble each other in some point, a common name may be assigned to them indicating (implying, or 'comprising') that point,—applying to all or any of them so far forth as respects that common attribute,—and distinguishing them from all others; as, e.g. the several individual buildings, which, however different in other respects, agree in being constructed for men's dwelling, are called by the common name of 'House'; and, as we select at pleasure the circumstance that we choose to abstract, we may thus refer the same individual to any one of several different species, and again, the same species, to any genus or to another, according as it suits our purpose; whence it seems plainly to follow that genus and species are no real things existing independent of our thoughts, but are creatures of our own minds. Yet in the case of species of organized beings, it seems at first sight as if this rule did not hold good.—Whately, Logic, b. iv. ch. v. § 1.

Two courses have been followed in providing names for these subordinate groups. 1. The original genus (considering the case of genus in the first place) have been preserved (if well founded); and the lower groups have been called subgenera, tribes, subtribes, divisions, &c.; and the original names of the genus have been maintained for the purpose of nomenclature, in order to retain a convenient and stable language. But when these subordinate groups are so well defined and so natural, that except for the convenience of language, they might be made good genera, there are given also to these subordinate groups, substantive or substantively-taken adjective names. When these subordinate groups are less defined or less natural, either to names at all are given, and they are distinguished by figures or signs such as *, , or § 1, § 2, &c., or there are given them more adjective names.—Dr. 2. To regard these intermediate groups between species and the original genus, as so many independent genera; and to give them substantive names, to be used in ordinary botanical nomenclature. Now the second course is that which has prevailed the noticeable multiplication of genera in modern times. . . . In a purely scientific view it matters little if the orders are converted into genera, or the genera into orders, and the second course is adopted.

Genus: their relative importance does not depend on the names given to them, but on their rank in the scale of comprehensiveness. . . . If, independently of the inevitable increase of genera by new discoveries, such old ones as Lions, Leopards, Arms, Ears, &c., are divided into ten, twenty, thirty, or forty independent genera, with names and characters which are to be recalled before any one species can be spoken of,—if genera are to be reckoned by tens of thousands instead of by hundreds,—the range of any individual botanist will be limited to a small portion of the whole field of the sciences.—Whately, History of Scientific Ideas.

It is surprising that the translator should find any difficulty respecting the two well-known words class and genus, of such frequent employment in the writings of Aristotle, and so familiar to both naturalists and metaphysicians. It is true they are sometimes used rather loosely in the History of Animals, but this seldom gives rise to any difficulty. The word class, in the language of Aristotle, signifies not merely form but species, and also the essence of a thing, that which constitutes it what it is. As to genus, there is no difficulty whatever. Aristotle knew as well as we what classes and orders mean, though he did not use our phraseology; but he speaks of a summun genus and subaltern genera. Thus, birds form an order, or summun genus, and palmated birds a subaltern genus.—Natural History Review.

Whatever resembles the genus Rose more than it resembles any other genus, does so because it possesses a greater number of the characters of that genus, than of the characters of any other genus.—J. S. Mill, System of Logic.

Geocentric, adj. [Gr. γῆ = earth, σέντρον = point, centre.] Having the earth as a centre.

Arithmetic and geometry have long been standard portions of the education of cultured persons throughout the civilized world; and hence all such persons have been able to accept and comprehend those portions of science which depend upon the idea of space; for instance, the doctrine of the globular form of the earth, with its consequences, such as the mensuration of latitude and longitude; the heliocentric system of the universe in modern, or the geocentric in ancient times;—the explanation of the rainbow, and the like.—Whately, History of Scientific Ideas.

Geode, s. [?] In Geology. Concretion, generally of an oval shape, containing a smaller one lying loose within; the Ætites (from Gr. αἴτης eagle) = and Eaglestone of the older mineralogists.

Nothing except an outer wall and few remains; on part of which is a vast stratum of ferruginous pyrites.—Præntiss, Journey from Chester to London, p. 102. (Rich.)

Geodetical, adj. Connected with, relating to, or consisting in, Geodesy.

Entering the naval service as a cadet in 1803, Zährmann served as a lieutenant in many arduous and perilous services during the remaining years of the old war. At the general peace he betook himself entirely to geodetical and hydrographic labours, and was employed in the construction of an arc of the meridian.—Sir R. I. Murchison, Address to the Geographical Society, 1853.

Geodesy, s. [Gr. γῆ = earth, μετρέω = divide, Geometrical, or mathematical, or scientific geography; surveying of the earth's surface with special reference to the divisions in the way of degrees (of latitude or longitude) and minutes; the measurement of elevations.

Geodesy is that branch of applied mathematics which determines the figures and areas of large portions of the earth's surface, the general figure of the earth, and the variations of the intensity of gravity in different regions, by means of direct observation and measurement. — Vulgar Cyclopaedia, Arts and Sciences Division, in voce.

Geodetic. adj. Same as Geodesical.

This year these different undertakings will be continued, and signals will be fixed for the measurement of the parallel to the east of Madrid, with the intention of linking, concurrently with this work, simultaneous and reciprocal observations to determine the geodetic level, and settle with accuracy the elevation of Madrid above the Mediterranean, presumed at present upon the most received existing calculations to be 100 metres, which is, perhaps, within ten inches of the truth. — Lord Ashburton, Address to the Geographical Society, May 26, 1842.

Geognostic. adj. Relating to Geognosy.

(For example see extract under Geology.)

Geognosy. s. [Gr. γη = earth, γινωσκω = know.] Knowledge, or study, of the structure of the crust of the earth in respect to the large mineral masses. See Geology.

Geognosy, less intent upon inquiring into the primordial state of the globe, is contented with observing, collecting, and arranging simple facts, in order to ascertain what can be known, respecting the relative situation and ages of mineral substances. — Rees, Cyclopaedia.

Geographer. s. One who describes or studies the earth geographically.

A greater part of the earth has ever been peopled than hath been known or described by geographers. — Sir T. Browne.

The bay of Naples is called the Crater by the old geographers: — Adrian.

France was known, from realm to realm I rose, And grew a never geographer for love. — Tickell.

Geographical. adj. Relating, or belonging, to geography.

When we came to geographical knowledge, in the proper sense of the word, we find it surprisingly scanty, even at the close of the sixteenth century. It had not, however, been neglected, so far as multiplicity of books could prove a regard to it. Ortelius, in his Theatrum Orbis Terrarum (the first edition of which was in 1579, augmented afterwards by several maps of later dates), gives a list of about 150 geographical treatises, most of them subsequent to 1550. His own work is the first general Atlas since the revival of letters, and has been justly reckoned to make an epoch in geography, being the basis of all collections of maps since formed, and deserving, it is said, even yet to be consulted, notwithstanding the vast progress of our knowledge of the earth. — Hallam, Introduction to the Literature of Europe in the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth centuries, pt. ii. ch. viii. §§ 51, 52.

Geographically. adv. In a geographical manner; according to the rules of geography.

Minerva lets Ulysses into the knowledge of his country; sin geographically describes it to him. — Brown, On the Odyssey.

Geography. s. [Gr. γεωγραφία = description of the earth; γη = earth, and γραφω = write, describe.] Description or investigation of the earth, with special respect to its divisions, whether physical or political, and the details of its configuration; Geognosy relating chiefly to its mineral composition, and Geology to its history, and the forces by which its changes were effected. See Geology.

Olympus is extolled by the Greeks as attaining unto heaven; but geography makes slight account hereof, when they discourse of Audax or Teneriff. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

(See also extract under Geological.)

Geological. adj. Relating to, connected with,

or consisting in, geology.

The Annals have not hitherto been sufficiently regarded in the great questions of zoological geography. But especially have they been ignored during that most important of considerations which has been so ably brought forward of late years by some of our best and ablest naturalists — namely, the distribution of animals, as affected by geological changes on the earth's surface. ... We cannot doubt that there is much to be discovered in the past history of insect dissemination, which would tend, when rightly interpreted, to explain many of the occult phenomena of the present day; and we may be equally satisfied that this cannot by any possibility be attempted without the assistance of geology. ... During my researches in mountain tracts, I have usually remarked that the highest points of land either seem with life, or else are perfectly barren. My own experience would certainly tend to prove that, in a general sense, one or the other of these extremes does almost constantly obtain. And, although I would not wish to dogmatize on phenomena which may in reality be explicable on other hypotheses, it would perhaps be worth while to enquire whether the geological movements of subsidence and elevation will not afford some clue to the right interpretation of them. Mountain-chains also are barriers; but it may happen that they have not been so from the beginning — as in instances, for example, where they have been gradually upraised during periods geologically recent. — T. V. Wallaston, On the Variation of Species, ch. v.

Geologically. adj. In a geological manner, or manner explained by geology.

(For example see extract under Geological.)

Geologist. s. One who studies geology.

The geologist who would interpret the grand phenomena of the earth's crust apart from statical and dynamical knowledge, and without the help which the chemist, mineralogist, anatomist, zoologist, and botanist can afford him, stands a fair chance of leaving his problems unsolved. — Wallaston, On the Variation of Species, ch. v.

Geology. s. Investigation of the history of the earth, as deduced from the phenomena of its existing crust, and a calculation of the forces by which the changes that produced it were effected. Different from Geognosy in the extent to which stress is laid upon the causes rather than the results; and from Geography in its historical, rather than its formal, bearing. This, with geography, gives us the best, perhaps the typical or standard, illustration of the compounds in -logy and -graphy. The former implies a principle, power, or force; the latter a simple statement of phenomena. That the line of demarcation between the two is by no means accurately defined, is well known to those who work on both sides. Many geologists are chiefly geographers, and many geographers, geologists. Yet the difference between a description and a calculation of forces which would give the phenomena described, is decided. The extent to which the two series of compounds run into one another is shown in two classes of names: (1) those that were cultivated before the two elements had a definitely separate import; (2) those that have been developed but lately, e.g. between Ethnography and Ethnology; there is no such distinction as geography and geology. As a general rule, however, -logy implies the calculation of forces and coincides with principle; -graphy with description, and means a statement of phenomena.

A third element, -nomy, is usefully brought under notice when this distinction is illustrated. The element -nomy agrees with -logy more than with -graphy. There is no such science as astrophysics; though, word for word, this is as good Greek or English as either of the other two. The words that exist are astronomy and astrology; each of which, for different reasons, are more connected with -logy than with -graphy. The one has the legitimately calculational, the other the illegitimately calculational, element. Neither, however, means description, as -graphy means description in geography. The excuse for the length of these remarks is the extent to which forms in -logy and -graphy are confounded, and (in the formation of new terms) forms in -nomy neglected.

It was impossible that men of inquiring temper should not have been led to reflect on these remarkable judgements of the earth's visible structure, which being in course of time accurately registered and arranged, have become the basis of that noble science, the boast of our age, geology. ... The Mundus Subterraneus of Athanasius Kircher, famous for the variety and originality of his erudition, contains probably the geology of his age, or at least his own. It was published in 1666. Ten out of twelve books relate to the surface or the interior of the earth, and to various terrene productions; the remaining two to alchemy and other arts connected with mineralogy. Kircher seems to have collected a great deal of geographical and geological knowledge. In England, the spirit of observation was so strong after the establishment of the Royal Society, that the Philosophical Transactions in this period contain a considerable number of geological papers, and the genius of theory was aroused, though not at first in his happiest mood. — Hallam, Introduction to the Literature of Europe in the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth centuries, pt. iv. ch. viii. § 51.

Geomancer. s. Fortuneteller; caster of figures; cheat who pretends to foretell futurity by other means than the astrologer.

Fortunetellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the incantatory impostors, though commonly men of inferior rank, daily delude the vulgar. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Geomancy. s. [Gr. μαντια = prophecy.] Art of foretelling what shall happen by means of divination connected with the earth.

According to some there are four kinds of divination: hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy. — Apliff, Esopum Juris Casuisticum.

He therefore sent out all his senses, To bring him in intelligence; Which vulgars, out of ignorance, Mistake for falling in a trance; But those that trade in geomancy, Allege to be the strength of fancy.

Butler, Hudibras.

Geomantic. adj. Pertaining to the art of casting figures.

Two geomantic figures were display'd Above his head, a warrior and a maid; One when direct, and one when retrograde. — Dryden.

Geometer. s. [Gr. γεωμετρικος.] One skilled in geometry; geometrician.

The plane of many-sided squares, That would be drawn out by geometers, Bishop Hall, Satires, v. 2. He discerns presently, by your judgement of selection, what a geometer you are like to prove. — Wallis, Corruptio of Hobbes, § 1.

He became one of the chief geometers of his age. — Wallis.

What geometer ever died to vindicate the certainty of geometry? — Milnes, History of Latin Christianity, b. xiv. ch. iii.

Geometers have, in all ages, been open to the imputation of endeavouring to prove the most sacred facts of the outward world by subtilties reason, in order to avoid appeals to the senses. — J. S. Mill, System of Logic, b. iii. ch. v. § 5.

Geometric. adj. Relating to, consisting in, or arranged according to, geometry.

Geometrick Jasper sought to affinity with the lapis lazulis described by Boetius; but it is certainly one sort of lapis crystallinus. — Gree, Museum.

Does not this wise philosopher assert, That the vast orb, which crush'd so far his beams, Is such, or not much larger than he seems? That the dimensions of his globe are seen? Two geometrick feet does scarce surpass? — Sir R. Blackmore.

Geometrical. adj.

1. Pertaining to geometry.

A geometrical scheme is let in by the eyes, but the demonstration is discovered by reason. — Dr. H. More, Antichrist against Athens.

This mathematical discipline, by the help of geometrical principles, doth teach to contrive several powers. — Wilkins.

2. Prescribed or laid down by geometry.

Must men take the measure of God just by the same geometrical proportions that he did, that gather'd the height and largeness of Hercules by his foot? — Bishop Stillingfleet.

Geometrically. adv. In a geometrical manner; according to the laws of geometry.

'Tis possible geometrically to contrive such an artificial motion as shall be of greater swiftness than the revolutions of the heavens. — Bishop Wilkins, Mathematical Magick.

All the bones, muscles, and vessels of the body are contrived most geometrically, according to the strictest rules of mechanics. — Ray, On the Wisdom of God as manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Geometrician. s. One skilled in geometry; geometer.

Although there be a certain truth, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration thereof. — Sir T. Browne.

How easily does an expert geometrician, with one glance of his eye, take in a complicated diagram, made up of many lines and circles.—Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

Geometrical. v. n. Act according to the laws of geometry.

We obtain good store of crystals, whose figures were differing enough, though pretty shaped, as if nature had at once affected variety in their formation, and yet confined herself to geometrical.—Boyle.

Geometry. s. [Gr. γεωμετρία; Fr. géométrie.] Originally signifies the art of measuring the earth, or any distances or dimensions on or within it; but it is now used for the science of quantity, extension, or magnitude abstractedly considered, without any regard to matter.

Geometry very probably had its first rise in Egypt, where the Nile annually overflowing the country, and covering it with mud, obliged men to distinguish their lands one from another, by the consideration of their figure; and after which, 'tis probable, to be able also to measure the quantity of it, and to know how to plot it, and lay it out again in its just dimensions, figure and proportion; after which, it is likely, a further contemplation of those draughts and figures led them to discover many excellent and wonderful properties belonging to them, which speculations were continually improving, and are still to this day. Geometry is usually divided into speculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abstractedly; and the latter applies these speculations and theorems to use and practice, and in the benefit and advantage of mankind.—Harris.

In the sciences alone there seems to be more geometry than in all the artificial sciences in the world.—Ray, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Hum also for my counsel I disdain,
Who thinks all science, as all virtue, vain;
Who counts geometry and numbers toys,
And with his foot the sacred dust destroys.

Terms belonging to a system are defined, not by the meaning of their radical words, but by their place in the system. That they should be appropriate in their signification, and the processes of introducing and remembering them, and should therefore be carefully attended to by those who invent and establish them; but this once done, no objections founded upon their etymological import are of any material weight. We find no inconvenience in the circumstance that geometry means the measuring of the earth, that the name porphyry is applied to many rocks which have no fiery spots, as the word implies, and usque to strata which have like structure.—Whewell, Novum Organum utrum, p. 391; ed. 1854.

Geoponical. adj. Relating to agriculture; relating to the cultivation of the ground.

Such expressions are frequent in authors geoponical, or such as have treated de re rustica.—Sir T. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

Geoponics. s. pl. [Gr. γεωπονία = labour.] Science of cultivating the ground; doctrine of agriculture.

The study of geoponics has always been of esteem in the world; and the writings of Virgil, Cato, Theophrastus, Varro, Columella, and Palladius, as classical learning as any we have amongst us.—Phil. Letter to Charlett, vol. i. p. 73.
Herbs and wholesome salads, and other plain and useful parts of geoponics.—Keelgh.

George. s. Figure of St. George on horseback worn by the knights of the Garter.

Look on my George, I'm a gentleman;
Kiss me at what I'm with.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II. iv. 1.

George. s. Johnson's explanation of this word, as it appears in the extract, is 'A brown loaf; of this sense I know not the original.' Nor has Todd explained it.

The present editor believes that it was a word of which the exact meaning was as little known to Dryden who used it as to the lexicographers who quoted it from him. This is because, at the present time, though not often used at all, it is rarely used by any two persons in the same sense. Nevertheless, it is used occasionally; and a word which is used now without any accurate perception of its meaning may have been used with equal laxity by so important a writer as Dryden.

Word for word, George is gorge, a term which is itself explained by the following extract from the Catalogue of Specimens in the Ceramic series of the Museum of Practical Geology in Jernyn Street.

'According to Paulkirk (History of Fulham), a pottery was established at Fulham, in 1681, by Mr. John Dwight, of Oxfordshire (who had been Secretary to three successive bishops of Chester), for pitchers, named 'white gorges,' and several kinds of stone ware, among others, imitations of Cologne ware. The museum does not contain any specimen from this pottery in its collections.

In this extract, however, as well as in the original notice, the word is treated as either a local or technical term.

In Cambridge the word becomes gutch, and applies, in its strictest propriety, to a large earthenware narrow-necked jug or pitcher, holding more than a gallon, and glazed inside. Some are yellow. Generally, however, they are of a reddish-brown or tile colour. These are the brown gutches, gorges, or georgex; none of the names being common. Georgex, however, within the last thirty years might be found in certain large dormitories as an adjunct to the dressing-table; and perhaps they still exist. Where there was one to a chamber, it was 'the george, erroneously connected, even by those who knew its use, with the proper name. Sometimes they were broken georgex.

Such is the sense in which the word ought to be used. Used improperly, however, it seems to be applicable, according to the fancy of the speaker, to anything which is at one and the same time brown and coarse. Brown loaf was Johnson's interpretation. It has been heard, by the present editor, as a name for human faces; and others may have heard it with equally different significations. As a general rule, however, the true signification is very rarely attached to it.

Couldst in a cabin, on a mattress laid,

On a brown george, with lousy soldiers, feed.

Dryden, Translation of Persius.

George-noble. s. Gold coin, current at six shillings and eightpence, in the reign of king Henry VIII.

The gold coins of Henry the Eighth, were sovereigns, half-sovereigns, rials, half and quarter-rials, maces, macelets, and quins.

forty-penny half-crowns.—Locke, On English

Georgic. [from Latin Georgica (itself from the Greek γῆ = earth + ργον = work), the title of a work on husbandry by Virgil, and, as such, a proper, rather than a common, name.] Book, or part of a book, on husbandry: the work of Virgil consisting of four books, i.e. the first, second, third, and fourth Georgic. Otherwise the word is generally, though not in the first extract, plural. The pronunciation, unlike that of the other compounds of γῆ (direct from the Greek), is dissyllabic, i.e. as if the origin of the word were the proper name George.

Much less ought the low phrases and terms of art, that are adapted to husbandry, have any place in such a work as the Georgic, which is not to appear in the natural simplicity and nakedness of its subject, but in the pleasant dress that poetry can bestow upon it.—Addison, On Virgil's Georgics.

The Memoirs of Immanuel, the essay on the Georgics, and his (Addison's) last papers in the Spectator and Guardian, are models of language.

J. Walton, Essay on the Writings and Genius of Pope.

Georgic. adj. Relating to agriculture; having the character of, or consisting in, a Georgic.

Here I pursue the Mantuan georgic strains,
And learn the labours of Italian swains.

Gay, Rural Sports.

Geranium. s. [Gr. γέρανος = crane.] Cranesbill; native plant so called from the form of their seed-vessel, which is prolonged into a beak like that of a crane. The Latin name, however, is nearly as common as the English, even when applied to the wild species. In Horticulture, the geraniums are no true members of the genus Geranium, as at present limited, but of the genus Pelargonium.

The third month Lady Armine determined to make aursion. 'I wish,' said her affectionate husband, as he talked with delight in her service; 'I wish, my dear Constance, that Viscountary was here: he was such a capital cardroomer.'—'Let me wish him, dear Raleigh.'—'Why, we are so happy,' said Sir Raleigh, smiling; 'and yet Viscountary is the best creature in the world. I hope you will like him, dear Constance.'—'I am sure I shall, dear Raleigh. Give me that geranium love. Write to him to-day; write to Viscountary to-day.'—Disraeli, Henrietta Temple, ch. ii.

Gérifalcon. s. [German, gierfalk.] Often spelt gyrfalcon, as if from the Latin gyrus = circle, circular flight.] Large and fierce species of falcon (Falco islandicus) so called.

You must not hope to find your gyrfalcon there, which is the noble hawk.—Sir T. Brown, Of Hawks, Macaulay, p. 18.

They say that these two falcons differ in the comparative length of their wings. As to the tail, the Iceland falcon is to the vulture as well as much more rare species; that they require a different system of training, as well as of general management. They describe the Iceland falcon as a bird of higher courage than the gyrfalcon; of a more rapid and bolder flight; and that it can be thrown successfully at larger game. Its gyrations are said to be wider, its mount higher, and its stoop to the quarry more impetuous, exact, and imposing.—J. Hawcock, in Annals of Natural History, ii. 211.

The gyrfalcon may be considered one of the most typical in form, as it is largest in size. . . . It is not very numerous anywhere; and, from its great courage and strength, large sums were formerly expended in procuring specimens from Iceland and Norway. . . . Those specimens obtained from Iceland were called exclusively Iceland falcons, and from peculiarities observed in their disposition, as well as in their mode of flying at their game, not only commanded the highest prices, but they were and are even now considered by fanciers as a species distinct from the gyrfalcon.—Yarrell, British Birds.

If he wished to amuse himself with field sports, he had at his command an establishment far more sumptuous than that which had belonged to him when he was at the head of a kingdom, an army of huntsmen and fowlers, a retinue of grooms, squires, hucksters, and tents, miles of network, machinists, fashions, barriers, packs for the hags and packs for the wolf, gyrfalcon for the lion and hampstead for the wild duck.—Macaulay, History of England, ch. 22.

Germ. s. [Lat. germen, -inis.]

1. Sprout or shoot; principle of growth.

Whether it be not made out of the germ or (really) of the egg, both seem of lesser doubt.—Sir T. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

2. Applied to immaterial objects.

Mr. Hunter's work on the blood, . . . abounding in principles, or the germ of principles, . . . afforded a departure for his future study and observation.—Dr. P. M. Latham, Lectures on Subjects connected with Medical Jurisprudence, lect. iv.

3. In Botany. Parts, in general, containing the embryo, or parts which are to be developed into the future plant: (as opposed to the pistil, style, and stigma, by which the fertilizing element is conveyed, and to the anthers and stamens, connected with the fertilizing principle itself).

Used adjectivally, or as the first element in a compound; the result being a technical, rather than a current, term; its meaning, however, being a cell from which growth originates, as opposed to one in which the fertilizing principle exists.

The second of these subdivisions deals with the phenomenon of germinis in the abstract. It takes for its subject-matter, such general questions as:—What is the end subserved by the union of sperm-cell and germ-cell? Why cannot all multiplication be carried on after the sexual method? What are the laws of hereditary transmission? What are the causes of variation?—Herbert Spencer, The Data of Biology, § 41.

German. s. [Fr. germain; Lat. germanus.] Brother; one approaching to a brother in proximity of blood: (thus the children of brothers or sisters are called cousins german).

They knew it was their cousin german, the famous Amphidromus.—Sir P. Sidney.
And to him said, Go now, proud miscreant,
Thyself thy message do to german dear.

Spenser, Fairie Queene.
Wert thou a bear, thou wouldest be killed by the horse; wert thou a horse, thou wouldest be sold by the leopard; wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were jewels on thy life.—Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iv. 3.

You'll have your nephews nigh to you; you'll have cousins for cousins, and geneals for germans.—Id., Othello, i. 1.

German. adj. Obsolete.

1. Related.

Nid he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy, and vengeance bitter; but those that are german to him, though removed fifty times, shall come under the language.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, iv. 3.

2. Genuine.

From the profession of this doctrine, it is most undeniably manifest, that Arius was a german, or genuine disciple of Plato.—Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 575. (Orel MS.)

The word being rarely used, its accent is doubtful. It is probable, however, that when it is used in a sense suggested by cousin-german, the pronunciation is as marked in the entry. When, however, the archaic phrase 'more german (i.e. akin) to the matter' is used, we accentuate the last syllable, and perhaps would write it germāne, or germāna.

Germanér. s. Native plant so called, Veronica Chamædrys; speedwell. See Forget-me-not.

Little heaps, in the nature of mole-hills, should be set, some with wild thyme, some with pinks, some with germanér, that give a good flower to the eye.—Bacon, Essays, Of Gardens.

Germanism. s. Idiom of the German language.

It is full of Latinisms, Gallicisms, Germanisms, and all kinds but Andelisms.—Lord Chesterfield.

Germanity. s. Brotherhood; kindred; alliance. Rare.

There may be discerned in them a great germanity, or (for our better understanding) a fraternity, both in behaviour and customs, unseemly one unto another.—Prose of ancient and modern Times, p. 2. (Orel MS.)

German. s. [Lat.] German. Not naturalized.

Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the trea-

Of nature's germans tumble all together,
Even till destruction sicken; answer me
To what I ask you. —Shakespeare, Much Ado, iv. 1.

Thou all-shaking thunder, . . .
Crack Nature's mould, all germans will at once
That make ungrateful noise. —Id., King Lear, iii. 2.

Germinant. adj. Sprouting; branching.

Prophetes are not fulfilled immediately, at once, but have springing and germinant accomplishment throughout many ages.—Bacon, Advancement of Learning, h. ii.

Germinate. v. n. [Lat. germinatus, pass. part. of germinare; pres. part. germinans, -antis; germinatio, -onis.] Sprout; shoot; bud; put forth.

This action is furthered by the chalcites, which hath within a spirit that will put forth and germinate, as we see in chymical trials.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The seeds of all kinds of vegetables being planted near the surface of the earth, in a convenient soil, amended matter proper for the formation of vegetables, would germinate, grow up, and replenish the face of the earth.—Woodward.

But we know very little about the seminal principles of diseases, and that little serves to show that no sooner does it enter the body (as in the case of contagion), than that it is gone, at once, beyond our reach. It germinates in secret. It spreads itself abroad in secret.—Dr. P. M. Latham, Lectures on Subjects connected with Clinical Medicine.

Germinate. v. a. Cause to sprout.

The tree of goodness which is set by fear, strengthened by faith, watered by grace, germinated by goodliness, will wax green by hope, will fructify by love, will build by learning.—Price, Creation of the Prince, m. 8: 3010.

In the early months of June and July, several French departments germinated a set of rebellious paper-leaves, named proclamations, resolutions, journals, or diurnals, 'of the union for resistance to oppression.' In particular, the town of Caen, in Calvados, sent its paper-leaf of Bulletin de Caen suddenly bud, suddenly establish itself as newspaper there; under the editorship of Girardin national representatives.—Carlyle, French Revolution, iv. ch. i.

Germination. s. Act of sprouting or shooting; initial growth.

For acceleration of germination, we shall handle the subject of plants generally.—Bacon.

The duke of Buckingham had another kind of germination; and surely, had he been a plant, he would have been reckoned among the 'spontaneous ones.' —Sir H. Newton.

There is but little similitude between a terrene humdly and plantal germination.—tilauville, Science Scientif.

Suppose the earth should be carried to the great distance of Saturn; then the whole globe would be one frigid zone; there would be no life, no germination. —Beatty, Saturnus.

Gerne. adv. [A.S. georne.] Willingly; eagerly. Obsolete.

Thou travel'st gerne and busily

To bryng down the clergy.

Collected Poems (Revised Office series), Song against the Friars, (Wright.)

Gerocómicai. adj. [Gr. γερικός; from γέρω - old age, and κόμος - tend, take care of.] Pertaining to that part of medicine which concerns old age.

It is my earnest desire, that physicians would study the gerocómicai part of physick more than they do.—South, Portrait of Old Age, p. 257: 1664.

Gerund. s. [Lat. gerundium.] In Lat. grammar. Part of speech so called, containing such words as amandi, amando, amandum, or the forms in -di, -do, and -dum. They denote something carried on (whence the name from gero - carry on), and, so far, are verbs. Their inflexion, however, is that of a substantive. For a full notice of the extent to which the English forms in -ing (loving) are gerundial, see Preface.

There be belonging to the infinitive mood of verbs certain voices called gerunds; which have both the active and passive simulation.—Lilly.

The participle with the preposition before it, and still retaining its government, answers to what is called in Latin the gerund.—Bishop Leath, A short introduction to English Grammar.

Géry. adj. [German, gierig.] Greedy. Obsolete.

The second hawk waxed gergy,

And was with flying weary.

Skelton, Ware the Hawke. (Rich.)

Gest. s. [N.Fr. geste (from Latin gestum, pass. part. of gero - carry, bear, effect) - thing done; also, as the title of a humorous narrative, the account of it.—see Jest.] Dred; action; achievement.

Who fair thou quites, as him besommed best,
And goodly can discourse of many a noble gest.

You use to sharpen and whet your understanding in the execution of high deeds and gests; in which you have employed much time.—Doune, History of the Scottish, p. 180.

The Acts of the Apostles, which contain the peregrinations and gests of St. Paul, are a great master-key to open his Epistles.—Archbishop Bancroft, Sermons, p. 122.

Gest. s. See Gist.

Yet of your royal presence I'll adventure
The borrow of a week. When at Bohemia
You take my lord, I'll give him my commission,
To let him there a month, behind the gest,
Prefix'd for's parting.

Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.
He distinctly sets down the gests and progress thereof.—Sir T. Browne.

Gestatio. s. [Lat. gestatio, -onis.]

1. Act of bearing the young in the womb.

Aristotle affirmeth the birth of the infant, or time of its gestatio, extended sometimes unto the eleventh month; but Hippocrates avers that it exceedeth not the tenth.—Sir T. Browne.

Why in viviparous animals, in the time of gestatio, should the nourishment be carried to the embryo in the womb, which at other times growth not that way? —Ray, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Gestatio is protracted unusual and uncouth by Heylin, in 1653. Yet it appears in the vocabulary of Cockran, many years before that date, with the general sense of 'a bearing, a carrying.'—Todd.

2. Simply carrying. Latinism.

Gestatio in a carriage or wagon hath in it a stinking of the body, but some vehement, and some more soft.—Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Health, b. ii. ch. xxiv. (Trench.)

Macrobius affirms, that the gestatio of rings upon this hand and finger, might rather be used for their convenience and preservation, than any cordial relation.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, p. 185. (Orel MS.)

Gestatio, an excretion of the body by being carried in coach, litter, upon horseback, or in a vessel on the water.—Holland, Pliny, Explanation of the Words of Art. (Trench.)

Gestatory. adj. Capable of being worn or carried.

The crowns and garlands of the ancients were either gestatory, such as they wore about their heads and necks, &c.—Sir T. Browne, Miscellanea, p. 100.

Gestic. adj. Relating to Gestes [from geste]; legendary; historical. So the notice stands in Todd; Johnson having neglected or omitted the word; though, as a matter of fact, he might have learnt what Goldsmith really meant by it. The context seems to connect it with gesture and gesticulate. Rare.

Dances of ancient days
Have led their children through the mythical maze;
And the gray grandmothers, skill'd in gestic lore,
Has frisk'd beneath the burden of threescore.

Guthrie, Travels.

Gesticulate. v. n. [Lat. gesticulatus, pres. part. of gesticular; gesticulatio, -onis.] Play antic tricks; show postures.

Their limbs, eyes, gesticulating severally, and after each other; swimming round, and now and then conforming themselves to a Dorian stiffness.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years' Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 304.

They [the Spaniards] talk louder, and argue with more vehemence than even the French or Italians, and gesticulate with equal if not superior eagerness.—Seiborn, Tour through Spain, let. 42.

Gesticulate. v. a. Act; imitate.

If I knew any man so well
To set the crimes these whippers reprehend,
Or what the wretches say gesticulate,
I should not then much muse their shreds were hid.—B. Jonson, Preface, Apology to the Reader.

Gesticulation. s. Antic tricks; various postures.

The wanton gesticulations of a virgin, in a wild assembly of callants warmed with wine, could be no other than risish and unmanly.—Bishop Hall, Cast of Emptiness, h. iv.

They leap forth below, a mistress leading them; and with antic gesticulation and action, after the manner of the old pantomime, they dance over a distracted comedy of love, expressing their confused affections, in the scurvy persons and habits of the four European nations.—B. Jonson, Marmos.
Mimical and fantastical gesticulations.—Bishop Reynolds, On the Passions, ch. xxix.

Gesticulator. s. One who gesticulates; posture-mimic.

If king Alfred really went into the Danish camp as a spy, he took upon him the character of a mimic, a dancer, a gesticulator, a jack-pudding.—Pygme.

Gesticulatory. adj. Connected with, having the character of, or constituted by, gesticulation.

No bishop shall permit plays or sports, undoubtedly mimical and gesticulatory entertainments, to be exhibited in his presence.—T. Warton, History of English Poetry.

Gesture. s.

1. Movement of the body; carriage (which it nearly translates).

On she came,
Led by her Heavenly Maker, though unseen . . .
Grace was in all her steps, heav'n in her eye,
In every gesture dignity and love!

Every one will agree in this, that we ought rather to lay aside all kinds of gesture, or at least to make use of such only as are graceful and expressive.—Addison, Spectator.

2. Action or posture expressive of sentiment.

Al, my abler, if you had heard his words or seen his gestures, when he made me know what and to whom his love was, you would have melted in yourself those two rarely matched together, pity and delight.—Sir P. Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand: when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the case, in the other the behaviour of humility.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Gesture. v. a. Accompany with action or posture. Rare.

Our attire disgraceth it; it is not orderly read, nor gestured as becometh. —Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

He undertook so to gesture and muffle up himself in his livery, as the duke's manner was, that none should discern him. —Sir H. Wotton.

Get. v. a. preterite got, anciently gut; past part. got, or gotten. [from A.S. getan.]

1. Procure; obtain; earn; gain; win.
Of that which was our father's hath he gotten all his glory. —Gleason, xxxi. 1.

He got his people great honour, and he made battles, protecting the host with his sword. —J. Macculloch, iii. 5.

Aurka held that course to have drawn the galleys within his great ships, who thundering amongst them with their great ordnance, might have opened a way unto his galleys to have gotten a victory. —Knox, History of the Turks.

If they get ground and vantage of the king, Then join you with them like a rib of steel. —Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. ii. 3.

Though creditors will lose one-fifth of their principal and use, and landlords one-fifth of their income, yet the debtors and tenants will not get it. —Locke.

Any tax laid on foreign commodities in England raises their price, and makes the importer get more for them; but a tax laid on your home-made commodities lessens their price. —Id.

2. Bring into a certain condition; in or out of anything; up or down, &c.

He who attempts to get another man into his absolute power, does thereby put himself into a state of war with him. —Id.

Helim, who was taken up in embracing the ladies, visited the place very frequently: his created perplexity was how to get the lovers out of it, the gates being watched. —Guardian.

Nature taught them to make certain vessels of a tree, which they got down, not with cutting but with live. —Abbot.

Before your eyes being forth, they may be pretty well kept, to get them a little into heart. —Mortimer, Husbandry.

Get by heart. Learn anything so as to be able to repeat it word for word from memory.

Get by heart the more common and useful words out of some judicious vocabulary. —Watts.

Get the day. Win.

To get the day of them of his own nation would have been a most unhappy day for him. —2 Maccabees, v. 8.

With the personal or reflective pronoun. Put in any specified condition or relation.

Arise, get thee out of this land. —Genesis, xxxi. 13. Take no revenge, whatever she doth say, For get you away, she doth not mean away. —Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, iii. 1.

Get you to bed on the instant; I will be returned forthwith. —Id., Othello, iv. 3.

Get. v. n. (thus cyphered; though perhaps the better view is to consider it Active or Transitive, its import being that of the previous verb in its second sense, with the word self understood. To get out of bed is to get one's self out of bed, &c. If this be the case, such a sentence as 'Two or three men of the town are got among them' (Addison) is incorrect, the proper verb being have).

1. Arrive at any state or posture by degrees with some kind of labour, effort, or difficulty; (used either of persons or things).

Get home with thy fowl made ready to set; The sooner, and easier carriage to get. —Tasso, Hundred Points of good Husbandry.

Phalantus was entrapped, and saw round about him, but could not get out. —Sir P. Sidney.

Those that are very cold, and especially in their feet, cannot get to sleep. —Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

There are few bodies whose minute parts stick so close together, but that it is possible to meet with some other body whose small parts may get between, and so disjoint them. —Boyle.

If there should be any leak at the bottom of the vessel, yet very little water would get in, because no air could get out. —Bishop Wilkins, Mathematical Magick.

I got up as fast as possible, girt on my rapier, and snatched up my hat, when my landlady came up to me. —Teller.

Imprison'd first, in the close dungeons pent, Bear to get loose, and struggle for a vent; Ruting their way, and undermining all, Till with a mighty burst whole mountains fall. —Addison.

Bucephalus would let nobody get upon him but Alexander the Great. —Id., Travels in Italy.

When Alma now, in different views, Has finish'd her ascending stairs, Into the head at length she gets, And there in judicious grandeur sits. —Prior, Alma, canto iii.

I resolved to break through all measures to get away. —Swift.

2. Go; repair.

They ran to their weapons, and furiously assailed the Turks, now fearing no such matter, and were not as yet all got into the castle. —Knox, History of the Turks.

A knot of lasses, got together by themselves, is a very school of impudence. —Swift.

3. Put one's self in any condition or relation.

They might get over the river Avon at Stratford, and get between the king and Worcester. —Lord Clarendon, History of the Great Rebellion.

We can neither find source nor issue for such an excessive mass of waters, neither where to leave them; nor, if we had them, how to get quit of them. —T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

The laughing set, like all unthinking men, Batches and gets drunk; then battles and drinks again. —Dryden.

As the obtaining the love of valuable men is the happiest end of this life, so the next felicity is to get rid of fools and scoundrels. —Pope, Letter to Swift.

Get off. Escape.

The galleys, by the benefit of the slaves and simoniacs, got off. —Bacon, Commonwealth touching War with Sp.

Whatever thou dost, deliver not thy sword; With that thou may'st get off, tho' odds oppose thee. —Dryden.

Get over. Overcome.

'Tis very pleasant to hear the lady propose her doubts, and to see the jester be at get over them. —Child.

I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy for perpetually railing their sermons. —Swift.

To remove this difficulty, Peterborough was dispatched to Vienna, and got over some of those disputes. —Id.

If it were true . . . that, by some contrivance of constitutional checks, and balance of powers, the supreme government of a country can be really limited, this objection might, to a certain extent, be got over. The liability to misuse might be repressed by the system of checks; and the ruler might be chosen merely for his skill and dexterity, as we choose the pilot of a ship. But unfortunately all these speculations are vain. —Sir G. C. Lewis, On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, ch. viii.

Get up. Rise from repose.

Heep will get up betimes in the morn'g to feed; And ruin. —Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Get. v. a. [for beget.] Beget

These be . . . boys of ice; they'll none of her; I sure they are bastards to the Turkish, the French never get them. —Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, ii. 3.

Women with study it sets their vex;

Ye gods, destroy that impious sex;

And if there must be some, I invoke

Your powers, and make your altars smoke,

Come down yourselves, and, in their place,

Get a more just and noble race. —Walker,

Children's Life.

If you'll take 'em as their fathers get . . . well; if not, you must stay till they get a better generation. —Dryden.

Has no man, but who has kill'd

A father, right to get a child? —Prior, Alma, canto i.

Let every married man, that's grave and wise,

Take a Tartuffe of known nobility.

Who shall so settle lasting reformation,

First get a son, then give him education. —Dorset.

The good of day, descending from above,

Mix with the day, and get the queen of love. —Graveille.

Getnothing. s. One who neglects or fails to earn anything; idler; poor person.

Every getnothing is a thief, and business is a stolen water. —Adams, The Devil's Banquet, p. 76: 1614. (Trench.)

Getter. s. One who gets.

Them that ought to have been the most comfortours of the poor, those have we seen to be the most greedy getters and pourtrayers for their misbegotten heirs. —Martin, Marriages of Priests, sign. B. b. iv: 1651.

Getter. s. Begetter.

Pope is a very lethargy, a getter of more bastard-children than war is a destroyer of men. —Shakespeare, Coriolanus, iv. 3.

Getting. verbal abs.

1. Act of one who gets; process by which anything is got; acquisition.

Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding. —Proverbs, iv. 7.

2. Thing got; gain; profit.

Who hath a state to repair may not despise small things; and it is less dishonourable to abridge a petty charge than to stoop to petty gettings. —Bacon.

The manner families return a small share of their gettings, to be a portion for the child. —Swift.

Getwag. s. [?] Trifling plaything.

A trifle, whinny, quip, or small toy for a child to play with. —Colgrave, in v. Abdole.

It is for children to cry for the falling of their house of cards, or the misarrangement of that painted getwag, which the next shower would have defaced. —Bishop Hall, Of Contention, § 8.

The first incomes were furs, silks, ribbonds, laces, and many other getwags, which by so thick, that the whole heart was nothing else but a toyshop. —Addison, Guardian.

This mountain, whose dilapidated plan The remnant of empires pinnaled, Of glory's getwags shining in the sun

Till the sun's rays with added flame were fill'd? Where are its golden roofs? where those who dared to build? —Byron, Childe Harold, iv. 104.

Used adjectively.

Let him that would learn the happiness of religion, see the poor getwag imagine a of Feb. —Lear, A Roman Call.

Ghostful. adj. Same as Ghostly.

I tell no lie, so ghostful grew my name, That it alone discounten'd an host. —Merrick for Magistrates, p. 315.

Ghostfully. adj. In a ghostful manner.

He often stares ghostfully, raves about, &c. —Pope, Narrative of Dr. R. Norrie.

Ghostly. adj. Like a ghost; having horror in the countenance; pale; dreadful; dismal; horrible; shocking.

Every quickly discovered court Solomon's chancelled countenance upon the great house, and began now to show her ghostly face. —Knox, History of the Turks.

Death

Grin'd horrible a ghostly smile, to hear

This famine should be fill'd. —Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 845.

To be less than gods

Dismal'd; but meaner thoughts learn'd in their flair. —Id., vi. 304.

Mangled with ghostly wounds through plate and mail. —Id., vi. 304.

These departed friends, whom at our last separation we saw disturbed by all the ghostly horrors of death, we shall then see assisting about the majestic throne of Christ, with their ghostly bodies transfigured into the likeness of his glorious body, mingling their glad acclamations with the jubilation of thrones, principalities, and powers. —Boyle.

He came, but with such alter'd looks, So wild, so ghostly, as if some ghost had met him, All pale and speechless. —Dryden, Spanish Friar.

I who make the triumph of to-day, May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear, ghostly with wounds, and lifeless on a bier! —Prior.

Ghostness. s. Same as Ghostness.

Ghost. v. n. Same as Guesse.

In such luxurious plenty of all pleasure,

It will ghost a paradise I phrase. —Spenser, Faerie Queene, iv. 10, 2.

Ghost. s. [A.S. gast = breath, spirit.]

1. Soul of man

Vex not his ghost; O, let him pass! He hates him, That would upon the rack of this rough world Stretch him out longer. —Shakespeare, King Lear, v. 3.

Where the bodies of the dead have been out of the reach of their surviving enemies, they have thought it highly oppressive to their ghosts to take their representations preserved in their pictures and affix them to the cross. —Bishop Pearson, Explications of the Creed, art. iv.

The name of ghost or gast in the ancient Saxon language signifieth a spirit; and, in that appellation of the Spirit of God, his [the Holy Ghost's] nature principally is expressed. —Id., art. viii.

2. Spirit appearing after death; apparition; (in proportion as the belief in such beings decreases, the import of the word changes, and means anything unreal; fancy; imaginary object).

The mighty ghosts of our great Harrys rose, And around Edwards look'd with anxious eyes, To see this first among unequal foes, By which fate promised them their Charles should rise. —Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, lxxxi.

than in man, is longer than in the chimpanzee; in the orang it is shorter than the arm; in the siamang and other gibbons it is much shorter. The peculiar length of arm in these 'long-armed apes' is chiefly due to the excessive length of the antibrachial bones.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates.

Gibbosity. s. Convexity; prominence; protuberance.

This way of description rendereth the face of the earth upon a globe in its own proper figure spherically, as upon the globe itself; the gibbosity only allowed for.—Gregory, Pathways, p. 305; 1653.

When ships, sailing contrary ways, lose the sight one of another, what should take away the sight of ships from each other, but the gibbosity of the intervening water?—Rap.

Gibbons. adj. [Lat. gibbus.]

1. Convex; protuberant; swelling into inequalities.

The bones will rise, and make a gibbon member.—Wicman.

A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbons from behind the mountain's back.—Dryden.

2. Crookbacked.

I demand how the emuls of Bactria came to have two lumps in their back, whereas the emuls of Arabia have but one? How often, in some countries, begin and continue gibbons, or hump-backed?—Sir T. Brown.

Gibbousness. s. Attribute suggested by Gibbons; convexity; prominence.

To make this convexity of the earth dissimile to the eye, suppose a man to be lifted up a great height in the air, that he may have a spacious horizon under one view; but then, again, because of the distance, the convexity and gibbousness would vanish away; he would only see below him a great circular flat.—Bentley, Euclypsus, viii.

Gibe. v. n. [see Jabber.] Sneer.

They seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, lest they should afterwards laugh and gibe at our party.—Black, Ecclesiastical Politics.

When we saw her toy, and gibe, and peer,
And pass the bounds of modest merry-making,
Her dalliance he despised.—Spenser.

Thus with talents well could
To be scurrilous and rude,
When you partly raise your snout,
Peer and gibe, and laugh and doubt.—Swift.

Spelt with y.

The vulgar yield an open ear,
And common conifers love to gibe and peer.—Spenser.

Gibe. v. a. Reproach, bait, or irritate by contemptuous hints; flout; scoff; ridicule; treat with scorn; sneer; taunt.

When riding in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience.
Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2.

Draw the heads as I describe them,
From their features, while I gibe them.—Swift.

Gibe. s. Sneer; hint of contempt by word or look; scoff; act or expression of scorn; taunt.

Mark the sneers, the gibes and notable scorns
That dwell in every region of his face.—Shakespeare, Othello, iv. 1.

Ready in gibe, quick unswayed, sane, and as quarrelous as the wren.—Id., Twelfth Night, iii. 4.

The rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor.—Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

If they would but from the bottom of their hearts,
Their aversion would be too strong for little gibe
every moment.—Spenser.

But the devil, if this secret should come to his ears,

Will never have done with his gibe and his jeers.—Swift, The Grand Question Debated.

Giber. s. Sneerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; scoffer; taunter.

He is a giber, and our present business
Is of more serious consequence.—Id., Junius, Catiline's Conspiracy.

Gibbingly. adv. Scornfully; contemptuously.

His present portance,
Gibbingly and ungraciously he did fashion
After his inveterate hate he bears to you.—Shakespeare, Coriolanus, ii. 3.

Giblets. s. [Fr. gibier = game.] Parts of a goose which are cut off before it is dressed, i. e. head, neck, gizzard, liver, and feet.

The liquorous palate of the glutton ranges through meats and lands for unsmooth delicacies, kills thousands of creatures for but their tongues or giblets.—Bishop Hall, St. Paul's Complaint.

VOL. I.

I shall not like the table of a country justice, besprinkled over with all manner of cheap salubus, sliced beef, giblets, and petticoats, to fill up room.—De Witt and Fletcher, Woman-Hater.

Used adjectively.

'Tis holiday; I provide me better cheer;
'Tis holiday; and shall be named the year.
Shall I my household gods and spirits cheat,
To make him rich who grudges me my meat?
That he may bid at ease, and, pumpernickel high,
When I am laid, may feed on giblet pie?—Dryden, Translation of Persius.

Giddily. adv. In a giddy manner.

Giddily, and be every where but at home,
Such freedom doth a banishment become.—Donne.

Giddiness. s. Attribute suggested by Giddy. Negatives and giddiness are rather when we rise after long sitting, than while we sit.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Giddy. adj. [A.S. gidig.]

1. Vertiginous; having in the head a whirl, or sensation of circular motion, such as happens by disease or drunkenness.

Then revelling thus the Tontyrites invade,
By giddy heels, and staggering legs betray'd.—Tate, Translation of Juvenal.

2. Rotatory; whirling; running round with celerity; causing giddiness.

The frequent errors of the pathless wood,
The giddy precipices, and the dangerous flood.—Prior.

The sylphs through mystick mazes guide their way,
Through all the giddy circle they pursue.—Pope, Rape of the Lock, canto 1.

As Ision fix'd, the wretch shall feel
The giddy motion of the whirling mill.—Id.

3. Inconstant; mutable; unsteady; changeable; heedless; thoughtless; incautious; wild.

It may be gnats and flies have their imagination more mutable and giddy, as small birds likewise have.—Bacon.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, the reverse of Isaac, who hath always loved a drowsy life.—Swift, Letter to the Dean.

You many giddy, foolish hours are gone,
And in fantastic measures thine'd away.—Keats, Jane Shore.

How inexpressible are those giddy creatures, who,
In the same hour, leap from a parent's window to a husband's bed.—Richardson, Clarissa.

Giddy. v. n. Turn quick. Rare.

A sodine North-wind freight,
With an extreme sea, quite shaken as mine,
Our whole end avails; and our course restrain
To giddy round.—Chapman.

Giddy. v. a. Make giddy; render unsteady. Rare.

He is a quiet and peaceable man, who is not moved when all things else are; not shaken with fear, and giddied with suspicion.—Partridge, Sermons, p. 423; 1657.

Giddyhead. s. One without due thought or judgement.

A company of giddyheads will take upon them to divine how many shall be saved, and who damned in a parish; where they shall sit in heaven; interpret apocryphes; and presently set down when the world shall come to an end, what year, what month, what day.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 677.

Gif. conj. See If.

Gift. s.

1. Thing given or bestowed; something conferred without price.

They presented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincense and myrrh.—Matthew, ii. 11.

Recall your gift, for I your now's confess;
But first take back my life, a gift that's less.—Dryden, Aeneas.

Many nations shall come with gifts in their hands,
even gifts to the king of heaven.—Tobit, xiii. 11.

2. Bribe.

Thou shalt not wrest judgement, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise.—Deuteronomy, xvi. 19.

3. Power; faculty.

And if the boy have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, induction, sc. 1.

She was lovely to attract
Thy love, not thy subjection, and her gifts
Were such as under government well accus'd;
Unseemly to bear rule.—Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 152.

6 T

He who has the gift of ridicule, finds fault with any thing that gives him an opportunity of exerting his talent.—Addison.

Gift. v. a. Endow with any faculty or power.

Am I better gifted than another? Thou art an ill judge of either, who envied the gifts of both.—Bishop Hall, Satire's Fiery Dart, quenched, §3.

In these primitive times there were some women extraordinarily gifted by God's Spirit, who took upon them to preach and pray publicly.—Id., Romans, p. 237.

If he be gifted with abilities of mind, that may raise him to such an undertaking.—Milton, Doctrine and Discipline of Divines.

There is no talent so pernicious as eloquence, to those who have it not under command: women, who are so liberally gifted by nature in this particular, ought to study the rules of female oratory.—Addison, Freethinker.

Gifted. adj. [This is a word in which the first syllable is a substantive, the second the sign of a participle.]

Considered, however, as a part of speech, the participle is for the most part connected with the verb, or, if not, with the adjective;
the adjective and the verb being more closely connected than the verb and the substantive.
Moreover, of what may be called substantival participles, gifted is a typical example. It is in no wise adjectival;
such an adjective as gift being non-existent.
Even where it takes the guise of an adjective it is either a separate substantive or the first element of a compound, as in gifthorse, or gifthorse, no matter how sounded, i. e. whether as one or two words, as a compound, or as a combination. It wears the appearance of a participle, inasmuch as participles end in -t. Yet the participle of give is gi-ven. It is, doubtless, then, a true substantive.

Now rises the question, 'Can participles be formed from substantives?' Many authorities (so far as authorities are worth anything, except to the extent that they fulfil their own accomplishment) are in the affirmative. Yet (and this is the reason and excuse for the length of the present notice) there is an undeniably influential authority the other way. Coleridge's strictures on the word talented are well known;
and they have been adopted as second hand even when not known in their origin. The editor rejects them. What he writes now might, perhaps, have been better entered under Talented. But as G is at hand, and as T is a long way off, it is better to refer to the earlier from the later than to the later from the earlier entry.

Coleridge objected to, and disliked, the word talented, but without giving his reasons in full. He argued that we do not say a skilled man. It is probable, however, that the objection against sub-stantival participles, or participles without a corresponding verb, has taken its fullest form under his successors and admirers.

That no one says skilled is true enough; but that many a one (possibly Coleridge himself) may have said gifted, is not put forward as an argument on the upposite side. Neither is anything said about monied, as in a 'monied man.' Again, there is a cross analogy in comparing talented with skilled; the former word not meaning wealthy in the shape of £ s. d. at all, but wealthy in a secondary sense, i. e. intellectually. From this point of view the better comparison would have been to have said that there were no such words as memoried, imaginatived, and the like; the basis being chosen from words which have the same relation to intellectual gifts in general, as skillings or pounds

have to the highest pecuniary denomination. In all this there are the elements of error.

Taking, then, the question from the opposite point of view, and arguing from monied and gifted—the latter used by Dryden and others—let us try to reconcile the authorities.

In doing this it is of primary importance to recognize the fact that the rule has nothing to do with any word as a part of speech, be it substantive or verb; for in cases like the one under notice there is no difference between them. Every name of an object may also be the name of the net by which it is supplied or provided; as is shown by such expressions as 'to horse a coach,' and as may be seen in the foregoing entry. That such formations are comparatively rare is true. The reason, however, is not in the nature of the word as a part of speech.

What does determine the formation is the generality of the term which forms the basis of the derivative. There are no current words for men of power, shillings, pounds, or five-pound notes, because all such men are merged under the general name for the highest denomination of their class in the way of capital. Neither are there current words for men of memories or imaginings, because all such men are merged under the highest denomination of their class in the way of intellect. Hence, monied, gifted, and talented come out as the current words. Shillinged might certainly, by possibility, exist, and so might five-pound-noted, and so might imagined, as well as many others. They would exist if it were necessary to distinguish between men of power (or pounds) and men of one-pound notes; or between men of memory and men of reasoning powers; but this distinction has not yet affected our etymology, i.e. our etymology has dealt with generalizations rather than distinctions. So far as it affects the latter it accomplishes its object by the prefix of a word meaning much. A many-pounded man would mean much the same as a monied man; but the approximate equivalence is brought about by the prefix many. The same applies elsewhere. Broad-acred and many-acred mean landed. Meanwhile, landed itself, as in 'landed interest,' is in the same category with the words already noticed. Yet it is scarcely possible to believe that the great writer who condemned the word talented never used the word landed.]

Endowed with gifts.

Two of their gifted brotherhood, Hacket and Coppermeyer, fed up into a peace-net and harrowed the people to dispose them to an insurrection.—Trydion.

Giftedness. s. Attribute Gifted.

May not a conformist, though of an ordinary invention, and not endued with the sublime giftedness of our separatists, say, Seck, seck, seck, or Good, good, good, &c.?—Richard, Grounds of Continuance of the Clergy, p. 129.

Gifture. s. Gift; giving. Rare.

By all which it appears that the wealth of the golly is the peculiar gifture of wisdom. Chaucer, Proverbs, p. 48. (Ord. 184.)

Gig. s. [In French, gigue = dance so called; jig; giguer = the corresponding verb. In German, geige = fiddle. Wedgwood connects all these with the notion of rotation, suggested by the word itself.]

1. Whirligig; top; any toy of the same kind as these.

To see great Hercules whipping a gig.
Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3.
Playthings, as tops, gigs, battledores, should be procured them.—Locke.

2. Fiddle.

3. Dart or harpoon.

At each end of the canoe stands an Indian with a gig, or pointed spear. History of Virginia, p. 131; 1742.

4. Light vehicle, with two wheels, drawn by one horse.

I considered him a respectable man, as he kept a gig.—Keidance in Trial of Thurtell.

5. Boat so called.

6. Machine for forming the nap of cloth. See Teazling.

Gig machines are rotatory drums mounted with thistles or wire teeth for teasing cloth.—The Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines, in voce. As the first element in a compound.

In large manufactories, this dressing operation is performed by a gig-mill, which originally consisted . . . of a cylinder bristled all over with thistles (teased) heads, and made to revolve rapidly, while the cloth is drawn over it in a variety of directions.—Ibid. Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines, Woollen Manufactures.

Gig. v. a. [First syllable of Lat. gig-na.] Engender.

Our diamonds may have generated these diamonds, and so we are all three double; if so, I hope my golden has gigged another golden; and then they may carry double upon all four.—Dryden, Amphitruon.

Gigantal. adj. Gigantic. Rare.

Gigantal frames hold wonders rarely strange. Diamond and Crystals, no. 1. (Ord. 184.)

Gigantéan. adj. Belonging to a giant. Rare.

When the strong Fates with gigantéan force Bear thee in iron arms, without remorse; Bear, and be borne.

Dr. H. More, Philosophical Poems, p. 318; 1617.

Gigantic. adj. Suitable to, having the character of, or connected with, a giant; big; bulky; enormous.

I dread him not, nor all his giant-brood, Though fame divulged him father of five sons, All of gigantic size, Goliath chief.

Milton, Samson Agonistes, 1217.

Gigantical. adj. Big; bulky. Rare.

In wondrous gigantical Cyclopes will transverse spheres.—Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 256.

Giggle. v. n. [Dutch, gikelen; Provincial German, gigelen.] Laugh idly; titter; grin with merry levity.

They began to leer and giggle, and to look at men over the shoulder. Ward of Boudreaux, p. 280; 1908.
The moment night with dusky mantle covers The skies (and the more darkly the better), The time less liked by husbands than by lovers Becomes, and prurient things aside her fetter; And saucily on restless giggle hovers, Giggling with all the gallants who beset her; And there are songs and quivers, roaring, humming, Guitars, and every other sort of strumming.

T. Deputies stand grouped on the Paris Road, on this underground Avenue des Versailles; complaining about of the indigence done them. Concocters, it is supposed, look from their windows, and giggle. Girgile, The French Revolution, pt. i. b. v. ch. ii.

Giggle. s. Giggling laugh.

A smile, a giggle, or a hum.—Barrow, Sermons, i. 184.

'Tis true, your budding Miss is very charming, But shy and awkward at first coming out, So much alarmed, that she is quite alarming, All giggle, blush; half pertness, and half pout.

Giggle. s. One who giggles.

A sad wise valour in the brave complexion, That lends the van and swallows up the cities: The giggler is a milk-maid, when infection, Or the red beacon, frighteth from his ditches.

This particularly a set of giggles thought the most necessary thing to be taken notice of in his whole discourse, and made it an occasion of mirth during the whole time of his sermon.—Speotator, no. 138.

I become weary and impatient of the derision of the giggles of our sex.—Zeller, no. 219.

Giggling. part. adj. Laughing the manner, character, laugh, or simper, of a giggler.

We show our present, joking, giggling race; True joy consists in gravity and grace. Girgick. She brought a couple of sickly children attended by a prim nurse, and in a faint gentle giggling tone; cackled to her sister about her fine acquaintance, and how her little Frederick was the image of Lord Claud Lollypop, and her sweet Maria had been noticed by the Baroness as they were driving in their donkey-chaise at Southampton. She begged her to make her papa do something for the darlings. Thackeray, Vanity Fair.

Giglot. s. [N.Fr.] Wanton girl.

The wife that gals not giglot who With every flirlyng gill, But honestly doth keep at home, And set to gossip still.

Translation of Bullinger's Sermons, p. 224; 1578. H. Jonson, Sejanus.

A peevish giglot.

Useful adjectively. Young Talbot was not born To be the pillage of a giglot wench.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. iv. 7. The fam'd Cassibolus, who was once at point (O giglot, fortune!) to murder Cressa's ward.

Id., Cymbeline, iii. 1.

Gigot. s. [Fr.] At present, the usual meaning of this word is half a leg of mutton: slice, cutlet, as given in the previous editions, and the like, are older and perhaps more accurate meanings of the word.

The lwards slit, They brist'ld on coles, and ate; the rest, in giglots cut, they split. Chapman. Cut the lwards to giglots.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Double Marriage.

Gild. v. a. preterite gilded, or gilt.

1. Overlay with thin gold; cover with gold leaf.

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily, To throw a perfume on the violet.

Shakespeare, King John, iv. 2.

2. Cover with any yellow matter. Thou didst drink The state of horses and the gilded puddle, Which beasts would cough at.

Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, i. 1.

3. Adorn with lustre. No more the rising sun shall gild the morn, Nor evening Cynthia fill her silver horn.

Pope, Messiah.

4. Brighten; illuminate. The light-some passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension and plays upon the surface of the soul.

South, Sermons.

5. Recommend by adventitious ornaments.

For my part, if a lie may do thee grace, I'll gild it with the fairest terms I have.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. v. 1.

Yet, oh! th' imperfect piece moves more delight. 'Tis gilded over with youth, to catch the sight.

Dryden, Amargosa.

Gilder. s. One who gilds.

Gild us use to have a piece of gold in their mouth to draw the spirits of the quicksilver.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

Gilding. verbal abn. Art of one who gilds; process by which anything is gilded; result thereof; gold laid on any surface by way of ornament. Figuratively, external or superficial coating, as opposed to solid metal.

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, there is profit.—Bacon, Physical Monitions. Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Fry's saggie.

And I too strip the gilding off a knave, Unphased, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave?

Pope, Imitation of Horace.

Gill. s. [A.S. gafra, geafra, geafra—jaw.]

1. Respiratory organ of aquatic animals, especially of fishes.

Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims, And seems a moving land; and at his gills draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 412.

Fishes perform respiration under water by the gills.—Ray.

Lo! Puan! lo! sing, To the funny people's king. Not a mischief while than this In the west Atlantic is, Not a fatter fish than he Flounders round the Polar sea. See his blubber—at his gills! What a world of drink he swills! From his trunk, as from a spout, Which next moment he pours out.

Lamb, The Triumph of the Whale. In Limulus the two outer thirds of the posterior surface of the basilar joint of the abdominal prolegs are occupied by a great gill formed of a number of folds of skin, disposed transversely and piled on one another like the leaves of a book; they adhere throughout the length of their base or anterior bor-which we can scarcely doubt was one of the articles of Egyptian industry.—Thompson, in Sir J. G. B. A. Kinan's, Manners and Customs of the ancient Egyptians, ch. vii.

Gingival. adj. [Lat. gingiva = gum (of tooth).] Belonging to the gums.

Whilst the Indians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the obscure anglice; especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of puerousness.—Holder, Elements of Speech.

Gingle. v. n. See Jingle.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd lane the dropping guinea spoke,
And ginging down the backstairs told the crew,
Old Cato is as great a rogue as you.

Pope, Moral Essays, ep. iii.

Gingle. v. n. Jingle.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
The bells she ginged, and the whistle blew. Pope.

Gingle. s. Jingle.

If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and gingles, but use them justly and graciously, with sufficient guard nevertheless.—Baron, Essays, Of Plantations, (Ord MS.) Many of their fancies, which amuse themselves, they hold to be strong lines, and quintessential stuff, being turned to another language, become that, and prove oftentimes but mere gingles.—Holmes, Instructions for Foreign Travel, p. 188.

Gingling. part. adj. Jingling.

Did this title here
Of knighthood ask in other ornaments
Than other countries, glittering show, jewel pride,
A ginging spur, a feather, a white hand,
A frizzled hair, powder'd perfumes, and lust,
Drinking sweet wines, surfeits, and ignorance,
Rashly and easily would I venture on't.
Benjamin and Fletcher, Knight of Malta.
The foot grows black that with dirt cumber'd
And in his pocket ginging halfpence sound.

Guy, Trivia.

Ginning. verbal abn. See extract.

Ginning is the name of the operation by which the filaments of cotton are separated from the seeds.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines, in voce.

Ginseng. s. [yan-sam.] Plant so called, supposed, chiefly by the Chinese, to have stomachic and restorative qualities.

Ginseng [is] a root brought lately into Europe, of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost translucent. It is of a very agreeable and aromatic smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acid and aromatic, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China and America. The Chinese value this root at three times its weight in silver.—Sir J. Hill, Materia Medica.

Gior. s. [see Guy, or Guy-rope.] Pilot.

Alas! your hyaline blast
Awake the wild wawls,
And scaled sely Peter ship,
And putt it in his perile;
No were God the gior,
And loke the stern,
With the stern storms
That refully go round
Al schude weede to wrak
Into the wast water.

Political Poems, Reply of Friar Doro Topias, vol. ii, p. 100.

Gipsire. s. See extract.

Gipsire.—A purse. From Fr. gibecière, a pouch, and that from gible, a bunch, anything which stands poking out; gibbouse, a great bunch or pouch-like swelling, a pouch or bulge. (Coleridge).—Webster, Dictionary of English Etymology.

Gipsy. s.

1. Member of the family, tribe, or community of the gipsies. Their language is of Indian origin; the name being a corruption of Egyptian, an origin from Egypt having been erroneously attributed to them.

I perceive him to be more ignorant in his art of divining than any gipsy.—Milton, Apology for Smecton.

Gipsy [is] corrupted from 'Egyptian,' for when the gipsy first appeared in Europe, they declared, and perhaps truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.—Johnson.

The received opinion sets them down for Egyptians, and makes them out to be the descendants of those vagabond votaries of Isis, who appeared to have exercised in ancient Rome pretty much the same profession as that followed by the present gipsies, viz. fortune-telling, strolling up and down, and pilfering.—Switzerland, Travels through Spain, let. 25.

The gipsies, as it should seem by some striking proofs derived from their language, came originally from Hindostan, where they are supposed to have been of the lowest class of Indians, namely Pariahs, or, as they are called in Hindostan, Sunders. They are thought to have migrated about A.D. 1408, or 1409, when Timur Beg ravaged India for the purpose of converting the Mahometan religion. . . . They must certainly have been in Egypt before they reached us, otherwise it is incomprehensible how the report arose that they were Egyptians.—Brand, Observations on popular Antiquities.

2. Reprehensible name for a dark complexion. Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench; Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots.—Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, ii. 4.

3. Name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow day'd the gipsy, and so did her confident too, in pretending to believe her.—Sir R. L'Estrange.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes;
The gipsy knows her power, and flies. Prior.

Used adjectively.

The register directory on the day, which in their gipsy jargon they call the 5th of Phivuse, charges us with ending our declarations.—Barke.

Gipsyism. s. State of a gipsy.

...panion of his [the linker's] travels in some fast, sun-burnt gipsy, that since the terrible statute recanted gipsyism [gipsyism] and is turned postman.—Sir T. Freyberg, Characters, sig. 1. 2.

Gipsywort. s. Native plant so called; Lycopus europæus.

Giraffe. s. [Camelopardalis giraffa.] Camelopard.

John Thomas Munro, the best reporter of this historic, being then at Constantinople, and having good means to see the beautiful and beautiful presents which the spoiling and ravenous Bessa gave the Turkish, reported the sum thereof to have been a million of gold; with three-score horses most richly equipped, a live elephant, and a live giraffe (which is a beast like a camel and a gazelle), two great crocodiles, dead, and a chain of muslin gold richly set with precious stones, &c.—Kaethe, History of the Turks, 188, (Ord MS.).

The giraffe is, in some respects, intermediate between the Indian lion and the solid-horned rhinoceros, though partaking more of the nature of the deer. In the Nubian giraffe, the vertebral formula is:—7 cervical, 14 dorsal, 5 lumbar, 4 sacral, and 20 caudal.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates.

Girandole. s. [Italian, girandola.] Can-de-labra.

I was ushered into a beautiful apartment, hung with rich damask, and interspersed with a profusion of mirrors. Beyond, to the right of this room, was a small closet, fitted up with books. This room, evidently a favourite retreat, was adorned at close intervals with girandoles of silver and mother of pearl; the handles of the doors were of the same material.—Sir E. B. Lytton.

Gird. v. a. preterite girded, or girt. [from A.S. gyrdan.]

1. Bind round.

They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth.—2 Maccabees, x. 5.

2. Put on so as to surround or bind.

Cords of the looseness of packthread were fastened to bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck.—Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

3. Fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him.—1 Maccabees, iii. 25.

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And, at the head of our remaining troops,
Attack the foe. Addison, Cato.
The combatant too into the field declines,
When now the sword is girded to his loins. Prior.

4. Invest.

The son appear'd,
Girt with omnipotence. Milton, Paradise Lost, vii. 193.

5. Dress; habit; clothe.

I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk. Ezekiel, xvi. 10.
Tisiphone there kept the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

6. Cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together sew'd,
To gird their waist; vain covering, if it had
Their guilt, and dreaded shame! Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 1112.

7. Furnish; equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Milton, Paradise Regained, l. 120.

8. Enclose; encircle.

That Nysian Isle,
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham

Hid Amalthea, and her florid son
Young Bacchus, from his steeply rising knee's eye.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 277.

9. Reproach; gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods.
Shakespeare, Coriolanus, l. 1.

Gird. v. n. [see last extract.] Gibe.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me; the brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent anything that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me; I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. l. 2.

[To gird or gibe was formerly used in the sense of striking, piercing, cutting; and thence, metaphorically, gird, a sharp remark, a sarcasm.

'And girdeth of tyle's head.' (Piers Plowman.)
'As one through-girt with many a wound.' (Surrey in Nares.)

'Last with his good amongst them he doth go,
And none of them he girdeth in the lances.
Some in the flanks, that pricketh their very pannels.' (Hayton.)

The primary hinge is the sound of a smart blow with a rod, or the like, giving rise to a root which under numerous modifications is applied to the act of striking or cutting, or any sharp sudden action, as kicking, starting forwards.

'Gaulen—

'girt him full upon the neck' (Gaulen, 1598).

Old High German, gihetan, to enclose, to surround (Hilf. German girt, Dutch gird, girdel, English gird, a rod. Bavarian girt, girdel, Swedish: härskargirt, a fustian rod. English girt, synonymous with gird, a sharp touch by word of mouth. Al-tahle, a reach, hit, home-strike, also a gentle up, quip, or jest, a slight gird. (Coleridge). Then, with a clause of the final t into k, jerk, girk, girk, to strike, kick, fust. To jerk, fustier yet, to sweep. (Sherwood.) Girk, a rod, to chastise, or beat.
'You must be jerking at the times forth.' (The Ostrich, iv. 1.)

To jerk, to kick like a horse; park, to strike, to beat, to stroke, jerk, stretch, pull. (Halliwell.)—Hedgcock, Dictionary of English Etymology.]

Gird. s.

1. Twinge.

Conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the atheist feels.—Archbishop Tillotson.

He has the pang of his conscience, when he doth weep, to set against the clank and girds of it when he doth misdeed.—Chadman, Winter Evening's Conversation.

2. Gibe.

'Curculio may chattle till his heart ake, ere any be offended with his girdles.'—Gosson, School of Abuse, 1579.

Sweet khug! the bishop hath a kindly gird;
For shame, my lord of Winchester, forbear.

Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part I. l. 111.
All the sharp quips, and witty girds, where-with Martial doth what and outdoeth the conclusions of his; cyrenians.—Florio, Translation of Montaigne, l. 2, c. 1018.

The world has given you many a shrewd up and gird since that time, but either my eyes are grown dimmer, or my old friend is the same who stood before me three-and-twenty years ago—his hair a little confessing the least of Time, but still surrounding the same vigorous brain—his heart not altered, save where it 'alteration finds.'—Lamb, Dissertation to Coleridge.

Girder. s. [from gird = bind.] In Architecture. Largest piece of timber or iron supporting a floor.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground plates are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder.—Mason, Mechanical Exercises.

These mighty girders which the fabricer laid,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd.
Sir R. Blackmore.

Girder. s. [from gird = gibe.] Satirist.

We great girders call it a short saying of sharp wit with a bitter sauce in a sweet word. Lilly, Alexander and Campaspe.

Girding. verbal abn. [from gird = bind.] Garment which girds the body.

Instead of a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth.—Leaich, iii. 25.

Girding. part. adj. [from gird = gibe.] Gibling.

It could not but go deep into thy soul, to hear these bitter and girding reproaches from them Thou camest to save.—Bishop Hall, Contemplations, The Crucifixion.

Girdle. s. [A.S. gyrdel.]

1. Anything drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled; belt; zone.

Moss . . . girded them with girdles.—Leopoldus, viii. 15.
The same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins.—Matthew, iii. 4.

Many conceive there is somewhat amiss, until they put on their girdle.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

On him his mantle, girdle, sword, and bow,
On him his heart and soul he did bestow. Courty.

2. Enclosure; circumference.

Suppose within the girdle of these walls,
Are now confined two mighty monarchies.
Shakespeare, Henry V. I. chorus.

3. Intertropical zone.

Great rivers in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, do refrigerate.—Bacon.

Girdle. v. a.

1. Gird; bind as with a girdle.

'Thus, thus,' quoth Forrest, girdling one another Within their imminent ambush aris.
Shakespeare, Richard III. iv. 3.

2. Enclose; shut in; environ.

Those sleeping slaves,
That as a waist do girdle you about.
Shakespeare, King John, II. 1.

But call you those true spirits ill affected,
That whilst the wars were, serv'd like walls and ribs
To girdle in the kingdom?
Beaumont and Fletcher, The Captain.

3. See extract.

In formal settlements in the wilds of America, the great trees are stript of their branches, and then girdled, as they call it, which consists in cutting a circle of bark round the trunk, whereby it is made gradually to decay.—Proceedings of the Royal Society, July, 1862: (March. (Opt. MS.)

Girdler. s. Maker of girdles.

Talk with the girdler or the millner.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Honest Man's Fortune.

Girl. s. [Provincial German, gür, gurre, gürle. For other derivations see last two extracts.] Young woman, or female child.

In those unfeeling days was my wife a girl.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, I. 2.

The fool Amphimachus, to find brought gold to be his wrack,
Proude girl like, that doth ever bear her dowry upon her back. Chapman.

A weather-beaten lover, but once known,
Is sport for every girl to practise on. Donne.
Travels should blush as much to stoop
To the low mimic follies of a girl.
As a grave matron would to dance with girls.
Lord Byron, Don Juan.

A boy, like her, would make a likely girl.
But oh! a girl, like her, must be divine! Argo.

[About the etymology of this word there is much question: Merle Casanovi, as is his custom, derives it from one of the same signification; Minsheu from garula, Latin, a sculler, or garula, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from garula, Welsh, from which, says he, garul is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used coof for a man, might likewise have coof for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr.
Hicks derives it most probably from the Icelandic garluna, a woman.—Johnson.

[Girl was formerly an appellation common to both sexes. Serenius says, that from the Sui-Gothic karl, a man, many etymologists deduce our word girl. 'The younger girls of the diocese,' in the Prologue to Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, may be the young men or the young women, the appellation, as already noticed, being common to both. . . . In old English, the word girl is exactly expressive of the Hebrew gûl, and means a young person of either sex.—Todd.

Girthead. s. State of a girl.

I regret that it is not in my power to collect more anecdotes of Dr. Johnson's infancy. My mother passed her days of girthead with an uncle at Warwick, consequently was absent from home in the school-boy days of the great man.—Miss Seward,
To Mr. Bowtell, l. 1. 38: 1785.

Girlish. adj. Smiling, or having the character of a girl; youthful.

In her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor.—
Carver.

Girn. v. n. [grin.] Grin.

They make anticks faw, girn, moe and mop like an ape.—Bishop Harsnet, Declaration of Epish Impudence.

It has been always found an excellent way of girling at the government in scriptura phrase.—
South, Sermon, II. 118.

Girs. s. Grin.

This is at least a girs of fortune, if Not a fair smile. Sir W. Duhamel, The Wits.

Girth. s.

1. Band by which the saddle is fixed upon the horse.

Or the saddle turned round or the girths brake;
For low on the ground, woe for his make.
The law is found. H. Jonson, Underwoods.

Nor Pegasus could bear the load,
Along the high celestial road;

The steel oppress'd, would break his girth,
To raise the hinder part from earth.

Swift, The Progress of Poetry.

Mordant hallops on alone;

The roads are with his fallow's strewn;

This breaks a girth, and that a bone.

Id., To the Earl of Peterborough.

2. Compass measured by the girdle or en- closing landage.

It's a holy jolly fellow that lives well, at least three yards in the girth.—Addison, Freeholder.

Spelt, less properly, without the h, and pro- nounced accordingly.

Here the old Hobson, death hath broke his girt;
And here, alas! hath laid him in the dirt.

You shall see a pliny in stature as big as a giant in the girt. Hammond, Works, iv. 677.

The most common way of laundage is by that of the girt, which girt hath a bolster in the middle,
and the ends are laced firmly together.—Winnon, Surgery.

Gist. s. [Fr. giste, from giter—lie: spelt gest.]

1. Lodging-place to a traveller for the night; especially applied to the sleeping-places in royal progresses; hence, place to settle down or arrive at.

The guides who were to conduct them on their way had commandment so to cast their gists and journeys that by three of the clock on the morning of the third day they might assay Pyencom. Holland, Treatise of Linn, p. 128. (French.)

2. Point to arrive at; object; this being the only current meaning at present.

The real gist of the office [of congressing] was what was considered an unfair expropriation or encroachment of the price by buying up what would otherwise have been brought to market by the producers themselves. Walswood, Dictionary of English Etymology, Engross.

Gite. s. [Fr. giste—lying, disposition.] Mien.

Mothought I saw a delfine of delight,
A stately nymph, a dame of heavenly kind,
Whose glittering gite so glaz'd in mine eyes
As (yet) I not what proper hee I bare,
No there-withall, my wits can well devise,
To whom I might her lovely looks compare.
Gascoigne, The Choise of Phillis, (Rich.)

The garments say, the glittering gite of gite,
The tye-like talk which flows from Phillis' peck;
The painted rule, the too much red made white,
Are smiling lay to fish for loving looks.
Id., La Peque of the Brown Beauty, (Rich.)

Gith. s. The older notices of this word make it mean the Guinea pepper, or capsi- cum. The extract connects it with the Nigella, with its black seeds and capsular fruit. At present, it is merely the English for Githago, the specific term for the Agrostemma Githago, or corncockle, and, as such, is found in the modern synonymies, though misapplied.

We in English call it gith and Nigella Romanica after the Latines; Mr. Parkinson called it fenelflower; others, bishopswort; and others, Dave. Katherine flus, or st. Catherine's flower; and some Kiss me twice
Before I rise,
and the old man's beard.—Cole, Adam in Eden, xxi.

Give. v. a. preterite gave; past part. given.

[A.S. gifan.] This is preeminently an active or transitive verb, and it will simplify the exposition of its various shades of meaning if we begin with considering it as such, i.e. with a special view to its regimen or government. Its fundamental meaning seems to be, make over or transfer. Now this implies not only an object transferred, but a person or thing to whom it is transferred. Hence when the construction is in full, the nouns that follow it are two in number; one conveying the name of the thing given and received, the other the name of the receiver.

Give us also sacrifices and burnt offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the Lord.—Exodus, x. 25.

Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out.—
Matthew, xiv.

This opinion abated the fear of death in them
which were so resolved, and gave them courage to all adventures.—Hucker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I had a wonder that gave me all I could ask, but thought fit to take one thing from me again.—*Sir
W. Temple*.

Give us also sacrifices and burnt offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the Lord.—Exodus, x. 25.

Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out.—
Matthew, xiv.

This opinion abated the fear of death in them
which were so resolved, and gave them courage to all adventures.—Hucker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I had a wonder that gave me all I could ask, but thought fit to take one thing from me again.—*Sir
W. Temple*.

Give us also sacrifices and burnt offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the Lord.—Exodus, x. 25.

Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out.—
Matthew, xiv.

This opinion abated the fear of death in them
which were so resolved, and gave them courage to all adventures.—Hucker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I had a wonder that gave me all I could ask, but thought fit to take one thing from me again.—*Sir
W. Temple*.

Give us also sacrifices and burnt offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the Lord.—Exodus, x. 25.

Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out.—
Matthew, xiv.

This opinion abated the fear of death in them
which were so resolved, and gave them courage to all adventures.—Hucker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

I had a wonder that gave me all I could ask, but thought fit to take one thing from me again.—*Sir
W. Temple*.

Give us also sacrifices and burnt offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the Lord.—Exodus, x. 25.

Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out.—
Matthew, xiv.

If both or either of these be omitted the signification is slightly altered.

They were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage.—Matthew, xxiv. 38.

Here the omission consists in the names of both what was given and who received; accordingly the construction is, in appearance, intransitive or neuter.

The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat.—Genesis, iii. 12.

Here the omission is the name of the recipient, which is easily supplied from the context. In the following it is not so clear.

There was either a place or person to receive the bills when parted with by some one else; the exact nature, however, of the reciprocity is uncertain, and a combination give in has the character of an idiom.

Those bills were printed not only every week, but also a general account of the whole year was given in upon the Thursday before Christmas.—Grant, Observations on the Bills of Mortality.

When the names of the giver and receiver are identical, the construction is reflective, and give becomes nearly synonymous with apply or addict.

The Helots, of the other side, shutting their gates, gave themselves to bury their dead, to cure their wounds, and rest their wearied bodies.—*Sir P.
Sydney*.

After men began to grow to number, the first thing we read they gave themselves into, was the tilling of the earth and the feeding of cattle.—Hucker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

They who gave themselves to warlike action and enterprises, went immediately to the temple of Odin.
—Sir W. Temple.

Besides the character of the construction, that of the act, as taken by itself, requires notice. An object may be made over from A to B in two ways: (a) with or (b) without pay, reward, or equivalent, i. e. the transfer may constitute a sale or a free gift. In the following extract the first line, taken alone, suggests the notion of a gift; the third, that of a bargain; the second, a mixture of the two. In most of the others the object is immaterial, the construction being sometimes either wholly or approximately that of an idiom; e.g.
give place, way, yield, where the actual place or way is non-existent, whereas when it exists the combination has its ordinary import.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the strength of my displeasure.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, v. 1.

Give me to know
How this foul rout began, what set it on.

Id., Othello, II. 3.

So you must be the first that gives this sentence.
And he that suffers. Id., Measures for Measures, II. 2.

All that a man hath will he give for his life.—
Job, ii. 4.

Give place, thou stranger, to an honourable man.
—Reverendius, xxix. 27.

Philip, Alexander's father, gave sentence against a prisoner what time he was drowsy, and seemed to give small attention. The prisoner, after sentence was pronounced, said, I appeal. The king, somewhat stirred, said, To whom do you appeal? The prisoner answered, From Philip, when he gave me ear, to Philip, when he shall give me ear.—Bacon, Apophthegms.

God himself requireth the lifting up of pure hands in prayers, and hath given the world to understand that the wicked, although they cry, shall not be heard. Hucker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

The Rhodians seeing their enemies turn their backs, gave a great shout in derision of them.—
Andria, History of the Turks.

All clad in skins of beasts the javelin bear,
Give to the wanton winds their flowing hair.
Deplan, Translation of the Ened.

He would give his nuts for a piece of tuck, and exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pottle.—Jarvis.

I gave his wise proposal way;
Nay, ur'd him to go oo: the shallow fraud
Will ruin him. Rower, A Sublimis Strupthor.

Let the first honest discoverer give the word about, that Wood's halfpence have been offered, and caution the poor people not to receive them.—Swift.

This instance gives the impossibility of an eternal 1061 existence in any thing essentially alterable or corruptible. Hob.

The number of men being divided by the number of ships, gives four hundred and twenty-four men a piece. Arbuthnot.

Give away. Alienate from one's self; make over to another; transfer.

The more he got, the more he showed that he gave away to his new mistress, when he betrayed his promises to the former. Sir P. Sidney.

If you sell marry, You give away this hand, and that is mine; You give away heavy vows, and those are mine; You give away yourself, which is known mine. Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, v. 3.

Love gives away all things, that so he may advance the interest of the beloved person. Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercise of holy Living. But we who give our native rights away, And our crushed posterity betray, Are now reduced to beg an alms, and go On holidays to see a puppet-show. Deighton, Translation of Juvenal.

Thus, said I, man was made in vain! How is he given away to misery and mortality! Abraham.

Theodosius made a private vow never to inquire after Constantia, whom he looked upon as given away to his rival, upon the day on which their marriage was to have been solemnized. Id.

Whoever we employ in charitable uses, during our lives, is given away from ourselves; what we bequeath at our death, is given from others only, as our nearest relations. Bishop Atterbury.

Give back. Return; restore.

Their vices perhaps give back all those advantages which their virtues procured. Bishop Atterbury.

Give forth. Publish; tell.

Soon after it was given forth, and believed by many, that the king was dead. Sir J. Hopton.

Give the hand. Yield preeminence, as being subordinate or inferior.

Lessons being free from some inconveniences, whereunto sermons are most subject, they may in this respect no less take than in others they must give the hand, which betokeneth preeminence. Hobbes, Ecclesiastical Politics.

Give out. Proclaim; publish; utter.

The fathers give it out for a rule, that whatsoever Christ is said in Scripture to have received, the same we ought to apply only to the manual of Christ. Hobbes, Ecclesiastical Politics.

'T is given out, that, sleeping in mine orchard, A serpent stung me. So the whole car of Denmark Is by a forged process of my death, Rankly abused. Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 5.

One that gives out his Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 5.

It hath been given out, by an hypocritical thief, who was the first master of my ship, that I carried with me out of England twenty-two thousand pieces of twenty-two shillings per piece. Sir W. Raleigh, Apology.

He gave out general summons for the assembly of his council for the wars. Knutley, History of the Turks.

The night was distinguished by the orders which he gave out to his army, that they should forbear all fighting of their enemies. Adrian.

Give out. Show in false appearance.

That, so young, should give out such a scolding, To seal her father's. Id.

Give over. Leave; quit; cease.

Let twenty therefore in this give over customs prevail. Hobbes, Ecclesiastical Politics.

It may be done rather than that be given over. Id.

Never give over; For scorn at first makes after love the more. Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, iii. 1.

If Desdemona will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful solicitation. Id., Othello, iv. 2.

All the soldiers, from the highest to the lowest, had solemnly sworn to defend the city, and not to give it over unto the last man. Knutley, History of the Turks.

Those troops which were lost, have given over the presentation of the war. Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

But worst of all to give her over, Till she's as desperate to recover. Butler, Hudibras.

A woman had a hen that laid every day an egg; she fancied that upon a larger allowance this hen might lay twice a day; but the hen grew fat, and gave quite over laying. Sir R. L'Estrange.

Many have given over their pursuits after fame, either from the disappointments they have met, or from their experience of the little pleasure which attends it. Adrian, Spectator.

Give over. Addict; attach to.

Belshazzar govern and direct me; for I am wholly given over unto thee. Sir P. Sidney.

When the Babylonians had given themselves over to all manner of vice, it was time for the Lord, who had set up that empire, to pull it down. Greene, Grammatica Sacra.

I used one thing ill, or gave myself so much to it as to neglect what I owed either to God or the world. Sir W. Temple.

Give over. Conclude lost.

Since it is lawful to practise upon them that are forsaken and given over, I will adventure to prescribe to you. Sir J. Sackville.

'Tis not moans, ere's ere give a'er, To try one desperate medicine more; And where your case can be no worse, The desperate is the wisest course. Butler, Hudibras.

The abbess, finding that her physicians had given her over, told her that Theodosius was just gone before her, and had sent her his benediction. Adrian, Spectator.

Her condition was now quite desperate, all regular physicians, and her nearest relations, having given her over. Arbuthnot.

Yet this false comfort never gives him over, That whilst he creeps, his vicious thoughts can soar. Pope.

He'd rather choose that I should die Than his predictions prove a lie; Not one foretells I shall recover, But all agree to give me over. Swift, On the Death of Dr. Swift.

With the adverb omitted.

Finding ourselves in the midst of the greatest wilderness of waters, without victual, we gave it up for lost, and prepared for death. Rasselas, New Atlas, &c.

Who say, I care not, those I give for lost; And to instruct them will not quit the cost. Herbert.

Virtue gives a' for lost, Deprest and overthrown, as second; Like that self-deceitful bird Front out her ugly woe now friend's. Milton, Samson Ag. l. 104, 107.

Since no deep will him her sulphur can hold, Immortal vision, though oppress'd and fall'n, I give not Heaven for lost. Id., Paradise Lost, ii. 70.

Ours gives himself for gone; you've watch'd your time, He fights this day unarm'd, without his rhyme. Deighton.

The parents, after a long search for the body, gave him for drowned in one of the canals. Adrian, Spectator.

As the slender foot of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back, in so much that the people gave him for gone. Id., Guardian.

Give over. Abandon.

That the Estates should give over the villages of the dows when then they held. Edwards, iv. 50.

The duty of independent Churchmen all churches, in all manner of independent economies, will be very hard, and therefore best to give it over. Hobbes, Ecclesiastical Politics.

Abdemelech, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became a monk. Knutley, History of the Turks.

Sleep hath forsaid, and a new me give To death's boundless ocean, as my only cure. Milton, Samson Ag. l. 629.

The cause for which we fought and savor So boldly, shall we now give. Butler, Hudibras.

Give a person his own (as an idiom). Answer a person according to his demerits; return what one takes.

Aristotle has made it the business of almost thirty stanzas . . . also to make a sharp satire on their enemies; to give mankind their own, and to tell them plainly that from their envy it proceeds that the virtue and great nobles of women are purposely concealed. Deighton, Preface to Walsh's Dialogue concerning Women.

Give up. Resign; quit; yield.

The people, weary of the miseries of war, would give him up if they saw him shrink. Sir P. Sidney.

He has betray'd your business, and given up For certain drops of salt your city Rome. Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 5.

The sun, breaking out with his cheerful beams, revived many, before ready to give up the ghost for cold, and gave comfort to them all. Knutley, History of the Turks.

He found the lord Hapton in trouble for the loss of the regiment of foot at Alton, and with the unexpected assurance of the garrison of Arundel castle. Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

Let us give ourselves wholly up to Christ in heart and desire. Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercise of holy Living.

He declares himself to be now satisfied to the contrary, in which he has given up the cause. Deighton.

If they give them up to their reasons, then they with them give up all truth and farther enquiry, and think there is no such thing as certainty. Locke.

Juba's surrender, since his father's death, Would give up Africk into Caesar's hands, And make him lord of half the burning zone. Adrian, Cato.

A popish priest threatened to communicate a Northumberland squire, if he did not give up to him the church lands. Id., Freetholder.

He may be brought to give up the clearest evidence. Bishop Atterbury.

The constant health and longevity of men must be given up also, as a groundless conceit. Hentley.

Have the physicians given up all their hopes? Cannot they add a few days to a monarch? Ross.

These people were obliged to demand peace, and give up to the Romans all their possessions in Sicily. Arbuthnot.

Every one who will not ask for the conduct of God in the study of religion, has just reason to fear he shall be left of God, and given up a prey to thousand prejudices, that he shall be consigned over to the follies of his own heart. Hutton.

Give up. Abandon.

If any be given up to believe lies, some must be first given up to tell them. Bishop Stillington.

Our minds naturally give themselves up to every diversion which they are much accustomed to; and we always find that they, when followed with assiduity, enervates the whole woman. Adrian, Spectator.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature given up to the ambition of fame. Pope.

I am obliged at this time to give up my whole application to Homer. Id.

Persons who, through misfortune, choose not to dress, should not, however, give up neatness. Knutley, History of the Turks.

Give up. Deliver.

And Josh gave up the sum of the number of the people to the king. 2 Samuel, xxiv. 10.

His accounts were confused, and he could not then give them up. Swift.

Give way. Yield; not resist; make room for.

Private respects, with him, gave way to the common good. Cato, Speech of Cato.

Perpetual pushing and assurance put a difficulty out of countenance, and make a seeming impossibility give way. Deighton.

Scarcely had he spoken when the cloud gave way; The mist drew upward, and dissolved in day. Deighton, Translation of the 23rd.

His golden helm gave way with stony blows, Batter'd and flat, and bent to his knees. Id.

In the past participle. Addicted.

Graves and hill-tombs were dangerous, in regard of the secret necres which people superstitiously give a might have always the remote with ease. Hobbes, Ecclesiastical Politics.

The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given, To dream of evil, or to work my downfall. Deighton, History of the Turks.

Humides, the source of the Turks, was dead long before, as was also Mathias, who had succeeded others, given all to pleasure and ease. Knutley, History of the Turks.

Though he was given to pleasure, yet he was likewise desirous of glory. Adrian, History of the Turks.

He is much given to contemplation, and the viewing of this theatre of the world. Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism.

Men are given to this fondness in him as personal blemishes and defects. Sir R. L'Estrange.

Indeed, he is too much given to horseplay in his railway; and comes to battle, like a butcher to the plough. Deighton.

What can I return to a man so charitably given? Id.

I have some senseless of importance with her; but her husband is so horribly given to be pious. Id., Spanish Friar.

Give, v. n. See Give, v. a.

1. Relent; grow moist; melt or soften; thaw.

Some things are harder when they come from the fire, and afterwards give again, and grow soft as the crust of bread, biscuits, sweetmeats, and salt. Adrian, Natural and Experimental History.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul, Like sensual timber, never gives; But though the whole world turn to coal, Then chiefly lives. Herbert.

Unless it is kept in a hot-house, it will so give again, that it will be little better than raw meat. Marston, Household.

Before you carry your large cocks in, open them over, and spread them: hay is apt to give in the cocks. Id.

2. Move.

Up and down he traverses his ground, Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then lends a wound; Now back he gives, then rushes on again. Daniel, Civil Wars.

3. With on or upon. Rush; fall on; give the assault. Gallicism.

Your orders come too late, the fight's begun;
The enemy gives us with fury led.

Drayden, Indian Rapture.
Hannibal gave upon the Romans.—Hooke, Roman History.

Give back. Retire.

Thurba, give back, or else embrace the death.
Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, v. 1.

Give in. Go back; give way; yield; give out.
In the mean time, what doth St. Paul? Both he give in to—Bishop Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

The charge was given with so well governed fury
That the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in. Sir J. Hayward.

Give in to. Adopt; embrace.

This is a geography particular to the metallists;
the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it,
and furnish us with very good lights for the explanation of it. Aldrich, Dialogue on the Usefulness of ancient Metals.

This consideration may induce a translator to give in to those general phrases, which have attained a veneration in our language from being used in the Old Testament.—Pope.

The whole body of the people are either stupidly negligent, or else giving in with all their might to those very practices that are working their destruction. Swift.

Give off. Cense; forbear.

The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as soon as we perceived that it reached the initial. Locke.

Give out. Give in; yield.

We are the earth; and they,
Like moles within us, leave and cast about;
And till they find and clutch their prey
They never rest, much less give out. Il sheet.

Madam, I always believ'd you so stout,
That for twenty denials you would give out.
Swift, The Grand Question Debated.

Give over. Cease; act no more.

If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can show we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church polity.
Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Neither built Christ, through union of both natures, increased the damage of either; but, by being born a man, we should think he had given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also. Hobbes.

Give not o'er to him his men; intent him,
Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown;
You are too cold.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 2.
The state of human actions are so variable, that to try things off, and never to give over, doth wonders.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
Demetrius, king of Macedonia, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king.—Id., Apophthegms.

Shall we kindle all this flame
Only to put it out again?

And must we in
And only end where we began?

In vain this mischief we have done,
If we can do no more. Sir J. Denham.

It would be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to desist from any further pursuits after fame. Aldrich.

He winned again, and was forced to give over for the same reason.—Swift.

Give, s. One who gives; donor; bestower;
distributor; granter.

Well we may afford
Our gifts their own gifts.
Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 316.

By thee how fairly be the give or Rejoice? But gratitude in thee is best long since. Id., Paradise Regained, iv. 187.

I have not liv'd since first I heard the news;
The gift the guilty give doth accrue.
Drayton, Aeneas.

Both gifts destructive to the givers prove:
Alike both lovers fall by those they love. Pope.

Giving, verbal abs.

1. Act of one who, or that which, gives;
process by which anything is given.

Constant at church and change, his gains were sure;
His givings rare, save farthings to the poor.
Pope, Moral Essays, ep. iii.

2. With out. Pretence; alleging what is not real.

His givings out were of an infinite distance
From his true meat design.
Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, i. 3.

Gizzard, s. [Fr. gésier.] Muscular part of the intestinal canal in certain birds (especially the common fowl and its con-geners); stomach of a fowl.

Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the giz-
ard. Dr. H. B.

In birds there is no mastication in the mouth;
but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of antestomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glands discharging in there, and thence transferred into the stomach, or intestinal stomach.—Ray.

They reside near the thrum,
By their high crops and eery gizzards known.
Drayton.

Figuratively. Temper.

But that which does them greatest harm,
Their spiritual gizzards are too warm;
Which puts the overheated souls
In fevers still. Butler, Hudibras.

Satisfaction and restitution lie so curiously laid upon the gizzards of our politicians, that their ideal is not half so dear to them as the treasure in their coffers. Sir R. L'Estrange.

Stick in one's gizzard. Prove indigestible, or distasteful; vex.

Glabrous, adj. [Lat. glaber.] Smooth, like hairs.

French elm, whose leaves are thicker, and more glabrous, and smooth.—Reynolds.

Glaciable, adj. Capable of being converted into ice.

[Not sensible philosophers conceive of the generation of diamonds, &c. beryls, not making them from frozen liquids, or from mere aqueous and gla-ciable substances, combining them by frosts into solidities vainly to be expected even from polar concentrations. Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors,
ii. ii. ch. i. (Rich).

Glacial, adj. [Lat. glacies.] Ice.

And for this glacial air, where is the shepherd so simple that could have told him that snowy, or whatever else he means by glacial air, or clouds, may serve to darken the day, but not at all to produce it.
Goethe, Cosmological Science, &c. ch. iv. (Orl 318).

Glacial period or epoch. In Geology. A division of the later tertiary chronology, so called from the signs of the action of large masses of ice, either as glaciers heaving;
grooves or strias on rocks, or as icebergs containing boulders, which they carried to great distances, and left, as they melted, in latitudes far south of the icy districts of the present geology.

Used with præ before, and post after, as the second element of a compound.

The second species, the Rhinoceros megarhinus, ... has been determined by the author megarhinus remains from the bricks with the covering the lower part of the Thames valley, and from the peat-forest forest, foot of Cromer. The association in Wootton Bassett Houses with Elephas primigenius and Rhinoceros megarhinus, and other characteristic peat-forest mammals, proves that it coexisted with the Ice-epoch species. W. B. Dawkins, Proceedings of the Royal Society, April 25, 1866.

Glaciate, v. a. Convert into ice; freeze.

Glaciating, part. adj. Converting into ice;
freezing.

The other thing was to measure by the differing weight and density of the same portion of water what change was produced in it between the best time of summer, a first and glaciating degree of cold, and then the highest we could produce by art.
Boyle, Works, vol. 6, p. 522. (Rich).

Glaciation, s. Act of turning into ice; con-gealing; congelation; freezing.

Ice is plain upon the surface of water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air.—Sir T. Browne,
Vulgar Errors.

A violent motion of water is a preservative against glaciation.—Dr. Robinson, Civil Ventilation of Bacon's Vulgar Errors, p. 120.

Glacier, s. Mass of permanently frozen water on land, as opposed to an iceberg or floating one.

The glacier's cold and restless mass
Moves onward, day by day;
But I am he who bids it pass,
Or with its ice delays. Dryden, Manfred.

A glacier may be instance as showing nearly as much combination in its changes as a plant of the lowest organization. It is in constant growth and constant decay; and the rates of its composition and decomposition preserve a tolerably equable ratio. It moves; and its motion is in immediate dependence on its thawing. It emits a torrent of water, which, in common with its motion, undergoes annual variations as plants do; and both also undergo, in summer at least, daily variations. During part of the year, the surface melts and freezes alternately;
and on these changes are dependent the variations

in progressive movement, and in efflux of water.
Thus we have growth, decay, changes of temperature, changes of consistence, changes of velocity, changes of elevation, all going on in mutual dependence; and it may be almost as truly said of a glacier as of an animal, that by ceaseless interaction and disintegration it gradually undergoes an entire change of substance without losing its individuality.
—Robert Spence, The Data of Biology, § 115.

Glaciously, adj. Icy; resembling ice.

Although extended and placed in cold conserva-ries, it will crystallize and shoot into glaciously becomes. Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Glacis, s. [Fr.] Slope, outside a fortification, from the parapet of the covered way to the level ground.

That assembly was not the opinion of the prince who had, at the head of Cronon's Life Guards, driven the French household troops, till then invincible, back over the ruins of Nieuwink, and whose eagle eye and apprehending voice had followed Cott's proceedings by the glades of Namur.—Mar-shale, History of England, ch. xxiv.

Glad, adj. [A.S. glæd.]

1. Cheerful; gay; in a state of hilarity.

They blessed the king, and went into their tents joyful and glad of heart. A Kings, viii. 63.
'Twas the most dainty wench, the best com-monion.

When I was gladd, the happiest and the gladdest,
The modest sweet nature drest within her.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Legal Subject.

2. Wearing a gay appearance; fertile; bright;
showy.

The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and be glad as the rose.—Isaiah, xxxv.

Thou first adorned
With their bright luminaries, that set and rose,
Glad evening and glad morn crown'd the fourth day. Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 381.

3. Pleased; elevated with joy; (with of, more rarely with at or with, before the name of the cause of gladness).

I am glad to see your worship.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. v. 1.
He hath an uncle in Messina will be very much glad of it.—Id., Much Ado about Nothing, i. 1.

He that is glad of exultation shall not be unpun-ished. Proverbs, xxv. 3.

I think he's her servant. I'm glad of it.—Shakespeare, A good woman. I am glad she still.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit without Words.

He, glad
Of her attention, gain'd with serpent tongue,
His fraudulent temptation thus began.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 528.
If he be my enemy, let him triumph; if he be my friend, he will be glad of my repentance.—Dryden, Fables.

The plague wound rush'd out a crimson flood;
The Trojan, glad with sight of Iustitia's blood,
His faultless drew.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.
Glad of a quarrel, straight I chop the door.
Pope, Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot.

4. Pleading; exhilarating.

His conversation
More glad to me than to a miser money is.
Sir P. Sidney.

5. Expressing gladness.

a. Really.

Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers:
Prepare the way, a God, a God appears!
Pope, Messiah.

b. Ironically; the sense being that what would make the speaker glad is unlikely.

Hence its use suggests the notion of chal-
lence to produce it.

I would be glad to learn from those who pro-manner that the human soul always thinks, how they know it.—Locke.

Glad, v. a. [A.S. gladian.] Gladness; (this latter being the commoner word).

Lake to a flower that feels its heat of sunme,
Which may her feeble leaves with comfort gladden.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, vi. 10, 44.

He saw rich nectar-flaws release the plover
Of the icy north; from frost-bound Atlas hands
His aluminous fitters fall: green vivans
Gladdening the Scythian rocks, and Litany sands.
Cockburn.

Heaven smil'd, and gladdened was the heart of man.
Dryden, Fables.

To see so many virtues thus united,
To restore justice, and diffuse oppression. Deacy.

Each drinks the juice that gladdens the heart of man.
Pope.

If justice Phillips' codive head
Some frigid rhyme disturbs,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.

Glad. v. n. Be glad; rejoice.

Gladiat' thou in such sorrow?
I call my wish back. Mausinger, Virgin Martyr.

Gladden. v. a. Make glad.

Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!
Delight of every eye! When he appear'd,
A sweet pleasure gladden'd all that saw him.

Addison, Cato.
A kind of vital heat in the soul cheers and gladdens her, when she does not attend to it.—Id., Spectator.

Gladder. a. One who, or that which, glads or gladdens.

Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron, . . .
Have pity, goddess. Chaucer and Dryden; i. e.
transferred from the former to the latter.

Glade. s. [see last extract.] Opening, avenue, or break, in a wood.

To make a glade in the midst of a wood; to lopp or cut away branches where they let the light.
—Harriet, Accurate; 15th.

No flamm'd his eyes with rage and rancorous ire;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glowing lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
And listened to the words she sung; for then,
Through a small glade cut by the fishermen,
I saw it was your daughter.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Two Noble Kinsmen.
O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade,
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable

To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown an evening.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ix. 1081.
When any, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star,
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convey.

Id., Comus, 78.
For noonday's heat are closer neighbours made,
And for fresh evening air the softer glade.

Dryden, State of Innocence.
There, interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades.

Pope.
By the heron's armed shades,
Gliding through the choany glades;
By the conies that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
Oh, take the husband, or restore the wife!

Id., Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.
[Glade.—A light passage made through a wood, also a beam or breaking in of the light. (Bailey.) Glade, hot gleams between showers. (Baker.) The fundamental meaning is a passage for the light, either through trees or through clouds. Norse glede, a clear spot among clouds, a little taking up in the weather; glefja, to jump; glott, an opening, a clear spot among clouds.—Waldwood, Dictionary of Eng- lish Etymology.]

Gladsly. adv. Full of gladness. Obsolete,
rare.

There leave we them in pleasure and repose,
Spending their jocular days, and gladsly nights.

Spenser, Faerie Queen, v. 3. 40.
Gladsfulness. s. Attribute suggested by gladsly. Rare.

And there him rests in riotous sufficiency
Of all his gladsfulness, and kindly jovianity.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
Gladiator. s. [Lat. gladius = sword.] Sword-player, of which it is nearly the Latin equivalent; prizefighter.

They had several delight some shown to exhilarate
the people; gladiators; combatants of men with themselves; with wild beasts, &c.—Burton, Anatomy of Metaphor, p. 239.

Then whilst his foe each gladiator fights,
The atheist, looking on, enjoys the spoils.

St. J. Denham.
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.

Dryden, Translation of Persius.
Writers . . . have given too great pomp and magnificence to the exploits of the ancient bear-garden;
and made their gladiators, by fabulous tradition, greater than Gorman and others of Great Britain!

—Tidder, no. 31.
Gladiatorial. adj. Relating to gladiators.

Consider only the shocking carnage made in the human species by the exposure of infants, the gladi- atorial shows, and the exceedingly cruel usage of slaves, allowed and practised by the ancient Pagans.
—Bishop Porteus, Sermons, i. xiii.

Gladiatorian. adj. Relating to, or exhibited by, gladiators.

The gladiatorian and other sanguinary sports which we allow our people sufficiently discover our national taste.—Lord Shaftesbury, Advice to an Author, pt. ii. s. 3. (Rich.)

Gladiatory. adj. Belonging to gladiators, 1064 swordplayers, prizefighters, or combatants in general.

The Romans add use themselves unto their gladiatory fights and bloody spectacles, that acquaintance with wounds and blood might make them the less fear it in the wars.—Bishop Reynolds, On the Pas- sions, ch. xxvii.

At Rome there were usually these gladiatory sports; bloody, sword-killing sports; they killed men in sport.—Dr. Wratfield, Sermon, p. 77: 1610.

Gladiature. s. Fencing; swordplay.
In their amphibithetical gladiatures, the lives of empires lay at the mercy of the vulgar.—Gayton, Notes on Don Quixote.

Gladiolus. s. [Lat.; the o, though the word is often improperly pronounced gladiolus, being short. Little sword; from gladius = sword.] In Horticulture the gladiolus is the sword lily. In Botany, the gladiolus, which is a mere corruption of the same word, is the Iris fetidissima; the yellow Iris being the Corn flag. The word, however, is applied to several species of Iris, the class of plants wherein the leaf is most especially swordlike. The true gladioli are the members of the genus Iris, the connection with the lilies being spurious.

[Of the gladiolus, or sword lily, a tender flower, there are three or four sorts.—Macrombie, Gar- deners' Journal.]

Gladly. adv. In a glad manner; with gaiety; with merriment; with triumph; with exultation.

For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not our follower. Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus, ii. 1.

You are going to set us right; and 'tis an advantage every body will gladly see you engross the glory of.
—Abant, Letter to Pope.

Gladness. s. Attribute suggested by Glad;
cheerfulness; joy; exultation.

The Jews had light, and gladness, and joy, and honour.—Ezra, viii. 10.

And then shall have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth. Luke.

By such degrees the spreading gladness grew
In every heart, which fear had froze before;
The standing streets with so much joy they view,
That with less grief the perished they deplore.

Dryden.
Gladsome. adj.

1. Pleased; gay; delighted.
The highest angels to and fro descend,
From highest heaven in gladsome company.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
The gladsome ghosts in circling troops attend,
And with unweary'd eyes behold their friend.

Dryden.
2. Causing joy; having an appearance of gaiety.

Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay;
Of opening heav'n they sung and gladsome day.

Prior.
Gladsomey. adv. In a gladsome manner.
I remembered myself by and by,
And beheld the same slyne so gladsomey.

Phantom Pathways, sign. A. 1. b.
Glaire. s. [A.S. glær.]

1. White of an egg.
Grynde vermillion on a stone with newe glayre, and put a ltylle of the yolke of an ytherio, and so write therewith.—Early English Miscellanies in Prose and Verse, from an Autodited Manuscript of the fifteenth Century, p. 72. (Edited by J. O. Halliwell.)

Take the glaire of eggs, and strain it as short as water.—Peascham, On Drawing.

2. Any viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

Her lewde lypes twayne,
The slaver, such sayne,
Lyke a rayge rayne,
A gummy glayre.

Skellon, Poems, p. 124.
Blood, poison, slimy glere,
That in his body so abound were.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 109.
I found the tongue hick and dry, with a black glare on the teeth.—Furley, On the Maratic Achil,
p. 11.

Glaity. adj. Having the character of glair.
The first sign of it is a glaity discharge.—Wise- man, Surgery.

Glanee. s. [German, glantz.]

1. Sudden shoot of light or splendour.
His offering soon propitious fire from heav'n
Comm'd with nimble glance, and grateful steam:
The other's not; for his was not sincere.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 441.
2. Stroke or dart of the beam of sight.

The aspects which procure love are not glances,
but sudden glances and dartings of the eye.—Bacon,
Natural and Experimental History.

There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment; some particularly of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a dishevel'd lock, and a look of gravity.—Dryden, Translation of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

3. Snatch of sight; quick view.
The ample mind takes a survey of several objects with one glance.—Watts, On the Mind.

4. In Mineralogy. Group of minerals so called.
Though there are many doubts respecting min-eralogical species, a large number of such species are so far fixed that they may be supposed capable of being united under the higher divisions of a system with approximate truth. Of these higher divisions, those which have been termed orders appear to tend to something like a fixed chemical character.
Thus the loids of Naumann, and mostly those of Mohs, are combinations of an oxide with an acid, and thus resemble salts, whence their name. The silicoids contain most of Mohs's stints; and the oxides pyrites, glauco, and blende, are common to Naumann and Mohs; being established by the latter on a difference of external character.—Wheatley,
History of Scientific Ideas, ii. 111, ed. 1858.

Glance. v. n.
1. Shoot a sudden ray of splendour.
He double blows about him fiercely laid,
That glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil use,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd.

Spenser.

2. Fly off; strike in an oblique direction.
He has a little gall'd me, I confess;
But as the just old glances away from me,
'Tis ten to one it willn't you two outright.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night of the Mice, v. 2.

Through Paris' shield the fearful weapon went,
His corset pierced, and his arment rend;
And glancing downwards near his flank descend.

Pope, Translation of the Iliad.

3. View with a quick cast of the eye; play the eye.
O! he sudden up they rise and dance,
Then sit again, and such and glauco;
In a dance again, and kiss. Sir J. Suckling

Mighty Dulness crown'd,
Shall take through Grib Street her triumphant train;
And her Farnassus glancing o'er at once,
Behold a hundred sons, and each a dance.

Pope, Dunciad.

4. Censure by oblique hints.
How could thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glauc at my credit with Hippolita,
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus?
Shakespeare, Midsummer Night's Dream, ii. 2.

Some men glauco and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives: as to say, this I do not.—
Idem.

I have never glauco upon the late designed profession of his business and his attendants, notwithstanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous speculations.—Addison.

He had written verses wherein he glauco at a certain reverend doctor, famous for dulness.—Swift.

Glanee. v. a. Move nimbly; shoot obliquely.
Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
Enough to press a royal merchant down.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, iv. 1.

Glancing. part. adj. Having the character of that which glances.

When through the gloom the glancing lightnings fly,
Heavy the rattling thunders roll on high. Rowe.

Glancing. verbal abs. Act of one who, or that which, glances; censure by oblique hints.
By this hydraiding to me the horrors, as by other suspicious glances in his book, he would seem privily to point me out to his readers as one whose custom of life were not honest but licentious.
—Milton, Apology for Smectymnua.

Glancingly. adv. In a glancing manner;
transiently.
Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something in this kind, but bruskly and glancingly, intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage.—Hakewell, Apology.

Gland. s. [Lat. glans, glandis = acorn.] In Anatomy. Convolution of vessels, chiefly for the purpose of secretion, often with an acornlike outline, and generally with an excretory duct. Of the members of the two sorts indicated by the extract, it is the conglobate which best answers to the name.

All the glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglomerate and conglomerate. A conglomerate gland is a little smooth body, wrapped up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out; of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglomerate glands, all tied together, and wrapped up in the common tunic or membrane.—Quincy.

The glands begin deep in the body of the glands.—Wise.

The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clus of nervous thread,
Involved and twisted with the arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct.

—Sir R. Blackmore.

Glander. v. a. Affect with glanders.

Glandered. part. adj. Affected with glanders.

Being drunk in plenty, it [tar-water] hath recovered even a glandered horse, that was thought incurable.—Bishop Berkeley, Further Thoughts on Tar-Water.

Glanders. s. [N.F. glandre.] Disease so called, chiefly, though not exclusively, limited to horses. See extract from Copland.

His horse is pestered with the glanders.—Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, iii. 2.

Oh, you are! Then pray, sir, what is my complaint?—Complaint? What shall I say? I wish he would return; Oh, 'tis the glanders.—The Glanders! Zounds, do you make a horse of me?—J. Norton, Secrets worth Knowing, v. 2.

The characteristic symptom of glanders in its acute form in the horse, as described by Vines, Coleman, Percival, and Quaint, are—intense inflammation of the pharyngeal membrane, attended by eruptions which soon pass into chancre-like sores; swelling of the lips and nose; rapid extension of the ulceration, giving rise to a purulent and disorganizing discharge, which often passes to a purpura, or bloody and horribly fetid sanies; subsequently exposure of the nasal membrane, with increased discharge, sometimes with slight hemorrhage; swelling and pain of the sublingual glands; inflammation of the conjunctiva and nasal eyelid, quickly passing into a livid and swollen state, with an offensive sanious discharge; great loss of flesh and strength, more or less cough, and fever of a putrid-dynamic or malignant character. These symptoms at last pass into those of furcy glanders, in which small tumours appear about the head, lips, face, neck, or other parts. . . . Glanders may appear in the human subject in different forms. 1st. In that of stupid acute glanders, the disease attacking the nasal cavities and adjoining parts. 2nd. In that of gentle furcy glanders, the malady appearing in various parts, in the form of small tumours, giving rise to foul ulcers, supuration, &c. 3rd. These varieties may exist separately, or they may be both produced at the same time, or the one may precede the other. 4th. Each of them may also occur in a chronic form, and, in this form, also, may exist separately, or be combined. Copland, Dictionary of Practical Medicine, in voce.

Glandiferous. adj. [Lat. fero—bear.] Bearing acorns, or fruit like acorns.

The beech is of two sorts, and numbered amongst the glandiferous trees.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Glandular. adj. Relating to, connected with, constituted by, a gland.

Glandular swellings follow.—Wise, Surgery.

Glandule. s. Small gland.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are called 'ductus salivales'.—Rog.

Glandulosity. s. Collection of glands.

In the upper parts of worms are found certain white and oval glandulosity.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Glandulous. adj. Pertaining to, subsisting in, or having the nature of, glands.

The beaver's lungs are no testicles, or parts official unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of excretories.—Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous tumours and ruptures of the lymphatics. A glandulous, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Glare. v. a. [same root as Glade.]

1. Shine so as to distress the eye.

He is every where above elements of epigrammatic wit, and from hyperbolic: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines but glare not; and is stately without ambition.—Dryden.

The court of Cæsar stands reveal'd to sight;

The cavern glares with new admitted light.

—Id., Translation of the Æneid.

Beholds this man in a false glaring light,
Which conquest and success have thrown upon him.

—Addison, Cato.

2. Look with fierce piercing eyes.

Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with.

—Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 4.

Look you, how pale he glares!—Id., Hamlet, iii. 4.
Now friends no more, nor walking band in hand;
But when they met, they made a sorry stand,
And glared like angry lions as they pass'd,
And wish'd that every look might be their last.

—Dryden, Polixena and Arcite.

'One as melancholic as a cat,' answered Mocks, and glared upon me as if he would have looked through me.—Moss in the Moon: 1000. (Nares by H. & W.)

Glare. v. a. Shoot such splendour as the eye cannot bear.

One spirit in their ruf'd, and every eye
Glared lightning, and shot forth perishing fire
Among th' accurst, that wither'd all their strength.

—Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 818.

Glare. s.

1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.

Eight months the winter dures;

The glare it is so great,

As it is May before he turns

His ground to sow his wheat.

—Taylor, (Nares by H. & W.)

The frame of burnish'd steel cast a glare,
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air.

—Dryden, Fables.

I have grieved to see a person of quality glaring by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of Baubran.—Addison, Grosvenor.

Here in a grove, shelter'd from air,
And screen'd in shades, from day's detested glare,
She sighs for ever. —Love, Rape of the Lock, canto iv.

2. Fierce piercing look.

About them round

A lion now he stalks with fierce glare.

—Milton, Paradise Lost, iv. 401.

Glareous. adj. Glaring.

There is a glareous liquor confined in the bowels of infants, and many other animals, when they are born, which it is necessary to carry off. Grisper, Comparative View of the State and Evolution of Man, p. 23: 177.

Glaring. part. adj.

1. Shining so as to distress the eye.

After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or, contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused.—Bacon.

His glaring eyes with murder's venom swell,
And like the brand of foul Alecto flame.

—Fairfax.

2. Conspicuous; notorious; (as, 'a glaring fault').

Glaringly. adv. In a glaring manner; patently; evidently; notoriously.

I know not whether the brick-bat men in their martial liveries, and the tallow-chandlers in their sky-coloured frocks, are not too glaringly offensive for a royal eye to bear?—The Student, li. 230.

Glart. s. Glairy mucus. Rare.

For the party that is incubated in the breast with any kind of flemme or glart, take the powder of betonie and drink it with warm water; it violeth and purgeth the flemme wonderfully, and doth away the glart or flemme. —Gerard, Herball.

Glass. s. [A.S. glæs.]

1. Transparent, or partially transparent, brittle substance so called.

The word glass cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glæs, from the verb 'glaisen,' which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from 'glacies' in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles.—Puckler, On Dress.

Glass is thought so compact and firm a body that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also so close a texture that the subtlest ethereal spirits cannot penetrate it.—Bacon.

Shower of granulous rain, by sudden burst
Disjuncting numerous bowels, fragments of steel
And stones, and glass, and nitrous grain adust.

—A. Phillips.

Glass is a transparent solid formed by the fusion of siliceous and alkaline matters. . . . Chance undoubtedly had a principal share in the invention of this curious fabrication, but there were circumstances in the most ancient arts likely to lead to it; such as the fusing and vitrifying heats required for the formation of pottery, and for the extraction of metals from their ores. Pliny ascribes the origin of glass to the following accident. A merchant-ship laden with natron, being driven upon the coast at the mouth of the river Euphrates, in tempestuous weather, the crew were compelled to seek their victuals ashore, and having placed lumps of the natron upon the sand, as supports to the kettles, found to their surprise masses of transparent stone among the kindlers. The sand of this small stream of Euphrates, which runs from the Mount Carmel, was in consequence supposed to possess a peculiar virtue for making glass, and continued for ages to be sought after for that purpose.—Ure, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Except on subjects for which there has been constructed a scientific terminology, it is natural to prefer giving to a new object a name which at least expresses its resemblance to something already known. . . . In this manner the name of a species often becomes the name of a genus; as salt, for example, or oil; the former of which words originally denoted only the muriate of soda, the latter, as its etymology indicates, only olive oil; but which now denote large and diversified classes of substances presenting these in some of their qualities, and combine only these common qualities, instead of the whole of the distinctive properties of olive oil and sea salt. The words glass and soap are used by modern chemists in a similar manner, to denote genera of which the substances vulgarly so called are single species. And it often happens, as in those instances, that the term keeps its special identification in addition to its more general one, and becomes ambiguous, that is, two names instead of one.—J. S. Mill, System of Logic, b. iv. ch. v. § 3.

2. Vessels, instruments, and articles made of glass.

a. Mirror, i.e. looking-glass.

I'll see no more,

And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass,
Which shows me many woes.

—Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1.

The glass, and the fine linen, and the hood, and the veil.—Goethe, iii. 23.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With twinkling glasses to betray
The larks that in the meadow light.

—Dryden, Translation from Horace.

b. Hour-glass; measure of time; destined time of a man's life.

Were my wife's liver

Infected as her life, she would not live

The running of our glass.

—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, i. 2.

No more his royal self did live, no more his nobles' some,
The golden Meleager now, their glasses all were run.

—Chapman.

c. Drinking-glass, whence quantity contained therein; draught.

To this last costly treaty,

That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass

Dut break't the rinsing.

—Shakespeare, Henry VIII, i. 1.

When they be not
Dilated with fervent joys, and eager soul
Propounds to pursue the sparkling liquor, he sure
'Tis time to slum it.

—J. Phillips, Cyper, b. ii.

While a man thinks one glass more will not make him drunk, that one glass hath disfigured him from well discerning his present condition.—Jeremy Taylor, Rule and Exercise of Holy Living.
The first glass may pass for health, the second for good humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies.—Sir W. Temple.

d. Perspective-glass.

The moon whose orb

Through optick glass the Tuscan artist views.

—Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 287.

Like those who survey the moon by glasses, I tell of a shining world above, but not relate the glories of the place.—Dryden.

d. Weather-glass.

A state weather-glass, that, by the rising and falling of a certain magical liquor, presages all changes and revolutions in government, as the common glass does those of the weather.—Zacher, no. 214.

Used adjectively.

And these glass eyes;

And, like a surly politician, seem

To see the things thus dust nup.

—Shakespeare, King Lear, iv. 6.

Glass bottles are more fit for this second lining than those of wood.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Glass. v. a.

1. See us in a glass; represent, us in a glass or mirror. Rare.

Me thinks I am partaker of thy passion,

And in thy case do glass mine own delinquency.

—Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, b. ii.

2. Case in glass.

Me thought all his senses were lockt in his eye.

As jewels in crystal for some price to buy;

Who tendering their own worth, from whence they were glaz'd,

Did point out to buy them, along as you pass.

—Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, ii. 1.

3. Glaze.

I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glaz'd over by a vitriolous heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion.—Boyle.

Glassblower. s. One employed in glass-blowing. See Glassblowing.

Glassblowing. part. pref. Process by which glass is formed into bottles, &c., by means of a mould on the outside, and a tube by which, when in a plastic condition, it (the semifluid glass) is inflated from within.

This is the second process in glass-blowing, . . . the glassblower takes the metal from the gatherer. — Vie, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Glassen. adj. Made of glass. Obsolete.

He that no more for me, emmyes, jabsies, can
Near use the bones we see doth him a man
To take the box up for him; and pursues
The dice with glass a eyes to the glad views
Of what he throws.

B. Jonson, An Epistle to a Friend. (Rich.)

Glassful. s. As much as is usually taken at once in a glass.

His majesty drank a small glassful of claret wine.
— Sir T. Herbert, Memoir of King Charles I. p. 132.

Glassgazing. adj. Finical; often contemplating him-elf in a mirror.

A glassgazer, glassgazing, superstitious, finical fool. — Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 2.

Glasshouse. s.

1. House where glass is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Roman mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouse. — Johnson, Travels in Italy.

2. House built of glass, as the Crystal Palace, or a greenhouse; in which case it is often two words.

Glassmetal. s. Glass in fusion.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. — Johnson, Physical Repository.

Glasswort. s. Native plant so called of the genus Salicornia.

Glasswort hath an apetalous flower, wanting the embayment; for the stamens, or clives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves; these embryos afterward become pods or bladders, which, or the most part contain one seed. The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the plants up toward the latter end of summer; and, having dried them in the sun, they turn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sea-kali, or alkali, by the chemists. — Miller.

For the blue glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chalk, or glasswort; and for the carcase or green sort, the ashes of brack or other plants. — Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors.

The salt-wort or glass-wort (salicorn-kali) grows freely on most of the shores. — Anted, The Channel Islands, p. 177.

Glassy. adj.

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. — Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness, or lustre, or brittleness.

Maad! proud man!

Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven
As makes the angels weep.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 2.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shows his leaf leaves in the glassy stream.

Id., Hamlet, iv. 7.

Whose womb produced the glassy ice? Who bred
The hoary frosts that fall on Winter's head?

G. Sandys.

Death stood all fixed in his glassy eye;
His hands were withered, and his veins were dry.

Byron, The Corsair.

The memory must retain the sensation or perception to which the technical term or degree of the scale refers. Thus with regard to colour, as we have said already, when we find such terms as the white or pinkish-brown, the metallic colour so denoted ought to occur at once to our recollection without delay or search. . . . Thus glassy lustre, fatty lustre, adamantine lustre, denote certain kinds of shining in minerals, which appearances we should endeavour in vain to describe by periphrasis; and which the terms, if considered as terms in common language, would by no means clearly discriminate; for why, in common language, would say that coal has a fatty lustre? But these terms, in their conventional sense, are perfectly definite; and when the eye is once familiarized with this application of them, are easily and clearly intelligible. — Whewell, Novum Organum renovatum.

Glaucōma. s. [Gr. γλαυκωμα, from γλαυρός, grey, or sea-green.] Disease of the eye, originally identified with the cataract, but in reality seated in the hyaline membrane and aqueous matter, its effect being to give a greyish-green colour to the eye.

The glaucōma is no other disease than the cataract. — Sharp.

The difference has been eagerly contended for between a glaucōma and a cataract, though indeed latterly the contest has been less violent. — The Student, i. 341: 17: n.

Glaucous. adj. [Lat. glaucus; Gr. γλαυκός.] Grey, or blue.

The . . . are small, of a glaucous colour. — Ray, Remains, p. 182.

The kisk glides over a bottom covered with mosses or coloured stones, that reflect through the pure water this glaucous green, or sapphire blue. — Pennant, Voyage to the Hebrides.

Glaive, or Glaive. s. [The i is superfluous; being wanted for neither the derivation, with that of the first element in Claymore, nor for showing that the a is long, which is done by the final e.] Sword.

He . . . laying both his hands upon his glaive,
With dreadful strokes led drive at him so sore.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, iv. 7: 24.

Achilles pressing through the Phrygian glaive's.

Spenser, Epith on Hercules, l. 107.

Two hundred Greeks came next in sight well try'd.

Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,

But each a glaive had pendunt by his side. Faust.

Behold from yonder hill the foe appears,
Horns, bills, glaives, arrows, shields, and spears,
Like a dark wood his comers.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Mud Lovers.

When zeal, with aged chills and glares,
Gave chase to rochets and white staves.

Butler, Hudibras.

Glaiver. v. n. [?] Flatter; wheedle.

The writer of that glancing glass upon Pope Hamilton's ball. Fulke, Against Allen, p. 512: 1504.

Some slavish, glancing, flattering parasite, or hanger-on. — South, Sermons, vi. 116.

Kindness have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glancing council is as dangerous as a wheedling jest, or a flattering physician. — Sir R. L. Edmundo.

Glaiverer. s. One who glavers; flatterer.

These glaverers go, my self to rest I bid,
And doubting nothing, soundly fell asleep.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 407.

Glavering. verbal abs. Flattering.

He knew how tender and delicate he princes' ears, corrupt with glorious gullenry of flatterers. — Joye, Exposition of Daniel, ch. iii. (Rich.)

Glaïmore. s. (generally pronounced claymore.) [Gaelic, claidhamh = sword, more = great.] Large two-handed sword, formerly much used by the highlanders of Scotland.

Their arms were anciently the glaïmore, or great two-handed sword, and afterwards the two-edged sword and target. — Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland.

Glaze. v. a.

1. Furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate calcines chintilly paved, richly hang'd, and glazed with crystalline glass. — Johnson, Keats.

2. Overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects.

Shakespeare, Richard II. ii. 2.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; winnow through with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet it is sound reason that carries the stroke home. — Greene, Canonicus Sacra.

White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. — Dryden, Translation of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

What is this? his eyes are heavy: think not they are glazed with wine.

Go to him: it is thy duty: kiss him: take his hand in thine.

Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

3. In Pottery.

This set me to study how to order my fire, so as to make it burn some pots. I had no notion of a kiln, such as the potters burn in, or of glazing them with lead, though I had some lead to do it with; but I placed three large plinths and two or three pots in a pile, one on another, and placed my fire-wood all round it, with a great heap of embers under them. — Defoe, Life and Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.

4. In Cookery.

To glaze or ice pastry. The fine yellow glaze appropriate to meat pies is given with beaten yolk of egg, which should be laid on with a paste brush, or a small bunch of feathers; if a lighter colour be wished for, wash the whole of the egg together, or mix a little milk with the yolk. . . . This glazing answers also very well, though it takes a slight colour, if used before the pastry is baked. — Miss Acton, Modern Cookery, p. 335.

Glaze. s.

1. In Pottery.

The early Chinese glazes do not appear to be known. — Catalogue of Specimens.

2. In Cookery.

Glaze is merely strong clear gravy or jelly boiled quickly down to the consistency of thin cream; but this reduction must be carefully managed that the glaze may be brought to the proper point without being burned. . . . Any kind of stock may be boiled down to glaze. — Eliza Acton, Modern Cookery, p. vi.

Glaizon. adj. Glossy: (as the first element of a compound).

Old glazun-eyes.

He hath not reach'd his despair yet.

B. Jonson, Volpone.

Glaizer. s. One whose trade is to make glass windows.

Into rabbits, the several pieces of glasswork are set, and fastened by the glazier. — Moxon, Mechanick Exercises.

The dext'rous glazier strong returns the band,
And jingling sashes on the posthouse sound.

Gay, Trivia.

Gleadowes. s. See Gladiolus.

Gleam. v. n. [see Glimmer.] Shine with sudden concuscation.

Observant of approaching day.

The meek-eyed morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled east.

Thomson, Seasons, Summer.

Gleam. s. Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gleaming gleam;
And conquerors beset with his green,
Along the banks of the Anaxian stream. Spenser.

At best a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd flintward in haste
His travel'd steps. Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 429.

Mine is a gleam of light, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be gone ere fast.

Byron, Inconsolable.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green.

Pope, Windsor Forest.

Gleaming. part. adj. Shining with a gleam.

The field of iron cast a gleaming brown.

Milton, Paradise Regained, iii. 526.

Gleaming. verbal abs. Gleam.

Farewell, ye gleaming of departed peace!
Shine out your last! Thomson, Seasons, Spring.

Gleamy. adj. Flashing; darting sudden concuscations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warrior bends his way.

Pope.

Gleaze. v. a. [Fr. glazer, from galeque, handful.]

1. Gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.

And she went, and enm and gleaned in the field
after the reapers. — Ruth, ii. 3.

Chari conquest for his following friends remain'd;
He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd.

Dryden.

The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself. — Alton, Companion to the Fasts and Festivals of the Church of England.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palamont's fields.

Thomson, Seasons, Autumn.

2. Gather anything thinly scattered.

Gather

So much as from occasions you may glean,
If sight, to us unknown, afflicts him thus.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, ii. 2.

Of gleanings all the land's wealth lies on one,
Into your own hands, card-nail, by extortion.

Id., Henry VIII. iii. 2.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men. — Judges, xx. 46.

GLEA

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his reluctant arms flash'd through the shady plain,
Pled from his well-known face with wonted fear;
As when his blinding sword and pointed spear
Drove headlong to their ships, and gleam'd the routed rear.
Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.
In the knowledge of bodies we must be content
To glean what we can from particular experiments;
since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essence, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together.—Locke.

Glean. s.

1. Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he piles;
The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs:
He spoils the sabbath.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics.

2. See extract. Rare.

A gleane or heap of corn commonly gathered together and bound by handfuls.—Withal, Dictionary, p. 67: 1608.

Gleaner. s.

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
Which scarce the thin philosopher can smother,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the fold.
Thomson, Seasons, Autumn.

2. One who gathers anything slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner in the city is an ardent statesman.—Locke.

Gleaning. verbal abs.

Act of gleauing or thing gleamed.

There shall be as the slinking of an olive-tree, and as the gleauing grapes when the vintage is done.—Isaiah, xiv. 13.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleauings of the rich man's harvest.—Bishop Atterbury.

Glebe. s.

[Lat. gleba.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

This, like the moory plots, delights in solge bowers;
The grassy carlants loves, and oft attird with flowers
Of rank and mellow glebe.
Dryden.

Mark well the flowing almonds in the wood;
If odorous odours the bearing branches load,
The glebe will answer to the sylvan recit.
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.
Dryden, Translation of the Georgics, b. 1.

Shedding vegetable life,
Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to day.
Garth.

2. Land possessed as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tithes, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people. —Spelman.

A freeman charge on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be taken in a spiritual court. —Aspley, Paragon Juris Canonici.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. —Swift.

3. Earthy concretion or mass of particles.

The chymists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fusible in the fire, convertible again by cold into brittle glebe, or crystals, soluble in water so as to disappear. —Arbuthnot, Explanation of Chymical Terms, (Orel MS.)

Gleby. adj.

Turfy: (perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any definite English meaning, and is not a loosely adopted Latinism.)

Perfidious flattery! thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and in a fatal land,
Noddy diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,
With rising tide amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year.
Prior, Solomon, b. 1.

Glede. s. [generally referred to glide; though doubtfully.] Kite, i.e. bird so called.

You shall not eat the glede, the kite, and the vulture. —Deuteronomy, xiv. 13.

Not a glead, not a vulture, not a falcon, not an eagle, not any bird of prey or rapine. —Bishop Hall, Beauty of the Church.

Glee. s.

[A.S. gleg.]

1. Joy; merriment; gaiety.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
Whom all the people follow with great glee.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.
Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by vowing

GLEE

the inhabitants; who again forebore not to thigne them with perfume. —Caesar, Survey of Cornwall.
Is Blondelinda dead? Farewell my glee!
No happiness is now reserv'd for me.
Gay, Pastorals.

2. Song, sung in parts; species of catch.

Alas of the most modern cast, fitted into divisions or even loaded with parts as much in sequence as in a catch or a glee. —Mason, On Church Music, p. 220.

Who has not seen the advertisements proposing a reward to him, who should produce the best catch, canon, or glee. —Bishop Percy, Reliquia of Ancient Poetry, Essay on the English Minstrel.

Gleed. s. [German, gluth = glowing.] Burning or live coal; hot ember.

In heart he burnt as any glede.
Lydgate, History of Troy.

There is scarce
Fair Illum fall in burning red glede down,
And from the soil great Troy, Neptune's town,
Neckville, Jubilate to Miriam for Magnificat.

When I stir up these embers to the bottom, there are found some living glede, which do both contain fire, and are apt to propagate it. —Bishop Hall, Occasional Meditations.

Gleeful. adj. Gay; merry; cheerful.

My lovely Anon, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful host?
Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus, ii. 3.
Nor lacks he gleeful tales, whilst round the nut-brown bowl doth trot.
Warner, Albion's England.

Gleek. v. n. Sucer; gibe; make sarcastic jests.

I can gleek upon occasion. —Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, iii. 1.
I have seen you gleeking and calling at this gentleman twice or thrice. —Id., Henry V. v. 1.

Gleek. s. [from A.S. gleggy.] Scroff; joke.

What wilt you give me?—No money on my faith;
but the gleek; I will give you the minstrel. —Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, iv. 5.
Now where's the Bastard's braver, and Charles his gleek?
Id., Henry VI. Part 1, iii. 2.

Here June, here; but stay, I do spy
A pretty gleek coming from Ball's eye.
Deanman and Fletcher, Maid in the Mill.

Gleek. s. [? from German, glück = luck.] Game of cards so called.

Let her hear us to-day,
Laugh, and keep company, at gleek or crimp.
R. Jonson, Maggotick Lady.

A lady once requesting a gentleman to play at gleek, was refused, but civilly, and upon three reasons; the first whereof, madam, said the gentleman, is, I have no money. Her ladyship knew that was no material and sufficient, that she desired him to keep the two other reasons to himself. —Gayton, Notes on Don Quixote, p. 14.

Gleeman. s. Minstrel.

Black-birdle . . . a conyngie minstreyan, called of the Britons god of gleeman. —Babyon, Chronicle, fol. xxiii. 1533.

The Anglo-Naxon harpers and gleemen were the immediate successors and imitators of the Scandinavian scalds. —Bishop Percy, Reliquia of Ancient Poetry, Essay on the English Minstrel.

Their national love of verse and music still so strongly predominated, that in the place of their old scalds a new rank of poets arose, called gleemen or harpers. —T. Warton, History of English Poetry, vol. i. diss. 1.

Gleesome. adj. Full of glee or merriment; joyous.

Gleesome hunters, pleased with their sport,
With sacrifices due have thank'd me for't.
W. Hecene, Britanica's Pastorals.

Gleet. s. [?] In Medicine. Glairy discharge from a wound or mucous surface; at present limited to discharges from the urethra, in which case it is the name of a disease rather than the discharge itself.

A hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet. —Wicman, Surgery.

Gleet. v. n.

1. Drip or ooze with a thin sanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone; this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops. —Wicman, Surgery.

2. Run slowly.

Vapours raised by the sun make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, till they hit against the mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow, afford them a basin. —Cheyne, Philosophical Principles of Natural Religion.

Gleety. adj. Ichory; thinly sanious.

If the Soul lose its rudeness, and the matter
6 u 2

GLID

{GLEAN {GLIDDER

change to be thin and glidy, you may suspect it corrodging. —Wicman, Surgery.

Glen. s. [Cornish, glyn; Gaelic, glenn.] Valley; dale; depression between two hills.

From me his maddling mind is start,
And woe the widow's daughter of the glen.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

Can silent glens have charms for thee?
The lowly cot, and russet gown? —Bishop Percy.
Tough glens, and sudden waterfalls.
T. Warton.

Glib. adj. [Provincial German, glippen = slip; glibberig = slippery.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way so ever gravity inclines them. —T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Habakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together, with a piece that slid as glib as a fish-catcher's gin. —Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I wad that glib and oily art
To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,
I'll dot before I speak. —Id., King Lear, i. 1.

Used adverbially.

There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English. —Locke.
Now Curll his shop-train rubbishy dnam;
Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains:
And then, to make them pass the glibly,
Bew'd by Tibbalt, Moore, and Tibber.
Swift, to the Death of Dr. Swift.

And Molly and I have thrust in our nose
To peep at the Captain all in his fine clothes;
Dear madam, he sure has a true spoken nose;
Do but hear on the cherry how glib his nose runs.
Id., The Grand Question Debated.

Glib. s. See extracts.

The Irish have a great many glib mottos and sayings, which are very curious and amusing, and are very much valued by the Irish. —Spenser, Faerie Queene, iv. 8, 12.

Glib. s. r. d.

1. Castrate.

I'll tell them all; fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations: they are robbers,
And I had rather glib myself than they Should not produce fair issue.
Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, ii. 1.

2. Make smooth or glib.

There is a denuded liberty of the tongue, which, being once glibbed with intoxicating liquor, runs wild through heaven and earth. —Bishop Hall, Remains, p. 20.

I understand that office, and the towers
Of all his flattering prophets glibb'd with lies
To his destruction.
Milton, Paradise Regained, l. 375.

Glibbin. s. See Glib. s.

Glibly. adv. In a glib manner.

Wine so choice, or so delicious, that it went down glibly. —Bi-shop Patrick, Paraphrase and Commentaries on the Old Testament, Ecclesiastes, vii. 9.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as consciences reveal at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction. —Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.

Glibness. s. Attribute suggested by Glib; smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd bee-like glibness doth unfold
The rock. —Chapman, Translation of the Odyssey.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the figure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving. —Dr. H. More, Government of the Tongue.

Glidder. adj. See extract.

Glidder—Slippery. (Halliwell.) Ben Jonson speaks of a gallop-pole being well glidder'd, i.e. glazed. Provincial Daniel, glidder, slippery; glidder, to smooth a wall plastered with clay. Scotch, glidder, glidder, in something liquid, airy, and viscous. Provincial English, glid, the slimy substance in a hawk's panure. French, glide, the froth of an ope, plegue or filth which a hawk throws out at her beak after her casting; glidder, slimy, funny, filthy. (Colgrave.) Platt Deutsch, glid, slippery; English, glid, a slimy discharge. —Wicwood, Dictionary of English Slang.

Globöse. adj. [Lat. globosus.] Having the shape or character of a globe; spherical; round: (used substantively in the first extract).

Regions, to which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more
Than what this garden is to all the earth,
And all the sea, from one entire globosus
Stretch'd into longitude.

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 750.

Then form'd the moon
Globose, and every magnitude of stars.

Ibid. vii. 350.

Globosity. s. Globular character; sphericity.

Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably, till at last it appears not at all: no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth.—Ray, Wisdom of God manifested in the Works of the Creation.

Globose. adj. Spherical; round.

Having reduced (it) into a globous form.—Gregory, Pothamus, p. 282: 1830.
Wide over all the plain, and wider far
Than all this globous earth in plain outspread,
Such are the courts of God!

Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 618.

The brazen instruments of death disbarbar'd
Horrible flames, and lurid streaming clouds;
Large globous irons fly, of dreadful hiss,
Singing the air.

Philips.

Globular. adj. Having the form of a globe (large or small); round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seems to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity.—Gray, Cosmologia Sacra.

Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure; as the red particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope. These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver.—Quincy.

Globule. s. [Lat. globulus, diminutive of globus.] Small globe.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the halo.—Sir I. Newton, On Opticks.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastic, and will break; the vessels which admit the smaller globule, cannot admit the greater without a disease.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliment.

Globulous. adj. Having the character of a globe, or the form of a sphere; round.

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth.—Boyle.

Globy. adj. Orbicular; round. Rare.

Your hair, when globy rises
He flying curls, and crisps with his wings.

R. Johnson, Elegy.

One of the highest arts that human contemplation circling upwards can make from the globy sea, as she stands.—Milton, Doctrine and Discipline of Divor.

Glomerate. v. n. [Lat. glomeratus, pass. part. of glomerare; glomus, mass or ball, n. of cotton or wool; glomeratio, -onis.] Gather itself into a ball or sphere.

Glomerating. part. adj. Forming a glomeration: (in the extract, meandering).

A river which, from Caucasus, after many glomerating dances, increases Indus. Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years' Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 65.

Glomeration. s. Act of forming into a ball or sphere; body so formed.

The rainbow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot fall but from the air that is very low.—Bacon.

Gloom. s. See Gloom.

1. Imperfect darkness; obscurity; shade; shadow.

Glowing embers through the room,
Toss'd light to counterfit a gloom.

In this the seat,

That we must change for heaven? This mournful gloom.

For that celestial light? Id., Paradise Lost, l. 248.
The still night; not now, as men are full,
Wholesome, and cool, and mild; but with black air
Accompanied: with damps, and dreadful gloom.

Ibid. l. 548.

Now warm in love, now with'r'ing in my bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom.

Pope, Elissa to Abderai.

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind; sullenness. See Gloom.

Gloom. v. n. Show itself gloomily.

Here while the proud their long-drawn pomps display,
There the black gibbet glooms beside the way.

Goldsmith, Deserted Village.

Gloom. v. a. Fill with gloom; invest with a character of gloominess. Rare.

A night that glooms us in the moonlight ray,
And wraps our thoughts in languish in the shroud.

Young, Night Thoughts, ii.

Good heaven! what sorrows gloom'd that parting day,
That call'd them from their native walks away.

Goldsmith, Deserted Village.

Glooming. part. adj. Showing itself gloomily.

His gliding armor made like a shade,
A little glooming light made like a shade.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.

Through dreadful shades of ever glooming night.

Spanish Tragedy: 1693.

Gloomily. adv. In a gloomy manner.

See, he comes: how gloomily he looks! Dryden.

Gloominess. s. Attribute suggested by Gloom.

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dimness.

A day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness.—Zephaniah, l. 1.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neel's spreads gloominess upon their humour,
And makes them grow sullen and uncommunicable.—Collier, Of the Spectator.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involved, very often stands in need of such little incentives to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy.—Addison.

Gloomy. adj.

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without
The growing vapours, which gloomy saw
Already in part, thence hid in gloomy shade,
To sorrow stand out.—Milton, Paradise Lost, l. 714.

Deep in a cavern dwells the dragon's nest,
Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,
Nor setting stars, nor the light of the moon.

Dryden, Fables.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomy, just as the sun is bright or more overcast.—Lope, Letters.

2. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart: (first element of a compound in the extract).

And you, ye hopeless gloomy-minded tribe,
You who, unbecomings of those nobler flights
That reach impatient at immortal life,
Against the true enduring privilege
Of being there content.

The moon, On Sir Isaac Newton.

Gloriable. adj. Capable of being boasted of, or gloried in. Rare.

John, of all we read, was the most confident of his own integrity, which indeed was rare and gloriable.—Fillmore, History, xvii. (1848 MS.)

Gloriation. s. Boast; triumph. Rare.

Mutual praises, gloriation, and congratulations.—Bishop Richardson, On the Old Testament, p. 538.

Surgency, pervasiveness, despondency, triumph or gloriation.—Dr. H. More, Conjecturae Cabalisticæ, p. 211.

How were the Jews puffed up with that vain gloriation, that they were the sons of Abraham.—Bishop Hall, Romans, p. 111.

Gloried. adj. Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours.

As I suppose, towards your once gloried friend,
My son, now captive, hath bath inform'd
Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age Came lagging after. Milton, Samson Agonistes, 338.

Old respect.

Glorification. s. Act of giving glory.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation.—Jerry Taylor.

Glorify. v. a.

1. Procure honour or praise to anyone.

Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in.

Shakespeare, King John, l. 2.

Justice is their virtue: that alone
Makes them sit sure, and glorifies the throne.

Daniel.

2. Pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

3. Praise; honour; extol.

Whomsoever they did to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify.—Spenser, Faerie of the State of Ireland.

No chimney yet the elixir took,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
It by the way to him befall.
Some charitable thing, or medicinal.

Donne.

4. Exalt to glory in heaven; raise to celestial bentitude.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him.—John, xiii. 32.

Whom he justified them he also glorified.—Romans, vii. 30.

Glorious. adj.

1. Noble; illustrious; excellent.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world.—Daniel, iii. 23.

Let us remember we are God's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title.

Addison, Cato.

2. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Obsolete.
Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy.—Rome.

They that are glorious must needs be factious, for all bravery stands upon comparisons.—Id.

We have not Received into our bosom and our grace
A glorious lazy drow, grown fat with feeding
On others' toil, but an industrious bee.

Massinger, Great Duke of Florence.

Gloriously. adv. In a glorious manner.

1. Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

He hath triumphed gloriously.—Erasmus, v. l.
They inquire with those celestial flames, which shine so gloriously in their works.—Dryden, Translation of Delfia's Art of Painting.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not meet.

Pope, Essay on Criticism.

2. Ostentatiously; boastingly. Obsolete.

I protest to you, sir, I speak it not gloriously, nor out of affection.—D. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

Gloriousness. s. Attribute suggested by Glorious.

The perfection of his (man's) sovereignty over the creatures, the gloriousness and beauty, and much of the beauty of his body.—Sir J. M. Hale, Originations of Mankind, 313. (1848 MS.)

Glorify. s. [Lat. gloria.]

1. Praise paid in adoration.

Glory to God in the highest.—Luke, ii. 14.

2. Glorious state.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me into thy glory.—Psalms, lxxiii. 24.

Thou enter into glory, and resume
Thy seat at God's right hand, exalted high Above all names in heaven.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xli. 456.

It is hardly possible for you to bewitch and intrude God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life.—Love.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

Think it no glory to swell in tyranny.—Sir P. Sidney.

And with that word and warning soon was light,
Each soldier hanging for near coming glory.

Fairfax.

Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings;
There have been fewer friends on earth than kings.

Conley, David's.

Your sex's glory 'tis to shine unknown;
Of all applause, be fonder of your own.

Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Salomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these.—Matthew, vi. 29.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God.—Addison, Spectator.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky.

Pope, Pastoral, Winter.

From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And minds embrace those with a love like mine.

Id., Elissa to Abderai.

6. Circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in pictures.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace, such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends.—South, Sermons.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance.—Collier, Of the Asper.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end.—Wisdom, xiv. 11.

On death-beds some in conscious glory lie, Since of the doctor in the world they die. Tonny.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto.—Sir P. Sidney.

Glory. v. n. Boust in; be proud of.

With like judgement glorifying when he had leaped to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief.—Sir P. Sidney.

Let them look they glory not in mischief, Nor build their evils on the graves of great men; For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakespeare, Henry VIII. ii. 1.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius better but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar?—Bishop Atterbury.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity.—Richardson, Clarissa.

Glorifying. verbal abs. Boasting.

Your glorifying is not good. 1. Corinthians, v. 6.

Glosser. s. Glosser; commentator.

Sophisters, and doctors, and legends, and glossers.—Bishop of Winchester, Sermons, sign. C. v. 157.

Gloss. s. [from Norse glasa—brightness.] Superficial lustre.

His iron coat all over grown with rust, Was underneath enveloped with gold, Whose glistening gloss darkened with filthy dust. Spenser, Faerie Queene.

The doubt will be whether it will justify so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than plates of brass.—Bacon.

Weeds that the wind did toss The virgins wore; the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss, Like that of oil. Chapman, Translation of the Iliad.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility.—South, Sermons.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them.—Addison, Spectator.

Gloss. s. [from Gr. γλῶσσα—tongue. See last extract.]

1. Scholium; comment.

They never hear sentence which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explained, or delivered into us in serious.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach, With general voice, that souls can never die, 'Tis not man's first bright gloss, but nature's speech, Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Sir J. Davies, Immortality of the Soul.

Hyperboles, courtiers' articles, they draw, Like as the birds themselves, and hover far Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope, Satire of Donne.

The gloss which your sister or you have put upon it, does not strike me as correct.—Lamb, Letter to Barton.

A gloss, γλῶσσα, properly meant a word from a foreign language, or an obsolete or poetical word, or whatever requires explanation. It was afterwards used for the interpretation itself. . . . In the twelfth century it was extended from a single word to an entire expository sentence. The first glosses were interlinear; they were afterwards placed in the margin, and extended finally in some instances to a sort of running commentary on an entire book. These were called an apparatus. . . . About the same time [A.D. 1280] Accursius of Florence undertook his celebrated work, a collection of glosses, which in the century that had elapsed from the time of Irenaeus, had grown to an enormous extent, and were, of course, not always consistent. . . . Thus was compiled his Corpus Juris Civilis, commonly called Glossa or Glossa Ordinaria.—Hallam, Introduction to the Literature of Europe in the Fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth Centuries, §§ 69-70.

2. Interpretation artfully specious; specious representation. In some, perhaps in most cases, the exact origin is ambiguous; inasmuch as speciousness applies to glosses of both kinds.

Poor painters oft with silly poets join.

To fill the world with straws but vain conceit: One brims the stuff, the other stamps the coin, Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sir P. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hither into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any sinner gloss than the naked truth doth afford.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

Gloss. v. n. With a disparaging sense, i.e. add as a gloss infringing on the import of the text, though, at the same time, explaining, or affecting to explain, it.

Of a beautiful countenance; or, had beautiful eyes; . . . as Corinna Pellennia hera phases.—Bishop Patrick, Paraphrase and Commentary on the Old Testament, 1 Samuel, xvi. 12.

Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal, And laughing gloss'd, that Abra serv'd so well. Prior, Solomon.

Gloss. v. a.

1. Explain by comment.

In parliament then, before his fields, he draws Assurance, big as gloss'd civil laws. Denon, Poems, p. 124.

2. Palliate by specious exposition or representation.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct? You have the heart to gloss this foulest cause. A. Philips, Briton.

3. Embellish with superficial lustre.

But then, who lately of the common strain, Wert one of us, it still then dost retain The same ill habits, the same follies too, Gloss'd over only with a mainlike show, Then I resume the freedom which I gave, Still thou art bound to view, and still a slave. Dequy, Translation of Persius.

Glossarial. adj. Relating to, connected with, or consisting in, a glossary.

In the glossarial index of former editions, the reader has merely been presented with a long list of words, and references to the passages where they occur, often with very different meanings; and is thus called upon to rummage over many volumes, in order to form a glossary for himself. Boswell, Alteration in Edition of Shakespeare. (Rich.)

Glossarist. s.

1. One who writes a gloss or commentary.

The glossarist I take to be Philip de Berzema, a prior at Padua, who wrote a most elaborate moralisation on Osato.—T. Warton, History of English Poetry, ii. 160.

2. One who writes a dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

Mr. J. Kersey . . . with laudable industry has collected almost all the old words, I believe, which are to be found either in Speght or Skinner, and has generally with much fidelity copied the interpretations assigned to them by those two glossarists.—Tyler, Vindication of the Royley Controversy, p. 162.

Glossary. s. Dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, when 'delubrum' was applied to a place, it signified such a one, 'in quo delubrum deducitur est,' and also in the old glossaries.—Bishop Millington.

I could add another word to the glossary.—Baker.

(For another example see extract under Glossarial.)

Glossator. s. Writer of glosses; commentator.

The Jewish doctors understood the text better than Gratian, or John Serranus his glossator.—Bishop Barlow, Remains, p. 294.

The reason why the ascription of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgement, and not to become an evidence; but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect the glossator's opinion must be false.—Aglijo, Parergon Juris Canonici.

All this is related by Aldred, the Saxon glossator, at the end of St. John's Gospel.—T. Warton, History of English Poetry, vol. i. diss. i.

Glosser. s. Scholiast; commentator.

Neither the glossers upon the Abozan, nor the most authentic legend of his life, take any notice thereof.—A. Addison, Life of Mahomet, p. 62. 1079.

'Interpretation,' says Savigny, 'was considered the first and most important object of glossers, as it was of oral instruction. . . . It may be reckoned a characteristic merit of many glossers that they keep the attention fixed on the immediate subject of explanation. . . . Nor did the glossers, by any means, slight the importance of laying a sound critical basis for interpretation; but, on the contrary, laboured earnestly in the revision and correction of the text. . . . Savigny defends his favourite glossers in the best manner he can; . . . but, without much acquaintance with the ancient glossers, one may presume to think that, in explaining the Pandects, their deficiencies . . . must require a perpetual exercise of our lenity and patience. . . . The glossers became the sole authorities, so that it grew into a maxim, No one can go wrong who follows a gloss, and some said a gloss was worth a hundred texts.—Hallam, Introduction to the Literature of Europe in the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth Centuries, §§ 71, 72.

Glossiness. s. Attribute suggested by Glossy; smooth polish; superficial lustre.

Their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt.—Boyle.

Glossing. verbal abs. Dealing in glosses, comments, or interpretation.

In this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent.—Hooker, Sermons.

Glossist. s. Writer of glosses. Rare.

It was raised by inconsiderate glossists from the mistake of this text.—Milton, Trichinorum.

Glossographer. s. Scholiast; commentator.

The like whereto is found also in the canon law, and noted by the glossographer.—Huguenot, Answer to Incommodum, ch. 1.

Some [words] I believe may pass the ablest glossographer now living.—T. Blount, Ancient Tenants, p. 107.

Glossology. s. The most useful signification which could be given to this word, would be the details of the number, connexion, relations, and condition of the languages of the earth; in which case it might supplant the barbarous term Linguistic. If this is best expressed by Glossography, limited to the purely descriptive part, whilst glossology applies to the forces which change language (and the division is not too late to be made) rather than their formal relations, both words might be used. If so, the two would nearly be complementary to one another as equivalents to Comparative Philology; to which, as taken alone, glossology is the nearer approximation.

Devaudelle and others use the term phonology instead of 'terminology,' to avoid the blench of a word compounded of two parts taken from different languages. The convenience of treating the termination 'ology' (and a few other parts of compounds) as not restricted to Greek combinations, so great, that I shall venture, in these cases, to disregard the philological scruple. Wright, History of Scientific Ideas, vol. ii. p. 109, note: ch. 148.

An conspicuous examples of this class, we may take geology, phonology, or comparative philology, and comparative archaeology.—Ibid. b. x. ch. 1.

Glossy. adj.

1. Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a person of place; he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water colour, of an excellent warm colour, far more glossy than ours.—Baron.

The rest entire Shone with a glossy neut.

His surecoat was a lewarkin on his back; His hair hung long behind, a glossy raven black. Dryden.

2. Specious.

That Lord Chesterfield must have been mortified by the lofty contempt, and polite yet even satire, with which Johnson exhibited him to himself in this letter, it is impossible to doubt. He, however, with that glossy duplicity which was his constant study, affected to be quite unconcerned.—Boswell, Life of Johnson.

Glottis. s. [Gr. γλῶττις.] In Anatomy. Cleft or chink in the larynx, serving for the formation of the voice: (it is in the form of a little tongue).

The glottis, reckoned among the cartilages before mentioned, is the principal instrument of modulation.—Smith, Portrait of Old Age, p. 142.

In the second stage the tongue is carried still further backwards, and the larynx is drawn forwards under its roots, so that the epiglottis is pressed down over the rima glottidis.—Carpenter, Principles of Human Physiology.

GLOU

The tongue of the parrot is more fleshy than in most birds. These structures, concomitant with the single glottis and pair of vocal folds in the lower or true larynx, relate to the facility, so remarkable in these singular birds, of imitating human speech.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates, etc. 22.

Gloat. v. n. [from the root of gloat.] Look sullen.

She larks in midst of all her den, and streaks from out a glinty whorl all her necks. Where, glowing round her neck, to fish she falls, Chapman, Translation of the Odyssey.

That feast of love and heavenly-admitted friendship, the next of kind service, between the subject of loquacity and glowing admiration, parented about like a dreadful idol.—Milton, Of Reformation in England, b. i.

Glowing with sullen spleen, the fiery shock Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look. Garth.

Gloat. v. a. Gaze; view attentively.

His majesty . . . knew full well . . . that whosoever attempted any thing for the publick, (especially if it pertained to religion, and to the genuine and clearing of the Word of God), the same setteth himself upon a stage to be gloat'd upon by every evil eye.—Translators of the Bible to the Reader, 1611.

Gloat. s. Angry glance; sullen look.

First came the poets of each land, and took Their place in order, learned Virgil struck In for the first, Ben Jonson cast a gloat, And swore a mighty oath he'd pluck him out. Copie of a Letter, &c. &c., 1611. (Nares by H. & W.)

Glove. s. [A.S. glofe; Norse, gluft.] Cover of the hands.

They flow about like chaff if the wind; For loose some left their masks behind, Some could not stay their gloves to fling. Drayton. White gloves were on his hands, and on his head A wreath of laurel. Drayton.

Glove. v. a. Cover as with a glove.

Worken'd with grief, before now ring'd with grief, Are thieve themselves; hence, therefore, thou new crutch; A scaly mantle now, with joints of steel, Must glove this hand. Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, l. 1.

The next he preys on is her palm, That alms'ner of transpiring skin; So soft, 'tis not more new-mo'd, Tender as 'twere a jelly glove. Charlton.

Glover. s. One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round laurel like a glove's a paring knife? Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, l. 4.

Glow. v. n. [A.S. glowum.]

1. Be heated so as to shine without flame.

But silence silence hushen't not my fire, But told it flames, and hidden it does glow, I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser, Fierie Queen.

That o'er the tiles and mangers of the war Have glow'd like light of Mars, now bend, now turn Their office upon a new front. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, l. 1.

2. Burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compass The melted steeds, when from their nostrils flows The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison, Translation from Ovid.

3. Feel a glow, or heat of body.

Did not his temples glow In the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Addison, Cato.

4. Exhibit a strong bright colour.

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd Celestial rays red, love's proper hue, Answer'd: Let it suffice thee that thou know'st Us happy, and, without awe, no happiness. Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 618.

Glad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays. Spenser. From the mingled strength of shade and light, A new creation rises to my sight: Such heav'nly hues from his aerial flow, So warm with life his blended colours glow, As if the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.

Like the ethereal glow'd the green expanse. Savage. Fair ideas flow, Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope. Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows, With that ripe red tint autumnal sun bestows, Can move the god. Id.

Each glowing Mount shall endless smiles bestow, And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Id. Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole. Id.

5. Feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

GLOZ

For'd compliments and formal bows

Will show thee just above meeket; The fire with which thy lover glows, Will settle inter'd respect. Prior.

6. Rage or burn in a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows; With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Drayton.

When crept into need veins, Leave slowly loams, and long remains; It glows, and with a sullen heat, Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.

Glow. v. a. Suffuse with a glow; flush.

Id.

On each side her stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids, With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2.

Glow. s. Heat or sign of heat: (often figuratively applied to the colour of health, passion, or enthusiasm).

The pale complexion of true love, And the real glow of scorn and proud disdain. Shakespeare, As you like it, iii. 4.

A waving glow his flowing locks display, Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.

Such as suppose that the great soul might happily be identified with the argument, that the simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Bolshoi could unite with the glow and lustre of a Paolo, or Tintoret, are totally mistaken. See J. Reynolds.

Glowbird. s. Glowworm. Obsolete.

Globed and dye, and ver que reunit do myt.—Polymer.

Ver on muscels habente de nuit. A glow'd, a glow worm or light worm. Nomenclator. (Nares by H. & W.)

Glowing. part. adj. Having the character of that which glows.

Kneeling, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocence, did take seven glow'ng irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Holwell, Apology. Did Shadrach's zeal my glow'ng breast inspire To weary tortures, and to pine in fire. Prior.

Glowing. verb. abs. Act or condition of that which glows.

You strive in vain To hide your gl'ns from him who knew too well The inward gl'ns of a heart in love. Addison, Cato.

Glowingly. adv. In a glowing manner.

A little shop there may be to say him; he would grow too rank else; a small colony to shadow him; but not he must look glowingly near, and with a greater lustre. Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit without Money.

Glowworm. s. Female insect so called, itself wingless, but which, by secreting a phosphoric light, enables the winged male to find it.

The honey bees steal from the humble bees, And for night-tapers crop their wayward thills, And light them at the fiery of a queen's eyes. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, iii. 1.

The glowworm shows the moth to be near, And gains to him his medicinal fire. Id., Hamlet, i. 5.

A great light drew me a smaller that it could be seen; as the sun that of the glowworm. Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The man who first upon the ground A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found A mysing diamond, a breathing stone, For life it had, and like those jewels shone, He held it dear, till by the springing day Inform'd, he threw the worthless worm away. Waller.

Glow. v. n. [Gloss, in a disparaging sense.]

1. Flatter; wheedle; insinuate; fawn.

Mum will hearken to his glowing lies, And easily transgress. Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 68.

So glow'd the tender, and his prison turn'd: Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Id., ix. 519.

2. Comment; (Gloss the commoner and better word).

Which Salique land the French unjustly glow To be the realm of France. Shakespeare, Henry V, l. 2.

Glow. s.

1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glazes by. Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3.

2. Specious show; gloss. Obsolete.

Preclous coaches full off are shaken with a fever. If then a bodily evil in a bodily glaze be not hidden, shall such morning dew be an ome to the heat of a love's first—See P. Sidney.

GLUI

{Gloss
{Gloss

Glozer. s. One who glazes.

Yet must I take so much and smooth, as though I were a glazer. Gower, Curlew's Needle, 1651. I may not use the glazer's trade; I cannot say the crew is white. But needs must call a spade a spade. Gifford, Poem of Gillflowers, 1840.

Glazing. part. adj. Flattering.

For he could well his glazing speeches frame. Spenser, Fierie Queen, l. 8, 14.

A false glazing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistake himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. North, Sermons.

Now for a glazing speech.

For protestations, specious marks of friendship. A. Phillips.

Glazing. verb. abs. Specious representation.

Your woody glazings and time-serving colludings with the state are but like watermen on the Thames, looking one way, rowing another way.—Bishop Montagu, Appeal to Caesar, p. 12.

Glazeum. s. [artificial formation from the Greek glaze—sweet; the um showing that it is the name of a metal; its commonest congener is glucum, i.e. the oxide of glucinum.] In Chemistry. Metal so called.

Glazeum, the metallic base of the earth glucina, (was) discovered by Vauquelin in 1798, and (has been) hitherto only found in a few rare minerals. The metal, which is of a dark grey colour, was first obtained in 1828, by Wöhler.—Beauchamp and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Glue. s. [Fr. glu; Lat. glutin.]

Water, and all humors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionally; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors; so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthy and watery substances, one is a glue to another.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The driest and most transparent glue is the best. —Waller.

The waters of gums, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Choice of Aliments.

Glue. v. a.

1. Join by means of glue, or with anything of a gluey nature.

Whose (together) a food is as one that glues a pot-sherd together. Archæologia, xii. 7.

The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinzel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvass over the head of the figure. Addison, Travels in Italy.

2. Join as if by means of glue; unite.

The nobleness of your heart will glue the hearts of your people to you.—Archbishop Laud, Sermons, p. 225.

She cur'd a green, that else had come; And paining, cur'd the present in the tomb: Then to the heart cur'd the heavenly gl'd Her lips, and raising it, her speech renew'd. Drayton.

The parts of all homogeneous hard bodies which fully touch one another stick together very strongly; and for examining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is bearing the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest; that is by an occult quality, or rather by nothing.—Sir I. Newton, Opticks.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze thee all thy charms, And round thy phantom glow my glazing arms. Pope, Essay to An Essay.

Mrs. Tabitha did not fail to compliment him on his modesty, in waving the merit of his anecdote, adding, that it was the less necessary to him, as he had such a considerable fund of his own. She now began to glow herself to his favour with the grossest adulation. She expatiated upon the antiquity and virtues of the Scottish union, upon their valour, probity, learning, and politeness.—Smollett, Adventures of Humphrey Clinker.

Gluey. adj. Having the character of glue.

They being no natural stones hewn out of the rock, but artificially made of pure sand by means of gluey and mucous matter knit and incorporated together.—Hakewell, Apology, p. 207.

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a gluey mucous matter.—Hare, Discourses of Consumption.

With play was some new foundations lay Of virgin souls. Drayton, Aeneas Virgilian. Whatever is the composition of the vapour, it it have but one quality of being very play or viscus, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grotesque.—Addison.

A kind of pitch, which is described by authors as a very glossy thing.—Bishop Patrick, Porphyrans and Commentaries on the Old Testament, Genesis, xi. 3.

Glisshy. adj. Somewhat gluey. Rare; barbarous.

A cambium or glutish moisture.—Dr. H. More, Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. ch. xvi.

Glum. adj. Sullen; stubbornly grave.

Some when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well, what then?—Guardian.
And not only Athens alone, but so austere and glum a generation as those of Sparta.—Ryder, On Tragedy, p. 3: 1078. (Nares by H. & W.)
Did he not say, when he took hunt on Saturday, and I was far gone, fuddled, that if he were justice of peace he would have me in the stocks for a loper? See how plain the old misanthrope looks. Has he heard the news, think you, messmates?—Sala, The Ship-Chandler.

Glum. s. Sullenness of aspect; frown. Rare.

She looked haughty, and gave on me a glum;
There was among them no word then but unum.
Shelton, Poems, p. 41.

Glummish. adj. Somewhat glum.

But or the course was set, time wore away apace,
And Boreas' breath was blacker, and glummish chill
Which caused me to seek a warmer place,
Underneath a rock, on the other side the hill.
Golden Mirror, 1389. (Nares by H. & W.)

Glummy. adj. Dark; dismal for want of light. Rare.

Such casual blasts may happen, as are meet to be feared, when the weather waxeth dark and glummy.—Knight, Trial of Truth, fol. 27: 1580.

Glump. v. n. Show, by manner, sullenness; be sullen.

To glump is still used in familiar language for sitting sullen and out of humour.—Woods, Dictionary of English Etymology.

Glumpy. adj. Sullen.

He was glumpy enough when I called.—Theodore Hook, Gilbert Gurney.

Glut. v. a. [Lat. glutiv = swallow; Gr. γλῶττιν; Fr. engloutir.]

1. Swallow; devour.

Till crum'd and gorg'd, nigh burst
With suck'd and glutted udder.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 632.

2. Cloy; fill beyond sufficiency; sate; disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers.—Bacon.

Nor hath the book of creation in the Scriptures... given us any hint for such a resolution, that some should be born rich, and others to flourish, some to be glutted, and others to starve. . . some to reign in Paradise for ever, others to be thrown over the wall as out of the Adamites' stove, to pine and freeze among thorns and briars.—Hammond, Sermons, xi.

3. Feast or delight even to satiety.

While by thee raised, I ruin all my foes,
Death laid, and with his carmen glut the grave.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 238.
His faithful heart, a libidinous sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes.
Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor glut the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Id.

4. Overfill; load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retelling too much of a bad commodity at once.—Arbuthnot, Art of Politics.

5. Saturate.

The menstruum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it.—Boyle.

Glut. s.

1. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Their devilish glut, chinn'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 388.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

No death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his ravenous maw.
Milton, Paradise Lost, x. 980.

Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserably even in the very glut of his delights. Sir R. C. Calverley.
A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement.—Pope, Letter to Swift.

3. More than enough; overmuch.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it.—R. Johnson, Discoveries.

4. Anything that fills up a passage.

The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means arrested in their passage.—Woodward.

Gluten. s. [Lat.] Glutinous matter of certain vegetables.

Gluten exists in many plants, and occasionally in other parts of vegetables; but it is a characteristic ingredient in wheat, where it forms a peculiar toughness and tenacity, which particularly fits it for the manufacture of bread, and for viscid pastes such as mucron and vermelli. There is generally more gluten in the wheat of warm climates than of cold.—Brands and Cox, Dictionary of Science, Literature, and Art.

Glutinative. adj. Acting as glue.

The roden of emphysema bruised and bled to in a manner of a plaster cloth holds all fresh and green wounds; and are so glutinative, that it will solder or glue together meats that is chop in pieces swelling in a pot, and make it in one lump.—Gerarde, Herball, p. 681. (No. 318.)

Glutinous. adj. Gluey; viscous; tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionate heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat both brings forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produced two effects: the one, that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth, the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
Next this marble venous'd seat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous meat.
Milton, Comus, 210.

Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Cause of Mincula.

Glutinousness. s. Attribute suggested by glutinous; viscosity; tenacity.

There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts.—Cheyne.

Glutton. s. One who indulges in excess of eating; one who gorges or stuffs himself with food; voracious person; (the glutton looks chiefly to the quantity, the epicure to the quality, of the food).
The Chinese eat horse flesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catfish baked. Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
Through Macbeth's enlaid she runs down,
While the vile glutton dies alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Tibbo's endless drought.

For, thus, thus, canto ii.
That he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat, he would make us good an excuse for himself as the greedy, voracious, ambitious tradesman, that should say, he only deals in lawful business. Lucie.
Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy.
Their fatal arts so impudently employ. Granville.

2. Animal so called; Gulo; see also Wolverine.

The glutton has also been placed in the genus of bears by Linnaeus; but they approach more to the martens by their teeth, as well as by their entire constitution and character, resembling the beaver only in their plantigrade character. . . . The most celebrated species is the glutton of the north. . . . As large as our badger, usually with a beautiful fur of a deep russet, with a black saddle and bow on the back, but sometimes of paler tints. It inhabits the coldest countries of the north, is esteemed to be remarkably cruel, does not sleep during the winter, and contrives to master the largest animals by leaping downwards on them from a tree. Its voracity has been ridiculously exaggerated by some writers. . . . It is probable that the rat . . . should be placed at the end of the gluttons and grisons. . . . The polecats approach the grisons and gluttons.—Translation of Cuvier's Règne Animal.

3. One never so satisfied as to be persuaded to leave off; applied to fightingmen who will take any amount of beating. Slang.

Glutton. v. a. Load; glut; overfill. Rare.

Then after all your fooling, fat, and wine,
Glutton'd at last, return at home to pine.
Locke, Lucinda Pathos, p. 81.

Gluttonise. v. n. Play the glutton; be luxurious.

And again, of cephi thy Sagar Sagar . . . the material demons do strangely gluttonise upon the nibbura and blood of sacrifices.—Halliwel, Melamprone, p. 102: 1081.

Gluttonous. adj. Given to gluttony.

When they would smile and frown upon his debts,
And take down the interest in their glutinous maws.
Shakespeare, Timon of Athens, iii. 4.

The exceeding luxuriance of this gluttonous age, wherein we press nature with over-weighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters.—Sir W. Raleigh.

Well observe
The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, not glutinous delight.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 330.

Gluttony. s. Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

Gluttony, a vice in a great fortune, a curse in a small.—Holliday.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stone.
Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 114.

Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend.
Dryden, Translation of Juvenal.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness.—Arbuthnot, On the Nature and Cause of Mincula.

Gly. v. n. See extract.

[To Glye, glye, glye. To squint. Glyare, glyere is goggle eye, limus, strabo. (Prompratorium Parvularum).]

'The elder sister [Leah] he forsake,
For she glyed with the beak.'
(Cursor Mundi in Halliwell.)

She had sore eyes. 'Such speech becomes a king no more than glaze eyes doth his face.' (Pierres Cabala in Nares.) Swedish, to glye, glye, to look obliquely, squint. 'There's a time to glye and a time to look even.' 'That was glyed,' it stands obliquely. North English, glye, glye, crooked; to glye, to look askant. (Jamieson.) Greek, γλῶττιν, slippery; γλῶττιν, to cast a side glance. Platt Deutsch, gliden, glye, to slip or slide.—Woods, Dictionary of English Etymology.

Glycerine. s. [Gr. γλυκερός = sweet.] In Chemistry. See extract.

Little was known of the true nature of fats previous to the admirable researches of Chevreul, who showed them to be compounds of peculiar acids with a base termed glycerine, and that common soaps are the same acids combined with either soda or potassa. The three principal acids which thus occur are the stearic, the margaric, and the oleic acids; and the stearate, the margarate, and the oleate of glycerine are generally termed stearine, margarine, and choline. . . . This substance, glycerine, under the name of the sweet principle of oils, was discovered by Scheele, and more fully examined by Chevreul. . . . Glycerine, when pure, is a thick, incolorable syrup, . . . sweet, unobscured, soluble in all proportions in water and alcohol, but insoluble in ether. Brands, Manual of Chemistry, pp. 120: 1275: 1818.

Glyptodon. s. [Gr. γλῦπτεν = carve + δὲν, -δον = tooth.] Gigantic fossil of a genus akin to that of the Armadillos so called.

The dermal bones which form the carapace of the Armadillo have the same circular-ovate anterior structure as the carpal, tarsal, or other bones of the endo-skeleton not excavated by a medullary cavity. This is well demonstrated in the dermal bones of the great extinct glyptodon. Owen, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, lect. vi.

Glyptographic. adj. [Gr. γλῦπτεν = carved or engraved, either in the way of sculpture or engraving.] Describing the methods of engraving figures on precious stones.

A particularly valuable part of this introduction is the glyptographic bibliography. British Critic, vol. x. Oct. 1797.

Glyptography. s. Description of the art of engraving upon gems.

The general problems are followed by the author's introduction to glyptography, (états des pierres gravées), in which he shows himself to be a person who has not derived his information merely from the descriptions given by others, and from books of prints, but from the actual contemplation of the originals themselves.—British Critic, vol. x. Oct. 1797.

Gnar. v. n. [German, knarren.] Growl; murmur; snarl.

He can roar his bristles strong,
And felly gnar, until day's enemy
Did him appease. Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Gnar. v. n. Knot, the knots being large, as those of a tree of distorted, or disordered, growth; (in the extract it stands incorrectly for gnar).

Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
And wolves are gnarling who shall snarl thee first.
Shakespeare, Henry VI. Part II., iii. 1.

Gnarled. part. adj. Distorted in large woody knots.

Merciful heav'n!
Thou rather with thy sharp and snarling bolt
Spit'st the unweadable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 2.

Hard by a poplar shook always,
All silver-green with gnarled bark;
For leagues no other tree did mark
The level waste, the rounding gray.

Travayson, Mariana.

Gnarly. adj. Gnarled.

But Tom saw that she was a very tall woman, as tall as her sister; but, instead of being gnarly, and horsey, and sealy, and prickly, like her, she was a most nice, soft, fat, smooth, jasey, chubby, delicious creature who ever nursed a baby. — Kingfisher, The Water-babies.

Gnarring. part. adj. Growling; murmuring.

The gnarring jester durst not whine for dudd; still were the furies while their sovereign spoke.

Beattie.

Gnash. v. a. [Low German, knasschen.] Strike together; clash.

Launch not with him, lest thou have sorrow with him, and lest thou gnash thy teeth in the end. — Reverend, xxx. 10.

His great iron teeth he still did grind,
And grimly gnash, threatening revenge in vain.

Spenser, Ruic Queen.

Gnash. v. n. Collide, or dash together, the teeth: (often a sign of rage, pain, or despair).

He small gnash with his teeth, and tuck away. — Psalms, cxi. 10.

They gnashed upon me with their teeth. Id., xxxv. 16.

They him laid
gnashing for mischief, and despite and shame,
To find himself not matchless.

Milton, Paradise Lost, vi. 279.

Gnashing. verbal abs. Collision of the teeth in rage or pain.

Let her taste of most terrible punishments, sorrowful plagues, waylimes, and gnashing of teeth. Rile, Discourse on the Revolution, p. iii. 1734.

There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. — Matthew, viii. 12.

Gnat. s. [A.S.] Small two-winged insect so called of the genus Culex.

Her whip of cricket's leane, the lash of film;
Her wasp-gnat, a small eye-creased gnat.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, i. 1.

Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. — St. Matthew, xxiii. 24.

Gnathological. s. Flattering, after the manner of Gnatho the parasite in one of Terence's plays.

To attend others bathing or anointing, to observe his hour, whether he goes early or late, is servile and gnathological. — Translation of Plutarch's Morals, iii. 360. (Ord MS.)

Gnating. s. Little gnat.

But if some man more largely than the rest,
Shall dare attack these gnatings in their nest,
At once they rise with impudence of rage,
What their small stings and buzz allow the stage.

Chapman, The Rival, (Rich.)

Gnatcatcher. s. Gnat-snapper.

The little gnat-catcher (twelve princes' boards),
And the green parrot, fainer of our words,
Wait on the plumes, and admire her tunes,
And gaze themselves in her bewitching plumes.

Spenser, Du Barbat. (Nares by H. and W.)

Gnatcatcher. s. Bird so called, probably the Italian bee-eater.

They deny that any bird is to be eaten whole, but only the gnatcatcher. — Hutchins, Updegr.

Gnaw. v. a. past part. gnawed and gnawn.

[A.S. gnawian.] Wear anything down (as a squirrel wears a nut, or a dog a bone) with the teeth, chiefly the incisors: (gnawing differs from biting by taking a smaller hold of the object attacked, and from chewing by its rasping action). Applied to corrosive, and more figuratively still, to immaterial agents, such as envy, calumny, destruction, and the like.

Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?
Some bloody passion shakes your very frame.

Shakespeare, Othello, v. 2.

Gnawing with my teeth my hands resemble,
I mind's my freedom. — Id., Comedy of Errors, v. 1.

They gnawed their tongues for pain. — Revelation, xvi. 10.

A knowing fellow that would gnaw a man like to a worm, with his belchish brail.

Chapman.

Like rotten fruit I fall, worn like a cloth,
Gnawed into rags by the devouring moth. — Southey.

He comely fell, and dying gnawed the ground.

Dryden.

An Oubite wretch (by headlong haste betrayed,
And falling down i' the rout) is prisoner made:
Whose flesh torn off by hunks, the ravenous foe
In morsels cut, to make P. farther go,
His bones clean pick'd, his very bones they gnaw.

Dryden, Translation of Juvenal, sat. xv.
To you such wouldst harsh fruit is given, as raw
Young soldiers at their exercises gnaw.

Id., sat. v.
A lion, hampered in a net, called to a mouse to help him out of the snare: the mouse gnawed the threads to pieces, and set the lion at liberty. — Sir R. B. Estrange.

Gnaw. v. n. Practice gnawing.

I might well, like the Spanish gnaw upon the chain that ties me; but I should sooner wear my teeth than procure liberty. — Sir P. Shallop.

See the hell of having a false woman: my best shall be stored, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnawed at. — Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
A thousand men that fishes gnawed upon.

Id., Richard III. i. 1.

Gnawer. s. One who, or that which, gnaws.

Plautus calls him [the black-biter] "mou-gnawer" (that is the gnawer, or eater up) of one's good name. — Bishop Andrews, Lectures on the De-calogue, p. 307; ed. 1659.

Gnawing. part. adj. Having the character of that which gnaws.

The gnawing pain in the region of the stomach is much more obstinate. — Copland, Dictionary of Poetical Medicine, Dyspepsia.

Gneiss. s. [probably Polish; names like the old Polish metropolis (see Gnesna, in German, Gnesen) being common, and probably taken from the physical structure of the locality. This need not necessarily be gneiss, in strict mineralogical sense of the term, but some rock like it.] In Geology. See extract.

The word gneiss is of Saxon Uic, not Anglo-Saxon,
but Saxon of the present Kingdom of Saxony; origin, and since the time of Werner it has been understood to apply to a crystalline compound of quartz, felspar, and mica, distinctly stratified and very widely distributed wherever granite occurs, but more especially abundant in Scotland and the Scandinavian range, and in Bohemia, Silesia, and the metalliferous mountains of Saxony. — Aschard, Geology, ch. xvi.

Gnoff. s. [?] Churl. Rare.

The clumbersome gnoff, that toyles and moyles,
And delueth in the downe,
If haply he a surtle be,
So soote for into towne.

Draut, Translation of Horace, sat. 1. (Rich.)

Gnome. s. [?] Imaginary being in the Rosierian mythology, of a gloomy character, and connected with the earth rather than the air or fire.

The gnome tends sinks downward to a gnome,
In search of mischief still on earth to roam.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

The laughers gave out, that the gnomes and sylphs, disguised like ruffians, had shot him, as a punishment for revealing the secrets of the cabinet, a crime not to be pardoned by these jealous spirits. — *J.
Watson, Essay on the Writings and Genius of
Pope.*

According to themselves, all things are alive, eat, drink, and excrete; even minerals and fluids. According to him and his school, besides material and immaterial beings, there are elementary spirits which hold an intermediate place, sylphs, nymphs, gnomes, salamanders, &c., by whose agency various processes of enchantment may be achieved, and things apparently supernatural explained. Thus this spiritualist scheme dealt with a world of its own by means of fanciful inventions and mystical visions, instead of making any step in the study of nature. — *Wheatley, History of Scientific Ideas, ii.
175; ed. 1858.*

Gnome. s. [from Gr. γνῶμη = opinion.] Sententious; or apophthegmatic, saying.

Gnaw [is] a saying pertaining to the manners and common practices of men, which declaredly, by an apt brevity, what in this our life ought to be done or not done. — Trachman, Garden of Eloquence, sig. V. iii. 1577.

Gnomic. adj. Having the character of a gnome; sententious; apophthegmatic.

Solon is, in fact, the earliest known author who can properly be classed under the title of a gnomic poet. The term gnomic appears to have been originally invented, as it was exclusively employed, to denote a school of classic poetry, the object of which was to inculcate moral doctrines rather than express emotional emotions; to enforce maxims of worldly wisdom than more immediate bearings on objects of special interest to the author or his public. The characteristic, consequently, of the gnomic style was a sententious gravity, savouring often more of philosophy than poetry. It is true that by reference to this definition, portions of the works of various preceding poets, of Archilochus, for example, or Tyrtaeus, might rank as gnomic. There is, however, this distinction between the cases, that in the poems of those authors, the purely ethic or didactic element is not only comparatively limited, but altogether subordinate to the general scope and tendency of their muse; in Tyrtaeus, for instance, to martial and political enthusiasm; in Archilochus, to satire and sarcasm. The elegies of Solon, Xenophanes, Theognis, on the other hand, are, for the most part, essentially of the gnomic order, while all may be said to partake more or less of the same character. — *H. May, Critical History of the Language and Literature of ancient Greece, b. ii. ch. vi.

§ 7.*

Gnomic. adj. [from gnome, γνῶμη.] Sententious; containing maxims or reflections.

Adding this excellent, gnomic, and unalike conclusion. — Conf. note at Hampton Court, p. 41: 1603.

Gnomic. adj. [from gnomon.] Having a gnomon: (gnomonic or gnomonic the only accurate forms).

He may have given him a dial furnished with a meaner needle, rather than an ordinary gnomonic dial. — Huyg, Works, v. 327. (Rich.)

Gnomology. s. [Gr. γνῶμη = word, principle.]
Collection of maxims and reflections.

Which art of powerful rebeunitive wisest men have also taught in their ethical precepts and gnomology. — Milton, Tractate on Education.

Gnomon. s. [Gr. γνῶμη.] Hand or pin of a dial.

The gnomon of every dial is supposed to represent the axis of the world, and therefore the two ends or extremities thereof must directly answer to the north and south poles. — Huyg.

There were from east naturally sun-dials, by the shadow of a style or gnomon, denoting the hours of the day. — Sir T. Browne.

Gnomonic. adj. Connected with, relating to, or constituted by, a gnomon.

The gnomonic projection is also called the horographic projection, because it is the foundation of dialling. — Trachtenberg.

Suppose that a countryman, on a clear day, brought into the garden of some famous mathematician, should there see one of those curious gnomonic instruments that show at once the place of the sun in the zodiac, his declination from the equator, the day of the month, and the length of the day, &c. — Huyg, Works, v. 328. (Rich.)

Gnomonics. s. Principles of dialling.

Man may enjoy the world above him, by applying to his new creatures that are, by vast removal, out of his reach: as the sun, by making it afford him the elevations of the pole, and the zeniths, sun-dials of all sorts enough to make up an art called gnomo-nics. — Huyg, Works, vi. 77d. (Rich.)

Gnomonist. s. Dialler.

The sun enables the gnomonist to make accurate dials, to know exactly how the time passes. — Huyg, Works, vi. 18. (Rich.)

Gnu. s. In Zoology. See extract.

Although the gnu or gna, here considered as the type of the genus, was hitherto classed with the antelopes, it appears that zoologists felt the necessity of moving it into one more nearly allied to Bos. . .

The word gnu is of Hottentot derivation; the Hottentots name it willo-beest, or wild cattle, or ox. . . The kokona (Catoblepas taurinus) is found in the latter country, but not in the same place with the gnu. . . The brindled gnu (Catoblepas Gargon) is a third species, which, however, . . . may be a mere variety of the last. — Translation of Cuvier's Régne Animal.

Among the more interesting species may be pointed out the water-buck and sable antelope; the oryx, which, when seen in profile, probably suggested the unicorn mentioned by the ancients; the blesbok, hartbeest, and man-nyle of South Africa;
the large-eyed gazelle, so often referred to by eastern poets; the springbok, so called from its springing leaps, when the white fur of its back opens like a sheet; the gnu, which at first seems a compound of horse, buffalo, and antelope; the reining, or Indian antelope, with its curious cheek-purses; the wood antelope, with their short horns often covered amongst a bush of hairs; the elickam of India, with its four horns. — Guide to the British Museum.

Go. v. s. (The preterite, at the present time, is wanting; its place being supplied by went,
the preterite of wend = turn. In the earlier stages of the language it was yode. Past participle gone.) [The first point which commands notice in this anomalous verb is its abbreviated form. In German the infinitive is geh-en, in which the h represents an earlier g or k. The language which best shows this is the Danish, wherein gaar is the present, gik the preterite, form. The close connection between g (or k) and its nasalized form -ng is well known; the German preterite of geh-en being gieng, or ging. By these preliminaries the identity of go and gang is made clear. The same, also, tell us that the word is as unanomalous in other languages as in our own. In the old preterite the irregularity is double. (1) There is substitution of g for g, giving gode. (2) There is the combination of a preterite in -d, with a participle in -u; gode (= goed), gone (= gorn) gon: the spelling with a final e being in both cases objectionable.]

Its chief meaning is best exhibited by contrasting it with Come. Both denote motion, or change of place. This may be considered (1) in respect to its direction, (2) in respect to its manner generally.

(1) In the way of direction, the motion denoted by come is to, or towards, the speaker, and involves what is called the terminus in quem. The motion denoted by go is from the speaker, and involves the notion of the terminus a quo. Contrast come hither with go thither.

* Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once. (Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 4.)
* Colchester oysters are put into pots; where the sea goth and cometh. (Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.)

(2) In respect to the character of the movement denoted by go, we may safely say, that in the ordinary English of the present time, it has no special limitations, i.e. that, when used alone, it does not mean one kind of motion more than another. True, we say the bird flies, the hare runs, the fish swims (rather than goes) away; but this is because the character of their several modes of motion are well defined, and definitely named. We may also say that a man is going to France when he is sailing, or going to London when he is riding. In Danish, however, the latter expression would be inaccurate, since gaue implies the notion of being on foot, i.e. = walk. Traces of a limitation of this kind are to be found in English.

* You know that love
Will creep in service where it cannot go.
(Shakespeare, Two Gentlemen of Verona, iv. 2.)
* And must I go to him? That must run to him; for thou hast said so long that going will scarce serve the turn. (Ibid., iii. 1.)

The same also appears in such expressions as 'he can neither stand nor go,' of which the meaning is 'move himself,' rather than 'be conveyed, away.' In

* Rise, let us be going (Matthew, xxvi. 17),

the meaning may be either walking, or simply moving.

Lastly, go, like come, is thoroughly and preeminently a neuter or intransitive verb, the construction in such expressions as go that way, go on errand, being adverbial, just as truly as go round is one. For this see Come. For combinations like go it, see It indefinite and postpositive.

Though these preliminaries carry us over a large space of ground, the details that still stand over are numerous, the headings in the previous editions amounting to more than fifty. In most of these, however, the word that determines the import is not so much the verb under notice as the word with which it is combined.

1. Applied to immaterial operations and objects.

We will not hearken to the king's words to go from our religion. — Murphree, ii. 22.

Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints? — 1 Corinthians, vi. 1.

They look upon men and matters with an evil eye; and are best pleased when things go backward, which is the worst property of a servant of a prince or state. — Bacon.

If I had unwarily too far engaged myself for the present publishing it, truly I should have kept it by me till I had once again gone over it. — Sir K. Digby, On the Soul, dedication.

Thus I have gone through the speculative consideration of the living Providence. — Sir M. Hale, Originations of Mankind.

I hope, by going over all these particulars, you may receive some tolerable satisfaction about this great subject. — South, &c.

All goes to ruin, they themselves contrive
To rob the honey, and subvert the hive.

Dryden, Translation of the Georgics.

If we go over the laws of Christianity, we shall find that, excepting a few particulars, they enjoy the same things, only they have made our duty more clear and certain. — Archbishop Tillotson, Sermons.

In their primary qualities we can go but a very little way. — Locke.

I go over some parts of this argument again, and enlarge a little more upon them. — Id.

They are not able all their life-time to reckon, or regularly go over any moderate series of numbers. — Id.

Landed men, by their providence and good husbandry, accommodating their expenses to their income, keep themselves from going backwards in the world. — Id.

Cato, we all go into your opinion. — Addison.
Because this atheist goes mechanically to work, he will not offer to admit that all the parts of the machinery could, according to his explication, be formed at a time. — Beattie.

2. Pass: (the two words, pass and go, being nearly convertible).

Because a fellow of my acquaintance set forth her praises in verse, I will only repeat them, and spare my own tongue, since she goes for a woman. — Sir P. Sidney.

A kind imagination makes a bold man have valour and enterprise in his air and motion; it stamps value upon his face, and tells the people he is to for so much. — Collier.

It has the greatest town in the island that goes under the name of Auto-Capra, and is in several places covered with a very fruitful soil. — Addison, Travels in Italy.

Clipping should be finally stopped, and the money which remains should go according to its true value. — Locke.

Sometimes run, or take a direction, is the nearer synonym.

Athenians, know
Against right reason all your counsels go;
is not fair, not profitable that,
Nor 't'other question proper for debate.

Dryden, Translation of Persius.

3. Be rated one with another; be considered with regard to greater or less worth.

I think, as the world goes, he was a good sort of man enough. — Arbuthnot.

4. Contribute; conduce; concur; be an ingredient.

The medicines which go to the ointments are so strong, that if they were used inwardly, they would kill those that use them. — Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

More parts of the greater wheels go to the making our part of their turn. — Glauville, Scopia Scientifica.

There goes a great many qualifications to the completing this relation: there is no small share of honour and conscience and sufficiency required. — Collier.

I give the sex their revenue, by laying together the many various characters that prevail in the male world, and shewing the different ingredients that go to the making up of such different humours and constitutions. — Addison.

Something better and greater than high birth and quality must go towards acquiring those demonstrations of public esteem and love. — Swift, Letter to Pope.

Fall out or terminate; succeed.

Your strong possession much more than your right,
Or else it must go wrong with you and me.

Shakespeare, King John, i. 1.
Howe'er the business goes, you have made fault
I th' boldness of your speech.

Id., Winter's Tale, iii. 2.
I will send to thy father, and they shall declare unto him how things go with thee. — Titus, x. 8.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory shall go on the one side; and yet, if it be tried by the grom, it would go on the other side. — Bacon.

It has been the constant observation of all, that if a minister had a cause depending in the court, it was ten to one but it went against him. — South, Sermons.

At the time of the prince's landing, the father, easily foreseeing how things would go, went over,
like many others, to the prince. — Swift.

Whether the cause goes for me or against me, you must pay me the reward. — Watts, Logic.

6. Be in any state: (with it).

It shall go ill with him that is left in his taler-nacle. — Job, xx. 23.

He called his name Beriah, because it went evil with his house. — 1 Chronicles, vii. 23.

7. Proceed in train or consequence.

How goes the night, boy?

The moon is down: I have not heard the clock;
And she goes down at twelve.

Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 1.

I had hope,
When violence was done, and war on earth,
All would have then gone well.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 779.

Duration in itself is to be considered as going on in an constant, equal, uniform course. — Locke.

8. Pass, or be loosed; not be retained.

Then let us go,
And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd
He seem'd to fling his way without his eye.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, ii. 1.

Let go the hand of that arch heretic.

Id., King John, iii. 1.

9. Reach or be extended to any degree.

His anonymous expressions go to further than virtue may allow. — Dryden, Translation from Greek, preface.

It is not one master that either directs or takes notice of these: it goes a great way hardly to permit them. — Sir R. L. Estcourt.

'Tis a rule that goes a great way in the government of a sober man's life, not to put anything to hazard that may be secured by industry, consideration, or circumspection. — Id.

Considering the cheapness, so much money might go further than a sum ten times greater could do
now. — Bishop Wilkins.

Whose flesh, torn off by lumps, the rav'ns have
In morsels cut, to make it further go.

Id., Translation of Juvenal.

I had another reason to decline it, that ever new to go far with me upon all new inventions or experiments; which is, that the best trial of them is by time, and observing whether they live or not. —
Sir W. Temple.

Whichever appears against their prevailing success for nothing, being either misapplied, or passing for ill and disorder.

Can another man perceive that I am conscious of any thing, when I perceive it not myself? No man's knowledge here can go beyond his experience.
— Locke.

10. Move by mechanism.

This pope is decrepit, and the bell goes for him.

— Bacon.

Clocks will go as they are set; but man,
Irregular man's never constant, never certain.

Chaucer.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches: none
Go just alike, yet each believes his own.

Pope.

11. Advance.

Of living creatures some are a longer time in the world, and some shorter: women go commonly nine months, the cow and the ewe about six months. —
Bacon.

12. Fare, which not only is a near synonym, but is used as its equivalent in several provincial dialects: make shift, in which case the import is determined by the adjunct rather than the simple verb.

Every goldsmith, eager to engross to himself as much as he could, was content to pay high for it, rather than go without. — Locke.

Clothes they must have; but if they speak for this stuff, or that colour, they should be sure to go without it. — Id.

13. Pass away; depart; be lost: (such being the notion implied in the extract).

When our merchants have brought them, if our commodities will not be enough, our money must go to pay for them. — Locke.

Coinciding with away.

Turn not children going, till you have given them all the satisfaction they are capable of. — Locke.

Coinciding with about.

No extraordinary example, in so degenerate an age, deserves for the rarity, and, I was going to say, for the incredibility of it, the attention of all that knew him, and considered his worth. — Locke.

Used participially. Decline; tend towards death or ruin.

He is far gone, and, truly, in my youth,
I suffer'd much extremity for love.

Shakespeare, Hamlet, ii. 2.

Very near this.

Idiomatically with several words of allied meaning, haleen, hauled, &c. Be in a state of compact or partnership.

As a lion was bestirring an ox that he had newly plucked down, a soldier passing by cried out to him, Half asleep! You should go your snip, says the lion, if you were not so forward to be your own carrier.—Sir R. L. Edrington.

There was a lunting match agreed upon betwixt a lion, an ass, and a fox, and they were to go equal shares in the booty.—Id.

Go about. Attempt, engage in, or employ one's self on, anything; set (i.e. set one's self) about is a nearly equivalent term. With business the combination often implies an ungracious command; go about your business, be sent about one's business, being phrases which are less connected with the notion of employment on anything that interests the person who receives, than that of departure from the presence of him who gives, the order.

O dear father,

It is thy business that I go about.

Some men, from a false persuasion that they cannot reform their lives, and root out their old vicious habits, never so much as attempt, endeavour, or go about it.—South, Sermon.

Either my book is plainly enough written to be rightly understood by those who peruse it with attention and indifference, or else I have writ mine so obscurely that it is in vain to go about to mend it.—Locke.

They never go about, as in former times, to hide or palliate their vices; but expose them freely to view.—Swift.

Go aside. Err; deviate from the right; go astray.

If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him.—Namur, v. 12.

Go between. Interpose; mediate; act as a go-between.

I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her, for indeed, he was mad for her.—Shakespeare, All's well that ends well, v. 3.

Go by.

a. Pass away. Johnson writes 'pass away unnoticed'; the notion, however, of unobservance seems to lie chiefly in the word let.

Do not you come your tardy son to chide, That laps'd in time and passion, lets go by Th' important acting of your great command?—Shakespeare, Hamlet, iii. 4.

So much the more our career's ev'd done, Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her As she liv'd now.—Id., Winter's Tale, v. 3.

What's that to me? The time goes by; away.—Id., Twelfth Night, iii. 4.

b. Be regulated.

In argument with men a woman ever Goes by the worse, whatever be her sex.—Milton, Samson Agonistes, 903.

He's sure to go by the worse that contends with an adversary that is too mighty for him.—Sir R. L. Edrington.

'Tis not to be supposed, that by searching one can positively judge of the size and form of a stone; and indeed the frequency of the fits, and violence of the symptoms, are a better rule to go by.—Shaep, Surgery.

Go down. Generally applied to the credibility or incredibility of statements; take in, swallow, and other similar metaphors from the throat being equivalents.

Nothing so ridiculous, nothing so impossible, but it goes down whole with him for truth and earnest.—Sir R. L. Edrington.

Folly will not easily go down in its own natural form with discerning judges.—Dryden.

If he be hungry, bread will go down.—Locke.

Ministers are so wise to have their proceedings to be accounted for by reasons at a distance, who often mould them into the systems that do not only go down very well in the pulpit-house, but are supplies for pamphlets in the present age.—Swift.

Go in and out. Be free of entry to any place; be at liberty.

He shall go in and out, and find pasture.—John, x. 9.

Go off.

a. Die; go out of life; decess.

I would the friends we miss were afo arriv'd: Some mind go off; and yet, by these I see, So great a day as this is easily bought.—Shakespeare, Macbeth, v. 7.

In this manner he went off, not like a man that departed out of life, but one that returned to his abode.—Taylor.

b. Explode: (as guns, crackers, and other firearms and combustibles).

c. Succeed: (as 'The affair went off well,' 'badly,' or 'indifferently').

d. Run away; elope.

Go on.

a. Make attack: (the difference between this and the senses of the next heading depends upon the second on).

Bold Cethyrus, Whose valour I have turn'd into his poison, And praised so to doting, as he would Go on upon the girls.—B. Jonson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

b. Proceed.

He found it a great way to keep that peace, but was fain to go on in his story.—Sir P. Sidney. He that desires only that the work of God and religion shall go on, is pleased with it, whoever is the instrument.—Jeremy Taylor.

I have escaped many threats of all fity by these notions; if they go on, the only justice I have dealt with is woe from the belly of a fat sheep.—Sir W. Temple.

Go on cheerfully in the glorious course you have undertaken.—Addison.

When we find that design impracticable, we should not have gone on in so expensive a management of it.—Swift.

Many clergymen write in so dilapidate a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations.—St. John, extraordinary expositors, 17.

I wish you health to go on with that noble work.—Bishop Berkeley.

Go over. Change sides; betake one's self to another party.

In the change of religion, men of ordinary understandings don't so much consider the principles as the practice of those to whom they go over.—Addison, Tracts in Italy.

Power, which, according to the old maxim, was used to follow, is now gone over to money.—Swift.

Go out.

a. Go upon any expedition.

You need not have prick'd me: there are other men fitter to go out than I.—Shakespeare, Henry IV, Part II, iii. 2.

b. Be extinguished ('s a light).

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out, With titles blown from adulation?—Shakespeare, Henry V, iv. 1.

Spirit of wine burnt till it go out of itself, will burn no more.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

The care of a state, or an army, ought to be as constant as the rigidist's fire, to make any great production; and if it goes out for an hour, perhaps the whole operation fails.—Sir W. Temple.

My blood runs cold, my heart forgets to heave, And life itself goes out at thy disposure.—Addison, Cato.

And at her felt approach and sweet night, Art after art goes out, and all is night.—Pope, Dunciad.

c. Proceed formally to an academical degree.

'Now heaven be praised, Sir, Thy all-desir'd yearns and thy bow Thine last phoe so well about these woods, that now

Thou art gone out thy art-master.—Sir R. Fausset, Translation of Guarini's Pastore Fido, p. 144.

Go through.

a. Suffer; undergo.

I tell thee that it is absolutely necessary for the common good that they should go through this operation.—Arkwright.

b. Perform thoroughly; execute (with wish).

Finding Percebe every way able to go through with that kind of life, he was desirous for his sake as for his own to enter into it.—Sir P. Sidney.

If you can as well go through with the statue here of that kind, I will think you have not lost all your time here.—Spenser.

He much feared the ead of Antrim and not steadiness of mind enough to go through with such an undertaking.—Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

The amazing difficulty and greatness of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting heartily about such a task as he deigns ever to go through with it.—South, Sermons.

Go upon. Take as a principle.

This supposition I have gone upon through those papers.—Addison.

Go to: (imperative used as an interjection). Come, come, take the right course.

They said to one another, Go to, let us make brick, &c. And they said, Go to, let us build us a city and tower, whose top may reach unto heaven.—Genesis, xi. 3, 4.

One went in, and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel. And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel.—2 Kings, v. 4, 5.

Go to now, ye that say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain; whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow.—James, iv. 13, 14. Go to then, O thou far renowned son of great Agrippa; shew thy famous might in judging.—Spenser.

Go to, go to, then art a foolish fellow; Let me be clear of thee.—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, iv. 1.

My favour is not to be used with words like these: Go to; you'll teach your tongue another tale.

The extract and explanation are those of the previous editions. At present the combination is rare; and as, perhaps, no living person has used it, except as an archaism, the exact sense of it, especially in respect to the metaphor involved in it, is uncertain. The editor thinks that, if he used it himself, it would be rather as an equivalent to the colloquial or slang term, shut up (as a door, or lid) — cease, leave off, rather than with anything suggested by a word as opposite as come, come.

Go-by. a. Slip; act of evasion.

Except an apparition is instructed how to mislead and mislead, and give you the go-by upon occasion, his master may be eluded with neglect.—Collier, Essay on Poets.

What will you give to have the quarter-free, The spirit and moulding go-by of his grace?—Oldham, Satire in Imitation of the Third of Juvenal.

Was it a matter of difficulty to which it was expedient for the time to give the go-by? Then Lord Palmerston gave it the go-by in the light and easy way in which men of the world discuss questions which it is inconvenient to treat at length.—Saturday Review, February 10, 1861.

Good. s. [A.S. gud; whence also Gad, with its several meanings; wand, staff, or rod being the primitive one.] Rod, stick, or prick for driving.

How can he get wisdom that biddeth the plough, and that sheweth in the good, that driveth even, and is occupied in their labours, and whose task is of labours?—Ecclesiastes, xxxviii. 25.

Oh in his garden I had a good he bears.—Pope.

Good. e. u. Drive with, or as with, a good; urge or stimulate excessively.

Most things raise Is that temptation, that doth good us on To sin in bating virtue.—Shakespeare, Measure for Measure, ii. 2.

Goodled with most sleep occasions, Which lay nice manners by, I find you to The use of your own virtues.—Id., All's well that ends well, v. 1.

Of all that breathe, as the various faculty, Some with delight is goodled on by thee.—Dryden.

He was born with a sweet and generous temper; but he had been goodled and baited into savageness, which was not natural to him, and which amazed and shocked those who knew him best.—Alcock, Critical and Historical Essay, The Earl of Chatham.

Goodman. s. Driver with a good.

What professions have we not seen? Corporal, Christ and Legend, waiting in his garb; bones of Valaire with hawk's claws and goodled in Roman costume; fashions of Chatter-box and Sine Lemen; Goring's favours, Rousseau's slum-liners, and the lapins of Pétion, National Pike, &c. &c.—The French Revolution, pt. ii. l. v. ch. 23.

Goal. s. [Fr. gaulle = long pole set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. Landmark set up to bound a race; point marked out to which racers run.

As at the Olympic games, or Pythian fields, Part each their fiery steeds, or shun the goal With rapid wheels.—Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 320. And the slope sun his upward beam Sheds round the dusky pole, Facing toward the other goal.—Id., Comus, 18.

2. Starting post.

Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start, The youthful charioteers with heaving heart Rush to the race?—Dryden, Translation of the Eclog.

3. Final purpose; end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goat in his eye which directs him in his race; some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end.—Dryden.

Each individual seeks a several goat;
But heaven's great view is one, and that the whole.
—Pope, Essay on Man.

No man, who here seems principal above,
Perhaps acts several to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goat;
Till a part we see, and not a whole. Thiel.
But the woman which kindled his ardour,
planned the Macedonian into sudden dejection, which at length broke out into open murmur. It is possible that, if they had seen any distinct and certain goat before them, they would not have struck from the dangers and difficulties of a last enterprise, however glorious. But to set out from a region which had once appeared to them as the verge of the habitable world on a new series of conquests, to which they could foresee no termination, was enough to agitate the most adventurous spirits. — Bishop Thirlwall, History of Greece, ch. lxi.

Goar. See Gore.

Goarish. adj. ? Patched; mean; doggrel.
Ra

May they know no language but that gibberish they prattle to their parents, unless it be the goarish Latin they write in their letters; and may they write that false, and lose their debts. — Beaumont and Fletcher, Philaster.

Goat. s. [A.S. gūt.] Native ruminant animal so called; (Ovis capra).

Gall of goat, and slips of yew.
— Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv. 1.

Goatherd. s. Herdsman to goats.

Is not thine same goatherd proud,
That sits on yonder bank,
Whom straying herd themselves doth shrowd
Among the bushes rank?

Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.
They first gave the goatherd lead confinement, and the marginals and his servant chased the kid about the stack. — Sir H. Wotton.

Goatish. adj. Resembling a goat in any quality; especially rankness and salacious-
ness.

An admirable evasion of a whoremaster, man, to lay his goatish disposition on the charge of a star. —
Shakespeare, King Lear, i. 2.
The best is notorious for its goatish smell, and tuffa not unlike the beard of that voracious animal.
— Dr. H. More, Antislavery.

Goatsbeard. s. Native plant so called of the genus Tragopogon, which term it translates (tragos = goat, podagros = beard).
Go-to-bed-at-noon is another name of it.
Goatsbeard, from its long coarse payques. — *Dr. A.
Prior*.

Goatsree. s. Plant so called of the genus Gallego.

The sorts hereof are but two. 1. Common goats-ree. 2. Mountain goatsree. Goatsree is said to be of a mean temperature between hot and cold.
— Cole, Asina in Eden, cxxvii.

Goatsree has the reputation of being a great alexipharmic and sudorific; the Italians eat it raw and boiled; with us it is of no esteem. — *Sir J.
Hill, Materia Medica*.

Goats Thorn. s. [translation of the tragacantha in medical Latin, from the Greek tragos = goat, and akantos = thorn.] Shrub that produces the gum tragacanth. See Gum.

Hughes hath made four sorts of goats-thorn.
... 1. shall set down but four; 1. The true goats-thorn; 2. Poterion or the small goats-thorn; 3. The yellow Syrian goats-thorn; 4. The purple Syrian goats-thorn. — Cole, Asina in Eden, cii. cxxvi.

Goatsucker. s. Native bird so called, wrongly supposed to suck the udders of goats, of the genus Caprimulgus (Lat. capra = goat, and mugra = milk). Churnowl, fern-owl, night-jar, night-eye, nighthawk, are other names for it; the last of which is the only one recognized by Yarrell.
The cry of the bird at night makes it appropriate; which none of the others are.

This is the structure in ... the goatsucker, &c. —
Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrata.

Nightjar is also used by the same authority.

Gob. s. Lump.

Do'st think I have so little wit as to part with my gob of money? — Sir R. L'Estrange.

Göbbet. s. Mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once; morsel.

Therewith she spew'd out of her filthy maw
A flood of poison, horrible and black,
Full of great lumps of flesh and göbbets raw.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
The cooks, slicing it into little göbbets, pick it in a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. — G. Sauter, Tavels.

The giant wro'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw göbbets from his maw, o'erspread
With purple wine and cruddled gore confus'd.

Achilles.
May it burst his pericranium, as the göbbets of fat and turpentine (a nasty thought of the poet) did that old dragon in the Apoecrypha. — Lamb, Letter to Coleridge.

Göbbet. r. a. Swallow as a göbbet.

Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and göbbets up both together. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

Göbble. r. a. [connected with göbble, the sound expressed being, in both cases, illustrated by the same animals, viz. ducks and geese; the form in -a, however, refers to sounds in the way of language, while that in
-o relates to sounds in the way of feeling greedily.] Swallow hastily with tumult and noise: (often with up, sometimes with down).

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they göbbled up now and then a piece of the cone along with them. — Sir R. L'Estrange.

The time too precious now to waste,
And snapper göbbled up in haste,
Again afresh to curls their hair.

Sir H. Wotton, Journal of a Month's Lady.
I finish this after a raw ill-baked dinner fast göbbled up to set me off to office again, after working there till near four. — Lamb, Letter to Wordsworth.

Göbble. r. a. Make a noise in the throat,
as the turkey does.

Of last year's corn in barn great store;
Fat turkeys göbbled at the door. 1
As a male turkey straggling on the green ...
Fred by exulting with his göbbing goes.

Göbbetween. s. One who transacts anything
by acting between two parties; mediator;
agent with a commission on both sides;
(often as a term of disparagement).

Even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me; I say, I shall be with her between ten and eleven. — Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 2.

They only are the intermediaries, or the göbbets cas, of this true devised mimicry. — Milton, Annotations upon a Defence of the Humble Petition.

The broker has his countenance ready to beam with the merchant, though the alms is to fall on himself, because he knows that, as a göbbet, he shall find his account in being in the good graces of a man of wealth. — Tate, R. no. 225.

'Consist,' said she, 'I cannot help saying I have met with a very ungrateful return from this body, for the pains I have taken to serve her family.' My family is much obliged to you, göbbet, said Toby, with a kind of hysterical gleam; 'but we have no right to the good offices of such an honourable go-between.' — Smollett, Expedition of Humph-Clink.

Göblet. s. [Fr. gobelet.] Bowl, or cup, that holds a large draught.

Like a round göblet, which wanteth not liquor. —
Shakespeare, Bottom, vi. 2.
Crown high the göbbets with the clerical draught;
Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought.

Dryden.

Göblin. s. [Fr. goblin.]

1. Evil spirit; frightful phantom.

Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
He that a spirit of health, or göblin dawn'd, Lining with these airs from heaven, or blasts from hell. — Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 3.
To whom the göblin, full of wrath, reply'd,
Art thou that traitor spy?

Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 688.
Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and göblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark. — Locke.

2. Fairy; elf.

His son was Elinor, who overcame
The wicked göbbles in bloody field;
But Elinor was of most renowned fame,
Who of all crystal did Panthea build.

Spenser, Faerie Queen.
Go, charge my göblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps. — Shakespeare, Tempest, iv. 1.

[The göblin was generally conceived as a supernatural being of small size but of great strength, dwelling underground in mountains or desert places, not generally ill-disposed towards man, and in some cases domesticated with him and rendering him service.
Hence the frequent addition of a familiar appellation, as in Hob-göblin, Hob-thrush. It was known in Germany by the name of Kobold, and was supposed particularly to frequent mines, being thence called Berg-geist, Berg-mannchen, or Minne-spirit, Mine-dwarf. Another German name is Matthew Kobold, equivalent to English Hob-göblin. The göblin is mentioned by Ordericus Vitalis, 'Demon cum quibusdam fatis caput saline in caedem velis degit, et by variis fronsator formis apparet nominem hedi.' Hence vulgaris goblina appellation. He is known in Brittany by the name of göblin, and is there also supposed to reside in household drudgery like Milton's Lubber-head, to carry the lasses of a night, for instance. It is among the Celts probably that the origin of the name is to be looked for. The Welsh appellation is collyn, properly a knocker, from colli, to knock, to peck; collyn gwy, a woodpecker. An explanation of the name is given in a passage which is the more satisfactory from the fact that the writer seems to have no idea of any connection between the word göblin and the superstition he is describing. 'People will laugh at us Cardiganshire miners,' says a correspondent quoted in Bridges' Guide to Llanidloes,
'who maintain the existence of knockers in mines, a kind of good-natured impalpable people, not to be seen, but heard, and who seem to us to work in the mines. The miners have a notion that these knockers are the souls, as we call them, of those who were formerly knockers (Addings), 'are of their own tribe and profession, and are a harmless people, who mean well.' It will be observed that the Kobold in Germany is peculiarly a miners' superstition, while Cardiganshire has been a mining district from the times of the Romans. From his knocking propensity the Kobold is sometimes called Meister Hammerling.
Waggon, Dictionary of English Etymology..

Göby. s. Fish so called.
The göbys are of little value, except as supplying food to other fishes. ... Of this genus the black göby (Gobius niger) is one of the most rare on our shores.
— Farrall, British Fishes.

Göcart. s. Machine in which children are enclosed to teach them to walk, and which they push forward without danger of failing.
Young children, who are tried in Göcart, to let ... sliding.
When members knit, and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer.

On the greatest and most useful of all human inventions, the invention of alphabetical writing, Plato did not look with much complacency. He seems to have thought that the use of letters had operated on the human mind as the use of the göcart in learning to walk, or of crutches in learning to swim, is said to operate on the human body. — Wan-dolph, Critical and Historical Essays, Lord Bacon.

God. s. [A.S.]

1. The Supreme Being.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. — John, iv. 24.
The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be deemed most sacred or holy. — Grey, Cosmogonic Science.

2. False god; idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed. — Leviticus, xxii. 20.

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing north, and Hyperborean way,
And Scythian coasts, and Thracian winter coast,
Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most.

Dryden.

3. Person or thing deified or too much honoured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly.
— Philippians, iii. 18.
I am not deia,
But one that seems to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion.

Shakespeare, Twelfth of the Shrew, iv. 2.

God. v. a. Treat as a god; deify. Rare.

This last old man
Iov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay, göblin me, indeed.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus, v. 3.

Gödechild. s. Godson or goddaughter.

(For example see Gödechild.)

Göddaughter. s. (the d doubled in sound as well as in spelling.) Girl for whom one became sponsor in baptism.

How dost my cousin, your bedfellow? and your third daughter, and mine, my god-daughter Ellen?
— Shakespeare, King Henry IV. Part II, iii. 2.

by persons to defend the eyes from dust or the heat of the sun; sometimes applied, ludicrously, to spectacles.

3. In the plural. Goggle-eyed person; stupid starrer.

Do ye stare goggles? I hope to make winter boots of thy hide yet.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of Malta.

Goggle. adj. Staring; having full eyes.

Frowning he enters . . .
And loursing on me with the goggle eye.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 427.
Give him admonition to forsake his swaggy glowering grace, and his goggle eye.—B. Jonson, Poetaster.
That rolls one goggle eye in its vast brow,
Like a grun Cyclop.

Sir E. Parnham, Translation of Guarini's

Painter's Echo, p. 113.

Goggle-eyed. adj. Having eyes ready to start, as it were, out of the head.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unbecomely to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves.—Archam, Schoolmaster.

Every lover admires his mistress, though she be very deformed, . . . bald, goggle-eyed, blear-eyed, or with staring eyes, heavy, dull, hollow-eyed, black or yellow about the eyes, or quaint-eyed.—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 224.

Goggled. part. adj. Prominent; staring.

Ugly faced, with long black hair, goggled eyes, white-mouthed.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years' Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 69.

Goggling. part. adj. Goggle.

A huge giant stiff and starke,
All foule of limbe and leere,
Two goggling eyes like fire.

Bishop Percy, Reliques of Ancient Poetry, Sir Cuthbert.

Such sight have they that see with goggling eyes.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, b. ii.
Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did wail.
Dryden.

Göing. verbal abs.

1. Act of walking.

When nobles are their tailors' tutors,
No hereticks burnt, but wenchers suitors,
Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shall be used with fork.

Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 2.

2. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes
Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound.
Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 290.

3. Pace.

The next day I pursued my journey, rattled through Chertonia . . . reached Gloucester by half-past three, and found myself housed at the Angel at Aberavenny a little before nine, having done ninety-three miles in eleven hours and a half, which, in these parts, I call . . .
Thackeray, Book, Gills et Gurney, vol. ii. ch. ii.

4. Proceeding; series of conduct: (plural with on, as goings-on).

His eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings.—Job, xxxiv. 21.

5. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twelfth part of their going.—Gree, Comœdies Selectæ.

Goière. s. [Fr.] Wen in the neck; hypertrophied form of the thyroid gland; swelling under the neck.

Most of them [the batmanas] have a goièr, or dew-lap, under the throat.—Translation of Currier's Règne Animal.

Gold. s. [A.S.]

1. Metal so called.

Gold hath three natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness, immutability from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow.—Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.

2. Money.

The old man's god, his gold, has won upon her.
Beaumont and Fletcher, Little Thief.

3. Flower. Goldilocks.

The crimson dandelion flower, the blue-bottle, and goldilocks, though extremely late weeds, yet for their dainty hues
And for their scent not ill, they for this purpose use.
Dryden, Indolence, song 15.

Goldbeater. s. [beater, perhaps, is from the German arbeiten = labour, work, as much as from the English beat.] One who prepares gold for gilding and similar applications by reducing it to a foil or leaf.

Our goldbeaters . . . scruple not to employ colored gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition.—Boyle.

Goldbeater's skin [is] the intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice.—Quincy.

When your gillyflowers blow, if they break the pool, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and find it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

Golden. adj.

1. Made of gold.

The golden lance that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up.—Isaiah, xl. 5.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

A kiss the golden sun gives me
To these fresh morning drops upon the rose:
As thy eye-beams, when thy fresh rays have smoo'd
The mead of dew that on my cheeks down flows.

Shakespeare, Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3. verse 8.

To her hard joke you must hereafter bow.
However she shines all golden to you now.—Dryden.

And see the guardian angels of the soul,
Reclining soft on many a golden cloud.—Race.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.

Gold a pleasing bath a gold-coloured coat under a russet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour.—Mortimer, Husbandry.

4. Excellent; valuable.

I have bought
Gold'n opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest glasses,
Not cast aside so soon.—Shakespeare, Much to do, i. 7.

That verse which they commonly call golden, has two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace.—Dryden.

Thence arises that golden rule, of dealing with others as we would have others deal with us.—Watts, Logic.

5. Happy; resembling the age of gold.

Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and feed the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.—Shakespeare, As you like it, i. 1.

Golden number. Number which shows the year of the moon's cycle.

This was invented, how before our Saviour's nativity, by Meton the Athenian, from whence it was styled the Metonic cycle: till afterwards it changed its name, being either from its great usefulness in ascertaining the moon's age, or else from its being written in letters of gold, called the golden number: though sometimes, for the first of these reasons, it is called the cycle of the moon.—Whately, Rational Illustration of the Book of Common Prayer.

Golden-eye. s. Duck so called; Anas clangula (whence the epithet in the extract).

Here dull and hopeless he'd lie down and trace
How sibbent crabs had serv'd their crooked race;
Or sadly listen to the tune!

Of fishing gull or charming golden-eye;
What time the sea-birds to the marsh would come,
And the loud litters, from his barndish home,
Gave from the salt-ditch side the following boom.
Croft, The Heron.

Goldenly. adv. In a golden manner.

My brother Jacques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit.—Shakespeare, As you like it, i. 1.

Goldfinch. s. Native songbird so called (Fringilla Carduelis).

Of singing birds they have finches, goldfinches, ruddocks, canary-birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others.—Cervie.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hop'd from side to side.
Dryden.

Goldfinder. s. One who finds gold: (often used figuratively, and applied to nightmen, privies being also called goldmines).

As our gold-finders, they have the honour in the night and darkness to thrive in stench and excrement.—Pellham, Reader, (Ord MS.).

With the accent on the second syllable.

His empty paunch that he might fill,
He suck'd his vitals through a quill,
Untouch'd it pass'd between his grinders,
Or't had been happy for goldfinder.—Swift.

Goldfish. s. Golden-coloured fish, akin to the carp, so called (Cyprinus auratus).

I have examined the development of the opercular bone in young gold-fish and carp, and I find that it is effected in precisely the same manner as that of the frontal and parietal bones.—Owen, Lectures on Comparative Anatomy, lect. vi.

Goldfoil. s. Foil of gold.

Of the same earth or stone he maketh sack cloth, royes, and leaves of gold-foyle, as no man would deem to have come of so gross a matter.—Tracts, new of Christian Religion, 13d. (Ord MS.).

Goldilocks. s. Native plant so called, commonly identified with the Ranunculus acris (aurum = gold + coma = hair), but more probably a translation of Chrysocoma (χρυσός = gold + κόμη = hair); and, if so, more appropriate to the Chrysocoma Lino-syria.

Fair ox-eye, goldilocks, and columbine.—R. Janma.

Goldproof. adj. Proof against the influence, or able to resist the temptation, of gold.

This is most strange: Art thou goldproof?

Thine's for them.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Maid's Tragedy.

Goldsmith. s. Worker in gold; dealer in articles made of gold; before the establishment of banks the word was nearly synonymous with dealer in money.

Neither chain nor goldsmith came to me.

Shakespeare, Comedy of Errors, iv. 1.

They [bankers] were a tribe that had risen and grown up in Cromwell's time, and never were heard of before the late troubles, till when the whole trade of money had passed through the hands of the scrivener: they were for the most part goldsmiths, men known to be so rich, and of so good reputation, that all the money of the kingdom would be trusted or deposited in their hands.—Lord Clarendon, Life, iii. 597.

The goldsmith or scrivener, who takes all your fortune to dispose of, when he has beforehand resolved to break the following day, does surely deserve the gallows.—Swift.

Borrowed 500*l.* of a goldsmith upon my ticket.—Spectator, no. 14.

Gold. s. [German direct, halbe; Swedish, half = club.] At present, Scotch (rather than English) game so called.

Gold was a fashionable game among the nobility at the commencement of the seventeenth century, and it was one of the exercises with which prince Henry, eldest son to James the first, occasionally amused himself.—Strutt, Sports and Pastimes of the People of England.

Gold and foot-ball appear to have been prohibited in Scotland by king James the second in 1457.—Brand, Observations on popular Antiquities.

In one of the caricatures of this period, Lord Sandwich is represented with a bat in his hand, in allusion we are told to his fondness for cricket; but it is a curved piece of wood, much more resembling that with which gold is played. And the same peculiarly-shaped instrument is put into the hand of a cricket-loving lady in a print of 1778 (Miss Wickes and Miss Triggert). What is the date of the last used cricket Recher, January, 1866, p. 235.

Gold. s. [?] Hand; paw; claw. Obsolesc.

They set hands, and Moses put her golden gold among them; and blid fortune, that saw not the colour of them, gave her the pre-eminence.—Sir P. Sidney.

Make 'em hold up their spread gold.—B. Jonson, Poetaster.

Wish her
To wash her hands in bran or flour;
And do you, in like manner, wear
Your dirty gold.—Cotton, Virgil Translated, b. iv.

Goldr. adj. [Gaelic, go leoir; the ordinary spelling with -a (galore) being exceptional.] Enough. Slang.

Goldshoes. s. [?] Overshoes.

I can assure you that the dirt of our streets is not quite over his shoes, so that he can walk dry. If he would wear goldshoes, as I do, he would have no cause of complaint.—Merivale, To Mrs. Walsley, Swift, xix. 227. (Ord MS.).

To all this must be added, the vast skill that is required in tendering a visit with approved and modish accuracy; that it be done punctually . . . that the goldshoes be left in their true and proper place . . . that the footboy be expert in observing his intended distance!—Richard, Graciosa and Remains of the Contempt of the Clergy inspired into, p. 125.

Gom. s. [A.S. guma.] Person. Obsol.

Say you, sir?

I'll try your ladyship, faith. Lady, well met.—

I do not think so, sir.—A scornful gom. The Widow.

Gondola. s. [Italian.] Venetian burge.

He saw did swim
Along the shore, as swift as glances of eye,
A little gondola, bedecked trim
With boughs and arbours woven cunningly.

Ripponer, Purdie Queen.
In a gondola were seen together Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica.—Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 8.

As with gondolas and men, his Good evidence, the duke of Venice,
Wills out, and gives the pulpit a ring. Prior.
Night ever was a gondola for me
You should not, I'll describe it you exactly;
'Tis a long covered boat that's common here,
Carved at the prow, built lightly, but compactly.
Row'd by two rowers, each call'd 'gondolier.'
It pithes along the water looking blackly,
Just like a coffin clapt in a canoe,
Where none can make out what you say or do.

Hymn, Beppo, 10.

Gondolier. s. Rower of a gondola.

Your fair daughter,
Transported with no worse nor better guard,
But with a knave of hire, a gondolier,
To the gross clasp of a lascivious Moor.

Shakespeare, Othello, l. 1.

In Venice Tasso's echoes are no more,
And silent rows the sunless gondolier.

Hymn, Childs Harold, iv. 3.

Then rest thee here, my gondolier,
Hush! hush! for up I go,
To climb you light dacency's height
While thou keep'st watch below.
O did we take for heaven above
But half the pains that we Take night and day for woman's love.
What angels we should be! Mumy, National Air.

Gónfalon. s. [Italian, gonfalon.] Ensign; standard.

Ten thousand thousand emblems high adorn'd,
Standards and gonfalons, twist van and rear,
Stream in the air. Milton, Paradise Lost, v. 588.

Gónfalonier. s. Chief standard-bearer.

Had she not [Florence] her private councils debating, her great council resolving, and her manifestoes executing? Was not the nation, too, provided for by the annual election of her gonfaloniere? Bishop Wren, Monarchy, (Lancet, ch. x. 1659.)

Gong. s. [?] Draught; privacy; jakes.

And all this persecution was for an Arrino, which dey'd at Constantine's fulschawfully. For as he went to church, with his rhoties and neech pride, then fell upon him an appetite for to go to a gong;
and with his lasee went alle the guttes out of his wombe down into the gong. Cyprian, Chr. of England, anno 522.

Gong. s. [from the Chinese.] Metal tam- bourine so called.

The Chinese believe that during eclipses of the sun and moon these celestial bodies are attacked by a great serpent, to drive away which they strike their gongs or brass drums. Davis, Illustrations of Shakespeare, l. 23.

Cymbals, gongs, and the tautum of the Chinese are made with an alloy of one hundred of copper and about twenty-five of tin. Cree, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Goniometer. s. [Gr. gōnion = ang., met- measure.] Instrument for measuring the angles of crystals.

The goniometer is indispensable to the mineralogist. Cree, Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines.

Gonorrhea. s. [Gr. gōnion = semen, pōo = flow.] In Medicine. Clap.

Ruddy humming, or stone mummy grows on the top of his rocks; they powder and boil it in milk and then give it to stop gonorrhoea. Woodward.

Good. adj. [A.S.] (has neither Comparative nor Superlative degree; better and best being from a wholly different root.)

1. Deserving of approbation generally: (op- posed to bad).

God saw every thing that he had made, and beheld it was very good. Genesis, l. 31.
A universe of death! which God by curse
Created evil; for evil only good.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 623.

2. Proper; fit for, adapted or conducive to, any particular object, the substantive to which it applies being a means to an end: (common in construction with verbs and verbal abstracts, as good to work with, good to eat, good for cutting).

Amongst a man's peers a man shall be sure of familiarity, and therefore it is good a little to keep state: amongst a man's inferiors one shall be sure of reverence, and therefore it is good a little to be familiar. Bacon.

If you think good, give Martin leave. Id.
The water of Nilus is sweeter than other waters in taste, and it is excellent good for the stone and hypochondrick melancholy. Id., Natural and Experimental History.

Of herbs and plants some are good to eat raw; as lettuce, endive, and purslane. Id.
It was a good time to comply with the importunity of the gentlemen of Essex. Lord Clarendon, History of the Grand Rebellion.

A man first builds a country seat,
Then fluda the walls and good to eat. Prior.
We discipline betimes those other creatures we would make useful and good for somewhat. Locke.
Good, gentle friend, how went the day?—
Good I am called at trumpet's sound,
And good when goblets dance the round,
Though gentle never was joined till now
With rugged Bertram's breast and brow.
Nor W. Scott, Rokeby, l. 12-13.

3. Sound; not false; not fallacious; valid.

He is resolved now to show how slight the propositions were which Luther let go for good. Bishop Atterbury.

4. Unimpaired; undamaged.

He also bartered away plumes, that would have rotted in a week, for rods, that would last good for his cutting a whole year. Locke.

5. Adequate; considerable.

The plant having a great stalk and top, both pry upon the grass a good way about, by drawing the juice of the earth from it. Bacon, Natural and Experimental History.
A good while ago God made choice that the Gentles by my mouth should bear the word. Acts.

We may suppose a great many deers of little-ness and lightness in these earthy parmies of them might flay in the skin a whole like exhibitions before they fell down. T. Bucer, Theory of the Eucharist.

They hold a good share of civil and military employments during the whole time of the usurpation. Swift.

6. Having adequate commercial means; able to fulfil engagements.

Antonio is a good man, my meaning, in saying that he is a good man, is to have you understand that he is sufficient. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, l. 3.

I'm call'd for now in haste by master Mercraft,
To trust master Fitz-blatard, a good man;
I have enquir'd him; eighteen hundred a year.

R. Johnson, Devil in an Ass.

7. Kind; favourable; loving; well disposed; polite: (as in 'You are very good;' with which 'very kind' is almost convertible).

But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt. Samuel, xxx. 15.
Truly good is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart. Psalm, lxxviii. 1.

8. To be relied or depended upon for any special purpose.

I could not make out why my charming widow had asked him, I may found out he was a
— and these three sang and nothing more popular in those times— Moore's 'O Lady fair
Thou art black, Gilbert Ginepro, vol. ii. ch. iv.

9. Expetive, or with a power of adding strength to the noun which it precedes.

Love no man in good earnest, nor no further in sport neither, than with soft ty of a pure bush thou may'st in honour come off again. Shakespeare, As you like it, l. 2.

10. Ludicrous.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to leave themselves in the sunshine, they that have been but a while
State of Ireland.

Why look where he comes; and my good man too; he's as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, ii. 1.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison, Spectator.

With as both before and after. Equivalent to; no worse than.

Therefore sprang there even of our, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude. Hobbes, xi. 12.

He sharply reproved them as men of no courage, which, being many times as good as in possession of the victory, had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Kent, History of the Turks.
The master will be as good as his word, for his own business. Nor W. Scott, Rokeby.
If they had held their royalties by that title, either the crown must have been but one sovereign over them all, or else every father of a family had been as good a prince, and had as good a claim to royalty as these.
Locke.

a. Give validity to anything; establish; maintain.

They died upon the place all the chief claims, all making good the light without any ground given. Bacon, History of the Reign of Henry VII.

I further will maintain
Upon his bad life to make all this good.
Shakespeare, Richard II. l. 1.

To make good this explication of the article, it will be necessary to prove that the church, which our Saviour founded and the apostles gathered, was to remain a constant and perpetual assemblage. Bishop Pearson, Exposition of the Creed.

These propositions I shall endeavour to make good.
Bishop Southwell.

While she so far extends her grace,
She asks a but good the promise of her face. With r.

b. Supply.
Every distinct being has somewhat peculiar to itself, in order good in one circumstance what it weds in another. Nor W. Scott, Rokeby.
He without even a dangerous war pursued;
As in our mode him first the danger choose,
So still he makes it good as virtue's source. Dryden.

With smooth. Really; seriously.
What, must I hold a candle to my shame?
They in themselves, good and bad, are too too light.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 6.

With time.
a. Not too fast.
In good time, replies another, you have heard them dispute amidst a vacuum in the schools. Coller, the Human Reason.

b. Opportunely.
Eye, what a Sing is Hastings, that he comes not
To tell us whether they will come or no—
And in good time here comes the serene light.
Shakespeare, Richard III. ii. 1.

Good. s.

1. That which contributes to happiness or virtue: (as opposed to bad, an element in misery or vice).

Nature in man's heart her laws hath pen,
Prescribing truth to wit, and good to will.
Nor W. Scott, Rokeby, l. 12-13.

The lessening or escaping of evil is to be reckoned under the notion of good; the becoming or less of good is to be reckoned under the notion of evil. Locke, Essay.

... says, how one of us is man be
To know it is good and ... make his facts or else degraded fruit, but let him boast
His knowledge of good best, and evil not,
May pierce but it sufficed him to have known good by itself, and evil not at all.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xl. 81.

Love with fear the only good,
Merciful over all his works, with good
Still overcoming evil. Thiel, xii. 562.

Good is also in sleep, and dreams advise,
Which he hath sent prophecies, some great good
Presaging. Thiel, xii. 612.

Not only carnal good from evil does not justify;
but good, no not a purpose good, can make evil good. Hobbes.

By good, I question not but good, morally so called,
'bonum honestum' ought, chiefly at least, to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure, the 'bonum utile,' or 'juvamentum,' hardly come into any account here. South, Sermons.

Nor holds this earth a more deserving knight
For virtue, valour, and for noble deed,
Truth, honour, all that is comprised in good. Dryden.

This caution will have also this good in it, that it will put them upon considering, and teach them
the necessity of examining more than they do. Locke.

Good is what is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us; or else to procure or preserve us the possession of any other good, or absence of any evil. Id.

2. Result of laudable moral qualities or actions.

Depart from evil and do good. Psalm, xxiv. 11.

3. Advancement; advantage; prosperity.

If he had employ'd
Those excellent gifts of fortune and of nature
Unto the good, not ruin, of the state.
R. Johnson, Catiline's Conspiracy.

Refuse to leave thy destin'd charge too soon,
And for the church's good defer thy own. Prior.

4. Goods.

Moreover, because I have set my affection to the house of my God, I have of mine own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house, even three thousand talents of gold. 1 Chronicles, xxii. 3.

For any good. On any account.

Sir Thomas More hearing one tell a monstrous lie, said I would not for any good hear him say his cock, least it should seeme a lie. Cyprian, Wits Fits and Fancies: lull. (Says by H. & W.)

For good and all. Completely; in earnest; wholly.

No, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no,
I'll not kiss till I kiss you for good and all.

Newest Acad. my of Compliments.
(Says by H. & W.)

The good woman never died after this, till she came to die for good and all. Sir R. L. Edgemoor.

Now though this was exceeding kind in her, yet,
as my good woman said to her, unless she resolved to keep me for good and all, she would do the little man more harm than good.—Paradise Lost, Book IV, l. 122. (Saves by H. & W.)

I missed the fit for good and all, though I did not recover my full strength for some weeks after.—De For, Life and Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.

Good now. Phrase recommending patience and wait, sit down.—Shakespeare, Hamlet, i. 1.
Good now, good now, how your devotions jump with mine.—Dryden, Spanish Friar.

Do our good. Gratitude.
Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me.—Shakespeare, Midsummer-Night's Dream, i. 2.

He was'd indifferently twist doing them neither good nor harm.—Id., Coriolanus, ii. 2.

Good, r. a. Improve; nurture. Rare.
A fruitful hill not by nature, but by grace; nature was like itself in it, in the world: that hath taken it from the barren downs, and goodly it.—*Disput
Hall, First Sermon*, 1624.

The husbandman looks not for a crop in the wild desert: but where he hath goodly, and plowed, and sown, and sown, why should he not look for an harvest?—Id., Remains, p. 121.

Good, adv. Well.
The pilot must intend some port before he steers his course, or he had as good leave his vessel to the direction of the winds, and the government of the waves.—South, Sermon.

Without good nature and gratitude, men had as good live in a wilderness as in a society.—*Sir R.
L'Estrange*.

Good speed. Two words rather than a compound: its elements, supposing there is no confusion, being good, and speed. In the first extract the construction is that of a verb, and good speed—wish me good speed. In the second the combination is that of an ordinary substantive and adjective.
The instance, however, of Goodbye—God-be-ri-ge, suggests the likelihood of the true form being Godspeed,
though of course both are possible.

And so good-sp of me.
Beauties and Fancies, Maid of the Mill.
I know, down I must;
And good-speed send me.—Milford, The Witch.

Good-bye. [God be wif (th) ge.]
Say, bid, good-bye. Take leave.

When I was young girl we used to console the Lazies, and Tithes, and Suddies, who had to their tears without getting married, by telling them that they were only waiting for Mr. Rich to come, and that he would be sure to come some day.
—Id., A. S. S. Dutch Pictures, The Life of M.

Goodfellow. s. As an element in the name
Robin Goodfellow, this is a compound rather than two words. Otherwise, it is two words rather than a compound.

Goodfellow, r. a. Call by the name of, or welcome us, a good fellow, or boon companion.

Let me rather be disliked for not being a beast,
than be good-fellow with a line for being one.
Some laugh at me for being sober; and I laugh at them for being drunk.—Edmund, Remains, i. 84.

Goodhumoured, part. pref. [In the previous editions the accent is on the second syllable (good-humoured), in which case the result is two words rather than a true compound. The pronunciation, however, here indicated, is by no means uncommon.
Hence, the true view of the combination is that it gives two forms; (1) a pair of words, and (2) a compound. The latter only has its place in a dictionary. Hence, good-humour, good-humoured, good-mu-ners, good-morrow, good-nature, good-naturedly, good-sense, good-will, all of which are to be found in the previous editions, are omitted.] Having a good humour.

Give a glass to each goodhumoured fellow.
Old Song.

Gooding, s. See extract.
To go a gooding, is a custom observed in several parts of England on St. Thomas's day by women only, who ask alms, and in return for them wish all that is good, such as a happy new year, &c., to their benefactors, sometimes presenting them also with sprigs of ever-green. In some parts of Surrey and Kent the custom is thus kept up; and in other counties gooding is the word, among the poor, for collecting before Christmas what may enable them to keep the festival.—Tidd.

Goodliness, s. Attribute suggested by Goodly; beauty.

She sang this song with a voice no less beautiful to his ears, than her goodliness was full of harmony to his eyes.—Sir P. Sidney.

The stateliness of houses, the goodliness of trees,
when we behold them, delighteth the eye.—*Hooker,
Ecclesiastical Polity*.

Goodly, adj. Having the real or approximate attribute of goodness; often applied to outward appearance; well-favoured;
fine looking; showy; excellent.

A prince of a goodly aspect, and the more goodly by a grave majesty, whose with his mind did deck his outward grace.—Sir P. Sidney.

Rebekah took goodly raiment of her eldest son
Esau, and put them upon Jacob. Genesis, xxvii. 15.
England was a peacable kingdom, and but lately joined to the mild and goodly government of the Goths.—Spenser.

We have many goodly things to see.

Shakespeare, Richard III., iv. 1.
There are other points of faith where with religion is now of late times imbued, as transubstantiation, purgatory, the pope's primacy, a whole dozen of these goodly articles built the Tridentine Council erected in this decayed age of the world, but the fathers of truth did seem to come short of the apostles, and the power of Christ.—Richard Hall, Numerous Sermons, (1628).

Not far from working in the field,
My horse and I, we there behold
A goodly fruit, which, tempting me,
I would have plucked.—W. B. R.

How full of ornament is all I view
In and its parts; and seems as beautiful as new;
A goodly order'd work! O power divine!
Of thee I am, and what I am is thine!
His eldest born, a goodly youth to view,
Even'd the rest in shape and outward show;
Fair tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd,
But of a heavy, dull, decrepitate mind.
Id., Cæsar and Iphigenia.

Round as a globe, and impo'd every chink,
The goodly and great he said behind his link.
Id., Macbeth and Arctophel.

Used adverbially.

There Anna, like a virgin queen most bright,
With flourish in all beauty excellent;
And to her guests with banquet's banquet dight,
Attended goodly well for health and for delight.
Spenser, Faerie Queene.

Goodlihead, s. Grace; goodness. Obsolete.

For this, and many more such outrage,
Craving your goodlihead to answer
The rancorous vicar of his night.
Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, February.

Goodman, s.

1. Master of the house; husband: (oftn two words).

The goodman of this house was Dobson knight.

Spenser, Faerie Queene, v. 6, 32.
Let us salute ourselves with boxes: for the goodman is not at home.—Percy, Rhymer, vi. 19.

of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up.—Milton, Paradise Lost, xiv. 12.

The goodman himself must draw the liquor.

Percy, Pilgrimage, p. 222: 1617.
The vow she made unto her goodman.—*Barton,
A History of Melancholy*, p. 622.

When the goodman mends his armour,
And trims his helmet's plume;
When the goodwife's shuttle merrily
Goes flashing through the loom;
With weeping and with laughter,
Still is the story told.
How well Horatius kept the bridge,
In the brave days of old.

Macaulay, Lays of Ancient Rome, Horatius.

2. As an appellation or humble title: (rarely two words).

How now, what's the matter? par!—
With you, goodman buy, if you please: come, I' bush ye.—Shakespeare, King Lear, ii. 2.

Nay, hear you, goodman deliver. Id., Hamlet, v. 1.
But see the sun-beams bright to labour warn,
And gild the hutch of goodman Hodge's barn.
Gay, Pastoral.

Old goodman Dobson of the green,
Remembers he the trees long seen.
Swift, Bani and Philemon.

Goodnatured, adj. For its use as a compound rather than two words, see Good-humoured. In the Goodnatured Man, the title of a comedy by Goldsmith, the accent is on the first syllable, i. e. is that of a compound.

Goodness, s. Attribute suggested by Good.

If for anything he loved greatness, it was because therein he might exercise his goodness.—Sir P. Sidney.

There is in all things an appetite or desire, whereby they incline to something which they may be; all which perfections are contained under the general name of goodness.—Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

All made very particular relations of the strength of the Scots army, the excellent discipline that was observed in it, and the goodness of the men.—Lord Clarendon, History of the English Revolution.

Nobly can say that today of the same goodness is risen in respect of itself: one pound of the same goodness will never exchange for a pound and a quarter of the same goodness.—Locke.

Goods, s.

1. Movables in the way of furniture.

That gift to such a guest,
As my poor self, of all thy goods the best.
Chapman.

2. Personal or movable estate in the way of chattels.

That a writ be set against you,
To forbid all your goods, lands, tenements,
Cattle, and whatsoever.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII., iii. 2.
This hindereth nothing the proceedings of the civil courts, which respect the temporal punishment upon body and goods.—Locke.

3. Wares; freight; merchandise.

Her majesty, when the goods of our English merchants were attached by the duke of Alva resented likewise the goods of the Low Dutch in her England.—Sir W. Raleigh, Essays.
Suffer that several all power and laws of men,
Goods with their owners hurrying to their den.

The delivery of goods at the place of destination is,
in general, necessary to entitle the owner to freight.
—McCulloch, Dictionary of Commerce, v. 5, 11.
Freightage is paid for that part of the goods which is delivered when part has been thrown overboard or taken by the enemy.—Id.

Goodtempered, adj. For its use as a compound rather than two words, see Good-humoured.

Goodwife, s. Mistress of a family or house.
Obsolette.

Which is an ordinary passion among our good-wives; if their husband tarry out a day longer than his appointed time, or break his hour, they take presently with sighs and tears; he is either pained or dead!—Barton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 161.
By this had children the village cocke
Hidden the good-wife for her maids to kneele.

It serves the nighen frame crew,
The ladies and the good wives too. Sir J. Suckling.
(See, also, under Goodman.)

Goodwoman, s. [probably two words.]
Goodwife. Obsolette.

She who neglected her kitchen-garden (for that was still the goodwoman's province) was never reputed a tolerable housewife. Keeling, Anecdotes.
Goodly, good-woman, gossip, n' aunt, fursooth,
Or dame, the sole additions she did hear.

Shakespeare, Richard III.

Goody, s. Abbreviation of Goodwife.

Half, goody sheep, then send the fox, and so;
Unto the king my rash you may not go.

Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale.
Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd,
Which erst I saw when goody Dobson dy'd.

Gay, Pastoral.

Plain goody would no longer down;
'Twas unkind in her governor gown.

Swift, Bani and Philemon.

Goody-goodies, s. Sweetmeats.

Where there are little masters and misses in a house, they are usually great impediments to the direction of the servants; the only remedy is to bring them with goody-goodies, that they may not tell tales to mama and mamma.—Swift, Advice to Scrivener, (1728 MS.)

Goodyship, s. Rank or denomination of Goody. Rare.

The more shame for her goodyship.

To give so near a friend the slip. Butler, Hudibras.

Goose, s. pl. geese. [A.S. gōs.]

1. Native bird, both wild and domesticated, so called, of the genus Anser.

Since I plucked geese, played truant, and whipped top, I knew not what it was to be broken till lately.
—Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 1.
For watchful dogs, nor the more watchful geese,
Disturb with mighty noise the sacred peace.

Dryden.

2. Tailor's iron.

Go go in, tailor: here you may roast your goose.—
Shakespeare, Macbeth, ii. 3.

Cook one's goose. Do for one. Your goose is cooked = you are done for, in the sense of 'Your business is settled.' Colloquial or slang. The following refinement upon the ordinary interpretation (whatever that may be) is held by others besides the editor. To cook a goose is to roast a martyr. Such is the hypothesis. That the h and g are interchanged with one another in certain Slavonic dialects in and on the confines of Bohemia is well known. Hence, the name of Huss, the martyr, would reach the Germans of Saxony and Silesia under the form of Guss (Goose). That a goose is found in many of the engravings of Luther is also well known; as is the fact that its import is to suggest the fate of Huss or Guss. The same explanation applies to the Goose and Gridiron, as the sign of an inn.

Gooseberry. s. [German, krausbeere, krius-selbeere.] Native fruit so called (Ribes grossularia).

August has upon his arm a basket of all manner of ripe fruits; as pears, plums, apples, gooseberries.—Peckham.

Goosecap. s. Simpleton.
Why what a goosecap would't thou make me!
—Beaumont and Fletcher, Byrrah's Bush.

Goosecorn. s. Coarse kind of native rush so called.

Goosecorn, from its growth on commons where geese feed, and the grain-like appearance of its capsules.—Dr. A. Prior, Popular Names of British Plants.

Goosefoot. s. Native plant of the genus Chenopodium (Gr. $\chi\eta\upsilon$ = goose + $\pi\omicron\delta\iota\varsigma$, $\pi\omicron\delta\iota\varsigma$ = foot), which it translates.
Goosefoot or swartane.—Ure, Adam in Eden, ch. cccx.

Goosefoot, from the shape of the leaf.—Dr. A. Prior, Popular Names of British Plants.

Goosegrass. s. [second element grass; perhaps grease.] Native plant so called. Its application is very uncertain. The Potentilla anserina is certainly connected with the goose; partly from the colour of its leaves being like that of the dung of the goose, and partly from its growth on the sides of ponds where the soil has been trodden by geese. Gooseweed, however, is the common name for this; Silverweed the best. The goosegrass of the extract, or the goosegrass that has been connected with the tansy, is Goosetongue, which even now may be found in gardens, cultivated, like tansy, as an herb. The plant, however, to which it is most commonly attached is the Galium Aparine, Gooseshare, or Cleavers; wherein, however, its application is probably the most inaccurate. It seems to be a corruption of crosswort; a term which applies generally to the Galiums. From the Galium Aparine it seems to have been extended to the Asperugo procrembs. It is not wanted as a name; all the plants (with the exception of the last named, which is rare, and to which it is not very suitable) having other names more appropriate. As a synonym to Cleavers (which is a good word) it should be erased in works on the English Flora.

Goosegrass, or wild tansy, is a weed that strong clays are very subject to.—Norimer, Husbandry.

Goosequill. s. Quill from a goose's wing.
The legs [of a Guevi antelope] did not exceed the thickness of a large goose-quill.—Swainson, History and Classification of Quadrupeds, § 272.

Often two words: (in the following it means pen).

Oh, Nature's noblest work, my grey goose quill, Slave of my thoughts, obedient to my will!

—Byron, English Birds and Scotch Riverwrens.

Goosery. s.

1. Collection of geese.

2. Silliness, as that of a goose.

There will not want divers plain and solid men, that have learned by the experience of a good conscience what it is to be well taught, who will soon look through and through both the lofty nakedness of your latinating barbarian, and the flimsy goosery of your neat sermon actor.—Milton, Apology for Smectymnus. (Mich.)

Gooseshare. s. See extract; also Harif.

It is also called in Knishish gou-heiriff, gooseshare, goosegrasse, cleavers (or clivers) because they cleave close to garments; and in some countrymen they call the seed bygarlice.—Cole, Adam in Eden, clxxxvii.

Goosetongue. s. Native plant so called; sneezewort (Achillea ptarmica).

Goosetongue, from its finely serrated leaves.—Dr. A. Prior, Popular Names of British Plants.

Gopher. s. [Hebrew.] Found only in the passage given as extract and left untranslated.
Make thou an ark of gopher wood.—Genesis, vi. 14.

Gopher. s. [?] In Zoology. Species of turtle so called (Testudo Polyphemus).

Thus in the vegetable-feeding gopher the pancreas is one of the total weight of the animal; whilst in the carnivorous snapper it is $\frac{1}{2}$ of the total weight of the animal.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates.

Gorbelly. s. [see Correll.] Big belly; person who has one.

The belching gorbelly hath well nigh killed me.—Brewer, Comedy of Lingua, v. 1.

Gorbelled. adj. Bearing a gorbelly.

Hang ye, gorbelled knaves, are you undone? No, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here.—Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. ii. 2.

Gord. s. [?] Probably, according to Malone (note on first extract), false dice, their falseness being effected by making a cavity in them; fullums, on the contrary, being made false by loading with lead.
Let vultures peep thy guts, for gord and fulham holds.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, i. 3.
What more should I say of false dice, of fullums, high men, low men, gord, and bricked dice, graners, denies, contraries.—Greene, Art of Juggling, 1612.
A bale of gordes, with as many high men as low men for passage.—Decker, Bellman of London, 1610.

The dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gords and nupkins.—Beaumont and Fletcher, Seemly Lady.

Gordian. adj. [from Gordius, a Phrygian husbandman, made king by the oracle of Apollo; who is said to have then tied up his utensils of husbandry in his temple, in a knot so intricate that no one could find out where it began or ended. It was pretended that whoever should loose this knot should be king of all Asia. Alexander the Great, without staying to untie it, cut it with his sword. The Latin word Gordianus, or Gordian knot, was hence adopted to express any difficult matter; and the cutting, as opposed to the undoing, of it, its summary, though doubtfully legitimate solution.] Intricate; difficult.
Turn him to any snare of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unloose.
Familiar as his garter. —Shakespeare, Henry V. I. 1.
As slippery as the Gordian knot was hard.
Id., Cymbeline, ii. 2.
The binding knot of the late Gordian conspiracy.
—Proceedings against Garnet, &c., Mem. 8. a. 3.
Strange power of home, with how strong-twisted arms,
And Gordian-twined knot, dost thou enchain me!
Id., Fletcher, Boast.
What power, what force, what mighty spell, if not
Your learned hands, can loose this Gordian knot?
Milton, Vacation Exercices, 69.
Close the argument fly.

Inaduating, wove with Gordian twine
His braided train. —Id., Paradise Lost, iv. 347.
Morals reformed, health preserved, industry invigorated, instruction diffused, public burdens lightened, economy seated as it were upon a rock, the Gordian knot of the Poor-laws not cut but untied, all by a simple idea in architecture.—J. Bentham, Panopticon, or the Inspecting House, prof.

Gore. s. [A.S. gor = wet filth.]
1. Blood effused from the body.

A grisly wound,
From which forth gush'd a stream of gore-blood thick.

Id., Paradise Lost, iv. 347.
Morals reformed, health preserved, industry invigorated, instruction diffused, public burdens lightened, economy seated as it were upon a rock, the Gordian knot of the Poor-laws not cut but untied, all by a simple idea in architecture.—J. Bentham, Panopticon, or the Inspecting House, prof.

Gore. s. [A.S. gor = wet filth.]
1. Blood effused from the body.

A grisly wound,
From which forth gush'd a stream of gore-blood thick.

That all her goodly garment stain'd around,
And into a deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground.

—Spenser, Faerie Queen.
Another's crimes the youth unhappy bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guileless gore.

Dryden, Translation of the Aeneid.
Their veins, after forty days' burial, extended with blood, being opened with a lancet, have yielded a gore as plentiful, fresh, and thick, as that which issues from the vessels of young and sanguine persons.—Sir P. Rycaut, Present State of the Greek and Armenian Churches, p. 278.

Blood clotted or congealed.

'He bloody fact
Will be aveng'd; though here thou see him die,
Rolling in dust and gore.

Milton, Paradise Lost, xi. 428.
His horrid beard and knotted tresses stood Stiff with his gore, and all his wounds ran blood.

—Sir J. Denham.

3. Dirt; mud.

As a snowe walloweth in the stynkyng gore pytte, or in the puddell.—Bishop Fisher, Pastors, p. 16.

Gore. v. a. [A.S. gár = spear, javelin.]
1. Stab; pierce.

Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gor'd with Snowbray's spear.

Shakespeare, Richard II. i. 3.
No weaker lion's by a stronger slain;
Nor from his larger tusks the forest boar
Communion takes his brother swine to gore.

Tate, Translation of Juvenal.
For arms his men long pikas and jav'lins bore,
And gore with pointed steel their foes in battle

2. Pierce with a horn.
Some time'd, some gor'd, some trampling down he kill'd.

Dryden.
He idly battling, feigns
His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk.

Thomson, Seasons, Spring.
Gore. s. [Dutch, gheere.] Corner-shaped piece let into a garment; skirt; lap.

How my bird so fayre,
That was wont to repayre,
And go in at my spere,
And creep in at my gore
Of my gowne before,
Flyekerynge with his wings.

Skelton, Phylipp Sparowe, 315. (ed. Dyce.)

As the first element in a compound.
Gore [a]ny edging sewed upon cloth to strengthen it, according to Skinner; but rather a slip of cloth or linen, inserted in order to bind a garment in any particular place. A gore-cut was, in the time of queen Elizabeth, a gown or petticoat so cut, as to be very broad at the bottom, and narrow at the upper end.—Todd.

Gorge. s. [Fr. gorge.]

1. Throat.

There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the sight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which their instruments did make their gorge deliver.—Sir P. Sidney.

And now how abhorred in my imagination it is!
my gorge rises at it.—Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 1.

Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, diabolish and abhor the Moor.—Id., Othello, ii. 1.

This mighty mail-winged monster, that menaces to swallow up the land, unless her bottomless gorge may be stilled with the blood of the king's daughter, of the church.—Milton, Reasons of Church Government urged against Prelacy, b. ii.

2. That which is gorged or swallowed.
And all the way, mow like a brutish beast.
He spewed up his gorge, that all did him detest.

—Spenser, Faerie Queen.

3. Men given to hawks.

No lure will cause her stoop, she bears full gorge.
Watson, Sonnets.
Because the vultures had but small pickings, shall we therefore go and sling them a full gorge?—Milton, Apology for Smectymnus.

4. In Topography. Narrow passage between rocks.

It is situated on both banks of the Narenta in a gorge which opens out in two small plains at its north and south extremities.—G. Arbuthnot, Herazogovina, ch. vii.

Gorge. v. a.

1. Fill up to the throat; glut; satiate.

Being with his presence glutted, gor'd, and full.
Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part I. iii. 2.
He that makes his generation weep,
To gorge his appetite.

Id., King Lear, i. 1.

Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite.

Dryden.
I desire that they will not gorge the lion either with nonsense or obscenity.—Adison.
The plant, gor'd with death, and wine and blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and moaning in his den. —Id.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Afric's sands, discur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia.

Adriano, Cato.

This celebrated writer informs us, that the Mohammedans refuse to eat pork on account of a singular circumstance which happened to their prophet. It appears that Mohammed, having on one occasion gorged himself with food and drink till he was in a state of insensibility, fell asleep on a dunghill, and, in this disgraceful condition, was seen by a litter of pigs. The pigs attacked the fallen prophet, and suffocated him to death; for which reason his followers abstain from pigs, and refuse to partake of their flesh.—Huckle, History of Civilization in England, vol. i. ch. vi.

2. Swallow: (as, 'The fish has gorged the hook').

Gorge. v. n. Feed to satiety.

The very garages that draw together all the fowls of prey and ravin in the land, to come and gorge upon the church.—Milton, Animadversions upon a Defence of the Humble Remonstrance.

Gorgonian. adj. [N.Fr. gorgian, gourgian.] Fine; splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.

The houses he curiously builded after a gorgian and gaudy sort.—Robinson, Translation of Sir T. More's Utopia, ii. 2: 1551.

With gorgian wings, the marks of my reign away,
The two contending princes make their way.

Dryden, Translation of Virgil.

Can we see the gorgian beauties of such an earthly Jerusalem, and the doom impending without tears?—Glendon, The State in its Relations with the Church, ch. x.

Gorgeously. adv. In a gorgeously manner; splendidly; magnificently; finely.

They which are gorgeously apparelled, and live delicately, are in kings' courts.—Luke, vii. 25: translation of 1578.

Most precious stones, gorgeously and continually set in divers manners.—Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, b. i. Crown'd with cut-crystal banks, and gorgeously array'd.

With all the enamel'd flowers of many a goodly mead.
Drayton, Polythion, book 3.

The duke, one solemn day, gorgeously clad in a suit all overspread with diamonds, had one of them of good value.—Sir H. Wotton, Life of the Duke of Buckingham.

Gorgeousness. s. Attribute suggested by Gorgeous; splendour; show; magnificence.

In that day shall the Lord take away the gorgeousness of their apparel.—Knights, Trial of Truth: 1504.

What gorgeousness of shew with the vulgar and simple, what multitude of ceremonies with the superstitious!—Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

Gorget. s.

1. Piece of armour that defends the throat.

He with a palay fumbling on his gorget,
Shakes in and out the river.

He did oftentimes spend the night in the church alone praying, his headpiece, gorget, and pauldrons lying by him.—Knollys, History of the Turks.

See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was.

About his neck a threefold gorget,
As rough as trodden leather target.

Butler, Hudibras.

2. See extract.

[Gorget was formerly used for that part of the female dress called a ruff. It is in our old lexicography, and is so used by Cleaveland in his poems; but is now obsolete; though Dr. Johnson explains neckerchief by gorget.—Todd.]

3. In Surgery. Instrument used in the operation of cutting for the stone.

Gorget are of two kinds, cutting and blunt. The cutting gorget is a kind of knife furnished with a beak which runs in the groove of the staff, so that the gorget being pushed along it divides the neck of the bladder and the prostate gland. The blunt gorget is merely a sort of large directory for guiding the forceps in the bladder. The gorget is now seldom used: the cutting one being superseded by a simple knife, and the blunt one by the use of the finger.—Hooper, Medical Dictionary.

Gorgon. s. [Lat. Gorgon, from Greek Γοργών, -gorgon.] Fabulous deity with snaky hairs, of which the sight turned beholders to stone; anything ugly or horrid.

Gorgons, and hydra, and chimeras dire.
Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 628.

Why didst thou not encounter man for man,
And try the virtue of that gorgon face
To turn me into statue?

Dryden.
I really came here to buy up all your stock; but that gorgon, Lady de Courcy, captured me, and my ransom has sent me here free, but a beggar.—Diarski the younger, The Young Duke, b. i. ch. ii.

Gorgonian. adj. Having the power of the Gorgon to terrify or strike with horror.

Gorgonian necks, and harpies.

B. Jonson, Epigrams, 134.

Medusa with gorgonian terror quards
The ford.

Milton, Paradise Lost, ii. 611.

Gorilla. s. [An African word preserved in the Greek translation or abstract of the Periplus of Hanno, in the plural form γίπυλα; these being large apes of the Western Coast of Africa. Word for word gorilla and drill are probably the same. Animal for animal, the Gorilla of the Carthaginians was probably the chimpanzee.] Large anthropoid ape (the largest of the class) so called, native of equatorial Western Africa, especially the districts on the Gaboon; Troglodytes Gorilla.

In the gorilla the dorso-lumbar vertebrae, as in the chimpanzee, are seventeen in number, the thirteenth dorsal answering to the first lumbar in man. . . . The whole series of true vertebrae in the gorilla form but one curvature, which is slightly concave forward, especially in the dorsal region. . . . In the gorilla the scapula is broader than in the chimpanzee, but differs from that of man in the more oblique course of the spine, which gives greater extent to the superior costa. . . . The clavicle is thicker than that in man. . . . The humerus, though surpassing in length that of man, is thicker and stronger in all its ridges and processes; especially at the lower extremity, the transverse diameter of which surpasses that of the upper extremity of the bone in a greater degree than in man. . . . The medullary artery enters the fore part of the shaft, but nearer the middle of the bone in the gorilla than in man; in both the course of the canal is towards the elbow-joint. . . . The difference from the chimpanzee, most significant of their relative position in the quadrumanous series, presented by the antler-chim of the gorilla, is its inferiority of length compared with the humerus. The bones of the wrist agree in number and relative position with those of man; but the differences of shape and proportion give a greater breadth to the carpal segment in proportion to its length, in the gorilla. . . . The heel in the gorilla makes a more decided backward projection than in the chimpanzee; the heelbone is relatively thicker, deeper, more expanded vertically at its hind end, besides being fully as long as in the chimpanzee. Among all the tailless apes the calcaneum in the standing and other gibbous least resembles in its shape or proportional size that of man. Although the foot be articulated to the leg with a slight inversion of the sole, it is more nearly plantigrade in the gorilla than in the chimpanzee. The crural spurs far, and the gibbous farther, from the human type in the inverted position of the foot.—Owen, Anatomy of Vertebrates.

Goring. verbal abs. Puncture; prick.

His horses' flanks and sides are forc'd to feel
The clinking lash, and goring of the steel.

Dryden, Translation of the Æneid.

Gormand. s. Older, yet more English, form of Gourmand.

The gormand's pannich is fed.—Marton, Scourge of Villany, i. 4: 1500.

That great gormand, fat Apicius.—B. Jonson, Sejanus.

Many are made gormands and gluttons by custom, that were not so by nature.—Locke.

Gormandize. v. n. Feed greedily.

Gormandizer. s. One who gormandizes.

Not fit that you should be the sheriffs' tasters;
It were enough, you being such gormandizers,
To make the sheriffs, henceforth, turn arrant misers.

Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 113.

Gormandizing. part. adj. Feeding as a gormandizer.

No scene of it must pass without an eating and gormandizing parasite.—Hales, Sermon at the end of his Remains, p. 23.

Gormandizing. verbal abs. Gluttonous habit, as that of a gormandizer.

Make less thy body, hence, and more thy grace;
Leave gormandizing.

Shakespeare, Henry IV. Part II. v. 3.

He that censures the good fellow, commonly makes no conscience of gluttony and gormandizing at home.—Howell, Letters, ii. 2.

Gorrel. s. [A.S. gôr.] As the first element of a compound. Paunch. Obsolete.

Gorrel-belly'd Bacchus, grant-like,
Bestial a strong-beer's harrell.

Old Song of Tom of Bedlam.

Gorrelled. adj. Stuffed as a paunch.

For why, their cogn will buy the wine,
And cause a running harrell;
But, if you're drunk, your wits are sunk,
And gorrelled guts will quarrel.
Old Ballad, Drink for my Money.
(Nares by H. & W.)

Gorse. s. [see Holly.] Native plant so called; furze; Ulex europaeus.

And for fair corn-ground are our fields surecloy'd
With worthless gorse.

Kyd, Tragedy of Cornelia: 1594.

I see thee breathing on the barren moor,
That seems to bloom, although so bleak before;
There if beneath the gorse the primrose springs,
Or the pied daisy smiles below the ling,
They shall new charms, at thy command, disclose.

Crabbe, Birth of Flattery.

There is heather in some abundance, both in Jersey and Guernsey, but it is choked and concealed by the larger growth of gorse.—A noted, The Channel Islands, p. 104.

Gory. adj. Covered with gore; consisting in gore.

When two bears with rankling malice met,
Their gory sides the fresh wounds sorely fret.

Spenser.

Thou canst not say, I did it: never shake
Thy gory locks at me. Shakespeare, Macbeth, iii. 4.

The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain.

Id., Troilus and Cressida, iv. 2.

Goshawk. s. [A.S. gus-hufuc.] Species of falcon so called; Astur palumbarius.

Such dread his awful visage on them cast;
So seem poor doves at goshawk's sight afraid.

Poet's.

Here are also aeries of hawks, and sundry other birds; as, goshawks, lanners, lodies, &c.—Sir T. Herbert, Relation of some Years Travels into Africa and the Great Asia, p. 348.

The goshawk is at once distinguished from the falcon by the lobes or festoons instead of the sharp tooth on the cutting edge of the mandible. . . . The goshawk has also been separated generally from the sparrow hawk, on account of its stronger and shorter tarsus, which is covered with feathers on the upper part; and by the want of the elongation in the middle toe. . . . Inferior in powers to the falcon, though equal in size to the largest of them, the goshawk is yet the best of the short-winged hawks; but its habits as well as its mode of flying are very different. . . . The goshawk was formerly . . . flown at lure, rabbit, pheasant, grouse, and partridge.—Turvell, British Birds.

Gosling. s. Young goose; goose not yet full grown.

Why do you go nodding and waggling so like a fool, as if you were hipnotic? says the goose to her gosling.—Sir E. L'Esrange.

Nature hath instructed even a brood of goslings to stick together, while the kite is hovering over their heads.—Swift.

Gospel. s. [A.S. godspel.]

1. See extract.

What the word εὐαγγέλιον in Greek, which we render gospel, signifies among authors, is ordinarily known, viz. from εὖ and εὐαγγέλιον, good news, or good tidings. Thus the angel speaks of the birth of Christ, ΕΥΑΓΓΕΛΙΟΜΑΙ ὑμῖν κατὰ ἀγγελίας, I bring you good tidings of great joy, i. e. very joyful good tidings. Only in the sacred use of it, there seems to be a metonymy, or figure very ordinary, whereby the word which signifies good news, is used to denote the history of that good news, the birth, and life, and resurrection of Christ, which all put together is that joyful news or good tidings. . . . And so this word gospel, or by euphony gospel, in Wicliffe's translation, and ever since, notes these good tidings delivered; as first by an angel; and after that, by the apostles by word of mouth; so here in writing, by way of history also; and in brief signifies that blessed story of the birth, life, actions, precepts, and promises, death and resurrection of Christ, which, of all other stories in the world, we Christians ought to look on with most joy, as an εὐαγγέλιον or good word, i. e. a gospel.—Hammond, Paraphrases and Annotations on the New Testament, annot. 1.

2. The New Testament as the especial book of the Christian creed.

Thus may the gospel to the rising sun
Be spread, and flourish where it first began.

Waller.

All the decrees whereof Scripture treateth are conditionate, receiving Christ as the gospel offers him, as Lord and Saviour; the former, as well as the latter, being the condition of scripture-election, and the rejecting, or not receiving him thus, the condition of the scripture-reprobation.—Hammond.

How is a good Christian animated and cheered by a steadfast belief of the promises of the gospel!—Bentley.

This [gospel] is intimated as one of the words which is practically ambiguous, from its different applications, even though not employed (as it sometimes is) in different senses. Conformably to its etymological meaning of good-tidings, it is used to signify (and that especially and exclusively) the welcome intelligence of salvation to man, as preached by our Lord and his followers. But it was afterwards transitively applied to each of the four histories of our Lord's life, published by those who are called the Evangelists. And the term is often used to express collectively the gospel-doctrines; i.e. the instructions given men how to avail themselves of the offer of salvation; and preaching the gospel is accordingly often used to include not only the proclaiming of the good tidings, but the teaching of what is to be believed and done, in consequence. This ambiguity is one source of some important theological errors; many supposing that gospel truth is to be found exclusively, or chiefly, in the gospels; to the neglect of the other sacred writings.—Whately, Logic, Ambiguous Terms, appendix.

